Dreves (drä'-vës), Guido Maria, German music historian; b. Hamburg, Oct. 27, 1854; d. Mitwitz, near Kronach, June 1, 1909. He entered the Jesuit Order; lived in Vienna and Würzburg. For distinguished service to the cause of hymnology and medieval music, the Univ. of Munich made him Dr. phil. (hon. c.). He was co-editor, with C. Blume and H. M. Bannister, of the great Analecta hymnica medii aevi (53 vols., 1886-1911); other works: Cantiones Bohemicæ (1886); Die Hymnen des Johannes von Jenstein (1886); Aurelius Ambrosius, der Vater des Kirchengesanges (1893); Psalteria rhythmica (1901); Die Kirche der Lateiner in ihren Liedern (1908).

Drewett, Nora, English pianist; b. Sutton, Surrey, June 14, 1882. She studied piano at the Paris Cons. (Duvernoy) and in Munich (Stavenhagen); appeared in recitals and with symph. orchestras in Germany, Great Britain, France, etc. She married the violinist Géza von Kresz in 1918, and settled in Toronto.

Dreyer (dry'-er), Johann Melchior, German organist and composer; b. Röttingen, Württemberg, June 24, 1746; d. Ellwangen, March 22, 1824. He studied in Ellwangen, where he became church organist; wrote chiefly church music, adopting a modern homophonic style. Among his published works are 6 Missæ breves et rurales ad modernum genium (1790); 24 Hymni brevissimi ad vespæras (1791); Sehr kurze und leichte Landmassen (1793); Deutsche Messe (1800), etc. He also wrote organ music.

Dreyschock (drî'-shöhk), Alexander, brilliant pianist; b. Zack, Bohemia, Oct. 15, 1818; d. Venice, April 1, 1869. A student of Tomaschek, he acquired a virtuoso technique and was regarded as a worthy rival of Liszt in technical dexterity. At 8 he was able to play in public; toured North Germany (1838); spent two years in Russia (1840-42); visited Brussels, Paris, and London, then Holland and Austria. In 1862 he was called to St. Petersburg to act as professor in the newly-founded Cons. In 1868, he went to Italy, where he died. His astounding facility in playing octaves, sixths, and thirds, and performing solos with the left hand alone cast a glamour about his performance; he reached the zenith of his fame about 1850.—Works: an opera, Florette, oder die erste Liebe Heinrichs des IV.; an overture for orch.; a rondo for orch.; a string quartet, and 140 piano pieces of the salon type.

Dreyschock, Felix, German pianist, son of Raimund Dreyschock; b. Leipzig, Dec. 27, 1860; d. Berlin, Aug. 1, 1906. He studied under Grabau, Ehrlich, Taubert, and Kiel; gave successful concerts, and was professor at the Stern Cons., Berlin. His piano pieces are well-written and effective; he also published a violin sonata and songs.

Dreyschock, Raimund, violinist, brother of Alexander Dreyschock; b. Zack, Bohemia, Aug. 20, 1824; d. Leipzig, Feb. 6, 1869. Pupil of Pixis, Prague; concertmaster at the Gewandhaus concerts (1850-69) and violin teacher in the Cons. at Leipzig.—His wife Elizabeth (b. Cologne, 1832; d. there, July, 1911) was a contralto singer who founded and managed a vocal academy in Berlin.

Driberg (drë'-berg), Friedrich Johann von, b. Charlottenburg, Dec. 10, 1780; d. there, May 21, 1856. He was Spontini's pupil in Paris, and produced 2 operas, Don Cocagno (Berlin, 1812) and Der Sänger und der Schneider (Berlin, Nov. 23, 1814); others left in MS. He was best known as a writer on Greek music whose theories and conclusions, however, have long been entirely discredited.—Writings: Die mathematische Intervallenlehre der Griechen (1818); Aufschlüsse über die Musik der Griechen (1819); Die praktische Musik der Griechen (1821); Die pneumatischen Erfindungen der Griechen (1822); Wörterbuch der griech. Musik (1835); Die griechische Musik, auf ihre Grundgesetze zurückgeführt (1841); Die Kunst der musikalischen Composition . . . nach griechischen Grundsätzen bearbeitet (1858).

Driessler, Johannes, German composer of choral music; b. Friedrichsthal, near Saarbrücken, Jan. 26, 1921. He studied with Karl Rahner; at the age of 13 filled a regular position as church organist. In 1946 he was engaged as instructor at the Music Academy in Detmold. As a composer of oratorios, cantatas, and other choral works, he has shown outstanding practical ability, with the result that his works entered the active repertory of church and secular institutions in Germany.—Works: oratorios: Dein Reich komme (Essen, 1950); Gaudia Mundana (Frankfurt, 1952); De profundis (Essen, 1953); a cappella choruses: Sinfonia Sacra (Detmold, 1948); Cantica Nova (Berlin, 1951); etc.; also works for chamber music combinations; numerous educational compositions.

Drigo (drē'-goh), Riccardo, Italian composer and conductor; b. Padua, June 30, 1846; d. there, Oct. 1, 1930. He conducted at the Imperial Theater of St. Petersburg for many years; after the World War (1914-18), he returned to his native city. Among his works (operas, ballets, vocal music, piano pieces, etc.) are the well-known ballet I milioni d'Arlecchino (Harlequin's Millions), which includes the famous Serenade, and the popular Valse Bluettes.—Cf. S. Travaglia, Riccardo Drigo, l'uomo e l'artista (Padua, 1929).

Drinker, Henry S., Jr., American music scholar and translator; b. Philadelphia, Sept. 15, 1880; pupil of Emmy Emery; by profession a lawyer. He translated the texts of all the Bach cantatas and of the complete vocal works of Brahms and Schumann; author of The Chamber Music of Johannes Brahms (Philadelphia, 1932).

Drobisch, Moritz Wilhelm, German scholar; b. Leipzig, Aug. 16, 1802; d. there, Sept. 30, 1896. 1826 prof. extraordinary of mathematics, and 1842 prof. ordinary of philosophy, at Leipzig Univ. Besides various works on mathematics and philosophy, he wrote several valuable essays on musical subjects; among the latter are Über die mathematische Bestimmung der mus. Intervalle (1846), Über mus. Tonbestimmung und Temperatur (1852), Nachträge zur Theorie der mus. Tonverhältnisse (1855), Über ein zwischen Altem und Neuem vermittelndes Tonsystem, in 'Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung' (1871), Über reine Stimmung und Temperatur der Töne (1877).

Drouet (doo-ā'), Louis-François-Philippe, a distinguished flutist and composer; b. Amsterdam, 1792; d. Bern, Sept. 30, 1873.

He studied at the Paris Cons., played there and at the Opéra when but 7 years old. From 1807-10, teacher to King Louis of Holland; 1811, solo flutist to Napoleon, afterwards to Louis XVIII. In 1815 he went to London, played in the Philharmonic in 1816, and thereafter made long concert tours throughout Europe. In 1836 he was appointed Kapellmeister at Coburg; visited America for a few months in 1854; then lived in Gotha and Frankfurt. — His works for flute, over 150 in number, comprise 10 concertos, 2 fantasias for piano and flute (op. 36, 37), 3 trios for 3 flutes (op. 33), 3 waltz duets (op. 24); ensemble sonatas, duets, variations, etc. He is said to have written the French popular air Partant pour la Syrie from Queen Hortense's dictation.

Droz, Eugénie, musicologist; b. Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, Mar. 21, 1893; studied in Neuchâtel and in Paris; received diploma from École pratique des hautes-études; treasurer of the Société des anciens textes français; editor of the Société française de musicologie. She has publ. Poètes et musiciens du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle (in collaboration with G. Thibault); also many valuable studies in the 'Revue de musicologie.'

Drozdzov, Anatol Nikolaievitch, Russian teacher and composer; b. Saratov, 1883; d. Moscow, 1950. He studied at the Cons. of St. Petersburg (Gold Medal, 1909); prof. of composition at the conservatories in Ekaterinodar (1911-16), Saratov (1918-20), and Moscow (1920-24). Publ. 2 piano sonatas, many piano pieces, a piano quintet, a trio for piano, flute, and clarinet, a cello sonata, etc.

Drozdzowski, Jan, Polish pianist; b. Cracow, Feb. 2, 1857; d. there, Jan. 21, 1918. He studied mainly at the Vienna Cons. with Dachs and Epstein; also took lessons with Bruckner. In 1889 he was appointed prof. of piano at the Cracow Cons. and retained that post till his death. He publ. a piano method, Systematic School of Pianoforte Technique (1887; German ed., Munich, 1889, under the pseudonym Jan Jordan).

Dryden, John, the famous English poet; b. Aldwinkle, Northamptonshire, Aug. 9, 1631; d. London, May 1, 1700. He wrote the libretto of King Arthur for Purcell; also the 'Ode for St. Cecilia's Day,' which Purcell, Handel, and others have set to music.—Cf. The Songs of John Dryden, ed. by C. L. Day (Cambridge, Mass., 1932); also R. M. Myers, Handel, Dryden, and Milton (London, 1956).

Drysdale, Learmont, Scottish composer; b. Edinburgh, Oct. 3, 1866; d. there, June 18, 1909. Pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, and winner of the Lucas prize for composition (1890).—Works for orch.: The Spirit of the Glen, a ballad (1889); Thomas the Rhymer, prelude (1890); Tam O'Shanter, overture (1891; awarded prize by Glasgow Society of Musicians); Herondean, overture (1894); The Kelpie, a cantata (1894); an opera, The Red Spider, was produced at Dundee (1898).

Dubensky, Arcady, violinist and composer; b. Viatka, Russia, Oct. 15, 1890. He graduated from the Moscow Cons. in 1909 (violin with Hřimalý; theory with Ilyinsky, and conducting with Arends). He was a violinist at the Moscow Opera (1910-19); then left Russia; played in hotels and restaurants in Constantinople (1920); settled in the U. S. in 1921; was a member of the New York Symph. Orch., and then of the New York Philh. Orch., retiring in 1953. His music is conservative in its idiom, continuing the traditions of the Russian national school; an impression of originality is produced, however, by his adroit use of unusual combinations (such as a quartet for double-basses, a fugue for 18 violins, suite for 9 flutes, etc.).—Works: For the stage: Romance with Double-Bass, after Chekhov, comic opera (Moscow, Nov. 18, 1916, composer conducting); Down Town, opera (1930); The Raven, melodeclamation (1931); On Highway, 1-act opera (1936); Two Yanks in Italy, 1-act opera (1944); For orch.: Symph. in G minor (1916); Suite Russe (N. Y., March 7, 1926); Intermezzo and Compliment (1927); Tartar Song and Dance (1927); Russian Bells, symph. poem (N. Y. Symph., composer conducting, Dec. 29, 1927); Caprice for piccolo and orch. (1930; publ. 1936); Prelude and Fugue (1932; 1st performance, Boston Symph. Orch., Koussevitzky conducting, April 12, 1943); Rajah (1930); Old Russian Soldier's Song (1932); Tom Sawyer, overture (for Mark Twain's centennial, Philadelphia Orch., Nov. 29, 1935); Political Suite (Russian Monarchy, Nazi and Fascist, Communist; N. Y. radio broadcast, Sept. 17, 1936); Fantasy on a Negro Theme for tuba and orch. (Indianapolis, 1938); Stephen Foster, suite (Indianapolis Symph. Orch., Jan. 31, 1941); Serenade for orch. (Saratoga, Sept. 6, 1947); Trumpet Overture, for 18 top trumpets and 2 bass drums (Children's Concert, N. Y. Philh., Dec. 10, 1949, Stokowski conducting); Concerto Grosso, for 3 trombones and tuba with orch. (1950); Trombone Concerto (1953).

Chamber music; Gossips for strings (Philadelphia, Nov. 24, 1928); Anno 1600, suite for strings (N. Y. Philh., April 23, 1939); Fugue for 18 violins (his most successful work; Philadelphia Orch., April 1, 1932, Stokowski conducting); string quartet (1932); Prelude and Fugue for 4 bassoons (Brooklyn, Feb. 16, 1947); Suite for 9 flutes, including a piccolo and basset horn (N. Y. Flute Club, Jan. 26, 1936, composer conducting); other chamber works for various combinations of instruments.

Dubinsky, Vladimir, Russian cellist; b. Russia, Sept. 10, 1876; d. Syracuse, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1938; studied cello at the Cons. of Moscow; début with the Moscow Symph. (1897); U. S. début in New York (1905); concert tour with Schumann-Heink; later cellist with the Tollefsen Trio in New York, where he lived for many years as a teacher.

Dubois (dü-bwah'), Léon, Belgian conductor and composer; b. Brussels, Jan. 9, 1859; d. Boitsfort, Nov. 19, 1935. He won the Prix de Rome at the Brussels Cons. in 1885; second conductor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie (1892-97); director of the Louvain Music School (1899-1912); then director of the Brussels Cons. (1912-26).—Works: 4 operas, Son Excellence ma femme (1884), La Revanche de Sganarelle (1886), Edénie (Antwerp, 1912), and Mazeppa (not perf.); also the 1-act ballet Smylis (Brussels, 1891), the mimodrama Le Mort (Brussels, 1894), a symphonic poem, Atala, etc.

Dubois (dü-bwah'), (Clément-François) Théodore, eminent French organist and composer; b. Rosnay, Marne, Aug. 24, 1837; d. Paris, June 11, 1924. After preliminary study at Rheims, he entered the Paris Cons. in 1853, working under Marmontel (piano), Benoist (organ), Bazin and Ambroise Thomas (composition), graduating (1861) as recipient of the Grand Prix de Rome with the cantata Atala, after having taken first prizes in all departments. From Rome he sent a solemn Mass (perf. at the Madeleine in 1870), a dramatic work, La prova di un opera seria, and 2 overtures; returning to Paris, he settled there as a teacher; became maître de chapelle at Sainte-Clothilde and then succeeded Saint-Saëns, in 1877, as organist at the Madeleine. In 1871 he was made harmony prof. at the Paris Cons., succeeding Elwart; in 1891 became Léo Delibes' successor as professor of composition; in 1894 was elected to the chair in the Academy left vacant by Gounod's death; in 1896 he succeeded Ambroise Thomas as director of the Cons.; retired, 1905. Dubois' compositions are very numerous; among them the comic operas La Guzla de l'émir (Paris, April 30, 1873) and Le pain bis, ou la Lilloise (Opéra-Comique, Feb. 26, 1879); a 4-act grand opera Aben Hamet (produced in Italian, Théâtre du Châtelet, Dec. 16, 1884); a 3-act 'idylle dramatique,' Xavière (Opéra-Comique, Nov. 26, 1895); the 3-act opera Circe (not perf.); the ballet La Farandole (Paris Opéra, Dec. 14, 1883); 2 oratorios: Les Sept Paroles du Christ (1867), Le Paradis perdu (1878; won the City of Paris prize); several cantatas (L'Enlèvement de Proserpine, Hylas, Bergerette, Les Vivants et les morts, Délivrance); several Masses, and other church music; many orchestral works: Concert overture in D; 3 airs de ballet; 3 orchestral suites; 4 petites pièces; 3 petites pièces; Marche héroïque de Jeanne d'Arc; Fantasia triomphale, for organ and orch.; Hymne nuptiale; Méditation-Prière for strings, oboe, harp, and organ; Concerto-Capriccio, for piano, and a 2nd piano concerto (1895); a violin concerto; symphonic overture in C; overture to Frithioff; 2 symphonic poems, Notre Dame de la Mer and Adonis; Symphonie française (1908); Fantasiotta (1917); piano pieces (Chœur et danse des lutins; 6 poèmes sylvestres); pieces for organ and for harmonium; a cappella choruses; etc. Dubois published a practical manual, Traité de contrepoint et de fugue (1901), a standard work at the Paris Cons.—Cf. Ch. - M. Widor, Notice sur la vie et les travaux de Théodore Dubois (Paris, 1924).

Dubuc, Alexander Ivanovitch, Russian pianist, composer, and teacher; b. Moscow, March 3, 1812; d. there, Jan. 8, 1898. He was a pupil of John Field, about whom he published a volume of memoirs; professor at the Moscow Cons. (1866-72). He wrote piano pieces, songs, and a work on piano technique.

Du Cange, Charles Du Fresne, Sieur, French scholar; b. Amiens, Dec. 18, 1610; d. Paris, Oct. 23, 1688. He belonged to the famed group of 17th-century French writers who established the precepts of modern historical criticism; he is important to musicology because he included definitions of Latin musical terms in his lexicographies. The most valuable of his many works are the Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (Paris, 1678, 3 vols.; 1733-36, 6 vols.; 1840-50, 7 vols. 1883-87, 10 vols.) and the Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae graecitatis (Lyons, 1688; Breslau, 1889). Almost all his works, in MS, are preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris.—Cf. H. Hardouin, Essai sur la vie et sur les ouvrages de Du Cange (Amiens, 1849); L. J. Feugère, in the 'Journal de l'instruction publique' (Paris, 1852).

Ducasse, Jean. See Roger-Ducasse.

Du Caurroy (koh-rwäh'), François-Eustache, Sieur de St.-Frémin; French composer; b. Beauvais, Feb. (baptized Feb. 4), 1549; d. Paris, Aug. 7, 1609. He was a member of the French nobility; his father was 'procureur du roi.' He entered the Royal Chapel as singer in 1569; in 1575 received a prize for a chanson, Beaux yeux; in 1578 he was 'sous-maître'; in 1599 became superintendant of 'la musique du roi.' Influenced by Le Jeune, he began to compose 'musique mesurée'; advanced in the favor of the court, receiving honors and awards; held the ecclesiastical titles of canon at the Ste. Chapelle of Dijon, Ste. Croix of Orleans, and other provincial posts. His greatest work was a collection Meslanges de la musique, containing psalms, 'chansons mesurées,' noëls, in 4, 5, and 6 voices (posthumously published, Paris, 1610; some specimens reprinted in Expert's 'Maîtres musiciens,' vol. XIII). Other works: Missa pro defunctis; 2 vols. of Preces ecclesiasticae; instrumental Fantaisies for 3, 4, 5, and 6 parts (Paris, 1610; several numbers published separately by Expert); 5 vols. of his works in score are in the Bibliothèque Sainte-Geneviève in Paris.—Cf. M. Th. Luillier, Note sur quelques artistes-musiciens dans la Brie (1870); N. Dufourcq, À propos d'Eustache Du Caurroy in the 'Revue de Musicologie' (Dec., 1950); F. Lesure, La Carrière et les fonctions de Du Caurroy in the 'Revue de Musicologie' (1952).

Ducis, Benedictus (Benedikt Hertogh), distinguished composer of the 16th century; b. probably near Constance, c. 1490; d. Schalckstetten, near Ulm, 1544. He may or may not be identical with Benedictus de Opitiis, who was organist at the Antwerp Cathedral (1514-16) and organist at the Chapel Royal in London (1516-22). It is known for a certainty that Benedictus Ducis was in Vienna c. 1515; probably studied there; in 1532 he applied for a pastorate at Ulm (under the name 'Benedict Duch'), but failed to obtain it. In 1533 he succeeded in receiving a pastorate at Stubersheim, near Geislingen; in 1535 he became pastor at Schalckstetten and remained there till his death. Benedictus Ducis has been confused by many writers with Benedictus Appenzeller; the long list of Ducis' works given by Fétis is spurious; Barclay Squire (in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft,' Jan., 1912) brought conclusive evidence that a considerable number of these works must be attributed to Benedictus Appenzeller (q.v.). Two works by Ducis were published in facsimile by M. Nijhoff (The Hague, 1925); 10 sacred motets were reprinted in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst,' vol. XXXIV (ed. by Joh. Wolf). —Cf. F. Spitta, Benedictus Ducis, in 'Monatsschrift für Gottesdienst und Kirchliche Kunst' (Jan.-March, 1913); also Charles Van den Borren, Benedictus de Opitiis, in 'Musica sacra' (Sept., 1927); D. Bartha, Benedictus Ducis und Appenzeller (Wolfenbüttel, 1930).

Ducloux, Walter, conductor; b. Kriens, Switzerland, April 17, 1913. He studied at the Univ. of Munich (1932-35) and at the Academy of Music in Vienna (1935-37); was assistant to Toscanini at the Lucerne Festivals (1938-39); came to America and conducted opera in New York (1940-42); became bandleader in the U. S. Army (1943-46). He returned to Europe as opera conductor in Prague and Brno (1946-48); then settled in New York (1949) as music director of 'Voice of America' broadcasts. In 1953 he was appointed head of the opera department of the School of Music at the Univ. of Southern California.

Ducroquet. See Daublaine.

Dufau (dü-foh'), Jenny, soprano, b. Rothau, Alsace, July 18, 1878; d. Pau, France, Aug. 29, 1924. Pupil of Etelka Gerster in Berlin (1901-5); studied subsequently with Mme. Marchesi, P. Vidal, A. Selva, and G. Benvenuti; sang at Berlin Opera (1910-11); from 1911, member of Chicago Opera Co., of which she was one of the most distinguished artists; later, appeared in vaudeville.

Dufay (dü-fäh-ē; in 3 syllables), Guillaume, chief representative of the Burgundian school, and famed particularly for his 3-part chansons and his Masses; b. probably at Hainault, c. 1400; d. Cambrai, Nov. 27, 1474. He was a choir-boy at the Cathedral of Cambrai, where he received an excellent training; his teachers were Loqueville and Grenon. He was in Rimini and Pesaro (1419-26); then returned to Cambrai, where he was chapel master (1426-28); then member of the Papal Chapel in Rome (1428-33); in the service of the Duke of Savoy (1433); again in Cambrai (1434); entered again the Papal Chapel (1435-37; not in Rome, however, but in Florence and Bologna); was again in Savoy (1438-44); studied jurisprudence at the Univ. of Turin, obtaining the degree 'Baccalarius in decretis' (c. 1445). In 1445 he settled at Cambrai, holding the important position of canon at the cathedrals of Cambrai and Mons. Under these fortunate circumstances, which enabled him to live in comfort, he spent the rest of his life, greatly esteemed by both the Church authorities and musicians; he was described by Compère as "the moon of all music, and the light of all singers." Dufay wrote music in almost every form practiced in his time, and was successful in each. Haberl gives a list of 150 works by Dufay, found in the libraries of Rome, Bologna, and Trieste; these include Masses, motets, a Magnificat, other church music, and a number of French chansons, in which Dufay excelled. Other MSS are in the libraries at Paris, Brussels, Florence, Venice, Oxford, Modena, Cambrai, and Munich.—Reprints: 19 of the 50 pieces in J. Stainer's Dufay and his Contemporaries (London, 1898); a hymn, Kyrie, and chanson in Schering's Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (nos. 38-40); 12 sacred and secular pieces, edited by H. Besseler, in Blume's Das Chorwerk (Heft 19); hymns in 3 and 4 parts, edited by R. Gerber, ib. (Heft 49); 4 selections in Davison and Apel, 'Harvard Anthology of Music,' vol. I; many pieces in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (vols. VII, XI, 1, XIX, 1, XXVII, 1, XXXI, and XL).—Bibl.: F. X. Quarterly' (April, 1954); see also chap. 2 in Gustave Reese, Music in the Renaissance (N. Y., 1954). H. Besseler's article in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart' incorporates new documentary discoveries on Dufay's life (many of them made by Besseler himself). Publication of Dufay's collected works was begun in Rome in 1947, edited by G. de Van and, after his death, by H. Bessler; another ed. was begun in the same year by L. Feininger.

Dufourcq, Norbert, French organist and music historian; b. St. Jean-de-Braye (Loiret), Sept. 21, 1904; studied with Gastoué; in 1923 became organist at St. Merry in Paris; in 1941 appointed professor of music history at the Paris Cons. He has written numerous valuable books dealing with the organ in France: Documents inédits relatifs à l'orgue français (1934-35; 2 vols.); Esquisse d'une histoire de l'orgue en France du XIII<sup>e</sup> au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1935); Les Clicquot, facteurs d'orgue (1942); 2 books on Bach: J. S. Bach, génie allemand? génie latin? (1947); J. S. Bach, le maître de l'orgue (1948); also César Franck (1949); Le Clavecin (1949); La musique française (1949); La musique d'orgue française de Jehan Titelouze à Jehan Alain (1949); Autour de Coquard, Franck et Vincent d'Indy (1952); Nicolas Lebègue (1954); contributor to and editor of La musique des origines à nos jours (Paris, 1946; new ed., 1956).

Dufranne (dü-frähn'), Hector, dramatic baritone; b. Mons, Belgium, Oct. 25, 1870; d. Paris, May 5, 1951. He made his début as Valentine in Faust at La Monnaie, Brussels, Sept. 9, 1896; at Opéra-Comique, Paris, on June 18, 1900; at Manhattan Opera House, N. Y. (1908); member of Chicago Opera Co. (1910-13).

Dugan, Franjo, Croatian composer and organist; b. Krapinica, Sept. 11, 1874; d. Zagreb, Dec. 12, 1948. He studied music with Max Bruch in Berlin, and also attended classes in mathematics. He settled in Zagreb as church organist; taught at the Zagreb Cons.; publ. manuals on orchestration and musical form; also many organ pieces.

Dugazon (dü-gäh-zohn'), Louise Rosalie, famous opera singer; b. Berlin, June 18, 1755; d. Paris, Sept. 22, 1821. She was brought up in the atmosphere of the theater; her father, F. J. Lefebvre, was a French dancer at the Berlin Opera; she herself began her career as a ballet dancer; then she became a singer, encouraged mainly by Grétry, who thought highly of her talent. She made her début in Paris in Grétry's opera Sylvain (June 19, 1774); in 1775 she married an actor who used the professional name Dugazon; although they were soon separated, she adopted this name for her professional appearances. She sang mostly at the Opéra-Comique; created some 60 new roles; her last public appearance was at the Paris Opéra on Feb. 29, 1804. She was greatly admired by her contemporaries, and her name became a designation of certain types of operatic parts ('jeune Dugazon', i. e., an ingénue).—Cf. H. and A. Leroux, La Dugazon (Paris, 1926).

Duggan, Joseph Francis, Irish pianist and composer; b. Dublin, July 10, 1817; d. London, 1900. He was engaged at the Italian Opera, New York; taught in Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington; then lived in London; became professor of singing in the Guildhall School of Music. He wrote 2 successful operas, Pierre (London, 1853) and Leonie (London, 1854); 2 symphonies, 6 string quartets, numerous piano pieces; also published The Singing Master's Assistant and transls. of Albrechtsberger's Science of Music (Philadelphia, 1842) and Fétis' Counterpoint and Fugue.

Duhamel, Antoine, French composer; b. Paris, July 30, 1925, a son of the famous writer, Georges Duhamel. He studied with René Leibowitz and from the very first began to compose in the dodecaphonic technique; has written a quintet for piano and wind instruments; also published a book, L'Opéra depuis Wagner (Liège, 1950).

Duiffoprugcar (properly Tieffenbrucker), Gaspar, Bavarian viol maker; b. Tieffenbrugg, Bavaria, 1514 (date established by Dr. Coutagne of Lyons, in his work Gaspar Duiffoprucart et les luthiers lyonnais du XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle, Paris, 1893); d. Lyons, Dec. 16, 1571. Long reputed to be the first maker of violins; but Vidal, in his Les Instruments à archet, states that all the so-called Duiffoprugcar violins are spurious, having been made by Vuillaume, who in 1827 conceived the idea of making violins after the pattern of a viola da gamba by Duiffoprugcar. Apparently, the latter learned his trade in Italy, the usual spellings of his name showing it to be Italianized rather than Gallicized; he settled in Lyons in 1553, and was naturalized in 1559.

Dukas (dü-käh'), Paul, famous French composer; b. Paris, Oct. 1, 1865; d. there, May 17, 1935. From 1882-8 pupil at the Cons. of G. Mathias (piano), Th. Dubois (harmony), and E. Guiraud (composition); won 1st prize for counterpoint and fugue in 1886, and second Prix de Rome with a cantata Velléda (1888); music critic of the 'Revue Hebdomadaire' and 'Gazette des Beaux-Arts'; also contributor to the 'Chron-ique des Arts', 'Revue musicale', etc.; 1906, Chevalier Légion d'Honneur; 1910-12, prof. of the orch. class at the Cons.; 1918, elected Debussy's successor as member of the 'Conseil de l'enseignement supérieur' there; Dec. 1, 1927, appointed prof. of composition at the Paris Cons.; also taught at the École Normale de Musique; assisted in the revising and editing of Rameau's complete works for Durand of Paris. He was a composer of solid attainments, whose talent showed to greatest advantage in the larger instrumental forms, which he handled with mastery. Although he was not a prolific composer, he wrote a masterpiece of modern music in his orchestral scherzo L'Apprenti Sorcier; his opera Ariane et Barbe-Bleue is one of the finest French operas in the impressionist style. Shortly before his death he destroyed several manuscripts of his unfinished compositions.—Works: 3 overtures: King Lear (1883), Götz von Berlichingen (1884), Polyeucte (1891); a symph. in C (Paris, Jan. 3, 1897); L'Apprenti Sorcier (May 18, 1897; his most famous work); opera, Ariane et Barbe-Bleue (Opéra-Comique, May 10, 1907); a ballet, La Péri (Paris, April 22, 1912); Villanelle for horn and piano (1906); for piano: Sonata in Eb minor; Variations, interlude et finale on a theme by Rameau; Prélude élégiaque. Together with Saint-Saëns he completed Guiraud's opera Frédégonde.—Cf. O. Séré, Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (1911; revised ed. Paris, 1921); G. Samazeuilh, Paul Dukas (Paris, 1913); G. Jean-Aubry, La Musique fr. d'aujourd'hui (1916). V. d'Indy, E. Chabrier et Paul Dukas (1920); A. Cœuroy, La Musique française moderne (1922); A. Cortot, La Musique française de Piano; I. Duke, John, American pianist and composer; b. Cumberland, Maryland, July 30, 1899. He studied at the Peabody Cons. in Baltimore with G. Strube (composition) and H. Randolph (piano); later studied in Europe with Schnabel and Nadia Boulanger. In 1923, he was appointed instructor at Smith College.—Works: string trio (1937); concerto for piano and strings (1938); Carnival Overture (1941); piano trio (1943); 1-act opera, Captain Lovelock (N. Y., Feb. 20, 1956); many songs.

Dukelsky, Vladimir (pen-name as composer of light music: Vernon Duke), versatile composer of both 'serious' and popular music; b. Oct. 10, 1903, in the railroad station of the village Parfianovka (during his mother's trip to Pskov); pupil at the Kiev Cons. of Glière and Dombrovsky; left Russia in 1920 and went to Turkey, coming to the U. S. shortly afterward; later lived in Paris and London; settled in N. Y. in 1929; lieutenant in Coast Guard (1939-44); went back to France (1947-48), but then returned to U. S. to live in N. Y. and Hollywood. He began to compose at a very early age; was introduced to Diaghilev, who commissioned him to write a ballet Zéphyr et Flore, the production of which put Dukelsky among the successful group of ballet composers. Another important meeting was with Koussevitzky, who championed Dukelsky's music in Paris and in Boston. In the U. S. Dukelsky began writing popular music; many of his songs, such as April in Paris, have enjoyed great popularity. At George Gershwin's suggestion, he adopted the name Vernon Duke for popular music works; in 1955 he dropped his full name altogether, and signed both his serious and light compositions as Vernon Duke; published an amusing autobiography, Passport to Paris (Boston, 1955).—Works: for the stage: Zéphyr et Flore (Paris, Jan. 31, 1925); Yvonne, operetta (London, 1926); Demoiselle Paysanne, opera in 2 acts (1928); Public Gardens, ballet (1935); Le bal des blanchisseuses, ballet (Paris, Dec. 19, 1946); Souvenir de Monte Carlo, ballet (1949-56); for orch.: piano concerto (1924; not orchestrated); 3 symphonies (No. 1, Paris, June 14, 1928; No. 2, Boston, April 25, 1930; No. 3, Brussels Radio Orch., Oct. 10, 1947); Ballade for piano and small orch. (1931); Dédicaces, for soprano, piano, and orch. (Boston Symph., Dec. 16, 1938); violin concerto (Boston, March 19, 1943); cello concerto (Boston, Jan. 4, 1946); Ode to the Milky Way (N. Y., Nov. 18, 1946); choral music: Dushenka, duet for women's voices and chamber orch. (1927); Epitaph (on the death of Diaghilev), for soprano solo, chorus and orch. (Boston Symph., April 15, 1932); The End of St. Petersburg, oratorio (Schola Cantorum, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1938); Moulin-Rouge, for mixed chorus (1941); A Song About Myself, for mixed chorus (1944); 5 Victorian Street Ballads, for women's voices (1944); Ballad Made in the Hot Weather (1945); Paris, aller et retour, cantata (1947); four choruses to Ogden Nash's words (1955); chamber music: trio (variations) for flute, bassoon and piano (1930); Etude for bassoon and piano (1932); Capriccio Mexicano, for violin and piano (1933); 3 pieces for woodwind (1939); violin sonata (1949); string quartet (1956); songs: Three Chinese Songs (1937); Park Avenue Lyrics (1945); The Musical Zoo (20 songs to Ogden Nash's lyrics, 1946); A Shropshire Lad, song cycle (1949); for piano: Sonata (1927); Barrel Organ Barcarolle (1943); Homage to Boston, suite (1943); Surrealist Suite (1944); Souvenir de Venise (1948); Serenade to San Francisco (1956). He wrote songs in the following musical comedies: The Show is On, Garrick Gaieties, Walk a Little Faster, Three's a Crowd, Americana, Ziegfeld Follies, Cabin in the Sky, etc.; arranged Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue for 2 pianos; added 2 ballets and several songs to Goldwyn Follies, unfinished film score by George Gershwin (1937).

Dulcken, Ferdinand Quentin, pianist and composer; b. London, June 1, 1837; d. Astoria, L. I., Dec. 10, 1901. He was the son of Luise Dulcken, and nephew of Ferdinand David; was a pupil of Moscheles and Gade at the Leipzig Cons.; also received encouragement from Mendelssohn. He subsequently taught at the Warsaw Cons., and also at Moscow and St. Petersburg; made many concert tours in Europe as pianist with Wieniawski, Vieuxtemps, and others. In 1876 he emigrated to America and gave concerts with Reményi; settled in New York as teacher and composer. He publ. nearly 400 piano pieces of the salon type and also some vocal works.

Dulcken, Luise, pianist (née David; a sister of Ferdinand David); b. Hamburg, March 29, 1811; d. London, April 12, 1850. She was taught by C. F. G. Schwencke and Wilhelm Grund; played in public (in Germany) when 11 years of age. She married in 1828, and went to London, where she met with brilliant success as a pianist and teacher. Queen Victoria was one of her many pupils.

Dulichius (Dulich, Deilich, Deulich), Philippus, German composer and music theorist; b. Chemnitz, Dec. 18 (baptized 19th), 1562; d. Stettin, March 24 (buried on March 25), 1631. He studied at the Univ. of Leipzig; there is no evidence that he went to Italy and studied with Gabrieli, although this assertion appears in his biographies. He was cantor in Stettin from 1587 until his death. Of his numerous works (exclusively vocal) the most important are: Novum opus musicum duarum partium continens dicta insigniora ex evangeliiis (Stettin, 1599); Centuriae octonum et septenum vocum harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae Triados consecratas continentes (4 parts, Stettin, 1607). R. Schwartz published 7 choruses from the Centuriae (1896); the complete Centuriae are published in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst' (XXXI, XLI).—Cf. R. Schwartz, Philippus Dulichius, in 'Monatsschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst' (1896).

Du Locle, Camille Théophile Germain du Commun, French librettist; b. Orange, Vaucluse, July 16, 1832; d. Capri, Oct. 9, 1903. He was secretary of the Opéra under Perrin's direction; later, director of the Opéra-Comique. The librettos of Verdi's Don Carlos (French) and Reyer's Sigurd and Salammbô were from his pen.

Dülön, Friedrich Ludwig, a blind German flutist; b. Oranienburg, near Potsdam, Aug. 14, 1769; d. Würzburg, July 7, 1826. He was taught by his father (flute) and Angerstein (theory); in 1783 his concert travels began, and extended all over Europe. In 1793-94 he was chamber musician at the St. Petersburg court (gave first concert in St. Petersburg on March 30, 1793); then settled (1823) in Würzburg. He wrote an autobiography: Dülons des blinden Flöten-spielers Leben und Meinungen, von ihm selbst bearbeitet (Zürich, 2 vols., 1807-8, ed. by Wieland).—Works: a flute concerto; 9 duets and variations for flute and violin; flute duets; caprices for flute.

Dumesnil (dü-mä-nēl'), Maurice, French pianist and writer; b. Angoulême, Charente, April 20, 1886. He received his academic training at the Lycée de Caen, Calvados; studied music at the Paris Cons. (graduated 1905), and with Isidor Philipp (piano), Emanuel Moor and A. Bernardi (harmony, composition, orchestration, and conducting); he received personal coaching from Debussy in the interpretation of the composer's works. Dumesnil then went to South America; was guest conductor in Argentina, Chile, and Mexico (1916-20); toured the U. S. as pianist with the historic piano of Chopin (1926-27); numerous tours of South and Central America (1920-30); appearances as pianist and radio commentator in the U. S. (1936-38). Since 1944, he has been editor of 'The Teacher's Round Table' in 'Etude' magazine; professor at Michigan State College (1944-47); since 1947, professor at Chicago Musical College. Dumesnil is married to Evangeline Lehman, American composer and author, who studied at the American Cons. of Fontainebleau, France, and who has written a symphonic choral legend, Thérèse de Lisieux (1933); a cantata, Noël (Paris, Dec. 24, 1933); piano pieces, songs and vocal ensembles.—Publications: An Amazing Journey (1932); How to Play and Teach Debussy (1933); Claude Debussy, Master of Dreams (1940).

Dumesnil (dü-mā-nēl'), René, French writer; b. Rouen, June 19, 1879; living in Paris as literary and music critic. Besides numerous works on literature (G. Flaubert), he has written the following books on music: Le rythme musical (1921; 2nd augmented ed., 1949); Le monde des musiciens (1924); Le Don Juan de Mozart (1927); Musiciens romantiques (1928); Richard Wagner (1929); La musique contemporaine en France (1930); Le livre du disque (with P. Hemardinger; 1931); Histoire illustrée de la musique (1934); Portraits de musiciens français (1938); La musique romantique française (1944); La musique en France entre les deux guerres (Geneva, 1946); L'Envers de la musique (Paris, 1949); Histoire illustrée du théâtre lyrique (Paris, 1953; received the Grand Prix for musical literature); Richard Wagner (Paris, 1954; a much larger work than his first Wagner book of 1929). He has also written articles on Roussel, Ferroud, Delannoy, Paul Dukas, and others in the 'Revue musicale,' etc.; collaborated in the compiling of the Collection des grandes œuvres musicales.

Dumler, Martin G., American composer; b. Cincinnati, Dec. 22, 1868; studied at the Cincinnati College of Music (graduated 1901); was subsequently vice-president of the board of trustees; also president of the Bruckner Society. His compositions are chiefly settings of sacred texts.

Dumont (dü-mon'), Henri, Belgian composer, b. Villers l'Évêque, near Liège, 1610; d. Paris, May 8, 1684; was chorister at Maëstricht, ordained priest at Liège, and organist at St. Paul's, Paris, from 1639 until his death.—Works: 5 Messes Royales en plain-chant (Paris, 1699; 4th ed. 1701); 3 books of Meslanges à 2, 3, 4, 5 (Paris, 1649, 1657, 1661); 5 books of motets a 2-4 (1652-86); etc.—4 of his works have been reprinted in 'Musique d'église des XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles,' ed. by Ch. Pineau.—Cf. H. Quittard, Un musicien en France au XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle, Henri Dumont (1906); A. Gastoué, Les Messes Royales de Henri Dumont (Paris, 1912).

Dunayevsky, Isaak, Soviet composer of popular songs; b. Lohvita, near Poltava, Jan. 30, 1900; d. Moscow, July 25, 1955. He began to study piano as a child; then entered the Kharkov Cons. and studied violin with Joseph Achron. He graduated in 1919, and went to Leningrad. He devoted himself mainly to popular music; some songs from his operettas and film scores have become famous. At one time he experimented with jazz rhythms, introducing them into his music. He received many honors from the Soviet government; in 1941 he won the first Stalin Prize for his music to the films The Circus and Volga.—Cf. L. Danilevitch, Isaak Dunayevsky (Moscow, 1947).

Dunbar, Rudolph, Negro conductor and composer; b. British Guiana, April 5, 1907. He played as a child in a local military band. In 1919 came to the U. S. and entered the Juilliard School of Music, graduating in 1928. Later studied in Paris, Leipzig, and Vienna. He made his London début as conductor on April 26, 1942, and in Paris, Nov. 18, 1944. He has written a ballet, Dance of the 21st Century (1938).

Duncan, William Edmondstone, English composer and writer on music; b. Sale, Cheshire, April 22, 1866; d. there, June 26, 1920. He studied at the Royal College of Music with Parry and Stanford; then acted as music critic and correspondent of British and American music magazines. He wrote an opera Perseus (1892); ode for chorus and orch. Ye Mariners of England (Glasgow, 1890); Ode to Music (after Swinburne, 1893); a setting of Milton's sonnet To a Nightingale for soprano and orch. (1895), etc.; also publ. several books on music: Schubert (1905; 2nd ed., 1934; in Spanish, Buenos Aires, 1942); The Story of Minstrelsy (1907); A History of Music (1908); The Story of the Carol (1911); Encyclopedia of Musical Terms (1914); and Ultra-Modernism in Music (1917).

Dunham, Henry Morton, American organist; b. Brockton, Mass., July 29, 1853; d. Brookline, Mass., May 4, 1929. He studied at the New England Cons.; was organist at the Porter Congregational Church in Brockton (1870-81); of Ruggles Street Baptist Church, Boston (1883-93); Shawmut Congregational Church (1893-1905); and Harvard Church, Brookline (1906-12); then retired. He taught at the New England Cons. for 52 years (1876-1929).—Publ. works: Organ School (in 4 books); 3 organ sonatas; marches, preludes, fugues, passacaglias, and other organ music; also numerous arrangements; A System of Technique for Piano; The Choir Manual; Hymn Music (3 books); etc.—Cf. H. M. Dunham, The Life of a Musician, Woven into a Strand of History of the New England Conservatory of Music (posthumous, N. Y., 1931).

Dunhill, Thomas Frederick, English composer; b. London, Feb. 1, 1877; d. Scunthorpe, Lincolnshire, March 13, 1946. He entered the Royal Academy of Music in 1893, and studied with Franklin Taylor (piano) and Stanford (theory); became assistant prof. of piano at Eton College (1899-1908); in 1905 appointed prof. at Royal Academy of Music; in 1907 he founded the 'Concerts of British Chamber-Music,' which he conducted until 1916. He served as adjudicator for numerous music festivals.—Works: The operas The Enchanted Garden (Carnegie award, 1925; performed at Royal Academy of Music, London, 1927); Tantivy Towers (London, Jan. 16, 1931); Happy Families (Guildford, Nov. 1, 1933); ballet, Gallimaufry (Hamburg, Dec. 11, 1937); for orch.: Symphony in A minor (Belgrade, 1922, composer conducting); Elegiac Variations (Gloucester Festival, 1922); The Pixies, suite; Dick Whittington, suite; Valse-Fantasia for flute and orch.; Capricious Variations, for cello and orch.; chamber music: Phantasy for string quartet; piano quintet; quintet for violin, cello, clarinet, horn, and piano; quintet for horn and string quartet; piano quartet; viola sonata; Pleasantries (trio); 2 violin sonatas; Comrades, for baritone and orch.; The Wind among the Reeds, song cycle for tenor and orch.; John Gilpin, cantata for treble voices; children's choruses, operettas, and cantatas; songs (The Cloths of Heaven, The Fiddler of Dooney, etc.); violin pieces; compositions for cello.—Books: Chamber Music (a treatise for students, 1912); Mozart's String Quartets (2 vols., 1927); Sullivan's Comic Operas (1928); Sir Edward Elgar (biography, 1938).

Duni, Egidio Romoaldo, Italian composer of opera; b. Matera, Feb. 9, 1709; d. Paris, June 11, 1775. He first studied in the Cons. 'della Madonna di Loreto,' under Durante; then in the Cons. 'della Pietà de' Turchini.' His first opera, Nerone (Rome, May 21, 1735), was a great popular success. He went to London (1737) and Holland (1738); in 1739 he returned to Italy; in 1745 he was maestro di cappella at S. Nicolo di Bari, in Naples; became tutor at the Court of Parma, where, encouraged by the Duke, he began composing French operettas, one of which, Le caprice amoureux ou Ninette à la cour (Parma, 1756) was so well received that Duni decided to try his fortune in Paris, where he brought out a swarm of light and frivolous stage pieces which suited the prevailing taste; he is regarded by some music historians as a founder of French opéra-bouffe. He wrote about 15 Italian operas, and 20 in French.

Dunkley, Ferdinand (Luis), organist and composer; b. London, July 16, 1869; d. Waldwick, N. J., Jan. 5, 1956. He was a pupil at the Royal Academy of Music of Parry, Bridge, Martin, Gladstone, Sharpe, and Barnet; organist of St. Jude's, London (1885-7) and of St. Aubyn's, London (1888-93). In 1893 he was engaged as Director of Music at St. Agnes' School, Albany, N. Y.; professor of theory at Woman's College, Montgomery, Alabama (1927-29); organist at Temple Sinai, New Orleans (1924-34); in 1934 appointed prof. at Loyola Univ., New Orleans. He made his last public appearance on his 82nd birthday when he gave an organ recital.—Works: The Wreck of the Hesperus, ballade for soli, chorus, and orch.; the choral works, Praise the Lord (1919), Green Branches (1919), God is my strong salvation (1921), Street Cries (1924), Blessed is the man (1937); etc.

Dunlop, Isobel (Violet Skelton), Scottish violinist and composer; b. Edinburgh, March 4, 1901. She studied with Tovey and Dyson; gave concerts presenting her own works. She has written mainly for chorus; has also composed a viola sonata.

Dunn, James Philip, American composer; b. New York, Jan. 10, 1884; d. Jersey City, N. J., July 24, 1936. He studied at the College of the City of N. Y. (B.A., 1903); then at Columbia Univ. with MacDowell, and subsequently with Cornelius Rybner. He was then active as teacher and church organist in New York and elsewhere. As a composer, he attracted attention by his symph. poem descriptive of Lindbergh's transatlantic flight We (N. Y., Aug. 27, 1927). He also wrote an Overture on Negro Themes (N. Y., July 22, 1922), some chamber music and organ pieces. See John Tasker Howard, James Philip Dunn (N. Y., 1925).

Dunn, John, English concert violinist; b. Hull, Feb. 16, 1866; d. Harrogate, Dec. 18, 1940. He received his first instruction from his brother, who was conductor of the Hull Theatre Orch.; then was a pupil at the Leipzig Cons. of Schradieck (violin) and Jadassohn (theory). He made his début at Promenade Concerts, London (1882); toured England and Germany with success. He wrote several pieces for violin (including Soliloquy for violin and piano; Berceuse for violin and piano), a cadenza to Beethoven's violin concerto; his own concerto for violin and orch., and a sonatina for piano.—Book: Manual of Violin Playing (London, 1898).

Dunn, John Petri, Scottish pianist and writer on music; b. Edinburgh, Oct. 26, 1878; d. there, Feb. 4, 1931. He studied in London with Matthay; toured Europe as accompanist of Jan Kubelik in 1904; later was professor at the Stuttgart and Kiel Conservatories; 1914, returned to Great Britain; was prof. of music at the Edinburgh Univ. from 1920 until death.—Books: Ornamentation in the Works of Chopin (London, 1921); A Student's Guide for Orchestration (London, 1928); The Basis of Pianoforte Playing (London, 1933).

Dunstable (Dunstable), John, English composer; b. probably at Dunstable, Bedfordshire, c. 1370; d. Dec. 24, 1453; buried in St. Stephen's Walbrook, London. He was the most important English composer of the early 15th century, rivalling his contemporaries Binchois and Dufay; also astrologer and mathematician. From April 28, 1419, to May 1440 he was canon of Hereford Cathedral and prebendary of Putson Minor; for some time he was in the service of John, Duke of Bedford; the Duke, as Regent of France, represented King Henry V in Paris for a number of years, and probably took his musicians with him. Practically nothing further is known of Dunstable's life. Much of his music is contained in the six MSS discovered by F. X. Haberl in the library of the cathedral of Trent in 1884 ('Trent Codices'). Adler and Koller published six sacred and a number of secular pieces of Dunstable's from these Codices in vol. VII of the Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich; other specimens of Dunstable's music are in vols. XXVII, XXXI, and XL. A list of Dunstable's works known to exist (about 54) is contained in Cecie Stainer's Dunstable and the Various Settings of O Rosa Bella in the 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (II, 1); a supplementary list was published by Bukofzer in his article Über Leben und Werke von Dunstable in 'Acta musicologica' (VIII, p. 111 ff.). An examination of these compositions reveals not only the existence of a highly developed art in England early in the 15th century, antedating the full flowering of the Burgundian school (Binchois, Dufay), but also Dunstable's most important contributions to the music of the period in making use of the declamatory motet (in which the rhythm of the spoken word largely governs the musical rhythm) and, apparently, introducing the motet with double structure (which provided the predominant technique of Mass composition in the 15th century). Besides the abovementioned articles, see H. Dunstan, Ralph, English composer and writer on music; b. Carnon Downs, Truro, Nov. 17, 1857; d. London, April 2, 1933; Mus. Doc. Cambridge, 1892. Editor of A Manual of Music (1918; many eds.); A Cyclopedic Dictionary of Music (1925); Composer's Hand Book; The Cornish Song Book; Cornish Dialect and Folk-Songs; and other popular pedagogic and musical works. Also composed church music (21 Masses, anthems), cantatas, and songs for schools.

Duparc (Fouques Duparc), (Marie-Eugène) Henri, French song composer; b. Paris, Jan. 21, 1848; d. Mont-de-Marsan, Landes, Feb. 12, 1933. Pupil of César Franck from 1872-5; one of the founders of the 'Société Nationale de Musique.' A nervous affliction compelled him to renounce all artistic activity in 1885, after which he lived in retirement in Switzerland. Franck considered him the most gifted of all his pupils; his songs written between 1868 and 1884 are of extraordinary originality, presaging the early Impressionism of Fauré and Debussy, and characterized by fluid harmony of unrelated tonalities governing melody of evocative beauty. Among several works destroyed by Duparc himself were a sonata for cello and piano, Poème nocturne, and a suite for orch. His extant works are a symphonic poem, Lénore (1875); Aux Étoiles, for orch. (early work, publ. 1910; Paris, April 11, 1874); Feuilles volantes, 6 pieces for piano; La Fuite, duet for soprano and tenor (1872); and the songs Sérénade, Romance de Mignon, Galop, Chanson triste, Soupir, Invitation au Voyage, La Vague et la Cloche, Extase, Sérénade florentine, Le Manoir de Rosamonde, Testament, Phidylé, Lamento, Dupin (dü-păn'), Paul (pseudonym Louis Lothar), French composer; b. Roubaix, Aug. 14, 1865; d. Paris, March 5, 1949; first head of a factory, then a bookkeeper in Paris, turning, after 1912, to music as a profession. Studied with E. Durand, but otherwise self-taught as a composer, displaying great originality in his very numerous works, about 220 of which have been publ.—Compositions: A 4-act opera, Marcelle; an oratorio; orchestral works; 500 canons for 3-12 voices; songs; chamber music (violin sonatas, trio for cello, flute, and harp, piano trio, string quartet, 40 poems for string quartet); violin pieces; piano works (sonata, sonatina, Esquisses fuguées, Dentelles, duets).—Cf. R. Rolland, Paul Dupin, in 'Bulletin Français de la S.I.M.' (Dec. 15, 1908); C. Koechlin, Dupin, in the 'Revue musicale' (Jan., 1923); A. Cœuroy, La Musique française moderne; P. Dupont (dü-pöhn'), Gabriel, French composer; b. Caen, Mar. 1, 1878; d. Vésinet, Aug. 2, 1914. Pupil of his father, the organist at the Cathedral; later, of Gédalge; then of Massenet and Widor at the Paris Cons.; won the 2nd Prix de Rome in 1901. In a contest conducted in 1903 by Sonzogno, the publishing house in Milan, his opera La Cabrera was selected, along with 2 others, to be performed and judged by the public (237 works were submitted); it was produced at Milan on May 17, 1904, with great success, thereby winning for Dupont the prize of 50,000 lire; other operas: La Glu, libretto by Jean Richepin (Nice, Jan. 24, 1910); La Farce du Cuvier (Brussels, March 21, 1912); Antar (the outbreak of the World War [1914] caused the suspension of its rehearsals; it was not produced until 1921 [after Dupont's death], when it was very successfully given at the Opéra on March 14); also Les Heures dolentes, for orch. (4 pieces from a suite of 14 compositions for piano, 1903-05); Poèmes d'automne, for piano; the symph. poems Hymne à Aphrodite and Le Chant de la destinée; Poème for piano quintet; many other piano pieces; etc.—Cf. M. Léna, Gabriel Dupont, Souvenirs, and H. Collet, Antar, in 'Le Ménestrel' (March 18, 1921); E. Vuillermoz, Antar de Gabriel Dupont à l'Opéra, in the 'Revue Musicale' (April, 1921); M. Dumesnil, Gabriel Dupont, Musician of Normandy, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1944).

Dupont, Pierre, French song writer; b. Rochetaillée, near Lyons, April 23, 1821; d. St. Etienne, July 25, 1870. The son of a laborer, and himself uneducated, he made a name by his political and rustic ditties, of which he wrote the words, and then sang the airs to Reyer, who put them into shape. His political songs (Le Pain, Le Chant des ouvriers, etc.) created such disturbances that he was banished in 1851, but pardoned in 1852, after the 'coup d'état.' His song for basso, Les bœufs, is well known.

Duport (dü-pohr'), Jean-Louis, famous French cellist; b. Paris, Oct. 4, 1749; d. there, Sept. 7, 1819. Made his public début at the 'Concert Spirituel' (1768); joined his brother, Jean Pierre, in Berlin at the outbreak of the Revolution; returning in 1806, he became musician to Charles IV, the ex-king of Spain, at Marseilles; returned to Paris in 1812, where he was soon regarded as the foremost French cellist, joined the imperial orch. (remaining a member when it became the royal orch.), and was appointed prof. in the Cons. (suppressed 1815).—Works: 6 cello concertos; sonatas, duos, airs variées, 9 nocturnes (for harp and cello), etc. His Essai sur le doigté du violoncelle et la conduite de l'archet, avec une suite d'exercices, is still a standard text-book, and practically laid the foundations of modern cello virtuosity.

Duprato (dü-prah-toh'), Jules-Laurent, composer; b. Nîmes, March 26, 1827; d. Paris, May 20, 1892. He studied with Leborne at the Paris Cons.; 1848, won the Prix de Rome; 1866 instructor, 1871 prof. of harmony, at the Cons. He composed operettas, cantatas, songs, etc.; also recitatives for Hérold's L'Illusion and Balfe's The Bohemian Girl.—Cf. F. Clauzel, Jules Duprato (1896).

Dupré (du-prä'), Marcel, French organist and composer; b. Rouen, May 3, 1886. He was a pupil of his father, Albert Dupré, also an organist; he then entered the Paris Cons. (1904) and studied with Guilmant, Diémer, and Widor, winning 1st prizes for organ (1907) and for fugue (1909); in 1914 he won the Grand Prix de Rome for the cantata Psyché. He was interim organist at Notre-Dame in 1916; in 1920 he gave at the Paris Cons. a cycle of 10 recitals of Bach's complete organ works, playing from memory. On Nov. 18, 1921, he made his

New York début, followed by a transcontinental tour of 94 recitals given in 85 American cities; a second U. S. tour in 1923 included 110 concerts; he made his tenth tour of the U. S. in 1948. In 1939 he gave 40 concerts in Australia on his world tour. He had, meanwhile, been appointed prof. of organ at the Paris Cons. in 1926; in 1934 he succeeded Widor as organist at St. Sulpice; he became general director of the American Cons. in Fontainebleau in 1947 and was appointed director of the Paris Cons., in succession to Delvincourt, in 1954. Dupré wrote his first work, the oratorio La Vision de Jacob, at the age of 14; it was performed on his 15th birthday, at his father's house in Rouen, in a domestic production assisted by a local choral society. Most of his organ works are products of original improvisations (in which he is unexcelled in modern times for spontaneity and perfection of contrapuntal, fugal, and formal development). Thus Symphonie-Passion, first improvised at the Wanamaker organ in Philadelphia (Dec. 8, 1921), was written down much later and performed in its final version at Westminster Cathedral, London (Oct. 9, 1924). Similarly, Le Chemin de la Croix was improvised in Brussels (Feb. 13, 1931) and performed in a definitive version in Paris the following year (March 18, 1932). Among pre-composed works there are symphonies for organ: No. 1 (Glasgow, Jan. 3, 1929) and No. 2 (1946); Concerto for organ and orch. (Groningen, Holland, April 27, 1938, with Dupré as soloist); Psalm XVIII (1949); 76 chorales and several a cappella choruses; also numerous 'verset-préludes.' He is the author of a Traité d'improvisation à l'orgue (1925) and Méthode d'orgue.—Cf. R. Delestre, L'œuvre de Marcel Dupré (Paris, 1952); B. Gavoty, Marcel Dupré (Monaco, 1955).

Duprez (dü-prä'), Louis-Gilbert, French tenor; b. Paris, Dec. 6, 1806; d. there, Sept. 23, 1896. His fine boy-voice gained him admission to Chorons's Institute; after diligent vocal and theoretical study, he made his début as Count Almaviva at the Odéon, in 1825. Dissatisfied with the results, he subjected himself to a long course of training in Italy, and in 1836 succeeded Nourrit at the Opéra. He was appointed prof. of lyrical declamation at the Cons. in 1842, but resigned in 1850 to establish a vocal school of his own, which flourished. After his retirement (1855) from the stage, he produced several operas, an oratorio, a Mass, etc., without great success. But his vocal methods, L'art du chant (1845) and La Mélodie, études complémentaires vocales et dramatiques de l'Art du chant (1846), are justly celebrated; also wrote Souvenirs d'un chanteur (1880).—Cf. A. A. Elwart, Duprez, sa vie artistique (Paris, 1838).

Dupuis (dü-püë'), Albert, outstanding Belgian composer; b. Verviers, March 1, 1877. Pupil of d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum in Paris; winner of Belgian Prix de Rome with his cantata La Chanson d'Halwijn (Verviers, Nov. 25, 1903; performed as a 3-act opera Antwerp, Dec. 6, 1913); in 1938 he became director of the Cons. at Verviers.—Works: The operas, L'Idylle (Verviers, 1896), Bilitis (ibid., 1899), Jean Michel (Brussels, March 5, 1903), Martyr (ibid., March 3, 1905), Fidelaine (Liège, 1910), Le Château de la Grande Bretèche (Nice, 1913), La Passion (Monte Carlo, April 2, 1916), La Captivité de Babylone (biblical drama), La Barrière (Verviers, 1920), La Délivrance (Lille, 1921), Le Sacrifice (Antwerp, 1921), La Victoire (Brussels, 1923); Hassan, oriental fairy tale (Antwerp, 1931); Un drame sous Philippe II (Brussels, Jan. 18, 1938); the cantatas Les Cloches nuptiales, Oedipe à Colonne and Cortège lyrique; ballets: Évocation d'Espagne and Rêve d'enfant; for orch.: 2 symphonies (1904 and 1923); violin concerto; piano concerto; Caprice for flute and orch.; Valse Joyeuse for orch.; choruses, songs, etc. In 1955 he was awarded by the Société des auteurs lyriques de Paris a prize for his creative output.—Cf. J. Dor, Albert Dupuis (Liège, 1935).

Dupuis, Sylvain, Belgian conductor; b. Liège, Oct. 9, 1856; d. Bruges, Sept. 28, 1931. Pupil of the Liège Cons., winning the Prix de Rome in 1881; teacher of counterpoint there; conductor of the singing society La Légia; established in 1888 the 'Nouveaux Concerts Symphoniques'; appointed 1st cond. at Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, 1900, and conductor of the 'Concerts Populaires'; from 1911 director of the Cons. at Liège; member of the Belgian Academy.—Works: 2 operas, Cour d'Ognon and Moïna; 3 cantatas, La Cloche de Roland, Camoëns, and Chant de la Création; a symphonic poem, Macbeth; a concertino for oboe and orch.; 2 suites for orch.; pieces for violin; choruses; etc.

Durand (dü-rähn'), Émile, French composer; b. St.-Brieuc, Feb. 16, 1830; d. Neuilly, May 6, 1903. While still a student at the Paris Cons., he was appointed (1850) teacher of an elementary singing class, and in 1871 prof. of harmony. He publ. Traité d'Harmonie and Traité de Composition musicale; also wrote several light operas.

Durand, Marie-Auguste, French organist and publisher; b. Paris, July 18, 1830; d. there, May 31, 1909. Organ pupil of Benoist; in 1849, organist at St. Ambroise, then at Ste.-Geneviève, St.-Roch, and (1862-74) St. Vincent de Paul. He also occupied himself with music criticism and composition (his Chaconne and Valse for piano are especially popular). In 1870 he entered into partnership with Schönewerk (acquiring Flaxland's music-publishing business), the firm then being known as 'Durand & Schönewerk'; when his son, Jacques (b. Paris, Feb. 22, 1865; d. Bel-Etat, Aug. 22, 1928), replaced Schönewerk in 1891, the title became 'Durand & Fils.' The house is now known as 'Durand & Cie.'; it has made a specialty of publishing works of the outstanding French composers (Joncières, Lalo, Massenet, Debussy, Saint-Saëns, César Franck, Chausson, Ravel, etc.), and has also brought out French editions of Wagner's Tannhäuser, The Flying Dutchman, and Lohengrin, as well as several editions of old masters, including a complete critical one of Rameau, ed. by Saint-Saëns.—Cf. J. Durand, Cours professionnel à l'usage des employés du commerce de musique (2 vols., 1923); J. Durand, Quelques souvenirs d'un éditeur de musique (2 vols., 1924-5). Jacques Durand also publ. Lettres de Cl. Debussy à son éditeur (Paris, 1927).

Durante, Francesco, celebrated Italian church composer and noted teacher; b. Frattamaggiore, near Naples, March 31, 1684; d. Naples, Aug. 13, 1755. He studied in Rome with Pitoni and, under the guidance of his uncle, D. Angelo, at the Cons. di Sant' Onofrio, where he taught in 1710-11; then became maestro at the Cons. di Santa Maria di Loreto, and at the Cons. dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo from 1728-39, and again at Sant' Onofrio from 1745 until his death. After Alessandro Scarlatti, and with Leo, Durante ranks as one of the founders and a chief representative of the 'Neapolitan school' of composition. He devoted himself almost exclusively to sacred music, in which the breadth, vigor, and resourcefulness of his style are more in evidence than marked originality. He was a very great teacher; his pupils, Duni, Traetta, Vinci, Jommelli, Piccinni, Guglielmi, Pergolesi, Paisiello, and others, took almost complete possession of the European lyric stage during the latter half of the 18th century.—The library of the Paris Cons. contains a rich collection of his works in MS: 13 Masses, and fragments of Masses; 16 psalms, 19 motets, several antiphons and hymns; besides 12 madrigals, 6 harpsichord sonatas, etc. His Lamentations of Jeremiah and a Pastoral Mass are in the Vienna Library (in MS). The libraries of the Naples and Bologna Cons. also possess MSS of Durante. Karmrodt of Halle printed a grand Magnificat (with additional accompaniments by Robert Franz); Breitkopf & Härtel published 12 duetti da Camera; H. Schletterer ed. a selection of his keyboard pieces; other reprints of keyboard pieces are publ. by A. Diversi in 'Arte antica e moderna' (vol. I; 3 studies), F. Boghen in 'Antichi maestri italiani' (4 fugues, 3 toccatas), A. Longo in 'Biblioteca d'oro' (vol. II; Aria danzante), G. Taglia-pietra in 'Antologia di musica antica e moderna' (vol. XI), M. Vitali in 'Composizioni scelte' (vol. II). A. Diversi publ. a 4 voiced Christe eleison in his 'Biblioteca mus. Sacra'.—Cf. R. Fiammano, F. Durante in 'Musica d'oggi' (Aug.-Sept., 1936); V. de Rubertis, Dos Bajetes de Francesco Durante, erroneamente interpretados por Fétis y de Nardis (Buenos Aires, 1947), which reproduces in facsimile Durante's birth registry (confirming the date as March 31, 1684).

Durey, Louis, French composer; b. Paris, May 27, 1888; pupil of Léon Saint-Requier; associated with that group of young French composers termed 'Les Six Français' by H. Collet [q.v.] (cf. Collet, Les Six Français et Erik Satie, in the Paris 'Comœdia,' Jan. 16, 1920). Since 1950, music critic for 'L'Humanité.' Has written a Pastoral for orch.; Eloges (after St. Léger) for soli, chorus, and orch.; L'Occasion, lyric drama in 1 act after Mérimée; chamber music (string trio, 3 string quartets, piano trio; etc.); Fantaisie concertante, for cello and orch.; 3 chansons musicales (to words by Lorca, 1948); 3 short cantatas: La Guerre et la Paix, for a cappella chorus (1949); La Longue Marche, to words by Mao-Tse-Tung (1949); Paix aux hommes par Millions, to words by Mayakovsky (1949); many piano pieces and songs.

Dürner, Ruprecht Johannes Julius, German conductor and composer; b. Ansbach, Bavaria, July 15, 1810; d. Edinburgh, June 10, 1859. Pupil of Friedrich Schneider at Dessau; from 1831-42, cantor at Ansbach, then studied under Mendelssohn and Hauptmann at Leipzig, and settled in Edinburgh as a conductor and vocal teacher. His choruses and quartets for male voices won great favor.

Duruflé, Maurice, French organist and composer; b. Louviers, Eure, Jan. 11, 1902. He studied organ with Guilmant, Tournemire, and Louis Vierne; took a course in composition with Paul Dukas, graduating with first prizes in all subjects. In 1930 he became organist of the church of St. Etienne-du-Mont in Paris. He has written mainly for organ; among his larger works is a Requiem (1947).

Dushkin, Samuel, distinguished violinist; b. Suwalki, Poland, Dec. 13, 1897; studied violin with Auer, Kreisler, and Remy (Paris), composition with Ganaye in Paris; 1918, European début; 1924, American début; extensive tours as recitalist and soloist with symph. orchs. in Europe, U. S., Egypt, Palestine, etc.; has given 1st performances of compositions by Ravel, Pigné, Stravinsky (who composed his violin concerto for him and toured with him extensively), etc. Has written numerous virtuoso and pedagogic works for violin and edited many classic violin works.

Dussek (Dušek, Duscsek) (döš'shek), Franz, Bohemian pianist; b. Chotěborky, Bohemia, Dec. 8, 1731; d. Prague, Feb. 12, 1799. He studied with Wagenseil at Vienna; settled in Prague, 1763, winning fame as a teacher and performer; was a close friend of Mozart.—Publ. several sonatas (1773, 1774, 1799) and a piano concerto (op. 1); in MS: symphonies, concertos, quartets, trios, sonatas.

Dussek (Dušek), Johann Ladislaus, outstanding composer; b. Čáslav (Tschaslau), Bohemia, Feb. 12, 1760; d. St.-Germain-en-Laye, March 20, 1812. At first a boy-soprano at the Minorite church, Iglau, he was taught music by Father Spenar, while attending the Jesuit college; was organist at the Jesuit church in Kuttenberg for 2 years, and while studying theology at Prague Univ. found time to get a thorough musical training, so that after graduation he obtained, through Count Männer, his patron, the post of organist at the church of St.-Rimbaut, Mechlin. Thence he went to Bergen-op-Zoom, and (1782) to Amsterdam; then spent a year at The Hague, and in 1783 studied under K. Ph. E. Bach at Hamburg; won renown as a pianist and as a performer on Hessel's 'harmonica' in Berlin (1784) and St. Petersburg, then accepting an appointment from Prince Radziwill, with whom he lived in Lithuania for over a year. He played before Marie Antoinette in 1786, at Paris; soon went to Italy, and returned to Paris in 1788, whence the Revolution drove him to London. Here he married Sofia Corri, a singer, in 1792, and undertook a music business with his father-in-law; but his careless habits, and love of luxury and ease, ill fitted him for commercial pursuits; the enterprise failed, and he fled to Hamburg in 1800 to escape his creditors. Here he appears to have stayed about 2 years, giving concerts and teaching. In 1802 he gave a concert at Prague, and paid a visit to his father at Čáslav; he then entered the service of Louis Ferdinand of Prussia, whose heroic death in battle (1806) inspired one of Dussek's finest pieces, Élégie harmonique for piano. Afterwards, he was briefly attached to the Prince of Isenburg (1806-8); then went to Paris as chapel master to Prince Talleyrand.—Dussek's significance in music history is unjustly obscured; he was a master craftsman; some canonic devices in his piano sonatas are remarkable for their skill; his piano writing had both brilliance and science; there are some idiomatic harmonies that presage Schumann and Brahms. He was a virtuoso at the keyboard; with Clementi he shares the honor of having introduced the 'singing touch.' A composer of amazing industry, Dussek wrote 12 piano concertos, 14 piano trios, 3 string quartets, a piano quartet; piano quintet; 53 violin sonatas (some interchangeable with flute); about 40 piano sonatas; 9 sonatas for piano four-hands; a number of sets of variations, dances, etc., for piano, as well as topical pieces on world events (The Sufferings of the Queen of France; The Naval Battle and Total Defeat of the Dutch Fleet by Admiral Duncan, etc.). He also wrote an opera, The Captive (London, 1798); incidental music to Sheridan's play Pizarro (London, 1799); publ. a piano method.—Cf. H. Truscott, Dussek and the Concerto, in 'Music Review' (Feb., 1955).

Dustmann (dööst'-mahn), Marie Luise (née Meyer), dramatic soprano; b. Aix-la-Chapelle, Aug. 22, 1831; d. Charlottenburg (Berlin), March 2, 1899. Made her début in Breslau (1849); after this she was engaged at Kassel (under Spohr), at Dresden (1853), Prague (1854), and Vienna (1857). She sang as a 'star' in the larger German cities, Stockholm, and London. Married Dustmann (a bookseller) in 1858; made 'Kammersängerin' at Vienna in 1860; taught for some time at the Vienna Cons.

Dutilleux (dü-tē-yō'), Henri, talented French composer; b. Angers, Jan. 22, 1916. He studied at the Paris Cons. with H. Busser and with Jean and Noël Gallon; won first Grand Prix de Rome in 1938; subsequently was active on the Paris radio. He has developed a modernistic style which incorporates many procedures of Impressionism. His instrumental works have had numerous performances in France, England, and America; his most impressive work is a symphony (Paris, June 7, 1951; also performances in Germany, England, and America). Other works: Les Hauts de Hurle-Vent, symph. suite; Symphonie de danses; Salmacis, ballet; Sarabande, for orch. (1941); sonatine for flute and piano (1943); La Giole, for voice and orch. (1944); La Princesse d'Elide, incidental music to Molière's play (1946); Monsieur de Pourceaugnac, incidental music to Molière's play (1948); Le Loup (Paris, March 18, 1953); chamber music; piano pieces; film music and songs.

Duvernoy (dü-vär-nwäh'), Charles, French clarinetist; b. Montbéliard, 1776; d. Paris, Feb. 28, 1845. He came to Paris in 1810, and was first clarinet at the Théâtre de Monsieur and the Feydeau, retiring in 1824. Till 1802 he was also prof. at the Cons. He wrote several clarinet sonatas and clarinet duets.

Duvernoy, Henri-Louis-Charles, French composer; son of Charles; b. Paris, Nov. 16, 1820; d. there, Jan., 1906. Pupil of Halévy and Zimmermann at Paris Cons., in 1848 appointed prof. there. Publ. (with Kuhn) Nouveaux choix de psaumes et de cantiques (1848); Solfège des chanteurs (1855); Solfège à changements de clefs (1857); and Solfège artistique (1860); also some 100 light piano pieces.

Duvernoy, Victor-Alphonse, French pianist and composer; b. Paris, Aug. 30, 1842; d. there, March 7, 1907. He was a pupil of Bazin and Marmontel at the Paris Cons., taking the first prize for piano (1855). In 1869 he founded, together with Léonard, Stiehle, Trombetta, and Jacquard, a series of chamber-music concerts; he devoted his time otherwise to composing and teaching, and held a professorship in the Cons. For some 11 years, musical critic of the 'République française'; Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and an officer of public instruction. As a dramatic composer he produced the 3-act opera Sardanapale (Liège, 1892); the 'scène lyrique' Gléopâtre (at the Concerts Colonne), and the 4-act opera Hellé (Grand Opéra, 1896). His symph. poem La tempête, produced at the Concerts Colonne, won the City of Paris prize in 1880; he also wrote a ballet, Bacchus (1902); an overture, Hernani; much piano music.

Duvosel, Seraphien Lieven, Flemish composer; b. Ghent, Dec. 14, 1877; studied there, then in Antwerp and Paris; had first success as a composer at the Colonne concerts in Paris, 1908; lived for a time in Berlin (where Nikisch and R. Strauss performed his works), later in The Hague and in Haarlem. His most representative work is the symph. cycle in 5 parts, Leie: 1. De Morgen; 2. De Leie; 3. De Liefde aan der Leie; 4. Kerstnacht (Christmas); 5. Het Leieland. Other compositions: 3 symphonies; the symph. poem, Den Avond (Evening); Wereldwee (World's Grief); many cantatas; male and mixed chor.; songs; and the earlier works Vers la Lumière, La Charité, and La Tristesse et la Consolation.

Dux, Claire, soprano; b. Bydgoszcz, Poland, Aug. 2, 1885; studied voice with Teresa Arkel in Berlin; made operatic début in Cologne in 1906; 1911-18, member of the Berlin State Opera (début in La Bohème with Caruso); 1912-14, sang at Covent Garden, London; 1918-21, member of the Royal Opera, Stockholm; came to the U. S. in 1921 and joined the Chicago Civic Opera Co. in 1923; toured the U. S.; then retired. She is married to Ch. Swift of Chicago, where she settled.

Dvořák (dvöhr'-zhahk), Antonin, famous Bohemian composer; b. Mühldhausen, Sept. 8, 1841; d. Prague, May 1, 1904. His father, an innkeeper, wished him to enter the butcher's trade; but he, having learned to play the violin from the village school-master, left home at the age of 16, and entered the Prague Organ School, studying under Pitzsch, and earning a precarious livelihood as a violinist in a small orchestra. For about a decade (1861-71), he played the viola in the orchestra of the National Theater in Prague. It was not until 1873 that he brought out an important work, a Hymnus for mixed chorus and orch., which was performed on March 9 of that year and attracted wide notice; in 1875 he was awarded the Austrian State Prize for a symph. in Eb (performed in Prague by Smetana in 1874), and he received that stipend repeatedly thereafter. He then devoted himself to composition with increasing success, becoming the most celebrated of Czech national composers. Liszt, Brahms, and Hans von Bülow, by securing performances and publication of his work, did much to obtain for his compositions the vogue they deservedly enjoy. In 1873 Dvořák gave up playing in orchestras, when he was appointed organist at St. Adalbert's Church in Prague. His fame as composer spread and numerous pupils flocked to him; finally, a professorship in composition at the Prague Cons. was offered him. In 1884 he was invited to conduct his Stabat Mater in London. It was received with such enthusiasm that in the fall of the same year Dvořák conducted it at the Worcester Festival, and was commissioned to write a new work for the Birmingham Festival of 1885 (The Spectre's Bride). The following year (1886) he visited England again to direct his oratorio St. Ludmila at the Leeds Festival; in 1891 he was made hon. Mus. Doc. by Cambridge and hon. Dr. Phil. by the Czech Univ. in Prague. From 1892-5 he was the artistic director of the National Cons., New York. It was in America that he wrote his most celebrated work, the symphony From the New World (first performed by the New York Philh., Dec. 15, 1893); the themes seemed to reflect Negro spirituals; however, Dvořák denied any conscious design in this approximation. Upon returning to Prague, he resumed his professorship at the Cons.; was appointed its artistic director in 1901. He was the first musician to be made a life member of the Austrian House of Lords. — A composer of singular versatility and fecundity, the most prominent characteristics of his music are an inexhaustible, spontaneous melodic invention, rhythmic variety, free employment of national folk tunes, and an intensity of harmony which, in his finest works, has an electrifying effect, though sometimes bordering on the crude. His musical style was eclectic; the conflicting influences of Brahms and Wagner occasionally effected an inner incompatibility; however, his very lack of startling originality, combined with an uninhibited emotionalism, contributed to the lasting success of his music. Works: Operas (all first performed at Prague): The King and Collier (op. 14, 1871; Nov. 24, 1874; revised 1874, 1887); The Blackheads or The Pig-Headed Peasants (op. 17; 1874; Oct. 2, 1881); Vanda (op. 25; April 17, 1876); The Peasant a Rogue (op. 37; Jan. 27, 1878); Dimitrij (op. 64; Oct. 8, 1882; revised 1883, 1894); The Jacobin (op. 84; Feb. 12, 1889; revised 1897); The Devil and Kate (op. 112; Nov. 23, 1899); Rusalka (op. 114; March 31, 1901; Dvořák's best opera; many revivals; very popular in Eastern Europe); Armida (op. 115; March 25, 1904). For orch.: 7 published symphs.: op. 60, in D (1880); op. 70, in D minor; op. 76, in F (originally op. 24; 1875, 1887); op. 88, in G (1889); op. 95, in E minor (From the New World, 1893); in E $\flat$  (originally op. 10, 1873; posthumous); in D minor (originally op. 13, 1874; posthumously, 1912); 2 unnumbered symphs.: in C minor, The Bells of Zlonice (originally op. 31, 1865; discovered in Prague, 1936) and in B $\flat$  (originally op. 41, 1865); the symph. poems The Water-sprite (op. 107; 1896); The Midday Witch (op. 108; 1896); The Golden Spinning-wheel (op. 109; 1896); The Wood Dove (op. 110; 1896); Heroic Song (op. 111; 1897); various overtures: Amid Nature, op. 91 (1891); Carnival, op. 92 (1891); Othello, op. 93 (1891-2); etc.; Slavonic Rhapsodies (op. 45) and Dances (opp. 46, 72); Romance for violin and orch., op. 11 (1873); piano concerto in G minor, op. 33 (1876); violin concerto in A minor, op. 53 (1879-80); cello concerto in B minor, op. 104 (1895); other compositions. Choral works: Stabat Mater, op. 58 (1876-7); cantata, The Spectre's Bride, op. 69 (1884); oratorio, St. Ludmila, op. 71 (1885-6; amplified and performed as an opera, Svatá Ludmila, Prague, Nov. 30, 1901); Psalm 149, op. 79 (1879, 1887); Mass in D, op. 86 (1887, 1892); Requiem, op. 89 (1890); cantata, The American Flag, op. 102 (1892); Te Deum, op. 103 (1892); numerous other works. Chamber music: string sextet, 3 string quintets, 2 piano quintets, piano quartet, 13 string quartets, 5 piano trios, etc. Songs, vocal duets, piano pieces, etc. —Bibl.: J. Zubatsky, Antonin Dvořák, biographische Skizze (Leipzig, 1886; in English by W. H. Hadow in 'Studies in Modern Music,' 2nd series, London, 1895; 2nd ed. 1904); D. G. Sourek has begun in Prague in 1955 and continued after Sourek's death (1956) by a committee of Czech scholars. For a complete list of works see O. Sourek, Dvořák's Werke: Ein vollständiges Verzeichnis in chronologischer, thematischer und systematischer Anordnung (Berlin, 1917).

Dwight, John Sullivan, American music critic, and editor of 'Dwight's Journal of Music'; b. Boston, Mass., May 13, 1813; d. there, Sept. 5, 1893. He graduated from Harvard in 1832, and was one of the founders and most active members of the Harvard Musical Assoc. After studying for the ministry, he, in 1840, took charge of the Unitarian Church at Northampton, Mass. His literary and socialistic proclivities, however, gained the mastery; he gave up his pastorate, and entered the ill-starred Brook Farm Community as a teacher of German music and the classics. Returning to Boston in 1848, after the failure of the socialistic experiment, he devoted himself to literature, founded the 'Journal' in 1852, and remained its editor-in-chief until its discontinuance in 1881. A prominent feature in this paper were the valuable historical essays of A. W. Thayer. Dwight also published excellent Translations of Select Minor Poems from the German of Goethe and Schiller, with Notes. —Cf. George Willis Cooke, J. S. Dwight, Brook-Farmer, Editor, and Critic of Music (Boston, 1898); Cooke's ed. of Dwight's correspondence with George William Curtis (Boston, 1898); Edward N. Waters, J. S. Dwight, first American Critic of Music, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1935).

Dykema (dī'kēh-māh), Peter W., pedagogue; b. Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 25, 1873; d. Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., May 13, 1951. From 1892-96, he studied law at the Univ. of Michigan (B. L., 1895; M. L., 1896); then voice with Frank Arens, N. Y. (1903-4), theory with Frank Shephard, and at the Institute of Musical Art (1911-12), later also in Berlin. Teaching positions: 1896-98, Aurora, Ill., High School; 1898-1901, principal, Jr. High School, Indianapolis; 1901-13, music prof., Ethical Culture School, N. Y.; 1913-24, prof. of music, Univ. of Wisconsin, chairman of the Dept. of Public School Music and director of the Madison Choral Union; 1924-39, prof. of music education, Teachers' College, Columbia Univ.; lectured on Music in Education, Music in Normal Living, Music Education in Europe, etc.—Publ.: Twice 55 Community Songs (6 vols., 1919-27); The Check Book (1930); Music for Public School Administrators (1931); School Music Handbook (1931; revised ed., by Hannah M. Cundiff, Boston, 1955); Modern Orch. Series (with N. Church; 1933); Singing Youth (1935); Sing (with D. Stevens; 1937); Fox Festival Choral Series (3 vols., 1937); Golden Key Orch. Series (1937); Modern Band Training Series (with N. Church; 1938); with K. W. Gehrkens, The Teaching and Administration of High School Music (Boston, 1941); collaborated in editing many popular school song books.

Dykes, Rev. John Bacchus, b. Kingston-upon-Hull, England, March 10, 1823; d. in an asylum at Ticehurst, Sussex, Jan. 22, 1876. An English divine and composer, educated at Cambridge; minor canon and precentor at Durham cathedral; 1849, where he also conducted the Music Society. He took the degree of Mus. Doc. in 1861, and was vicar of St. Oswald, Durham, from 1862. Some of his hymns are well-known (Jesus, Lover of My Soul; Nearer, My God, to Thee; etc.); he likewise composed a service in F; the 23d Psalm (The Lord is my shepherd); anthems; and part-songs. —Cf. J. T. Fowler, Life and Letters of John Bacchus Dykes (London, 1897).

Dyson (dī'son), Sir George, English composer; b. Halifax (Yorkshire), May 28, 1883. He was a pupil at the Royal Academy of Music; won the Mendelssohn prize; from 1908, was music master at Royal Naval College, Osborne, Marlborough College, Rugby School, Wellington College, and Winchester College (1924-38); Mus. Doc. (Oxford, 1918); professor of the Royal College of Music; in 1937, director of the Royal College of Music; has lectured on modern music and published essays on that subject. —Works: Prelude, Fantasy and Chaconne, for cello and orch. (Hereford, 1936); symph. (London, 1937); violin concerto (1943); oratorio, Quo Vadis (1949); suite for small orch.; 3 Rhapsodies for string quartet; piano pieces; pedagogic pieces; songs; choral works (The Canterbury Pilgrims, The Blacksmith, St. John's Voyage to Melita, Nebuchadnezzar); church music (services). —Books: The New Music (1924); The Progress of Music (London, 1932); autobiography, Fiddling While Rome Burns; A Musician's Apology (London, 1954).

Dzegelenok (dzēh-gēh-lyoh'-nok), Alexander Mikhailovitch, Russian composer and theorist; b. Moscow, Aug. 24, 1891; studied at the Philh. Institute in Moscow with Koreshtchenko. He has composed an orchestral suite Egypt; Hiawatha for voice and instruments; piano pieces and songs (some of them published by the State Edition).

Dzerzhinsky (dzāhr-zhin'-skē), Ivan Ivanovitch, Russian composer; b. Tambov, April 21, 1909. He received his musical education in Moscow, studying with Gnëssin; in 1930 he moved to Leningrad, where he entered the Cons. In Leningrad he wrote a Spring Suite for piano and a piano concerto. He has written other instrumental pieces; but his significance in the development of Soviet music lies chiefly in his stage works. Adopting a characteristically Russian melodic style, he uses sparingly some modernistic devices, remaining strictly in the diatonic framework. His most successful opera, Quiet Flows the Don (Leningrad, Oct. 22, 1935), has maintained its popularity throughout Russia. A sequel to this opera, Soil Upturned (Moscow, Oct. 23, 1937), was less successful. Other operas are: The Tempest (after Ostrovsky, 1940); The Blood of the People (1941), and The Blizzard (after Pushkin, 1946).

E

Eames (āmz), Emma, famous soprano; b. of American parentage at Shanghai, China, Aug. 13, 1865; d. New York, June 13, 1952. At the age of five she went with her mother, a talented musician and her first teacher, to the latter's native town of Bath, Maine; from 1883 she studied under Miss Munger, in Boston, and from 1886-8 under Mme. Marchesi (voice) and M. Pluque (stage-deportment, etc.) in Paris; made her début at the Grand Opéra, March 13, 1889, as Juliette in Gounod's Roméo et Juliette with great success. She sang in the Paris Opéra for two years; then at Covent Garden, London (début, April 7, 1891, as Marguerite in Faust); appeared in New York with the de Reszkes, as Juliette (Dec. 14, 1891); continued to appear regularly in New York and London in their respective seasons (except the winters of 1892-3, at Madrid, and 1895-6, during temporary ill health). Her last performance was at the Metropolitan Opera House in Tosca on Feb. 15, 1909. On July 13, 1911, she married the baritone Emilio de Gogorza. From 1923 to 1936, she lived alternately in Paris and Bath, Maine; in 1936, settled in New York, where she remained until her death. She received from Queen Victoria the Jubilee Medal, and was decorated by the French Academy with the order of 'Les Palmes Académiques.' She publ. an autobiography, Some Memories and Reflections (N. Y., 1927).

Eames, Henry Purmort, American music educator; b. Chicago, Ill., Sept. 12, 1872; d. Claremont, Cal., Nov. 25, 1950. He studied at Cornell College, Iowa (Mus. Doc., 1906), with W. Smith and W. H. Sherwood, later in Europe with Clara Schumann and with Paderewski; toured the U. S. He became interested in theatrical music; has written 3 operas, Rapunzel (1927), The Corn King (1935), and The Sleeping Children (1951); incidental music to Shakespeare's plays and several film scores, of which the most successful was the music for The Red Shoes. Other works include a piano concerto and several orchestral pieces of a descriptive nature (Dead March; The Phoenix; Bengal River, etc.).

East (Easte, Este), Thomas, English music printer and publisher of Elizabethan madrigals; b. London, c. 1540; d. there, Jan. 1609. He received his license as printer in 1565; his first musical publication was Byrd's collection Psalmes, Sonets and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie (1587); he was also the assignee of Byrd's patent for printing music paper and musical compositions. In 1592 he brought out The Whole Booke of Psalmes, with their wonted tunes as they are sung in Churches, composed in four parts, containing harmonizations by Allison, Blancks, Cavendish, Cobbold, Dowland, Farmer, Farnaby, Hooper, Johnson, and Kirbye; republished in 1594 and 1604; reprinted in score by the Musical Antiquarian Society (1844). This collection is of historical significance, for it was the first to be printed in score rather than in separate part-books; also for the first time, the tunes were designated by specific names, such as 'Kentish,' 'Cheshire,' etc. Other works printed by East are Yonge's Musica Transalpina (1588), Byrd's Songs of Sundrie Natures (1589), Watson's Madrigals (1590), Byrd's Cantiones Sacrae (2 books, 1589, 1591), Morley's Canzonets (1593), Mundy's Songs and Psalmes (1594), Kirbye's Madrigals (1596), Wilbye's Madrigals (1598), Dowland's Ayres (1600), Bateson's Madrigals (1603), Michael East's Madrigals (1604), Pilkington's Songs or Ayres (1604), Byrd's Gradualia (1605), Youll's Canzonets (1607). East's presumed son Michael East (c. 1580-c. 1648) was a composer; his set of madrigals was publ. by Thomas East in 1604. He served as organist at Lichfield Cathedral; received the degree of B. Mus. at Cambridge (1606); he published six sets of vocal pieces (madrigals, anthems, etc.) and a set of instrumental works (1638).—Cf. F. Kidson, British Music Publishers (London, 1900); E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (London, 1921; 2nd ed., 1948).

Eastman, George, famous American industrialist; b. Waterville, N. Y., July 12, 1854; d. (suicide, when he learned he had cancer), Rochester, March 14, 1932. Eastman made important and far-reaching contributions to the cause of education; invested immense sums in scientific institutions, particularly the Univ. of Rochester, which includes the Eastman Theater and School of Music (one of the leading music schools of the U. S.). This alone he endowed with $3,500,000.—Cf. Carl W. Ackerman, George Eastman (1930).

Easton, Florence (Gertrude), operatic soprano; b. Middlesbrough-on-Tees, Yorkshire, Oct. 25, 1884; d. New York, Aug. 13, 1955. She was educated in Toronto, where her parents settled when she was five; appeared at eight as pianist there; studied singing at the Royal Academy of Music in London and one year with Elliott Haslam in Paris; début as Madama Butterfly with the Moody-Manners Co. at Covent Garden (1903); in 1904 she married the tenor Francis MacLennan (divorced in 1929); her second husband was Stanley Rogers. She was engaged by Savage for his productions in English of Parsifal (1904-5) and Madama Butterfly (1906-7), touring the U. S.; at the Berlin Opera in leading roles (1907-13); at Hamburg (1913-15); frequent leaves of absence enabled her to take part in the Wagner and Strauss performances at Covent Garden; with the Chicago Opera Co. (1915-17). She was a celebrated member of the Metropolitan Opera Company (1917-29; made her début there in Cavalleria Rusticana, Dec. 7, 1917). From 1930-36, she was mostly in England; on Feb. 29, 1936, returned to the Metropolitan Opera for a single appearance as Brünnhilde in Die Walküre; made many concert tours as German Lieder singer; lived in New York during the last years of her life. She created Beatrice in Naylor's The Angelus (Covent Garden, Jan. 27, 1909), Natoya in Nevin's Poia (Berlin, April 23, 1910), Elektra in the English première of Strauss' opera (Covent Garden, Dec. 19, 1910), Serpina in the American première of Pergolesi's La Serva Padrona (N. Y., May 8, 1917), Elisabeth in the American première (operatic version in English) of Liszt's Legend of St. Elisabeth (N. Y., Jan. 3, 1918).

Eaton, Louis, American violinist, b. Walham, Mass., Feb. 24, 1872; d. Hartford, Conn., May 4, 1927. He studied violin with Loeffler and Bernard Listemann and piano with Jessie Downer (b. Middlebury, Vt., Nov. 17, 1872; d. Hartford, Conn., Nov. 22, 1936) whom he married in 1899. In 1915 they settled in Hartford as teachers. With the cellist Arthur Hadley, they formed the Downer-Eaton Trio, which presented first American performances of a number of chamber works.

Ebel, Arnold, German composer and choral conductor; b. Heide, Holstein, Aug. 15, 1883. He studied at Berlin Univ.; also took private lessons with Max Bruch; from 1909 was active in Berlin as organist, choral conductor, and teacher; was prof. of composition at the Akademie für Kirchen- und Schulmusik (1930-45); served as president of the German Composers' Association (1920-33 and again from 1949). He has written numerous piano pieces and songs (most of them published); also a Sinfonietta giocosa for orch.

Ebell, Hans, pianist; b. St. Petersburg, April 21, 1888; d. Salem, Conn., Aug. 18, 1934. He was a pupil at the Cons. in St. Petersburg (1900-5); then continued his pianistic studies with Rachmaninov, Josef Hofmann, and Godowsky (until 1911); début in Vienna (1912); tours of Germany, Austria, Russia, France, and England (1912-14); in 1915, settled in the U. S. as teacher; lived mostly in Boston.

Eberhardt, Siegfried, German violin pedagogue; b. Frankfurt, March 19, 1883; son of the violinist and pedagogue Goby Eberhardt (1852-1926). He studied violin with Dessau at the Stern Cons. in Berlin, and then with Serato; was teacher of violin at the Stern Cons. (1908-35); then lived in Halle and Lübeck; in 1953 was in Zwickau.

—Didactic works: Der beseelte Violinton (with Carl Flesch; Dresden, 1910; 4 eds.; also in English); Treffsicherheit auf der Violine (1911; 22 eds.; also in English, French, and Swedish); Virtuose Violintechnik (1920); Paganinis Geigenhaltung (1921); Die Lehre der organischen Geigenhaltung (1922); Der Körper in Form und Hemmung (Munich, 1926); Wiederaufstieg oder Untergang der Kunst der Geigen (1956).—Cf. Eberwein, Karl, German composer; b. Weimar, Nov. 10, 1786; d. there, March 2, 1868. He was a member of a musical family; after a study of general subjects at the Weimar High School he received an appointment as a court musician at the age of 16. He then studied with Zelter in Berlin; returning to Weimar, he held the posts of chamber musician (1810-18); music director of the Weimar town church (1818-26); and conductor of Weimar opera (1826-49). He was a friend of Goethe, who often mentions him, and for whom he composed some songs. Among his works are the operas Die Heerschau, Der Graf zu Gleichen, and Der Teppichhändler; several cantatas written for various state occasions; some chamber music, and a great number of songs with piano accompaniment.—Cf. W. Bode, Goethes Schauspieler und Musiker (1912, with autobiographical sketch of Eberwein); H. J. Moser, Goethe und die Musik (Leipzig, 1949).

Eberwein, Traugott Maximilian, German composer, brother of Karl Eberwein; b. Weimar, Oct. 27, 1775; d. there, Dec. 2, 1831. He played the violin in the Weimar court orch. as a very young man; like his brother, he was a protégé of Goethe, and wrote two operas, Claudine von Villa Bella (1815) and Der Jahrmarkt von Flundersweilen (1818), to texts by Goethe; he further composed church music and instrumental concertos.

Eccard, Johannes, eminent German composer; b. Mühlhausen, 1553; d. Berlin, 1611. He was a pupil (1571-4) of Orlandus Lassus in Augsburg; director of J. Fugger's private orch. at Augsburg (1577); in 1578 he moved to Königsberg, as a member of the Prussian chapel; in 1580 became its assistant conductor, and in 1604, chief conductor. In 1608 he was called to Berlin to serve as court musician to the Elector. He was an important composer of sacred music. He published (with Burgk) Odae sacrae (1574) and Crepundia sacra (in 2 parts, 1578); his own works include Neue deutsche Lieder mit 4 und 5 Stimmen, dedicated to J. Fugger (1578); Neue geistliche und weltliche Lieder mit 4 und 5 Stimmen (1589; ed. in score by R. Eitner, in 'Publikationen älterer Musik,' vol. 25); Geistliche Lieder auf den Choral mit 5 Stimmen, 51 songs (2 parts, 1597; new ed. by Teschner and Fr. von Baussnern, 1928); Preussische Festlieder auf das ganze Jahr für 5-8 Stimmen (posthumous in 2 parts, 1642-4; new ed. by Teschner, 1858); also occasional songs (many in the Königsberg Library).—Cf. C. von Winterfeld, Der evangelische Kirchengesang . . . I and II; A. Mayer-Reinach, Zur Geschichte der Königsberger Hofkapelle, in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (vol. VI); H. E. Brinckmann, Neue Forschungen zum Leben der grossen Mülhhauser Musiker, in the 'Armin Tille Festschrift' (Weimar, 1930).

Eccles, Henry, brother of John Eccles; b. London, c. 1652; d. Paris, c. 1742. He was a violinist; a member of the King's Band (1674-1710), and then of the French court orch. In 1720 he published under his own name 12 violin solos, adaptations of works by Giuseppe Valentini and others.

Eccles, John, English violinist and composer; b. London, c. 1650; d. Kingston, Surrey, Jan. 12, 1735. He was the son and pupil of the violist Solomon Eccles (1618-1683). He became a member of the Queen's Band in 1694, and Master of it in 1700. He was active as a composer for the theater from about 1681; in 1694 wrote music for Don Quixote (with Purcell); in 1700, for Congreve's The Judgment of Paris and The Way of the World; 1710, publ. a collection of his own songs (about 100), which enjoyed wide popularity. He also publ. 3 volumes of 'Theatre Music' (c. 1700). In all, he wrote music for 12 masques and 56 pieces of incidental music for the stage.—Cf. John Jeffreys, The Eccles Family (Enfield, 1951).

Eckard (Eckardt, Eckart), Johann Gottfried, German composer of keyboard music; b. Augsburg, Jan. 21, 1735; d. Paris, July 24, 1809. He was a copper engraver by profession and learned music in his spare time. In 1758 he was taken to Paris by the piano manufacturer J. A. Stein, and remained there. He acquired a great facility as pianist, and gave successful concerts in Paris. In the preface to his album of six sonatas he states that his task was to compose music suitable for any keyboard instrument, but the indications of dynamics in the manuscript show that he had mainly the then novel piano in view. Mozart admired Eckard's works, and there are traits in Mozart's keyboard music of the Paris period that may be traced to Eckard's usages. A complete edition of Eckard's works for piano, ed. by Eduard Reeser, was begun in Amsterdam in 1956.

Eckardt, Hans, German musicologist, authority on Japanese music; b. Magdeburg, Oct. 10, 1905. He studied philology in Leipzig, Berlin, Paris, and Heidelberg (1925-29); musicology with Sachs, Hornbostel, and Schünemann. From 1932 to 1945 he was in Kyoto, Japan, as director of the Japanese-German Research Institute of Cultural History. In 1948 he settled in Heidelberg. He contributed articles on Asiatic music to 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart'; wrote several papers in Japanese for Monumenta Nipponica.

Eckelt, Johann Valentin, German organist; b. Werningshausen, near Erfurt, May (baptized 8th), 1673; d. Sondershausen, Dec. 18, 1732. From 1696 he was organist at Wernigerode; from 1703, at Sondershausen.—Publications: Experimenta musicae geometrica (1715); Unterricht, eine Fuge zu formieren (1722); Unterricht, was ein Organist wissen soll. His MS Passion, cantatas, and organ works are of interest. His valuable library was acquired by E. L. Gerber, and utilized by the latter in the compilation of his Dictionary.—Cf. E. Jacobs, Der Orgelspieler und Musikgelehrte J. V. Eckelt, in the 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musik-Wissenschaft' (1893, p. 311-332).

Ecker, Wenzel. Pen-name of Wilhelm Gericke.

Eckerberg, Sixten, Swedish conductor, pianist, and composer; b. Hjältevad, Sept. 5, 1909. He studied at the Stockholm Cons. (1927-32); received a Jenny Lind stipend to study conducting with Weingartner in Basel; also was piano pupil of Emil Sauer in Vienna and of Isidor Philipp in Paris. Since 1937 he has been conductor of the radio orch. in Göteborg. He has written 2 symphonies (1941; 1944); 2 piano concertos (1942; 1949), songs, and piano pieces.

Eckert, Karl Anton Florian, German composer and conductor; b. Potsdam, Dec. 7, 1820; d. Berlin, Oct. 14, 1879. At the age of 6 he was considered a prodigy; the poet F. Förster became interested in him and sent him to the best teachers; he studied piano with Rechenberg and Greulich, violin with Botticher and Ries, and composition with Rungenhagen. At 10 he wrote an opera, Das Fischermädchen; at 13, an oratorio, Ruth. After study (for a time at Leipzig under Mendelssohn) he went to the U. S. with Henriette Sontag; was then conductor of the Italian opera in Paris (1852); in 1853 appointed conductor and mus. director of the Vienna Opera; from 1860-67 held a similar post in Stuttgart; he was in Baden-Baden from 1867-69; then was called to Berlin to succeed Heinrich Dorn as director of the Berlin Opera. He wrote four operas, several oratorios, and a cello concerto which had little success; his songs, however, proved more popular; of these the Swiss Echo Song is the best known.

Eckhard, Jacob, one of early German organists in America; b. Eschwege (Hesse), Nov. 24, 1757; d. Charleston, S.C., Nov. 10, 1833. He came to the U. S. in 1776 and settled in Richmond, Va. In 1786 he was organist of St. John's Lutheran Church in Charleston; in 1809 received the post of organist at St. Michael's Episcopal Church. He published a hymn book (printed in Boston, 1816); wrote two patriotic naval songs, The Pillar of Glory and Rise, Columbia, Brave and Free.—Cf. G. W. Williams, Jacob Eckhard and His Choirmaster's Book in the 'Journal of the American Musicological Society' (Spring, 1954).

Eckhardt-Gramatté, Sophie Carmen, violinist, pianist, and composer; b. Moscow, Jan. 6, 1902. She studied both piano and violin at the St. Petersburg Cons. and later in Paris; toured Europe and the U. S. as pianist; also appeared as violinist; eventually settled in Vienna, where she married an art critic. Her compositions include a symphony (1940); a piano concerto (1946; awarded 2nd prize of the Vienna Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde); 2 string quartets (1939, 1943); and several other chamber works.

Ecorcheville, Jules, French writer on music; b. Paris, March 18, 1872; d. Feb. 19, 1915 (fell in battle at Perthesles-Hurlus). He was a pupil of César Franck, 1887-90; student of literature and art-history in Paris and (1904-5) Leipzig; Docteur ès lettres (Paris, 1906); editor of La Revue musicale S.I.M. and writer on the history and esthetics of music.—Works: De Lully à Rameau: 1690-1730, l'Esthétique musicale (1906); Corneille et la musique (1906); Actes d'état civil des musiciens insinués au Châtelet de Paris de 1539 à 1650 (1907); Catalogue du fonds de musique ancienne de la Bibliothèque Nationale (thematic list of 10,000 items, to be completed in 10 vols.; only 8 vols. were publ.); Un livre inconnu sur la danse (F. de Lauze's Apologie de la danse, 1623), in 'Riemann-Festschrift', 1909; also edited Vingt Suites d'orchestre du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle français (1906; facsimile and transcription).—Cf. Le Tombeau de Jules Ecorcheville: suivi de lettres inédites (Paris, 1916).

Eddy, Clarence, distinguished American organist; b. Greenfield, Mass., June 23, 1851; d. Chicago, Jan. 10, 1937. He first studied with Dudley Buck in New York; in 1871 he went to Berlin to study piano with Loeschhorn. He made frequent tours in America and Europe; gave a series of 100 organ recitals in Chicago (1879) with completely different programs; appeared at the Vienna Exposition of 1873; at the Philadelphia Centennial in 1876; at the Chicago Columbian Exposition in 1893, etc. He wrote many pieces for organ; publ. The Church and Concert Organist (2 vols., 1882-5); The Organ in Church (1887); A Method for Pipe Organ (1917); and translated K. A. Haupt's Theory of Counterpoint and Fugue (1876).

Eddy, Nelson, popular American baritone; b. Providence, R. I., June 29, 1901; studied voice with W. Vilonat in New York; then in Dresden and Paris; was for 4 years a member of the Philadelphia Opera Co.; then sang on the radio with sensational success; also acted in musical films. He settled in Beverly Hills, California.

Edel, Yizschak, composer; b. Warsaw, Jan. 1, 1896. He studied in Kiev and Moscow. In 1929 he settled in Palestine as a music teacher. He has written Capriccio, for orch. (1947); 2 string quartets, a wind quintet, and numerous choral works.

Edelmann, Johann Friedrich, Alsatian composer, b. Strasbourg, May 6, 1749; d. Paris, July 17, 1794 (guillotined). He studied law at the Univ. of Strasbourg; in 1773 he went to Paris, where he learned to play piano, gave concerts, and publ. 15 collections of various piano pieces, which became very popular and were reprinted in Germany and in London. He also wrote an opera, Ariane dans l'île de Naxos (Paris, Sept. 24, 1782), which was retained in the repertory for half a century. He went back to Strasbourg during the Revolution, and joined the Jacobins, which proved his undoing. A selection of his works was published by Riemann in 'Mannheimer Kammermusik' ('Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern', XV). His piano works were in the Couperin tradition; he affected suggestive subtitles in his piano sonatas (La Coquette, La Caressante, etc.) in the prevalent style of 18th-century French music.—Cf. M. Vogeleis, Bausteine und Quellen zu einer Geschichte der Musik im Elsass (Strasbourg, 1911); G. de Saint-Foix, Les premiers pianistes parisiens: J. F. Edelmann, in the 'Revue Musicale' (June, 1924).

Y., 1885); he also wrote an entertaining volume, Briefe über Musik an eine Freundin (Berlin, 1859); in English as Letters on Music, to a Lady (Boston, 1870). Among his compositions are Frühlings-Symphonie; overture Hafis; songs.

Ehmann, Wilhelm, German musicologist; b. Freistadt, Dec. 5, 1904. He studied at the Univ. of Freiburg and in Leipzig; became instructor at Freiburg Univ. (1938); then appointed prof. of musicology at the Univ. of Innsbruck (1940); served in the German Navy (1943-45). Since 1948, director of the Westphalian church music school.—Publications: Das Schicksal der deutschen Reformationsmusik (Göttingen, 1935); Adam von Fulda (Berlin, 1936); Die Chorführung (2 vols., Kassel, 1949; 2nd ed., 1950); Erziehung zur Kirchenmusik (Gütersloh, 1951); Erbe und Auftrag musikalischer Erneuerung (Kassel, 1951); Das Chorwesen in der Kulturkrise (Regensburg, 1952). For a detailed list of his other writings, see his autobiographical entry in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Ehrenberg (är'-ehn-berg), Carl Emil Theodor, German conductor and composer; b. Dresden, April 6, 1878. He studied there with Fr. Wieck; then with Draeske at the Dresden Cons. (1894-98). From 1898 he was engaged as conductor in Germany; in 1909-14, conducted at Lausanne; in 1915-18, was opera conductor in Augsburg; symph. conductor at Bad Homburg (1918-1929); Neues Musiklexikon (German ed. of A. Bagfield-Hull's Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians, 1926); Geschichte der Musik, with Beispielsammlung zur älteren Musikgeschichte (1917-18; 4th ed., 1930); new edition (3rd) of Köchel's Mozart Verzeichnis (Leipzig, 1937; very valuable; reprint ed. with numerous corrections, Ann Arbor, 1947); A Short History of Music (London, 1936; N. Y., 1937; 2nd ed., 1938; 3d ed., 1947; translation of Geschichte der Musik); Gluck (London, 1936). He contributed the following studies to the periodicals of the International Music Society: Claudio Merulo als Herausgeber der Madrigale des Verdelot, Italienische Musiker am Hofe der Neuburger Wittelsbacher (IX), Augenmusik im Madrigal, Ein Madrigaldialog von 1594, Ein unbekannter Druck aus der Frühzeit der deutschen Monodie (Nauwach, Arie passeggiata 1623; XIII); other articles: Die Aria di Ruggiero; Ancora sull' Aria di Ruggiero in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1937); Die Parodie in der Villanella, in the 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (II); Dante im Madrigal, in the 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (III); Das Madrigal, in 'Ganymed' (1921); Heinrich Schütz in 'Ganymed' (1925); Agostino Steffani in the 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1910); Angelo Grillos Briefe als musikgeschichtliche Quelle in the 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1911); Eine Caccia im Cinquecento, in the 'Liliencron Festschrift' (1911); Lebensläufe deutscher Musiker (Hiller, Neeffe, Gyrowetz), a series begun in 1914; Alessandro Stradella, in 'Sandberger Festschrift' (1918); Anfänge des Vokalkonzerts, in 'Acta musicologica' (III, 1); Annibale Padoano, in 'Adler Festschrift' (1930); articles in the 'Mus. Quarterly': The Madrigal (Oct., 1924), Dante, on the Way to the Madrigal (Jan., 1939; also A Supplement, Oct., 1939), etc.; contributed two chapters to Adler's Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (1924; 2nd ed., 1930); made German transl. of Marcello's Teatro alla Moda (1917); new eds. of A. Steffani's Ausgewählte Kammerduette (in collaboration with Sandberger and Bennat) in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (VI, 2); Gluck's L'Innocenza giustificata, in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (vol. 82); G. Benda's Ariadne (1920); discovered Mozart's Rondo in A for piano and orch. (Univ. Ed., 1936); revised 5 little-known Haydn symphonies (No. 80, in D minor, publ. 1937), all of which were performed by the orch. of the New Friends of Music, N. Y., in 1939. He also prepared a modern ed. of Andrea Antico's publication of 1517, Canzoni, Sonetti, Strambotti, et Frottole (Northampton, Mass., 1941); ed. a collection, The Golden Age of the Madrigal (N. Y., 1942). His writings in America (publ. in English transl. from his original German) include: Greatness in Music (N. Y., 1941; German ed., Grösse in der Musik, Zürich, 1951); Mozart; His Character, His Work (N. Y., 1945); Music in the Romantic Era (N. Y., 1947; German ed., Die Romantik in der Musik, Vienna, 1950); The Italian Madrigal, in 3 vols. (Princeton, 1949; of fundamental importance); Schubert: A Musical Portrait (N. Y., 1950); Essays on Music (N. Y., 1956; posthumous). A profound scholar, Einstein was also a brilliant journalist, with a vivid, richly metaphorical style, capable of conveying to the reader an intimate understanding of music pertaining to widely different epochs.

Eisenberg, Maurice, outstanding cellist; b. Königsberg, Feb. 24, 1900; brought to the U. S. as a child; studied violin; then, at the age of 12, took up the cello. He played as a youth in café orchestras, and studied at the Peabody Cons. in Baltimore; was a cellist of the Philadelphia Orch. (1917-19); then joined the N. Y. Symphony (under Walter Damrosch). He went to Europe in 1927 and studied in Berlin with Hugo Becker; in Leipzig with Julius Klengel; in Paris with Alexanian; and in Spain with Casals; then taught at the École Normale in Paris (1930-37); returning to the U. S., he gave a concert in N. Y. (Dec. 27, 1937) with excellent success; then appeared with major symph. orchestras; taught at various colleges; publ. a book Cello Playing of Today (1957).

Eisenberger, Severin, Polish pianist; b. Cracow, July 25, 1879; d. New York, Dec. 11, 1945. He studied with Leschetizky in Vienna; was prof. at the Cracow Cons. from 1914-21; lived several years in Vienna, and later came to the U. S. He played as soloist with the Cincinnati Symph. Orch. in 1935, and gave recitals in Cleveland and elsewhere in the U. S.

Eisfeld, Theodor, German conductor; b. Wolfenbüttel, April 11, 1816; d. Wiesbaden, Sept. 2, 1882. He conducted at the Wiesbaden court theater (1839-43); then at the 'Concerts Vivivannes,' Paris. He occasionally visited Italy; took lessons with Rossini at Bologna; became an honorary member of the Academy of St. Cecilia. From 1848-66, he lived in New York; he conducted the N. Y. Philharmonic for several years, and the Harmonic Society from its foundation; established quartet soirées in 1851 with Noll, Reyer, and Eichhorn, joined also by Otto Dresel as pianist. Till 1865 he alternated with Bergmann in conducting the Philharmonic Concerts at New York; retired to Wiesbaden in 1866.

Eisler, Hanns, German composer; b. Leipzig, July 6, 1898; studied at the Academy of Music, Vienna; pupil of Arnold Schoenberg in composition; won the Music Prize of the City of Vienna (1924); was in Berlin until 1932; came to the U. S. in 1933; lectured on music at the New School for Social Research, N. Y.; was musical assistant of Charlie Chaplin in Hollywood (1942-47); left the U. S. under the terms of "voluntary deportation" in 1948, on account of his radical political past; then lived in Vienna and in Berlin. Under Schoenberg's influence, he adopted the 12-tone method of composition; most of his symph. works are in this advanced style. However, he demonstrated his capacity for writing simple songs for use of choral ensembles; several of his choruses for workers and for the Red Army have become popular in Russia. His divided allegiance to both Western modern music and to proletarian needs in East Germany and Russia evoked sharp criticism in the Communist press; his opera Johannes Faustus, produced in East Berlin (March 11, 1953) was criticized for the mysticism of its libretto and the complexity of the musical idiom, and was not revived. He has written, besides, a Deutsche Symphonie (perf. at the Paris Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, June 25, 1937); 3 short cantatas: News from Vienna, Cantata of Exile, and Prison House (London Festival of Music for the People, April 3, 1939); chamber music. He published a book, Composing for the Films (N. Y., 1947).

Eisler, Paul, Austrian pianist and conductor; b. Vienna, Sept. 9, 1875; d. New York, Oct. 16, 1951. He was a pupil of Bruckner at the Vienna Cons.; conducted in Riga, Vienna, and at the Metropolitan Opera in New York; made numerous tours as accompanist for Caruso, Ysaÿe, and other celebrated artists; composed several operettas (Spring Brides; The Sentinel; The Little Missus; In the Year 1814).

Eisner, Bruno, pianist; b. Vienna, Dec. 6, 1884; studied there at the Academy with Fischhof and Fuchs; for many years prof. at the Stern Cons., Berlin, later teaching in Hamburg; 1933 came to the U. S. and settled in New York; has toured Europe many times.

Eitler, Esteban, Austrian-Chilean composer; b. Bolzano, Tyrol, June 25, 1913. He studied at the Univ. of Budapest; left Europe in 1936; went to Buenos Aires, where he was associated with modernist music groups; in 1945 he settled in Santiago, Chile. He has written Microsinfonia Polifonal (1943) for full orch. and Policromia (1950) for string orch.; Serie Boliviana for flute and string orch. (1941); concertino for piano and 11 instruments (1947); concertino for horn and 11 instruments (1949); a wind quintet (1945); quartet for piccolo, flute, trumpet, and saxophone (1945); quartet for flute, violin, viola, and cello (1950); etc.

Eitner, Robert, German musicologist; b. Breslau, Oct. 22, 1832; d. Templin, Feb. 2, 1905. A pupil of M. Brosig; settled (1853) in Berlin as a teacher, and gave concerts (1857-9) of his own compositions. He established a piano school in 1863, and published a Hilfsbuch beim Klavierunterricht (1871). He devoted himself chiefly to musical literature, and especially to researches concerning works of the 16th and 17th centuries. The Amsterdam Society for the Promotion of Music awarded him a prize for a Dictionary of Dutch Composers (1871, MS); he also prepared an edition of Sweelinck's organ works for the Society. One of the founders of the Berlin 'Gesellschaft für Musikforschung,' he edited its 'Monatshäfte für Musikgeschichte' from 1869 till his death; also the 'Publikationen älterer praktischer und theoretischer Musikwerke.' Other writings: Verzeichnis neuer Ausgaben alter Musikwerke aus der frühesten Zeit bis zum Jahr 1800 ('Monatshäfte,' 1871); Bibliographie der Musiksammlerwerke des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts (with Haberl, Lagerberg, and Pohl); Verzeichnis der gedruckten Werke von Hans Leo Hassler und Orlandus de Lassus ('Monatshäfte,' 1873-4); S. G. Staden's 'Seelewig' ('Monatshäfte,' 1881); Die Oper von ihren ersten Anfängen bis 1750 (3 vols., 1881-5); Quellen und Hilfswerke beim Studium der Musikgeschichte (1891); Buch- und Musikaliendrucke nebst Notensteher (1904; as supplement to 'Monatshäfte'). His principal work is the great Biographisch-bibliographisches Quellenlexikon der Musiker und Musikgelehrten der Christlichen Zeitrechnung bis zur Mitte des 19. Jahrhunderts (10 vols., Leipzig, 1899-1904; additions and corrections published from 1913-16 in a quarterly, Miscellanea Musicae Biobibliographica, ed. by H. Springer, M. Schneider, and W. Wolffheim; reprinted, N. Y., 1947). Among Eitner's compositions (several of which were published) are a biblical opera Judith, an overture, a piano fantasia on themes from Tristan und Isolde, and songs.

Eitz (its), Karl Andreas, German singing teacher; b. Wehrstadt, near Halberstadt, June 25, 1848; d. Eisleben, April 18, 1924. He originated a new system of solmisation ('Tonwortmethode'), accepted in some German schools, somewhat similar to the English Tonic Sol-fa system. He is the author of Das mathematisch-reine Tonsystem (1891); 100 geistliche Liedweisen in Tonsilben gesetzt (1893); Deutsche Singfibel (1899); Tonwort-Wandtafel (1907); Bausteine zum Schulgesangunterricht im Sinne der Tonwortmethode (Leipzig, 1911; 2nd ed., edited by F. Bennedik, 1928).—Cf. G. Borchers, Karl Eitz (1908); O. Messmer, Die Tonwortmethode von Karl Eitz (Würzburg, 1911); F. Ek, Gunnar, Swedish composer; b. Asarum, Blekinge, June 21, 1900. He studied organ, cello, and composition at the Stockholm Cons.; served as a cellist in a Stockholm orchestra (1928-37); from 1942 occupied an organist's post in Lund. He has written 3 symphonies (1926; 1930; 1934); Swedish Fantasy for orchestra (1935); Doomsday Cantata (1946); piano concerto (1949); smaller orch. works; songs; organ pieces.

Ekman, Karl, Finnish pianist and conductor; b. Kaarina, near Abo, Dec. 18, 1869; d. Helsinki, Feb. 4, 1947. He studied in Helsinki (1889-92); 1892-95, pupil of H. Barth in Berlin and A. Grünfeld in Vienna; 1895, piano teacher at, 1907-11 director of, the Helsinki Cons.; 1912-20, conductor of the orch. at Abo. He arranged Swedish and Finnish folksongs, and edited a piano-method; published a biography of Sibelius at Stockholm, 1935 (English transl., 1936).—His wife Ida (b. Helsinki, April 22, 1875; d. Helsinki, April 14, 1942), a concert singer, studied in Helsinki, Paris, and Vienna; she distinguished herself by her performances of Sibelius' songs.

El-Dabbh, Halim, Egyptian composer; b. Cairo, March 4, 1921; studied agriculture, and graduated from Cairo Univ. as an agrarian engineer (1945); then became interested in Egyptian musical instruments and composition; in 1950 received a Fulbright Fellowship for music study in America; took courses at the New England Cons. in Boston and at the Berkshire Center, Tanglewood, Mass. (with Irving Fine and Copland). Most of his music is derived from authentic Egyptian melodies and rhythms, but the contrapuntal and harmonic accoutrements are of a Western modern type. He has written 3 symphonies (1952-56); a concerto for an Egyptian drum with string orch. (1955); a string quartet (1951); sextet for wind instruments and percussion (1952); songs, and music for drums (for which he devised his own system of notation).

Elewijck (eh-leh-vik), Xavier Victor van, Belgian music scholar; b. Brussels, April 24, 1825; d. in the insane asylum at Zickmont, April 28, 1888. He was the author of several monographs: Discours sur la musique religieuse en Belgique (1861); Mathias van den Gheyn (1862); and De l'état actuel de la musique en Italie (1875).

Elgar, Sir Edward (William), eminent English composer; b. Broadheath, near Worcester, June 2, 1857; d. Worcester, Feb. 23, 1934. He received his musical education from his father, who was organist at St. George's Roman Catholic Church in Worcester for 37 years. At an early age he assisted his father at the organ, and took part in the rehearsals and concerts at the Worcester Glee Club; in 1879 he took a few violin lessons in London from Adolf Pollitzer; in the same year, he accepted an appointment as bandmaster at the County Lunatic Asylum in Worcester; he also played in Stockley's orch. in Birmingham; in 1882, was appointed conductor of the Worcester Amateur Instrumental Society; in 1885 succeeded his father as organist at St. George's. After his marriage (1889) to a daughter of Sir Henry Roberts, he tried his fortune in London but found conditions unfavorable, and settled in Malvern (1891), where he remained for 13 years. He went to Hereford in 1904, and later to London, until 1920, when he returned to Worcester, following the death of his wife. The first composition of Elgar that had a public performance was an orchestral intermezzo (Birmingham, Dec. 13, 1883); his first signal success was with the concert overture Froissart (Worcester Festival, Sept. 9, 1890). His cantata The Black Knight was produced by the Festival

Choral Society in Worcester (April 18, 1893) and was also heard in London, at the Crystal Palace (Oct. 23, 1897); the production of his cantata Scenes From the Saga of King Olaf at the North Staffordshire Festival (Oct. 30, 1896) attracted considerable attention; from then on, Elgar's name became familiar to the musical public. There followed the cantata Caractacus (Leeds Festival, Oct. 5, 1898), and Elgar's masterpiece, the oratorio The Dream of Gerontius (Birmingham Festival, Oct. 3, 1900). In the meantime, Elgar gave more and more attention to orchestral music. On June 19, 1899, Hans Richter presented the first performance in London of Elgar's Variations on an Original Theme (generally known as Enigma Variations). This work consists of fourteen sections, each marked by initials of fancied names of Elgar's friends; in later years, Elgar issued cryptic hints as to the identities of these persons, which were finally revealed. Elgar also stated that the theme itself was a counterpoint to a familiar tune, but the concealed subject was never discovered; various guesses were advanced in the musical press from time to time; a contest for the most plausible answer to the riddle was launched in America by the 'Saturday Review' (1953) with dubious results. It is most probable that no such hidden theme existed, and that Elgar, who had a stately sense of humor, indulged in harmless mystification. The success of the Enigma Variations was followed by the production of Elgar's Pomp and Circumstance marches (1901-30), the first of which became Elgar's most famous piece, through a setting to words by Arthur Christopher Benson, used by Elgar in the Coronation Ode (1902), and then published separately as Land of Hope and Glory; another successful orchestral work was the Cockaigne Overture (London, June 20, 1901). Elgar's two symphonies, written in close succession in 1908 and 1910, received respectful attention in England, but never became popular elsewhere. His violin concerto, first performed by Fritz Kreisler (London, Nov. 10, 1910), was more successful; there was also a cello concerto (London, Oct. 26, 1919). The emergence of Elgar as a major composer about 1900 was all the more remarkable since he had no formal academic training. Yet he developed a masterly technique of instrumental and vocal writing. His style of composition may be described as functional romanticism; his harmonic procedures remain firmly within the 19th-century tradition; the formal element is always strong, and the thematic development logical and precise. Elgar had a melodic gift, which asserted itself in the earliest works such as the popular Salut d'amour; his oratorios, particularly The Apostles, were the product of Elgar's fervent religious faith (he was a Roman Catholic); however he avoided archaic usages of Gregorian chant; rather he presented the sacred subjects in a communicative style of secular drama. Elgar's stature in England is very great. During his lifetime he was a recipient of many honors. He was knighted in 1904. He received honorary degrees of Mus. Doc. from Cambridge (1900), Oxford (1905), Aberdeen (1906); also an LL. D., from Leeds (1904). During his first visit to the U. S. in 1905 he was made Doctor of Music of Yale Univ.; in 1907 he received the same degree from the Univ. of Pennsylvania. He received the Order of Merit in 1911; was made K. C. V. O. in 1928 and a baronet in 1931; was appointed Master of the King's Music in 1924, succeeding Sir Walter Parratt. Although he was not a proficient conductor, he appeared on various occasions with orchestras in his own works; during his second visit to the U. S., he conducted his oratorio The Apostles (N. Y., 1907); also led the mass chorus at the opening of the British Empire Exhibition in 1914. —Works: the oratorios op. 29, The Light of Life (Worcester, 1890); op. 38, The Dream of Gerontius (Birmingham, 1900); op. 49, The Apostles (Birmingham, 1903); op. 51, The Kingdom (Birmingham, 1906). Cantatas: op. 25, The Black Knight (1893); op. 30, Scenes From the Saga of King Olaf (1896); op. 33, The Banner of St. George (1897); op. 35, Caractacus (1898); op. 44, Coronation Ode (Sheffield, 1902); op. 69, The Music Makers (Birmingham, 1912). Choral works with orch.: op. 23, Star of the Summer Night (1892); op. 27, Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands (1896); op. 80, The Spirit of England (1916). For orch.: op. 1a, The Wand of Youth, suite in 7 movements (subtitled Music to a Child's Play, written at the age of 12 and orchestrated 37 years later; London, Queen's Hall Orch., Dec. 14, 1907); op. 1b, 2nd suite, The Wand of Youth (1908); op. 7, Sevillana; op. 10, Three Pieces (Mazurka, Sérénade mauresque, Contrasts); op. 12, Salut d'amour (Crystal Palace, London, Nov. 11, 1889); op. 15, Two Pieces (Chanson du Matin; Chanson du soir); op. 19, Froissart, overture (1890); op. 20, Serenade, for string orch. (1892); op. 32, Imperial March, for Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee (1897); op. 36, Enigma Variations (1899); op. 39, Pomp and Circumstance, 4 military marches (1901-7; a 5th composed in 1930); op. 40, Cockaigne, overture (1901); op. 43, Dream Children, two pieces for small orch. (London Symph. Orch., March 8, 1905, composer conducting); op. 47, Introduction and Allegro, for strings (London, March 8, 1905); op. 50, In the South, overture (1904); op. 55, Symphony No. 1 (Manchester, Dec. 3, 1908); op. 58, Elegy for strings (1909); op. 61, violin concerto (London, Nov. 10, 1910); op. 63, Symphony No. 2 (London, May 24, 1911); op. 65, Coronation March (1911); op. 68, Falstaff, symph. study (1913); op. 70, Sospiri, for string orch., harp, and organ (1914); op. 75, Carillon, for recitation with orch. (1914); op. 76, Polonia, symph. prelude (1915); op. 77, Une Voix dans le désert, for recitation with orch. (1915); op. 79, Le Drapeau belge, for recitation with orch. (1917); op. 85, cello concerto (1919); op. 87, Severn Suite for brass band (1930); Nursery Suite for orch. (1931). Besides, Elgar wrote incidental music for Grania and Diarmid (op. 42); a masque, The Crown of India (op. 66, 1912); The Starlight Express (op. 78, 1915); and music for Laurence Binyon's and J. M. Harvey's play, King Arthur (London, 1923). Chamber music: op. 6, quintet for wind instruments; op. 8, string quartet (MS destroyed); op. 9, violin sonata; op. 82, violin sonata in E minor (MS destroyed); op. 83, string quartet in C minor (1918); op. 84, piano quintet (1919); organ works (op. 14, voluntaries; op. 28, Sonata in G; etc.); part-songs (opp. 18, 26, 45, 71, 72, 73); songs (opp. 5, 16, 31, 41, 48, 59, 60; the last 3 with orch.).—Bibl.: R. Elizalde, Federico, Spanish composer; b. Manila, Philippine Islands (of Spanish parents), Dec. 12, 1907. He entered the Madrid Cons. as a child and received the first prize as a pianist at the age of 14. Later he went to California, and studied law at Stanford Univ. At the same time he took lessons with Ernest Bloch. He was subsequently active as conductor of hotel orchestras in England; also visited Germany. Returning to his native islands, he became conductor of the Manila Symphony Orch. (1930); then conducted in Paris and Spain. On April 23, 1936, he conducted his Sinfonia Concertante at the Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Barcelona. He was in France during World War II; in 1948 he assumed the post of president of the Manila Broadcasting Co., but has continued his travels in both hemispheres. His music is influenced mainly by Manuel de Falla; beginning with dance-like works in the Spanish vein, Elizalde has gradually changed his style toward neo-classicism. He has written an opera Paul Gauguin for the centennial of Gauguin's birth (1948); a violin concerto (1943); a piano concerto (1947); and much chamber music.

Elkan, Henri, conductor and publisher; b. Antwerp, Nov. 23, 1897; studied viola and piano at the conservatories of Antwerp (1914) and Amsterdam (graduated 1917); in 1920 came to the U.S.; played the viola in the Philadelphia Orch. Enacovici (eh-nah-koh-vē-sē), Georg, Rumanian composer; b. Focsani, April 22, 1891; studied at the Bucharest Cons.; then with Vincent d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum in Paris; received the Enesco Prize in composition (1915); returned to Bucharest and became professor at the Cons. there. Among his compositions are Rapsodie roumaine for orch. (1935); 2 Poèmes for violin and orch. (1924 and 1941); some chamber music, and songs.

Encina (or Enzina) (en-thē'-nah), Juan del, Spanish poet and composer; b. Salamanca, July 12, 1468; d. León, late in 1529. He was the son of a shoemaker of Salamanca named Juan de Fermoselle; became chorister at Salamanca Cathedral; studied music under his elder brother, Diego de Fermoselle, and under Fernando de Torrijos; took his degree in law at Salamanca Univ., where he enjoyed the favor of the chancellor, Don Gutiérrez de Toledo. About 1492 he entered the household of the 2nd Duke of Alba, for whom he wrote a series of pastoral eclogues that form the foundation of the Spanish secular drama. These eclogues included 'villancicos' or rustic songs, for which Encina composed the music. He went to Rome in 1500; on May 12, 1500, was appointed canon at the Cathedral of Salamanca; from Feb. 2, 1510 until 1512, he was archdeacon and canon of Málaga; on May 2, 1512, he again went to Rome; his Farsa de Plácida e Vittoriano was performed there in the presence of Julius II on Jan. 11, 1513. In 1517, he was 'sub-collector of revenues to the Apostolic Chamber'; in 1519, appointed prior of León, and that same year made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where he was ordained a priest. He described his sacred pilgrimage in Tribagia o Via Sacra de Hierusalem (Rome, 1521). After the death of Leo X in 1521, Encina returned to Spain and spent his last years as prior at León. Besides being the creator of the Spanish drama, Encina was the most important Spanish composer of the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella; he cultivated with notable artistry a type of part-song akin to the Italian 'frottola,' setting his own poems to music. Sixty-eight of these songs are preserved in the valuable 'Cancionero musical de los siglos XV y XVI,' ed. by F. A. Barbieri (Madrid, 1890; new ed., in 3 vols., by H. Anglès, 1947, 1951, 1953). No religious music by Encina is known to exist.—Cf. E. Diaz-Jiménez, Juan del Encina en León (Madrid, 1909); R. Mitjana, Estudios sobre algunos músicos españoles del siglo XVI (Madrid, 1918); R. Enckhausen, Heinrich Friedrich, German organist and composer; b. Celle, Aug. 28, 1799; d. Hanover, Jan. 15, 1885. He studied with Aloys Schmitt in Berlin, succeeding him as court organist. He wrote an opera Der Savoyard (Hanover, 1832) and sacred music; publ. a book of chorales.

Ende, Heinrich vom, German music publisher; b. Essen, Aug. 12, 1858; d. Cologne, Jan. 20, 1904. He published popular manuals on music, such as Schatzkästlein; also composed a considerable number of male choruses (Das Kätzchen; Es ist ein Brünnelein geflossen, etc.), songs, and piano pieces.

Enesco (Enescu), Georges, foremost Rumanian composer and violinist; b. Liveni, Rumania, Aug. 19, 1881; d. Paris, May 4, 1955. He began to play violin when only 4 years old, taking lessons with a Rumanian gypsy violinist, Nicolas Chioru; then studied with the violinist and composer, Caudella; from 1888-93 he was a pupil at the Vienna Cons. under Hellmesberger (violin) and R. Fuchs (theory), winning first prize in violin playing and harmony (1892); 1894-9 he studied at the Paris Cons. with Marsick (violin), Fauré and Massenet (composition); won second accessit for counterpoint and fugue (1897) and first prize for violin playing (1899); at the same time he studied cello, organ, and piano, attaining more than ordinary proficiency on all these instruments. His talent for composition manifested itself very early, his first efforts (not published) dating from his student days in Vienna; on June 11, 1897, when he was not quite sixteen, he presented in Paris a concert of his own works (a string quintet, piano suite, violin sonata, and songs), which attracted the attention of Colonne, who produced the following year the youthful composer's op. 1, Poème roumain. He toured as a violin virtuoso (1899-1900), and was appointed court violinist to the Queen of Rumania; then lived in Paris; gave master classes in violin interpretation at the École Normale de Musique; among his pupils was Yehudi Menuhin. In 1912 he offered an annual prize for Rumanian composers (won by Jora, Enăcovici, Stan Golestan, Otescu, and others); then toured Europe; first visited the U. S. in 1923, making his début as conductor, composer, and violinist in a New York concert of the Philadelphia Orch. (Jan. 2, 1923); returned to the U. S. in 1937, and conducted the N. Y. Philh. on Jan. 28, 1937, and several subsequent concerts with remarkable success; reengaged in 1938 and conducted the N.Y. Philh. in 14 concerts; appeared twice as a violinist; also conducted two concerts of Rumanian music at the New York World Fair (May, 1939). The outbreak of World War II found Enesco in Rumania, where he lived on his farm in Sinaia, near Bucharest. He remained there through the war years; in 1946 he came again to the U. S. to teach in N. Y. On Jan. 21, 1950, on the 60th anniversary of his first public appearance at the age of 8, he played a farewell concert in New York in the multiple capacity of violinist, pianist, conductor, and composer, in a program comprising Bach's double concerto (with his pupil, Yehudi Menuhin); his violin sonata (playing the piano part with Menuhin); his Rumanian Rhapsody (conducting the orch.). He then returned to Paris; in July 1954 he suffered a stroke, and became an invalid for his remaining days. In homage to his accomplishment in Rumanian music, his native village was renamed Enescu and a street in Bucharest was also named after him. Enesco had an extraordinary range of musical interests. His compositions include artistic stylizations of Rumanian folk strains; his style was neo-romantic, but he made occasional use of experimental devices, such as quarter-tones in his opera, Oedipe. He possessed a fabulous memory and was able to play complete symphonic scores without the notes.—Works (all performed in Paris): opera Oedipe (1932; March 10, 1936; revived in 1955); for orch.: Poème roumain, op. 1 (Feb. 6, 1898); Pastorale-Fantaisie (Feb. 19, 1899); Rapsodie roumaine (No. 1, 1901; No. 2, 1902; both perf. Feb. 7, 1908); Suite No. 1 (Dec. 11, 1904); 3 symphonies (No. 1, Jan. 21, 1906; No. 2, 1913; No. 3, Feb. 26, 1921); Symphonie concertante for cello and orch. (March 14, 1909); Suite No. 2 (1915); violin concerto (Feb. 13, 1921); Suite No. 3, Villageoise (1938; N. Y. Philh., Feb. 2, 1939); Poème symphonique (1950); Concert Overture on Motifs in the Ruman- ian Character (1948; Washington, D. C., Jan. 23, 1949, Enesco conducting); Symphonie de chambre (1954; Paris, Jan. 23, 1955). Chamber music: 3 violin sonatas (No. 1, 1897; Paris, Feb. 17, 1898; No. 2, 1899; No. 3, Dans le caractère populaire roumain, 1926); Octet, for 4 violins, 2 violas, 2 cellos (1900); trio, Aubade, for violin, viola, and cello (1901); Intermezzo for strings (1903); Dixtuor for strings and wind instruments (1906); quartet for piano, violin, viola, and cello (1911); 2 string quartets (No. 1, 1921; No. 2, 1945; Washington, D. C., Oct. 31, 1948); Impressions d'enfance for violin and piano (1940). Vocal works: 3 Mémoires de Fernand Gregh, for chorus and piano (1897); 7 Chansons de Clément Marot, for piano and chorus (1907-8). Piano works: Variations on an original theme for 2 pianos (1899); 2 suites for piano solo (No. 1, Dans le style ancien, 1897; No. 2, 1903); Pièces improvisées (1915-16); 3 sonatas (1924; 1927; 1934).—Cf. B. Gavoty, Les Souvenirs de Georges Enesco (Paris, 1955).

Engel, A. Lehman, American composer and conductor; b. Jackson, Miss., Sept. 14, 1910. He studied at the Cincinnati College of Music and at the Juilliard Graduate School, N. Y., where he took courses with Rubin Goldmark and Roger Sessions. After graduation (1934) he devoted himself chiefly to theater conducting; has toured with musical comedy troupes; conducted many premières of modern operas; was founder and conductor of the Madrigal Singers (1936-39), with which he presented early American music and works of the polyphonic masters. As a composer, Engel is at his best in theater music; his choral writing is expert.—Works: Pierrot of the Minute, opera (Cincinnati, 1928); Medea, opera after Euripides (1935); Scientific Creation, ballet (N. Y., 1932); Traditions, ballet (1938); incidental music to the following plays produced in New York: Within the Gates, Murder in the Cathedral, Emperor's New Clothes, Horse Play, The Birds, Hero is Born. Other compositions: Rain, for chorus (1933); Chansons Innocentes (Moscow Festival, 1934); Rest, chorus; Symphony No. 1 (1939); Symphony No. 2 (1945); overture (1945); violin concerto (1945); Creation, for narrator and orch. (CBS, June 20, 1948, Engel conducting); The Soldier, short opera (perf. in concert version, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1956, composer cond.); also chamber music.

Engel, Carl, German musical historiographer; b. Thiedenwiese, near Hanover, July 6, 1818; d. by suicide at Kensington, London, Nov. 17, 1882. Pupil of Enckhausen at Hanover (organ), and of Hummel (piano) and Lobe at Weimar. After residing in Hamburg, Warsaw, and Berlin, he went to Manchester, England, in 1846, and in 1850 to London. There he became an influential writer, and an authority of the highest rank on musical history and musical instruments. Published The Pianist's Handbook (1853), Piano School for Young Beginners (1855), and Reflections on Church Music (1856); his life-work began with The Music of the most Ancient Nations, particularly of the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Hebrews (1864), followed by An Introduction to the Study of National Music . . . (1866); Musical Instruments of all Countries (1869); Catalogue of the Special Exhibition of Ancient Musical Instruments (2d ed., 1873); Descriptive Catalogue of the Musical Instruments in the South Kensington Museum (1874); Musical Myths and Facts (1876); The Literature of National Music (1879, reprinted from articles in the 'Times'); Researches into the Early History of the Violin Family (1883). Among his unpublished MSS is a large history of the musical instruments of the world (4 quarto vols. with over 800 illustrations).—Cf. Carl Engel, Some Letters to a Namesake, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1942) and Gustave Reese, More About the Namesake, in A Birthday Offering to Carl Engel (N. Y., 1943).

Engel, Carl, distinguished musicologist and writer on music; b. Paris, July 21, 1883; d. New York, May 6, 1944. He was a great-grandson of Josef Kroll, founder of Kroll's Etablissement in Berlin, and grandson of J. C. Engel, who made the 'Kroll Opera' famous. Carl Engel was educated at the Universities of Strasbourg and Munich; studied composition in Munich with Thuille. He came to the U. S. in 1905, and established himself as editor, musicologist, librarian, and publisher. He was editor and musical adviser of the Boston Music Co. (1909-21); chief of the Music Division of the Library of Congress (1922-34); president of G. Schirmer, Inc. (1929-32); in 1929 became editor of the 'Mus. Quarterly,' remaining in that capacity until his death; from 1934 again president of G. Schirmer, Inc., and honorary consultant in musicology for the Library of Congress; U. S. delegate to the Beethoven Centenary, Vienna, 1927; U. S. representative of the International Society of Musicology; first chairman of the Committee on Musicology, American Council of Learned Societies; president of the American Musicological Society (1937-38); honorary member of the Harvard Musical Association;

Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Letters; honorary Mus. Doc., Oberlin College (1934); Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur (1937); recipient of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge medal 'for eminent services rendered to chamber music' (1935). A writer with a brilliant style and of wide learning, Carl Engel contributed valuable essays to the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Views and Reviews; articles on Chadwick, Loeffler, etc.); publ. two collections of essays: Alla Breve, from Bach to Debussy (N. Y., 1921); Discords Mingled (N. Y., 1931). Carl Engel was also a composer; his music was in the French tradition, in an impressionistic vein; his songs, particularly his settings of poems by Amy Lowell, were often sung (the best known among them is Sea-Shell); other works include Triptych for violin and piano; Perfumes, for piano (an album of 5 pieces); Presque Valse for piano was publ. posthumously.—Cf. G. Reese, ed., A Birthday Offering to Carl Engel (N. Y., 1943; limited edition; not for sale); Harold Bauer, Carl Engel in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1944); G. Reese, A Postscript (ibid.); H. Putnam and E. S. Coolidge, Tributes to Carl Engel in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1945).

Engel, David Hermann, German organist and composer; b. Neuruppin, Jan. 22, 1816; d. Merseburg, May 3, 1877. He studied in Breslau; in 1848 became organist at Merseburg; wrote a comic opera Prinz Carneval (Berlin, 1862); publ. a Beitrag zur Geschichte des Orgelbauwesens (1855).

Engel, Gabriel, American writer, violinist, and composer; b. Beregszasz, Hungary, May 4, 1892; d. Vergennes, Vermont, Aug. 1, 1952. He was the author of The Life of Anton Bruckner (N. Y., 1931) and Gustav Mahler—Song-Symphonist (N. Y., 1932); also editor of 'Chord and Discord,' the magazine of the Bruckner Society of America. During the last 15 years of his life he was engaged in the rare books business.

Engel, Gustav Eduard, German music critic and singing teacher; b. Königsberg, Oct. 29, 1823; d. Berlin, July 19, 1895. He was music critic of the 'Vossische Zeitung' from 1861; taught singing at Kullak's Academy from 1862; among his pupils was Lola Beeth. He publ. Sängerbrevier (daily vocal exercises, 1860), Ästhetik der Tonkunst (1884), and other books and articles.

Engel, Hans, musicologist; b. Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 20, 1894; studied at the Munich Academy of Music under Klose, then with Röhr, and musicology with Sandberger at the Univ. of Munich; Dr. phil., 1925; lecturer at Greifswald Univ. (1926); prof. in 1932; from 1936, prof. of music history at Königsberg; taught at the Hochschule für Musik in Karlsruhe (1945-47); in 1957, instructor at the Univ. of Marburg.—Books: Die Entwicklung des deutschen Klavierkonzertes von Mozart bis Liszt (1927); Musik und Musikleben in Greifswalds Vergangenheit (1929); Das Instrumentalkonzert (new Kretzschmar Führer, part I, vol. III, 1932); Carl Loewe (1934); Franz Liszt (1936); Deutschland und Italien in ihren musikgeschichtlichen Beziehungen (1944); J. S. Bach (1950); Musik der Völker und Zeiten (Hanover, 1952). He is the editor of works by Marenzio, Joh. Fischer, Torelli, also of Denkmäler der Musik in Pommern; contributor to Deutscher Kulturatlas, Stammeler's Verfasserlexikon, etc. See his autobiographical notice in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Engel, Joel, writer and composer; a pioneer in the movement towards a new Jewish national music; b. Berdiansk, April 16, 1868; d. Tel-Aviv, Palestine, Feb. 11, 1927. He studied at Kharkov; later with Taneyev and Ippolitov-Ivanov in Moscow, where he was music editor of the 'Russkiya Vedomosti' and editor of the Russian edition of Riemann's Musiklexikon; lectured for many years in Moscow on Jewish folksongs. In 1922 he went to Berlin, where he organized a publishing house for propaganda of Jewish music; issued a collection of Jewish folksongs in 3 vols.; also published 20 songs for children. His publications in the Russian language are: Pocket Music Dictionary (Moscow, 1913); Essays on Music History (lectures for the historic symph. concerts of the Imperial Russian Music Society, Moscow, 1911); In the Opera (1911).

Engel, Johann Jakob, German musician and writer; b. Parchim, Mecklenburg, Sept. 11, 1741; d. there, June 28, 1802. He was tutor to the Crown Prince (later Friedrich Wilhelm III); publ. an interesting essay, Über die musikalische Malerei (1780).

Engelke, Bernhard, German musicologist; b. Brunswick, Sept. 2, 1884; d. Kirchbarkau, near Kiel, May 16, 1950. He studied at Halle with H. Abert and at Leipzig Univ. with Riemann (Dr. phil. 1908 for his dissertation on J. F. Fasch). In 1912 he went to Magdeburg as teacher and choirmaster at the Cathedral; in 1925 he settled in Kiel; taught at Kiel Univ. He published numerous and valuable articles in music journals dealing mainly with German church music and musicians; contributed an article on Martin

Agricola to 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

English, Granville, American composer; b. Louisville, Jan. 27, 1895. He was educated at the Chicago Musical College (Mus. Bac., 1915); pupil of Felix Borowski, Charles Haubiel, and Wallingford Riegger; teacher at the Gunn School of Music, Chicago (1923-25); living in New York and teaching privately. His main works are: Ugly Duckling, cantata for junior chorus and orch. (1924); Chicago North Shore Festival, 1926; Ballet Fantasy for orch. (1937); Among the Hills, orchestral scherzo (Oklahoma City, March 9, 1952); Mood Tropical, for orch. (Baltimore, Feb. 5, 1955); Evenings by the Sea, symphonic poem (Port Washington, Long Island, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1956); Song of the Caravan for male chorus (1937); piano pieces; violin pieces; songs.

Englund, Einar, Finnish composer; b. Gotland, June 17, 1916. He studied in Helsinki with Palmgren; has composed 2 symphonies; Epinikia, symph. poem; piano quintet; etc.; is regarded as one of the most talented Finnish composers.

Enna, August, eminent Danish composer; b. Nakskov, May 13, 1860; d. Copenhagen, Aug. 3, 1939. He was partly of German and Italian blood; his grandfather, an Italian soldier in Napoleon's army, married a German girl, and settled in Denmark. Enna was brought to Copenhagen as a child, and went to school there. He learned to play piano and violin; had sporadic instruction in theory; later became a member of a traveling orch. and played with it in Finland (1880). Upon his return to Copenhagen, he taught piano and played for dancers; in 1883 he conducted a theater orch.; and wrote his first stage work A Village Tale, which he produced in 1883. After these practical experiences, he began to study seriously; took lessons with Schjorring (violin), Matthesson (organ), and Rasmussen (composition) and soon published a number of piano pieces, which attracted the attention of Niels Gade, who used his influence to obtain a traveling fellowship for Enna; this made it possible for Enna to study in Germany (1888-89) and acquire a complete mastery of instrumental and vocal writing. He followed the German Romantic School, being influenced mainly by Weber's type of opera, and by Grieg and Gade in the use of local color; the first product of this period was his most successful work, the opera Hexen (The Witches) produced in Copenhagen (Jan. 24, 1892), then in Germany.

Enna's other operas also enjoyed a modicum of success; these are Gleopatra (Copenhagen, Feb. 7, 1894); Aucassin and Nicolette (Copenhagen, Feb. 2, 1896); The Match Girl, after Andersen (Copenhagen, Nov. 13, 1897); Lamia (Antwerp, Oct. 3, 1899); Ung Elskov (first produced in Weimar, under the title, Heisse Liebe, Dec. 6, 1904); Princess on the Pea, after Andersen (Aarhus, Sept. 15, 1900); The Nightingale, also after Andersen (Copenhagen, Nov. 10, 1912); Gloria Arsena (Copenhagen, April 15, 1917); Comedians, after Victor Hugo's L'homme qui rit (Copenhagen, April 8, 1920); Don Juan Mañara (Copenhagen, April 17, 1925). He further wrote the ballets: The Shepherdess and the Chimney-sweep (Copenhagen, Oct. 6, 1901); St. Cecilia's Golden Shoe (Copenhagen, Dec. 26, 1904); The Kiss (Copenhagen, Oct. 19, 1927); also a violin concerto, two symphonies; an overture Hans Christian Andersen; choral pieces.

Enriquez de Valderrabano, Enrique, Spanish 16th-century lutenist; native of Peñaranda de Duero. He wrote the tablature book Libro de música de vihuela, intitulado Silva de Sirenas (Valladolid, 1547), containing transcriptions for vihuela (large 6-stringed guitar) of sacred and secular vocal works (some arranged for 2 vihuelas), also some original pieces.—Cf. G. Morphy, Les luthistes espagnols du XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle (1902); J. B. Trend, Luis Milán and the Vihuelistas (1925); W. Apel, Early Spanish Music for Lute and Keyboard Instruments, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1934).

Enthoven, Henri Emile, Dutch composer; b. Amsterdam, Oct. 18, 1903; d. New York, Dec. 26, 1950. He studied composition with Johan Wagenaar at The Hague and with Schreker in Berlin; piano with Andriessen and Bruno Eisner; 1927-28, assistant conductor to Felix Weingartner at Basel; in 1939 he went to New York. In 1945 he was special adviser for the United Nations Information Office. As a composer, Enthoven followed the German Neo-Romantic School (Mahler, Richard Strauss, etc.). His works include 3 symphonies; 3 orchestral suites; a suite for violin; Lyric Suite for voice and small orch.; Festival Prelude on 'Gaudeamus igitur' for woodwind, brass, and organ; songs (with piano and orch.); violin sonata; piano pieces; incidental music to the Egyptian play Ichnaton (Utrecht, 1926).

Entremont, Philippe, French pianist; b. Rheims, June 6, 1934. Both his parents were professional musicians and teachers, and he received his first training from them. He subsequently studied piano with Marguerite Long; then entered the Paris Cons.; won 1st prize in solfège at 12; 1st prize in chamber music at 14, and 1st prize in piano at 15. In 1951 he was the winner of the Belgian State Competition in Brussels. He then toured in Europe; on Jan. 5, 1953 he made his American début with the National Orch. Association in N. Y.; appeared with the Philadelphia Orch. and other American organizations in 1956 and 1957 with exceptional success.

Eppert, Carl, American composer; b. Carbon, Ind., Nov. 5, 1882. He studied in Chicago and in Germany; founder and conductor of the Civic Symph. Orch. in Milwaukee (1923-26).—Works: 4 symphonies; Escapade, for orch. (Indianapolis, Jan. 3, 1941); symph. fantasy, Traffic (NBC orch., May 8, 1932); 2 symphonic poems: City Shadows and Speed (both performed at Rochester, Oct. 30, 1935); Two Symphonic Impressions (Chicago, Feb. 13, 1941; received 1st prize in the Chicago Symph. Orch. Golden Jubilee in 1940-41).

Epstein, Julius, pianist, b. Agram, Croatia, Aug. 7, 1832; d. Vienna, March 1, 1926. He was a pupil at Agram of Ignaz Lichtenegger, and at Vienna of Anton Halm (piano) and Johann Rufinatscha (composition). From 1867 to 1901 he was prof. of piano at the Vienna Cons.; one of the editors of Breitkopf & Härtel's monumental edition of Schubert's works. Among his pupils were Gustav Mahler and Ignaz Brüll.—Cf. H. Schuster, J. Epstein; Ein tonkünstlerisches Charakterbild zu seinem 70. Geburts-Feste (Vienna, 1902).

Epstein, Peter, German musicologist; b. Strasbourg, Nov. 12, 1901; d. Breslau, June 9, 1932. He studied in Frankfurt; later at the Akademie für Kirchen- und Schulmusik, Berlin, and at the Univ. of Breslau.—Publications: Catalogues of church music MSS of the Library of the City of Frankfurt (1926; in collaboration with C. Süß), of musical instruments at the Historic Museum of the City of Frankfurt (1927), and of musical instruments in the Breslau Museum (1932); Die Frankfurter Kapellmusik zur Zeit des Johann Andreas Herbst, in 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (VI); contributions on early Italian monody of the 17th century, in his Univ. dissertation at Breslau, 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (VIII, 416); 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (X, 216); Görlitzer Schulmusik um 1600 (1929); Apelles von Löwenstern (1929); etc.; edited Schultze's St. Luke Passion (Delitzsch, 1953) in 1930.—Cf. A. Schmitz, Peter Epstein, in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (XIV, 450).

Epstein, Richard, Austrian pianist, son of Julius Epstein; b. Vienna, Jan. 26, 1869; d. New York, Aug. 1, 1919. He was a pupil at the Vienna Cons. of his father and R. Fuchs (composition); prof. of piano at the Vienna Cons.; lived in London (1904-14); then in New York. He excelled as an accompanist, in which capacity he was frequently heard with such artists as Sembrich, Fremstad, Culp, Gerhardt, Destinn, Elman, Kreisler, and as assisting artist with famous chamber music organizations (Joachim, Rosé, Bohemian Quartets, etc.).

Érard (ā-rah'r), Sébastien, famous maker of pianos and harps; b. Strasbourg, April 5, 1752; d. in his château, La Muette, near Paris, Aug. 5, 1831. His family name was originally Erhard; his father was a cabinet-maker by trade, and in his shop Sébastien worked until he was 16, when his father died. He was then engaged by a Paris harpsichord maker, who dismissed him "for wanting to know everything"; under a second employer his ingenuity made a stir in the musical world, and the invention of a 'clavecin mécanique' (described by Abbé Roussier, 1776) made him famous. The Duchess of Villeroi became his patroness, and fitted up in her home a workshop for Érard, in which (1777) he finished the first pianoforte made in France. In the meantime, his brother, Jean-Baptiste, joined him, and they founded an instrument factory in the Rue Bourbon. Their growing success led to a conflict with the fan-makers' guild (to which the brothers did not belong), which tried to prevent them from working. But the Érards obtained a special 'brevet' from Louis XVI for the manufacture of 'forté-pianos' and this enabled them to continue their trade unmolested. In the following years, Érard invented the 'piano organisé' with two keyboards, one for piano and the other for a small organ; he also became interested in the harp, and invented the ingenious double-action mechanism, perfected in 1811. From 1786-96 he was in London; returning to Paris, he made his first grand piano, and employed the English action until his invention, in 1809, of the repetition action, which is regarded as his supreme achievement. An 'orgue expressif,' built for the Tuileries, was his last important work.—Cf. F. Fétis, Notice biographique sur Sébastien Érard (Paris, 1831).—His nephew, Pierre Érard (1796-1855), succeeded him; he published The Harp in its present improved state compared with the original Pedal

Harp (1821), and Perfectionnements apportés dans le mécanisme du piano par les Érards depuis l'origine de cet instrument jusqu'à l'exposition de 1834 (1834). Pierre's successor was his wife's nephew, Pierre Schäffer (d. 1878); the firm is still the leading French manufacturer of pianos and harps.

Eratosthenes, Greek philosopher; b. Cyrene, c. 276 B.C.; d. Alexandria, Egypt, c. 194 B.C. He wrote on numerous subjects, chiefly mathematics, and was custodian of the Alexandria library. The Catasterismi, attributed to Eratosthenes, contain scattered notes on Greek music and instruments, especially the 'lyra' (German transl. by Schaubach, 1795; Bernhardt publ. in 1822 an ed. of the original text). His work on music is lost; Ptolemy quotes his division of the tetrachord.

Erb, John Lawrence, American organist, pedagogue, and author; b. Reading, Pa., Feb. 5, 1877; d. Eugene, Ore., March 17, 1950. He studied at Pottstown, Pa. (1892-4) and at the Metropolitan College of Music, N. Y. City (1894-9); then was director of the Wooster, Ohio, Cons. (1905-13); director School of Music, Univ. of Illinois (1914-21); secretary and later president of the Music Teachers' National Association; lecturer at American Institute of Applied Music, N. Y. (1921-4); from 1923, at Connecticut College for Women.—Books: Brahms, a biography (1895; 1905; revised ed., London, 1934); Hymns and Church Music (1911); Elements of Harmony (1911); Elementary Theory (1911); Music Appreciation for the Student (1926); two chapters in Balzell's History of Music (1931); Select Songs for the Assembly (1931). He also composed songs, piano pieces, organ music, anthems, music for pageants.

Erb, John Warren, American music educator and composer; b. Massillon, Ohio, April 17, 1887; d. Pittsburgh, July 2, 1948. He studied in Berlin with Xaver Scharwenka, Siegfried Ochs, and Felix Weingartner, and in the U. S. with Stillman Kelley; chairman and director of department of instrumental music in School of Music Education of New York Univ.; conductor of Lake Placid Club Choral Festival, Biennial Festival of National Federation of Music Clubs, Baltimore, in 1929; director of music, Lafayette College (1938). Among his works are An Early Greek Christmas, The Unfoldment for strings (Saratoga Spa, 1937), etc.

Erb (ärp), Marie Joseph, Alsatian composer and organist; b. Strasbourg, Oct. 23, 1858; d. Andlau, July 9, 1944. He studied at first in Strasbourg; then (1875-80) in Paris, under Saint-Saëns, Gigout, and Loret, at the 'École de musique classique'; from 1880 in Strasbourg as teacher of piano and organ, and organist in the Johanniskirche (Roman Catholic) and at the Synagogue.—Works: The operas (all first performed in Strasbourg, unless otherwise noted) Der Letzte Ruf (1895), Der glückliche Taugenichts (1897), Abendglocken (1900), Eifersüchtig (Leipzig, 1901), Der Riese Schletto (1901), Der Zaubermantel (1901), Die Vogesentanne (1904), Der Heimweg (ballet-opera, 1907), Prinzessin Flunkerkli (fairy-opera, 1912); a symphony in G; 3 violin sonatas; cello sonata; 2 string quartets; string trio; Octet for wind and strings; Sonata liturgica (1919); Suite liturgique; Danses et pièces alsaciennes (1924 and 1925); 8 Masses; organ pieces; pieces for piano (2 and 4 hands); songs; also 2 vols. of Alsatian folksongs.—Cf. Marie Joseph Erb, sa vie et son œuvre, ed. by P. de Bréville (Strasbourg, 1948).

Erbach, Christian, German organist and composer; b. Hesse, 1573; d. Augsburg, 1635. He was the successor of Hassler as town organist in Augsburg (1602); in 1625 became organist of the cathedral there. He publ. 3 books of Modi sacri . . . (1600, 1604, 1611; under varying titles) for 4-10 voices; several works by him are included in contemporary collections; 12 motets are in A. B. Gotttron, Christian Erbach (Mainz, 1943). See E. F. Schmid's article on Erbach in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Erbse, Heimo, German composer; b. Rudolstadt (Thuringia), Feb. 27, 1924. He studied in Weimar, and in Berlin with Boris Blacher; from 1947-50 was opera coach in Jena, Meiningen, Sondershausen, and other German towns. His works include Musik für 9 Musikanten (1951); Capriccio for piano, percussion, and string orch. (1952); etc.

Erdmann, Eduard, Latvian pianist and composer; b. Tsezis (Wenden), March 5, 1896. He studied in Riga; then went to Berlin, where he studied piano with Konrad Ansoerge (1914-17) and composition with Heinz Tiessen (1915-18). From 1925-35 he was prof. at the Cologne Cons.; active as concert pianist (1935-50); in 1950, appointed prof. of piano at the Hochschule für Musik in Hamburg. He has written 4 symphonies (No. 1, 1919; No. 2, 1923; No. 3, 1946; No. 4, 1951); piano pieces; songs.

Erdmannsdorfer, Max von, German conductor; b. Nuremberg, June 14, 1848; d. Munich, Feb. 14, 1905. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. (1863-7), and in Dresden (1868-9). From 1871 to 1880 he was court conductor at Sondershausen; then was active in Vienna, Leipzig, and Nuremberg. In 1882 he was engaged as conductor of the Imperial Musical Society in Moscow; in 1885 became prof. at the Moscow Cons.; organized a students' orchestra there. His symphonic concerts in Moscow were of great importance to Russian music; he introduced many new works by Russian composers, and his influence was considerable in the Moscow musical circles, despite the mediocrity of his conducting. Returning to Germany, he became conductor of the Bremen Philharmonic Concerts (until 1895); in 1897 he settled in Munich.

Erede, Alberto, Italian conductor; b. Genoa, Nov. 8, 1908. He studied at the Milan Cons. (piano, cello, theory); then in Basel, with Weingartner (conducting). He conducted opera in England from 1934-39, and after 1946; made his U.S. début with the NBC Symph. Orch. in 1939; in 1954 joined the staff of the Metropolitan Opera (chiefly for the Italian repertory).

Erhardt, Otto, German opera director; b. Breslau, Nov. 18, 1888. He studied violin; took courses in music and art at Breslau, Munich, Oxford, and London. He played violin in various orchestras (1908-11); then became a stage director; acted in this capacity with the Stuttgart Opera (1920-27); at the Dresden Opera (1927-32); Zürich (1923); Bayreuth Festival (1924); Rome and Turin (1925); was also engaged at Covent Garden for several seasons; was with the Chicago Civic Opera (1930-32); directed the festivals at Salzburg (1933-36). In 1938 he went to Buenos Aires, where he was stage director at the Teatro Colón and prof. at the Opera Academy (until 1948); after two seasons in Europe, he became stage director of the City Opera Co. in New York (1950); subsequently divided his time between South America, Europe, and the U. S. He published a book, Die Operndichtung der deutschen Romantik (Breslau, 1911); also a biography of Richard Strauss (Buenos Aires, 1950, in Spanish; German ed., 1953).

Erk, Ludwig (Christian), German music scholar and educator; b. Wetzlar, Jan. 6, 1807; d. Berlin, Nov. 25, 1883. He received good training in music from his father, Adam Wilhelm Erk (1779-1820), who was organist at Wetzlar. His further studies were under André in Offenbach and Spiess in Frankfurt. In 1826 he became prof. at the seminary in Mörs, where he taught until 1835; from 1836 to 1840 he was instructor in liturgical singing at Berlin, and conducted a choir. In 1852, he founded the 'Erk Gesangverein' for mixed voices. During his years as conductor of choral societies, he became interested in folksongs, and accumulated a great collection of authentic materials on the subject; also published songbooks for schools, which attained considerable popularity; some of these were written jointly with his brother Friedrich Erk, and his brother-in-law, Greef. He also published Die deutschen Volkslieder mit ihren Singweisen (1838-45); Volkslieder, alte und neue (1845-6); Deutscher Liederhort (folksongs; vol. 1 publ. 1856; MS of the remainder was bought—with the rest of his valuable library—for the Royal Hochschule für Musik, Berlin; continued and ed. by Magnus Böhme, and publ. in 4 vols., 1894); Mehrstimmige Gesänge (1833-5); Volksklänge (1851-60); Deutscher Liederschatz (1859-72); Vierstimmige Choralgesänge der vornehmsten Meister des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts (1845); J. S. Bachs mehrstimmige Choralgesänge und geistliche Arien (1850-65); Vierstimmiges Choralbuch für evangelische Kirchen (1863); Choräle für Männerstimmen (1866); Methodischer Leitfaden für den Gesangunterricht in Volksschulen (1834, Part I).—Cf. Chronologisches Verzeichnis der musikalischen Werke und literarischen Arbeiten von Ludwig Erk (compiled by a group of friends; Berlin, 1867); K. Schultze, Ludwig Erk (Berlin, 1876); H. Schmeel, Ludwig Erk, ein Lebensbild (Giessen, 1908).

Erkel, Franz (Ferenc), the creator of Hungarian national opera; b. Gyula, Hungary, Nov. 7, 1810; d. Pest, June 15, 1893. He was taught by his father; at 24 became director of the Kaschau opera troupe, and went with it to Pest, where he was appointed conductor at the National Theater on its opening in 1837. He was the founder and director of the Budapest Philharmonic Concerts (1853), and first prof. of piano and instrumentation at the National Musical Academy. His numerous songs, in the national vein, became very popular. He composed the Hungarian National Hymn (1845).—Works: operas (all first presented in Budapest): Báthory Mária (Aug. 8, 1840); Hunyady László (Jan. 27, 1844; first truly national Hungarian opera; given almost 300 performances in the first 50 years); Erzsébet (May 6, 1857); Kúnok (1858); Bánk-Bán (March 9, 1861; highly successful in Hungary); Sarolta, comic opera (June 26, 1862); Dózsa György (April 6, 1867); Brankovics György (May 20, 1874); Névtelen hosók (Nov. 30, 1880); István király (March 14, 1885); music for plays; Festival Overture, for orch. (1887); many songs and anthems. A symposium of essays on Erkel was published in 'Zenetudományi Tanulmányok' (Budapest, 1954, vol. II) under the editorship of B. Szabolcsi.—Cf. K. Abrányi, Franz Erkel (Budapest, 1895); F. Scherer, Franz Erkel (Gyula, 1944).

Erlebach, Philipp Heinrich, important German composer; b. Esens, East Frisia, July 25, 1657; d. Rudolstadt, April 17, 1714. He was Hofkapellmeister at Rudolstadt from at least 1681. His style was strongly influenced by that of Lully. He wrote orchestral suites (6 overtures publ. 1693); suites for violin, viola da gamba and continuo (1694), one of which was reprinted by Einstein in 'Zur deutschen Literature für Viola da Gamba' (1905); cantatas; sacred and secular songs, including Harmonische Freude (2 parts: 1697, 1710; reprinted by Kinkeldey in vol. 46/47 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'); organ works; etc. Examples from his Gottgeheilte Singstunde (1704) are printed in M. Friedländer's Das deutsche Lied im 18. Jahrhundert (1902).

Erlebach, Rupert, English composer; b. Islington, London, Nov. 16, 1894. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music with Stanford and Vaughan Williams. As a composer, he makes considerable use of English folk material. Principal works: Before Dawn, Aubade, A Memory, High Noon, Lark's Song at Evening, for orch.; Rhapsody for cello and orch.; Folksong Poems for string orch.; Rhapsody for flute, oboe, violin, viola, and cello; Moods for string quartet; Legends for violin and piano; sonata for violin and piano; 2 sonatas for cello and piano (one, Folksong Sonata); piano pieces; organ pieces; songs; choral works.

Ermatinger, Erhart, Swiss composer; b. Winterthur, Feb. 16, 1900. He studied at the Zürich Cons. with Jarnach, then at the Berlin Hochschule; 1922-23, chorus master at the Zürich Opera; later a private teacher there; 1925-26, teacher of theory at the Freiburg Univ.; lived in Berlin, then in Holland; in 1945 returned to Switzerland. He has written an opera, Gijsbrecht van Amstel (1947); 2 symphonies, 2 string quartets, songs; publ. a book Bildhafte Musik: Entwurf einer Lehre von der musikalischen Darstellungskunst (Tübingen, 1928).

Ernst, Alfred, French writer and critic; b. Périgueux, April 9, 1860; d. Paris, May 15, 1898. A pupil of the 'École polytechnique', he abandoned science for art; was a passionate admirer and defender of Wagner. Besides many contributions to musical journals, he published L'Oeuvre dramatique de Berlioz (1884), Richard Wagner et le drame contemporain (1887), L'Art de Richard Wagner, l'œuvre poétique (1893; a projected 2nd vol.

on l'œuvre musicale remained unfinished); Étude sur 'Tannhäuser', analysis and thematic guide (1895; with E. Poirée). He translated Die Meistersinger and Der Ring des Nibelungen into French.

Ernst, Heinrich Wilhelm, violinist and composer; b. Brunn, May 6, 1814; d. Nice, Oct. 8, 1865. He was a pupil of Böhm (violin) and Seyfried (composition) in Vienna, with further study under Mayseder; 1832-38, lived in Paris. From 1838 to 1850 he was almost continually on concert tours; then settled in London (1855). His works for violin are brilliant and effective; the Élégie, the concerto in F# minor (new ed. by Marteau, 1913), and Carnaval de Venise, are a few of the most celebrated.—Cf. A. Heller, Heinrich Wilhelm Ernst im Urteile seiner Zeitgenossen (Brunn, 1904).

Erpf, Hermann, German musicologist; b. Pforzheim, April 23, 1891. He studied at Heidelberg and with Riemann at Leipzig; was in the army (1914-18); teaching at Pforzheim (1919-23); at the Univ. of Freiburg (1923-25); assistant director at the Academy of Speech and Music in Münster (1925-27); in charge of the Folkwangschule in Essen (1927-43). He has composed a Mass, numerous cantatas, 3 string quartets, and piano music.

Erskine, John, American educator and writer on music; b. New York, Oct. 5, 1879; d. there, June 1, 1951. He studied piano with Carl Walter; composition with MacDowell; then took up an academic and literary career, becoming highly successful as a novelist and essayist. He was educated at Columbia Univ. (B. A., 1900; M. A., 1901; Ph. D., 1903; LL. D., 1929); prof. of English there (1909-37); then prof. emeritus. In 1923 he resumed piano study under Ernest Hutcheson; played as soloist with the N. Y. Symph. Orch., the Baltimore Civic Orch.; was president of the Juilliard School of Music, N. Y. (1928-37); president of the Juilliard Music Foundation from 1948 until his death. He was editor of 'A Musical Companion' (1935). He received the degree of Mus. Doc. from Rollins College, Florida (1931), Cornell College, Iowa (1935); also Litt. D. from Amherst College (1923) and the Univ. of Bordeaux, France (1929). Erskine was an Officer of the French Legion of Honor. He was married twice: to Pauline Ives (1910; divorced, 1945) and to Helen Worden (July 3, 1945). He published a number of novels, among them The Private Life of Helen of Troy (1925); and the librettos for Gruenberg's opera, Jack and the Beanstalk (1931) and Antheil's opera Helen Retires (1934). He was also the author of books on music, including Is there a Career in Music? (N. Y., 1929); Song Without Words; The Story of Felix Mendelssohn (1941); The Philharmonic-Symphony Society of N. Y., Its First Hundred Years (N. Y., 1943); What is Music? (Philadelphia, 1944); The Memory of Certain Persons (Philadelphia, 1947); My Life as a Teacher (N. Y., 1948); My Life in Music (N. Y., 1950).

Ertel, (Jean) Paul, German pianist and composer; b. Posen, Jan. 22, 1865; d. Berlin, Feb. 11, 1933. He studied with L. Brassin (piano) and later took lessons with Liszt; also studied law; was music critic of the 'Berliner Lokal Anzeiger' and editor of 'Deutscher Musikerzeitung' (1897-1905). He wrote several symph. poems in a general Lisztian vein (Der Mensch, Die nächtliche Heerschau, etc.); many ballads for voice and instruments; violin sonata and other chamber music.

Escher, Rudolf, Dutch composer; b. Amsterdam, Jan. 8, 1912. He studied in Leiden and in Rotterdam; later took lessons from Pijper. His music is impressionistic in harmony but strict in form. He is also the author of monographs on Debussy and Ravel.—Works: Symphony, in memory of Maurice Ravel (1940); Letter from Mexico, for baritone and piano (1941); trio for oboe, flute, and clarinet (1941); sonata for 2 flutes (1944); piano sonata (1935); sonata for unaccompanied cello (1945).

Eschig, Max, French music publisher; b. Opava, now Czechoslovakia, May 27, 1872; d. Paris, Sept. 3, 1927. He settled in Paris and founded a publishing firm under his name in 1907, prospering continually and forming an impressive catalogue of modern works by Ravel, Manuel de Falla, and many other French, Spanish, and English composers.

Eschmann, Johann Karl, Swiss pianist and pedagogue; b. Winterthur, April 12, 1826; d. Zürich, Oct. 27, 1882. He studied in Leipzig with Moscheles, and also had some lessons with Mendelssohn. He then settled in Zürich as a piano teacher; publ. a valuable manual Wegweiser durch die Klavierliteratur (Zürich, 1879; 8th ed., 1914), and 100 Aphorismen aus dem Klavierunterricht (2nd ed., 1899).

Escobar, Luis Antonio, Colombian composer; b. Villapinzón, near Bogotá, July 14, 1925. He studied music at the Bogotá Cons.; then took courses with Nicolas Nabokov at the Peabody Cons. in Baltimore and with Boris Blacher in Berlin. He returned to Bogotá in 1953, and received the post of prof. at the Cons. He has written a symphony, a piano concerto, a flute concerto; 2 string quartets; 2 violin sonatas; 2 sonatas and 3 sonatinas for piano, etc. His style is brisk and terse in the modern manner; but there is in his music also a melorhythmic pattern of Spanish-American dances.

Escobedo, Bartolomé, Spanish composer of the 16th century; b. Zamora, c. 1515; d. in 1563 as canon at Segovia; from 1536-41, and again from 1545-54, singer in the Papal Choir at Rome. A motet by Escobedo is in Esclava's 'Lira Sacro-Hispana'; another motet was reprinted by Ambros in his Geschichte der Musik (vol. 5). MS compositions are in the Sistine Chapel and in Toledo. He wrote a Mass for the accession to the Spanish throne of Philip II (1563); was a judge in the famous dispute between Nicola Vicentino and Vincenzo Lusitano (1551) over the qualities of Greek modes.

Escudier (es-kü-d'yā'), Léon, French music journalist; b. Castelnauary, Aude, Sept. 17, 1821; d. Paris, June 22, 1881. He was a brother and partner of Marie Escudier, b. Castelnauary, June 29, 1819; d. Paris, April 17, 1880. In 1838, the brothers began publishing the periodical 'La France musicale' and soon afterwards established a music shop. Industrious writers, they issued jointly the following works: Études biographiques sur les chanteurs contemporains (1840); Dictionnaire de musique d'après les théoriciens, historiens et critiques les plus célèbres (1844, 2 vols.; reprinted in 1854 as Dictionnaire de musique, théorique et historique); Rossini, sa vie et ses œuvres (1854); Vie et aventures des cantatrices célèbres, précédées des musiciens de l'Empire, et suivies de la vie anecdotique de Paganini (1856). Léon broke up partnership with his brother in 1862, retaining the music business; he established a new paper, 'L'art musical,' which continued to appear until Sept. 27, 1894. Marie retained the publishing and editorial rights to 'La France musicale,' which ceased publ. in 1870.

Eslava y Elizondo, Miguel Hilarión, Spanish composer and scholar; b. Burlada, Navarra, Oct. 21, 1807; d. Madrid, July 23, 1878. He was a choirboy at the Cathedral of Pamplona; studied organ and violin; in 1827 he went to Calahorra, where he studied with Francisco Secanilla; at the age of 21 he was appointed music director at the Cathedral of Burgo de Osma, where he was ordained a priest. In 1832 he became music director at Seville; in 1847 he obtained the appointment as chapel master to Queen Isabella in Madrid; in 1854 he became prof. at the Madrid Cons. He also edited a periodical, 'Gaceta musical de Madrid' (1855-56). He wrote 3 operas with Italian texts: Il Solitario del Monte Selvaggio (Cádiz, 1841), La tregua di Ptolemaide (1842), and Pietro il crudele (1843); his fame rests, however, not on his musical compositions, but on his great collection in 10 vols., 'Lira sacro-hispana' (Madrid, 1869), an anthology of Spanish sacred music from the 16th to the 19th centuries, including some of Eslava's own works (Requiem, Te Deum, etc.). He also publ. a Método de solfeo (1846) and Escuela de Armonía y Composición (1861).—Cf. G. Chase, Miguel Hilarión Eslava in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1938).

Espagne (es-pähñ), Franz, German music editor; b. Münster, April 21, 1828; d. Berlin, May 24, 1878. He studied with Dehn; after Dehn's death, he became head of the Music Dept. of the Royal Library in Berlin; edited new classical editions (works by Palestrina, Beethoven, and others).

Espinosa (ehs-pē-noh'-sah), Guillermo, Colombian conductor; b. Cartagena, Jan. 9, 1905. He was a pupil of the Instituto de Música there; then received a government stipend for further study in Milan under J. Paribeni and R. Bossi; completed his studies at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik with J. Prüwer and in Basel with F. Weingartner. In 1928 he founded and conducted (until 1932) an orch. made up of foreign musicians residing in Berlin. After appearing as guest conductor in Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, and France, he returned to Colombia in 1932, and in 1936 founded the National Symp. Orch. at Bogotá, which he led for ten years. In 1947 he settled in Washington, D. C., as an official of the Division of Music in the Pan American Union; in 1953, succeeded Charles Seeger as chief.—Cf. F. C. Lange, Guillermo Espinosa y la Sinfónica Nacional, in 'Boletín Latino-Americano de Música' (1938).

Esplá, Oscar, Spanish composer; b. Alicante, Aug. 5, 1886; at first studied engineering and philosophy; then turned to music, traveling and studying for some years in Germany. He was the first president of the Junta Nacional de Música under the Spanish Republic (1934) and in 1936 was director of the Madrid Cons.; then lived in Brussels and Paris; eventually returned to Spain.—Works: La Bella durmiente, opera (Vienna, 1909); La Balteira, opera (1939); the ballets Cíclopes de Ifach and El contrabandista; orchestral works: Suite levantina (awarded prize in Vienna, 1909); El Sueño de Eros, Don Quixote, Ambito de la Danza, Las Cumbres; scenic cantata, Nochebuena del diablo; Sonata del Sur, for piano and orch. Since 1948, organist and choirmaster at the First Parish Church, Dover, New Hampshire.

Esteve (eh-stä'-veh), Pablo, Catalanian composer; date of birth unknown; d. Madrid, June 4, 1794. He went to Madrid about 1760; was maestro di cappella to the Duke of Osuna; in 1778 appointed official composer for the municipal theaters of Madrid. He composed over 300 'tonadillas,' and some zarzuelas. His song, El jilguero con pico de oro, has been arranged for modern performance (soprano and orch.) by Joaquín Nin.—Cf. F. Pedrell,

Teatro lírico español anterior al siglo XIX; R. Mitjana, La musique en Espagne, in 'Encyclopédie du Conservatoire' (I, 4); J. Nin, Les classiques espagnols du Chant (2 vols.; Paris, 1926); J. Subirá, La tonadilla escénica (3 vols.; Barcelona, 1928-30); J. Subirá, Tonadillas teatrales inéditas (Barcelona, 1932; contains score of Esteve's Los signos del año).

Estrada, Carlos, Uruguayan composer and conductor; b. Montevideo, Sept. 15, 1909. He studied in Paris with Roger-Ducasse and Henri Busser (composition); conducting with Philippe Gaubert. Returning to Montevideo, he organized a chamber orchestra (1936); also taught music history in schools. His works include many piano pieces, and series antiguas for strings.

Estrada, Juan Agustín. See Garcia Estrada.

Etler, Alvin Derald, American oboist and composer; b. Battle Creek, Iowa, Feb. 19, 1913; studied at the Univ. of Illinois, Western Reserve Univ., and Yale Univ. (Mus. B., 1944); was oboist in the Indianapolis Symph. Orch. (1938-40); taught at Yale (1942-46); at Cornell (1946-47); from 1947, on the staff of the Univ. of Illinois. He held two Guggenheim Fellowships (1941-42). His works include 2 sinfoniettas; a woodwind quintet; a suite for oboe, violin, viola, and cello; sonata for oboe, clarinet, and viola, etc.

Ett, Kaspar, German organist and composer; b. Eresing, Jan. 5, 1788; d. Munich, May 16, 1847, where from 1816, he was court organist at St. Michael's Church. He was active in reviving the church music of the 16th-17th centuries; his own sacred compositions (of which but a few graduals and cantica sacra were printed) follow these early works in style. He composed 273 separate works; a complete enumeration is given by F. Bierling, Kaspar Ett (1906). See also K. F. E. von Schafhäutl, Erinnerungen an Kaspar Ett, in 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1891).

Ettinger, Max, composer and conductor; b. Lwow, Dec. 27, 1874; d. Basel, July 19, 1951; studied in Berlin and Munich. He was active as conductor in Munich (1900-20), Leipzig (1920-29), and Berlin (1929-33). In 1938 he went to Switzerland, where he remained until his death.—Works: operas, Judith (Nuremberg, 1921), Der eifersüchtige Trinker, after Boccaccio (Nuremberg, 1925), Juana (Nuremberg, 1925), Clavigo, after Goethe (Leipzig, 1926), Frühlings Erwachen (Leipzig, 1928); oratorio, Weisheit des Orients, after Omar Khayyam (Nuremberg, 1924); Jewish Requiem (1947); also chamber music and songs.

Euclid, the famous Greek geometer, lived at Alexandria about 300 B.C. He is the reputed author of a treatise on music, Katatomè kanonos (Sectio canonis), following the theories of Pythagoras (new critical ed. by K. von Jan in 'Musici scriptores graeci'). For another treatise long ascribed to Euclid, see the entry on Cleonides.

Eulenburg (oi-len-böörġ), Ernst, German music publisher; b. Berlin, Nov. 30, 1847; d. Leipzig, Sept. 11, 1926. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; established, in 1874, in Leipzig the publishing house bearing his name; after his acquisition of Payne's 'Kleine Partitur-Ausgabe' (1892) he enormously increased the scope of that publication so that large orchestral scores could be included. His son, Kurt Eulenburg (b. Berlin, Feb. 22, 1879), joined the firm in 1911; upon his father's death in 1926 he became the sole owner. He enlarged the number of editions in miniature score and included the original text ('Ur-text') of some of Mozart's works, edited by Einstein, Blume, Kroyer, and others. In 1939 he went to Switzerland. On Sept. 28, 1939 he opened a new company in London with a branch in Zürich. He settled in London in Nov., 1945.

Euler, Leonhardt, famous scientist; b. Basel, April 15, 1707; d. St. Petersburg, Sept. 3, 1783. He was prof. of mathematics at St. Petersburg (1730) and Berlin (1741); published several important works on musical theory and acoustics, chief among them being the Tentamen novae theoriae musicae (1739). Euler was the first to employ logarithms to explain differences in pitch.—Cf. S. Schulz-Euler, Leonhardt Euler (Frankfurt, 1907); also Treubner's ed. of Euler's Opera omnia, series 3, vol. I (1926).

Euting (oi-tēng), Ernst, English musicologist; b. London, Feb. 7, 1874; d. Berlin, April 21, 1925. From 1892-6 he attended the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin, then devoted himself to musicology at the Univ. there, and became Dr. phil. with the thesis Zur Geschichte der Blasinstrumente im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert (1899); in the same year he founded the 'Deutsche Instrumentenbau-Zeitung,' of which he was the editor; also edited the 'Zeitschrift' of the 'Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft' (1902-3).

Evans, David Emlyn, Welsh music editor and composer; b. near Newcastle Emlyn, Wales, Sept. 21, 1843; d. London, April, 1913. He was established in business at Cheltenham, but devoted his leisure hours to music; took part in many Welsh music festivals (Eisteddfodau), his works invariably winning prizes; after the Eisteddfod at Wexham in 1876, where he carried off all four prizes, he voluntarily withdrew from further competitions, but frequently acted as judge; at the National Eisteddfod in London, 1887, he was awarded a prize for his Biography of Welsh Musicians; for many years he was editor of 'Y Cerddor' (The Musician). His chief work is Alawon Fy Ngwlad (2 vols., 1896), a collection of 500 Welsh airs in piano arrangements; his publ. comps. include 2 cantatas, The Christian's Prayer and The Fairy-tribe, many glees, anthems, and part-songs.

Evans, Edwin, Sr., English organist and writer; b. London, 1844; d. there, Dec. 21, 1923. An assiduous and thorough scholar, he publ. basic analytic volumes on Beethoven and Brahms: Beethoven's 9 Symphonies, fully described and analyzed (London, 1923-24), and the remarkable 4-vol. edition (1581 pages; over 1000 mus. examples), Historical, Descriptive and Analytical Account of the Entire Works of Johannes Brahms: vol. I, vocal works (1912); vol. II, chamber and orchestral music up to op. 67 (1933; reprinted, 1950); vol. III, chamber and orchestral music from op. 68 to the end (1935; reprinted, 1949); vol. IV, piano works (1936; reprinted, 1950). Vols. II, III, and IV were publ. posthumously. He also wrote Accompaniment of Plainchant (1911); Wagner's Teachings by Analogy (1915); How to Compose; How to Accompany at the Piano (London, 1917); Method of Instrumentation (vol. I, How to Write for Strings); Technics of the Organ (London, 1938); transl. Wagner's Oper und Drama; made organ arrangements of operatic overtures.

Evans, Edwin, Jr., English writer on music; son of the preceding; b. London, Sept. 1, 1874; d. there, March 3, 1945. He studied in Lille and at Echternach for a business career; was engaged in telegraphy, railroads, and finance from 1889 to 1913; then devoted himself exclusively to musical pursuits. He was music critic of the 'Pall Mall Gazette' (1914-23); editor of 'Music News and Herald' (1921-22); editor of 'The Dominant' (1931) and music critic of the London 'Daily Mail' (1931). Excestre, William, English singer and composer who flourished c. 1390-1410. He was clerk of the Chapel Royal in 1393, and received a prebend in St. Stephen's, Westminster, in 1394. He was one of the composers whose music is contained in the 'Old Hall Manuscript'; a Gloria, a Credo, and a Sanctus (all for 3 voices) are extant.

Eximeno (y Pujades), Antonio, one of the most important Spanish writers on music; b. Valencia, Sept. 26, 1729; d. Rome, June 9, 1808; entered the Company of Jesus at the age of 16; became prof. of rhetoric at the Univ. of Valencia; 1764, appointed prof. of mathematics at the military academy in Segovia. When the Jesuits were expelled from Spain in 1767 he went to Rome, and in 1768 began to study music. In 1774 he publ. Dell'origine e delle regole della musica colla storia del suo progresso, decadenza e rinnovazione (Rome; Spanish transl. by Gutierrez, 1776, 3 vols.), in which he protested against pedantic rules and argued that music should be based on the natural rules of prosody. His theories were strongly controverted, especially by Padre Martini; in answer to the latter, Eximeno publ. Dubbio di Antonio Eximeno sopra il Saggio fondamentale, pratico di contrappunto del Maestro Giambattista Martini (Rome, 1775). His dictum that the national song should serve as a basis for the art-music of each country was taken up by Pedrell and led to the nationalist movement in modern Spanish music. Eximeno also wrote a satirical musical novel, Don Lazarillo Vizcardi, directed against the theories of Pietro Cerone (publ. by Barbieri, 1872-3, 2 vols.).—Cf. F. Pedrell, Padre Antonio Eximeno (Barcelona, 1921).

Expert (ex-pär'), Henry, eminent French music editor; b. Bordeaux, May 12, 1863; d. Tourettes-sur-Loup (Alpes-Maritimes), Aug. 18, 1952. He attended a Jesuit school in Bordeaux; went to Paris in 1881 and studied with César Franck and Eugène Gigout; taught at the École Nationale de Musique Classique, and lectured at the École des Hautes Études Sociales; from 1909, deputy-librarian of the Paris Cons.; chief of the library in 1921; founder (1903, with Maury) of the 'Société d'études musicales et concerts historiques,' also of the choral society 'Chanterie de la Renaissance' (1924). In 1933 he retired. His life-work was the editing and publication of Franco-Flemish music of the 15th and 16th centuries, in ten parts: I. Les Maîtres-

Musiciens de la Renaissance française (works by Orlando di Lasso, Goudimel, Costeley, Janequin, Brumel, La Rue, Mouton, Fevin, Mauduit, Claude Le Jeune, Regnart, Du Caurroy, Gervaise, and Attaignant's collection of chansons, all in modern notation, with facsimiles, etc.; 23 vols. publ., 1894-1908); II. Bibliographie thématique (2 vols., catalogue of publications of Attaignant); III. Les Théoriciens de la musique au temps de la Renaissance (works of Michel de Menhou); IV. 2 vols. of music by Antoine de Bertrand; V. Commentaires; VI. Extraits des Maîtres Musiciens (selected single compositions, arranged for modern use; a large number have been publ., including works by some composers not found in Part I, viz.: Bertrand, Bonnet, Certon, De La Grotte, Gardanne, Josquin des Prez, Le Heurteur, Le Pelletier, Passereau, Thoinot-Arbeau); VII. Vol. 3 of music by Antoine de Bertrand; VIII. Works by Claude Le Jeune; IX. Works by Goudimel; X. Works by Paschal de l'Estocart. In 1924 Expert began the publication of a new series of French music of the 16th century entitled Monuments de la musique française au temps de la Renaissance (with scores in modern notation), of which 10 vols. were published; these contain works by Le Jeune, in 2 vols. (Octonaires de la vanité et inconstance du monde), Certon (3 Masses), Le Blanc (Airs de plusieurs musiciens), Bertrand, in 4 vols. (Amours de P. de Ronsard), Goudimel (Messes à 4 voix), L'Estocart (Octonaires de la vanité du monde). Expert also edited Chansons mondaines des XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles français (80 songs), Airs français des XVI<sup>e</sup> et XVII<sup>e</sup> siècles (Boessel, Guedron, Tessier, Lambert), Florilège du concert vocal de la Renaissance (1928-29), in 8 parts (Janequin, Lassus, Costeley, Bonnet, Le Jeune, Mauduit), Les Maîtres du clavier des XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles (Dandrieu, Daquin, Corrette), Amusements des Maîtres français du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Chédeville, J. Aubert, Baton), Répertoire de musique religieuse et spirituelle (Campra, Charpentier, Dumont, Lully, Bernier, Couperin le Grand, Clérambault, Lalande, Rameau, etc.), La Fleur des musiciens de P. de Ronsard (1923), instrumental Fantaisies by Le Jeune and Du Caurroy; and Le Psauteur huguenot du XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle (the Huguenot Psalter; 1902). He contributed the chapter on the music of France during the 16th century to Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la Musique.'

Mozart; in 1792, became choirmaster at the Carmelite Church; was tutor to the princes in 1810, and first court Kapellmeister in 1824, on Salieri's retirement. He composed symphonies, concertos, quartets, sonatas, etc.; also 2 oratorios, 32 Masses, a Requiem, 7 Te Deums, and 30 offertories.

Eyken (Eijken), Jan Albert van, Dutch organist; b. Amersfoort, April 26, 1823; d. Elberfeld, Sept. 24, 1868. He studied at the Leipzig Cons., and afterwards at Dresden with Schneider. In 1848, he became organist of the Remonstrantenkerk, Amsterdam; in 1853, of the Zuyderkerk, and teacher at the music school in Rotterdam; in 1854, he became organist at Elberfeld. His organ pieces (150 chorales with introductions, 25 preludes, a toccata and fugue on B-A-C-H, 3 sonatas, variations, transcriptions, etc.) are well and favorably known.

Eymieu (ā-m'yō), Henry, French composer and writer on music; b. Saillans, Drôme, May 7, 1860; d. Paris, March 21, 1931. He studied law; then turned to music, taking lessons with Widor; settling in Paris, he wrote for 'Le Ménestrel' and other musical publications; publ. Études et biographies musicales (Paris, 1892); composed a great variety of piano pieces, songs, and duets for piano and violin (58 published opus numbers in all); also produced a stage piece, Un Mariage sous Néron (Paris, 1898), and an oratorio, Marthe et Marie (Asnières, 1898).

Eysler, Edmund S., Austrian operetta composer; b. Vienna, March 12, 1874; d. there, Oct. 4, 1949. He produced a great number of stage works; in 1915 he wrote no fewer than four operettas (Leutnant Gustl, Der grosse Gabriel, Ein Tag im Paradies, Die oder Keine). His most successful operetta was Bruder Straubinger (Vienna, Feb. 20, 1903; over 100 performances in that year). Other successful operettas: Pufferl (Vienna, April 13, 1905); Künstlerblut (1906); Das Glückschweinchen (1908); Der unsterbliche Lump (1910); Das Zirkuskind (1911); and Die goldene Meisterin (Vienna, Sept. 13, 1927).—Cf. R. Prosl, Edmund Eysler (Vienna, 1947).

F

Faber, Heinrich (known as 'Magister Henricus Faber'), German theorist; b. Lichtenfels, c. 1520; d. Olsnitz, Saxony, Feb. 26, 1552. He entered the Univ. of Wittenberg in 1542; received the degree of Master of Liberal Arts in 1545; was then rector of the school of St. George's Monastery near Naumburg; in 1551 was appointed lecturer at Wittenberg Univ.; then was rector at Ölsnitz. He publ. Compendiolum musicae pro incipientibus (1548; reprinted many times and also issued in German transl. as Musica, Kurtzer Inhalt der Singkunst, 1572; edited by Adam Gumpelzhaimer and publ. as Compendium musicae pro illius artis tironibus, 1591). Faber further publ. Ad Musicam practicam introductio (1550); a Musica poetica remains in manuscript.

Fabini, Eduardo, Uruguayan composer; b. Solís del Matazo, May 18, 1883; d. Montevideo, May 17, 1950. He studied violin in Montevideo, and later in Europe with César Thomson at the Brussels Cons., winning first prize; then gave concerts as a violinist in South America, and in the U. S. (1926); eventually returned to Montevideo, and was active there as composer and educator.—Works (all first performed in Montevideo): the ballets Mburucuyá (April 15, 1933) and Mañana de Reyes (July 31, 1937); symph. poem Campo (April 29, 1922); overture, La Isla de los Ceibos (Sept. 14, 1926); Melga sinfónica (Oct. 11, 1931); Fantasia for violin and orch. (Aug. 22, 1929); choral works; piano pieces; songs. His music is inspired entirely by South American folklore; the idiom is mildly modernistic, with lavish use of whole-tone scales and other external devices of impressionism.

Fabricius (fäb-brē'-tsē-öös), Johann Albert, eminent bibliographer; son of Werner Fabricius; b. Leipzig, Nov. 11, 1668; d. Hamburg, April 30, 1736. A learned man, he was professor of elocution; publ. important books of reference, valuable to musicology for the information they contain on musical topics: Thesaurus antiquitatum hebraicarum (1713, 7 vols.); Bibliotheca latina mediae et infimae aetatis (1712-22; 2nd ed., 1734; 6 vols.); Bibliotheca graeca sive notitia scriptorum veterum graecorum (1705-28, 14 vols.).

Fabricius, Werner, German composer; b. Itzehoe, April 10, 1633; d. Leipzig, Jan. 9, 1679. He studied with Thomas Selle and Heinrich Scheidemann in Hamburg; then took courses in law in Leipzig, where he also served as organist of the Nicolaikirche and Paulinerkirche. He publ. a collection of pavaues, allemandes, etc., for viols and other instruments, under the title Deliciae harmonicae (Leipzig, 1656); Geistliche Lieder (Jena, 1659); Geistliche Arien, Dialogen, Concerten, etc. (Leipzig, 1662); motets, etc.

Faccio (fäb'-tchöñ), Franco, Italian composer and conductor; b. Verona, March 8, 1840; d. near Monza, July 21, 1891. His first teacher was G. Bernasconi; from 1855-64 he studied at Milan Cons.; Arrigo Boito was his fellow-pupil and friend; they wrote together a patriotic music drama, Le Sorelle d'Italia, which was produced by the students, and served together under Garibaldi in 1866. His first opera was I profughi fiamminghi (La Scala, Nov. 11, 1863); this was followed by the Shakespearian opera Amleto, for which Boito wrote the libretto (Genoa, May 30, 1865). In 1866-68 Faccio made a tour in Scandinavia as symphonic conductor; in 1868 he became prof. at Milan Cons., and in 1871 succeeded Terziani as conductor at La Scala; on April 25, 1886, he conducted for the 1000th time there. His performances of Verdi's operas were regarded as most authentic; he gave the world première of Otello at La Scala (1887).—Cf. R. de Rensis, Franco Faccio e Verdi (Milan, 1934).

Fachiri, Adila, Hungarian violinist; grand-niece of Joachim; sister of Yelly d'Aranyi; b. Budapest, Feb. 26, 1888. She studied with Joachim, and received from him a Stradivarius violin. In 1909 she settled in London, where she married Alexander Fachiri, a lawyer. She has appeared many times with her sister in duets; on April 3, 1930, the sisters gave in London the first performance of Holst's Concerto for 2 violins, written especially for them.

Faelten, Carl, pianist and teacher; brother of Reinhold Faelten; b. Ilmenau, Thuringia, Dec. 21, 1846; d. Readfield, Maine, July 20, 1925. He studied with Montag (a pupil of Hummel) at Weimar as a school boy; violin with J. Schoch at Frankfurt, and profited by advice from Raff. From 1878-82 he taught at the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt; then was engaged at the Peabody Inst., Baltimore (1882-5); at the New England Cons., Boston (1885-97); was its director from 1890 until 1897, when he founded the Faelten Piano-forte School in Boston. He publ. The Conservatory Course for Piano-forte (an original series, 1888); Fundamental Training Course for Piano-forte (in collaboration with his brother, Reinhold Faelten; 1895); also Technische Übungen for piano: 30 Characteristic Studies (transcribed from the violin sonatas of Bach); 30 Instructive Pieces by G. F. Handel; transcriptions of 6 songs by Schubert; etc.

Faelten, Reinhold, pianist and teacher; b. Ilmenau, Thuringia, Jan. 17, 1856; d. Worcester, Mass., July 17, 1949. A pupil of Klughard and Gottschalk at Weimar; taught in Frankfurt, Baltimore, and Boston; founded, in 1897, with his brother Carl Faelten, the Faelten Pianoforte School in Boston. Jointly with his brother, he wrote several books on the Faelten method: 100 Ear-training Exercises; Keyboard Harmony; also a Transposition System.

Fagan, Gideon, South African conductor and composer; b. Somerset West, Cape Province, Nov. 3, 1904. He studied in Cape Town with W. H. Bell and later in London at the Royal College of Music, where his teachers were Vaughan Williams and Kitson. He began to conduct at the age of 18, mainly for the theater and the cinema. In 1949 he was appointed associate conductor of the Johannesburg Opera Co. He has written Afrikaans Folk-tune Suite for orch. and various pieces of a descriptive nature.

Fago, Nicola, Italian composer, called 'Il Tarantino'; b. Taranto, Feb. 26, 1677; d. Naples, Feb. 18, 1745. He studied (from 1693) with Provenzale at the Cons. 'della Pietà' in Naples, becoming Provenzale's assistant in 1697 and succeeding him in 1705. From 1704-8 he was maestro di cappella at the Cons. 'di Sant' Onofrio'; from 1709-31, maestro di cappella at the Tesoro di San Gennaro. He retired on a modest pension in 1740. He was the teacher of Leonardo Leo, Francesco Feo, Jommelli, and Sala. He composed four operas: Radamisto (1707), Asiarto (1709), La Cassandra indovina (1711), and Lo Masillo (1712); two oratorios, Faraone sommerso and Il monte fiorito; a Te Deum and other sacred music, much of it still preserved in MS in Naples, Paris, and London. His son Lorenzo Fago (b. Naples, Aug. 13, 1704; d. there, April 30, 1793), an organist and composer, was his successor at the Tesoro di San Gennaro (1731-66 and 1771-80), and taught at the Cons. 'della Pietà dei Turchini' for 56 years (1737-93) until his death.—Cf. E. Faustini-Fasini, Nicola Fago, il Tarantino e la sua famiglia (Taranto, 1931).

Fahrbach, Philipp, Austrian conductor; b. Vienna, Oct. 25, 1815; d. there, March 31, 1885. He was a pupil of Lanner; conducted his own orch. for years, and then a military band. His dances (over 150 works) were very popular. His three brothers, his son, and his nephews were all active as band musicians.—Cf. Ph. Fahrbach, Alt-Wiener Erinnerungen (Vienna, 1935).

Faignient (fä-nahn), Noë, Flemish 16th-century contrapuntist; d. about 1595. His compositions, written in the style of Orlando di Lasso, consist of 2 sets of chansons, madrigals, and motets for 4, 5, and 6 voices (1568; 1569). Two of his madrigals are included in Maldeghem's Trésor musical.

Fairchild, Blair, American composer; b. Belmont, Mass., June 23, 1877; d. Paris, April 23, 1933. He studied with J. K. Paine and Walter Spalding at Harvard Univ.; then in Florence with Buonamici; employed for a number of years in the U. S. diplomatic service in Turkey and Persia, then turned again to music and completed his studies in Paris with Widor; lived mostly in Paris. He wrote the ballet Dame Libellule (Paris Opéra-Comique, 1921); Le Songe d'Isfendiari, ballet pantomime; and Belebat, a ballet which was completed after his death by Louis Aubert and performed in Paris in 1938.—Works for orch.: East and West, orchestral poem (1908); the symph. poems Zal, Tamineh (after a Persian legend), and Shah Feridoun; Etude Symphonique for violin and orch.; Rhapsody on old Hebrew melodies for violin and orch.; violin sonatas, piano trio, string quartet, piano quintet; 6 Psalms for soli and chorus; 2 Biblical Lyrics for soli, chorus, and orch.; Requiem for tenor and male chorus; In Memoriam for soli and chorus; 5 sets of Stornelli Toscani (very popular); many song cycles (Persian Folk Songs, Five Sea Prayers, etc.) and other songs showing oriental influences; 2 organ fugues; violin pieces; piano pieces (the suites En Voyage, From a Balcony, and Chants Nègres; Indian Songs and Dances; Étude à Fontainebleau; 2 Garden Sketches; etc.).—Cf. W. T. Upton, Art-Song in America (N. Y., 1930; pp. 169-76). See also W. T. Upton, Our Musical Expatriates, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1928).

Fairclough, George Herbert, organist and composer; b. Hamilton, Canada, Jan. 30, 1869; d. Saratoga, Calif., March 27, 1954. He studied at Toronto Cons. (1887-90) and at the Hochschule für Musik, Berlin, with Karl Heinrich Barth and with Bargiel. From 1900 until 1937 he was organist at St. John's Episcopal Church, St. Paul; concurrently taught organ at the Univ. of Minnesota (1917-37); then retired. He published a Te Deum (1912); Jubilate; Eventide, for organ (1919); Song of Happiness, for organ (1929); Communion Service (1932) and many other sacred works.

Fairlamb, James Remington, American composer; b. Philadelphia, Jan. 23, 1838; d. Ingleside, N. Y., April 16, 1908. As a youth he played organ in several Philadelphia churches; in 1858 went to Paris; studied piano there with Marmontel. While in Europe, he was appointed by Abraham Lincoln as American Consul at Zürich (1861) and stayed in Zürich until 1865, when he returned to the U. S. He organized an amateur opera company in Washington with which he brought out his 4-act grand opera Valérie. From 1872-98 he was church organist in Philadelphia, Jersey City, and New York. Besides Valérie, he wrote another grand opera Lionello (which was never performed) and three light operas: Love's Stratagem, The Interrupted Marriage, and Treasured Tokens; some 50 of his choral works and nearly 150 songs and organ pieces are published. He was one of the founders of the American Guild of Organists.

Faisst (fist), Immanuel Gottlob Friedrich, German composer; b. Esslingen, Württemberg, Oct. 13, 1823; d. Stuttgart, June 5, 1894. He studied theology at Tübingen, and also learned to play the organ. He was encouraged by Mendelssohn to undertake a serious study of music, and subsequently took lessons with Dehn in Berlin. He became active as choral conductor and organist; organized a society for classical church music (1847) in Stuttgart, where he settled. He was the founder of the 'Schwäbischer Sängerbund' (1849); with Lebert, Stark, Brachmann, and others he established the Stuttgart Cons. (1857); became its director in 1859. He received a Dr. phil. at Tübingen Univ. for his essay Beiträge zur Geschichte der Klaviersonate ('Cäcilia,' 1846; reprinted in the 'Neues Beethovenjahrbuch' 1924, 1). He was the editor (with Lebert) of the famous edition of classical piano works, Instruktive ausgewählte klassische Werke, publ. by Cotta; also (with Stark) of Elementar- und Chorgesangschule (2 vols.; Stuttgart, 1880-82). Faisst was a prolific composer; a number of his songs, ballads, choral works, etc., were publ. during his lifetime, but then were completely forgotten. He also publ. several school manuals on harmony.

Falchi, Stanislao, Italian composer; b. Terni, Jan. 29, 1851; d. Rome, Nov. 14, 1922. He studied in Rome with C. Maggi and S. Meluzzi; in 1877 he became a teacher at Santa Cecilia; from 1902 till 1915 was its director. Among his pupils were A. Bonaventura, A. Bustini, V. Gui, B. Molinari, L. Refice, and F. Santoliquido. He wrote the operas Lorhelia (Rome, Dec. 4, 1877), Giuditta (Rome, March 12, 1887), and Il Trillo del diavolo (Rome, Jan. 29, 1899); also a Requiem for the funeral of Victor Emmanuel II (Jan. 17, 1883).

Falcon (fähl-kohn'), Marie-Cornélie, remarkable French dramatic soprano; b. Paris, Jan. 28, 1814; d. there, Feb. 25, 1897. She was a pupil of Bordogni and A. Nourrit; made her début at the Paris Opéra on July 20, 1832, as Alice in Robert le Diable. She sang at the Paris Opéra with brilliant success until 1837, when, though still a very young woman, she unaccountably lost her voice. After many attempts to regain her vocal powers, including quack medicines and bogus treatment of all sorts, she was forced to abandon the stage, and retired to her villa near Paris; she lived another sixty years. Despite the brevity of her active career, her singing of such roles as Valentine in Les Huguenots and Rachel in La Juive became a legendary memory, so that the description "Falcon type" was applied to singers who excelled in her roles.

Falconieri, Andrea, Italian composer and lutenist; b. Naples, 1586; d. there, July 29, 1656. He was in the service of the house of Farnese at Parma; studied with Santino Garzi there until 1614; in 1615 was in Florence; 1616, in Rome; 1619, again in Florence; 1620-21, at the court of Modena; then traveled in Spain and France; 1629-35, again at Parma; from 1639, maestro di cappella at the royal court, Naples; 1642, in Genoa; 1650, in Naples. His Libro Primo di Villanelle a 1, 2 e 3 voci (with alphabetical tablature for Spanish guitar) was publ. at Rome, 1616 (reprinted by Gardano at Venice); various other books followed, the Libro V delle Musiche appearing in 1619; probably one of his last works was the valuable instrumental collection Primo Libro di Canzone, Sinfonie, Fantasie, Capricci . . . per Violini e Viole, overo altri Strumenti a 1, 2 e 3 voci con il basso continuo (Naples, 1650). Reprints: arias (2 books) in the 'Raccolta nazionale delle musiche italiane'; in A. Parisotti's 'Arie antiche' and 'Piccolo Album di Musica Antica'; in L. Torchi's 'Eleganti Canzoni ed Arie italiane del secolo XVII'; and 'L'Arte Musicale in Italia' (vol. VII); 17 Arie a una voce, publ. by G. Benvenuti; 2 Villanelle a 3, ed. by C. Sabatini; 4 songs in La Flora, ed. by Knud Jeppesen (Copenhagen, 1949).—Cf. L. Valdrighi, Atti (1883; p. 488); L. Torchi, in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1898; p. 65).

Falk, Richard, opera conductor; b. Moringen, Germany, April 29, 1886; studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Jadassohn and Riemann; conducting with Nikisch. After graduation in 1908 he began to conduct theater orchestras in Berlin and other German cities; from 1933-38 he conducted the International Chamber Opera at the Palazzo Doria in Rome; in 1939 he settled in the U. S. He has adapted and produced a number of 18th-century Italian operas.

Falkner, Donald Keith, English bass singer; b. Sawston, Cambridge, March 1, 1900. He was a chorister at New College School in Cambridge; then served in the Royal Navy during World War I. It was only after the end of the war that he began to study singing seriously, taking lessons with Plunkett Greene in London, Lierhammer in Vienna, and also in Paris, with Dossert. He made his professional début in Portsmouth (1922); American début in New York (1930); has been particularly successful in modern English and Elizabethan songs.

Fall, Fritz, Austrian conductor, nephew of Leo Fall; b. Vienna, July 25, 1901; studied at the Vienna Academy; was opera conductor in Austria, Germany, and Czechoslovakia (1925-37); in 1937 he went to America; 1938-42, conducted and taught in Tyler, Texas; during World War II was with the Office of Strategic Services of the U. S.; 1945-48, with the Allied Military Government in Europe; from 1948, teaching and conducting (Dept. of Agriculture Symph. Orch.) in Washington, D. C. He changed his first name from Fritz to Frederick after becoming an American citizen.

Fall, Leo, Austrian composer of light opera; b. Olmütz, Feb. 2, 1873; d. Vienna, Sept. 15, 1925. His father was a military bandmaster, and it was from him that Leo Fall received his training in practical music making; then he took up academic courses at the Vienna Cons., with Johann Fuchs and others. For some years he was theater conductor in Berlin, Hamburg, and Cologne, but lived for most of his life in Vienna. His operettas are typical Viennese products, light-hearted, romantic, and melodious. Although they never reached the height of international success obtained by such masters of the genre as Lehár, at least one of them, Die Dollarprinzessin (Vienna, Nov. 2, 1907), was famous for many years. The list of his operettas includes also Der fidele Bauer (Mannheim, July 27, 1907), Eternal Waltz (London, Dec. 22, 1911), Die Rose von Stambul (Vienna, Dec. 2, 1916), and Mme Pompadour (Vienna, March 2, 1923). His operetta Der Rebell, a failure at its first production (Vienna, Nov. 29, 1905), was revised and staged under the new title Der liebe Augustin (Berlin, Feb. 3, 1912), scoring excellent success.

23, 1876; d. Alta Gracia, in the province of Córdoba, Argentina, Nov. 14, 1946. He studied with J. Tragó (piano) and F. Pedrell (composition) in Madrid; composed some zarzuelas, which he later discarded. His opera, La Vida breve, won the prize awarded by the Academia de Bellas Artes, Madrid, in 1905; in that year he also won the Ortiz y Cussó Prize for pianists. In 1907 he went to Paris, where he became friendly with Debussy, Dukas, and Ravel, who aided and encouraged him. Under their influence he adopted the principles of impressionism without, however, giving up his personal and national style; in 1914, returned to Spain and in 1921 made his home in Granada, frequently touring Europe as conductor of his own works. In May, 1938, he was made President of the Instituto de España. In 1939, at the end of the Spanish Civil War, he went to Argentina; after conducting a few concerts of his music in Buenos Aires, he withdrew to the small locality of Alta Gracia, where he lived the last years of his life in seclusion. His art is rooted both in the folksongs of Spain and in the purest historical traditions of Spanish music. Up to 1919 his works were cast chiefly in the Andalusian idiom, and his instrumental technique was often conditioned by effects peculiar to Spain's national instrument, the guitar. In El Retablo de Maese Pedro he turns to the classical tradition of Spanish (especially Castilian) music; the keyboard style of his harpsichord concerto shows, in the classical lucidity of its writing, a certain kinship with Domenico Scarlatti (who lived in Spain for many years). Falla taught composition privately, his most gifted pupils being Ernesto Halffter and Joaquín Nin-Culmell.—Works: The opera La Vida breve (Nice, April 1, 1913; Metropolitan Opera, N. Y., March 7, 1926); El Retablo de Maese Pedro, for marionettes and singers (performed in Seville, in concert form, 1919; Paris, privately, at home of Princesse de Polignac, 1923; first complete public performance, Madrid, March 23, 1923); the ballets El Amor brujo (Madrid, April 15, 1915; a tremendously effective work; numerous performances as an orchestral suite) and El Sombrero de tres picos (London, July 22, 1919; very successful); Noches en los jardines de España for piano and orch. (1909-15; Madrid, April 9, 1916); Concerto for harpsichord (or piano), flute, oboe, clarinet, violin, and cello, written at the suggestion of Wanda Landowska (Barcelona, Nov. 5, 1926; composer conducting; Wanda Landowska soloist); Homenajes, in 4 parts: 1. Pour le Tombeau de Debussy (originally for guitar, 1920); 2. Fanfare pour Arbós (1933); 3.

Pour le Tombeau de Paul Dukas (originally for piano, 1935); 4. Pedrelliana (1938; first performance of the entire suite, Buenos Aires, Nov. 18, 1939, composer conducting); for piano: 4 Pièces espagnoles: Aragonesa, Cubana, Montañesa, Andaluza; Fantasia Bética; songs: Trois mélodies (1909); Siete canciones populares españolas (1914); very popular); Psyché, for voice, flute, harp, violin, viola, and cello (1924); Soneto a Córdoba, for voice and harp (1927). A large work for soli, chorus, and orch., based on M. J. Verdager's Catalan poem La Atlántida, begun in 1928, was never completed. — Cf. G. Jean-Aubry, Manuel de Falla in the 'Mus. Times' (April, 1917); M. Castelnovo-Tedesco, in 'Il pianoforte' (Jan., 1923); E. Istel, Manuel de Falla, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1926); Roland-Manuel, Manuel de Falla (Paris, 1930); J. B. Trend, Manuel de Falla and Spanish Music (N. Y., 1929; new ed., 1934); G. Chase, Falla's Music for Piano Solo, in the 'Chesterian' (1940); Jaime Pahissa, Vida y obra de Manuel de Falla (Buenos Aires, 1947; also publ. in English, London, 1954); J. M. Thomas, Manuel de Falla en la Isla (Palma, 1947); J. Jaenisch, Manuel de Falla und die Spanische Musik (Freiburg, 1952); Kurt Pahlen, Manuel de Falla und die Musik in Spanien (Olten, 1953). Falla's writings on music were collected and edited by F. Sopena and publ. as Escritos sobre música y músicos (Buenos Aires, 1950).

Faller, Nikola, Croatian conductor and composer; b. Varaždin, April 22, 1862; d. Zagreb, Feb. 28, 1938. He studied with Bruckner in Vienna and with Massenet in Paris. He was active as opera conductor in Split and Zagreb; composed choral works and dances.

Famintsyn (fah-min-tsŷn), Alexander Sergeyevitch, Russian critic and composer; b. Kaluga, Nov. 5, 1841; d. Ligovo, near St. Petersburg, July 6, 1896; studied with Jean Vogt in St. Petersburg, and then with Hauptmann and Richter in Leipzig. He taught music history at the St. Petersburg Cons. (1865-72); translated into Russian the textbooks Allgemeine Musiklehre by Marx and Harmonielehre by Richter. However, he soon abandoned his teaching activities and devoted himself chiefly to music criticism, taking a very conservative attitude; he indulged in frequent polemics against the Russian composers of the National School; Musorgsky caricatured Famintsyn in his satirical song The Classicist and in a section of his burlesque Rayok. Famintsyn's publications on Russian instruments are valuable; he publ. essays on the gusli (1890) and the domra (1891). He was also a composer; his opera Sardanapal was produced in St. Petersburg on Dec. 5, 1875, but without any success; his other opera, Uriel Acosta (1883), was not performed. He further wrote a piano quintet, a string quartet, and some songs.

Fanciulli (fan-chöö'-lè), Francesco, Italian conductor and composer; b. Porto San Stefano, July 17, 1850; d. New York, July 17, 1915. He studied in Florence; after some years as opera conductor in Italy, he came to America (1876) and earned his living as organist and theatrical conductor; in 1893 he succeeded Sousa as conductor of the Marine Band in Washington; was then bandmaster of the 71st Regiment, N. Y. (1898-1904); after that conducted his own band. He wrote an opera Priscilla, which was produced in Norfolk, Va. (Nov. 1, 1901); also two comic operas.

Fanelli, Ernest, French composer, b. Paris, June 29, 1860; d. there, Nov. 24, 1917. He played drums in orchestras as a small boy; entered the Paris Cons. in 1876, in the class of Delibes. He worked as a copyist and music engraver for many years; in 1912 he applied to Gabriel Pierné for work, submitting the score of his own symph. poem Thèbes as a specimen of his handwriting. This score, composed by Fanelli as early as 1883, seemed to anticipate the instrumental and harmonic usages of Debussy and other composers of impressionist music, and Pierné decided to perform it as a curiosity; he conducted it at the Colonne concert in Paris (March 17, 1912), and the novelty created a mild sensation in French musical circles; other works by Fanelli (Impressions pastorales; L'Effroi du Soleil; Suite rabelaisienne, etc.), all written before 1893, were also found interesting. However, the sensation proved of brief duration, and the extravagant claims for Fanelli's talent collapsed.—Cf. M.-D. Calvocoressi, An Unknown Composer of Today, in the 'Mus. Times' (April, 1912).

Faning, Eaton, English conductor and composer; b. Helston, Cornwall, May 20, 1850; d. Brighton, Oct. 28, 1927. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music, London, with Sterndale Bennett and Arthur Sullivan, winning the Mendelssohn Scholarship (1873) and the Lucas medal (1876); received Mus. Bac., Cambridge (1894) and Mus. Doc. (1899). From 1878 he taught piano at the Royal Academy of Music; in 1885 became music director at Harrow School (until 1901); thereafter occupied various educational posts, and was a member of examination boards. He wrote a symphony, some chamber music, and several operettas. An account of his career is found in the 'Mus. Times' of Aug., 1901.

Fano, Guido Alberto, Italian composer and writer on music; b. Padua, May 18, 1875. He studied with Pollini in Padua and Martucci in Bologna; at the same time he took courses in law; became Dr. juris of Bologna Univ. in 1898. In 1900 he was appointed teacher of piano at the Liceo Musicale in Bologna; was director of the Cons. of Parma (1905-11); then taught piano at Naples (1912-17), Palermo (1917-21), and Milan (1921-38). He wrote an opera Inturna; a symph. poem La Tentazione di Gesù; also publ. several books: Pensieri sulla musica (Bologna, 1903); Nella vita del ritmo (Naples, 1916); Lo studio del pianoforte (3 vols.; Milan, 1923-34).

Fara, Giulio, Italian writer on music and composer; b. Cagliari, Sardinia, Dec. 3, 1880; d. Pesaro, Oct. 9, 1949. He studied singing and composition; became instructor in public schools of Sardinia; collected Sardinian folk songs, and used some of them in his own compositions, notably in the opera Elia. He publ. a biography of Rossini (1915) and a collection of essays L'anima musicale d'Italia (1921); contributed to the 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' and other Italian publications. His collection of Sardinian songs was publ. by Ricordi (1924).

Farabi. See Alfarabi.

Farinelli (real name Carlo Broschi), celebrated Italian artificial soprano; b. Andria, Jan. 24, 1705; d. Bologna, July 15, 1782. He adopted the name Farinelli to honor his benefactor Farina. He was a student of Porpora; sang in Naples with great success, achieving fame as 'il ragazzo' (the boy). At the age of 16 he sang in Rome in Porpora's opera Eomene; his fame spread in Italy and abroad. In 1727 he met the famous castrato singer Bernacchi in Bologna; in a singing contest with him, Farinelli acknowledged defeat, and persuaded Bernacchi to give him lessons to achieve virtuosity in coloratura. He visited Vienna in 1724, 1728, and 1731. In 1734 he was sent by Porpora to London to join the Italian opera there. He made his London debut on Oct. 27, 1734, in Artaserse by Hasse, appearing with Senesino and Cuzzoni; he remained in London for two years, amassing a fortune; he then went to Paris, and in 1737 to Madrid, where he attained unparalleled success as court singer to King Philip V; his duty was to sing several arias every night to cure the king's melancholy. His influence on the ailing monarch, and on the Queen, was such that he was able to command considerable funds to engage famous performers at the Madrid court. When his voice began to fail, he undertook to serve as impresario, decorator, and stage director. He continued to enjoy the court's favor under Philip's successor, Ferdinand VI, but at the accession to the Spanish throne of Carlos III in 1759, Farinelli was dismissed. He went back to Italy in possession of great wealth; he assembled his family in a palatial villa which he built near Bologna, and spent his last 20 years of life in contentment.—Bibl.: G. Sacchi, Vita del Cavaliere Don Carlo Broschi, detto Farinelli (Venice, 1784); J. Desastre, G. Broschi (Zürich, 1903); G. Monaldi, Cantanti eivirati celebri (Rome, 1919); F. Farinelli, Giuseppe, prolific Italian composer; b. Este, May 7, 1769; d. Trieste, Dec. 12, 1836. In 1785 he entered the Cons. della Pietà dei Turchini at Naples, his teachers being Barbiello, Fago, Sala, and Tritto; his first opera, Il Dottorato di Pulcinella, produced in 1792, was followed by 50 or 60 others, not original, but in very happy imitation of Cimarosa's style and chiefly comic. From 1810-17 he lived at Turin; then went to Venice, and finally (1819) settled in Trieste as maestro and organist at the Cathedral of San Giusto. He also wrote several oratorios, cantatas, 5 masses, 2 Te Deums, and other church music.

Farjeon, Harry, English composer; b. Hohokus, N. J. (of English parents), May 6, 1878; d. London, Dec. 29, 1948. He was a son of the English novelist B. L. Farjeon, and grandson of the famous actor Joseph Jefferson. He was educated in England, taking music lessons with Landon Ronald and John Storer; then studied composition with Corder at the Royal Academy of Music; won the Lucas Medal and other prizes. In 1903 he became an instructor there.—Works: the opera Floretta (1899) and 2 operettas, The Registry Office (1900) and A Gentleman of the Road (1902), all performed in London; piano concerto (1903); Hans Andersen Suite for small orch. (London, 1905); 2 song cycles, Vagrant Songs and The Lute of Jade. The score of a symph. poem Summer Vision (regarded by the composer as his best work) was sent to Germany shortly before World War I and was lost.

Farkas (fahr'-kash), Edmund, Hungarian composer; b. Puszta-Monostor, 1851; d. Klausenburg, Sept. 1, 1912. He studied engineering at the Univ. of Budapest; then took courses at the Budapest Academy of Music with Erkel, Volkmann, and others. Upon graduation he was appointed director at the Klausenburg Cons. There he organized an orchestra, established a musical journal, and promoted national Hungarian music.—Works: the operas (first performed in Budapest) Bayadere (Aug. 23, 1876), Valentin Balassa (Jan. 16, 1896), The Inquest (Oct. 5, 1900), and The World of Kurucz (Oct. 26, 1906); several symph. poems in a romantic vein (Dusk, Storm, etc.); church music; 5 string quartets; several piano pieces in the Hungarian style; publ. (in Hungarian) several papers on school music.

Farkas (fahr'-kash), Ferenc, Hungarian composer; b. Nagykanizsa, Dec. 15, 1905. He began to study piano as a child; then took courses with Leo Weiner and Albert Siklos at the Academy of Music in Budapest. He then conducted theater orchestras in Hungary; a state scholarship enabled him to go to Rome, where he studied with Respighi. Returning to Hungary, he was music teacher in the municipal school in Budapest (1935-41); in 1941 was appointed prof. at the Cons. in Kolozsvár (Cluj); in 1948 became prof. at the Academy of Drama in Budapest. At the same time he was active as composer.—Works: incidental music to plays by Shakespeare; film music; The Magic Cupboard, comic opera (Budapest, April 22, 1942); Musica dodecatonica for orch. (1947); a concertino for harp (1937); 2 violin sonatas; viola sonata; many piano pieces; songs.

Farmer, Henry George, eminent musicologist; authority on Oriental music; b. Birr, Ireland, Jan. 17, 1882. He studied piano and violin, and as a boy joined the Royal Artillery Orch. in London, playing the French horn at its concerts. He then studied philosophy and languages at Glasgow Univ.; conducted theater concerts; edited the 'Musician's Journal.' An extremely prolific writer, he publ. a number of original works, dealing with such varied subjects as military music and Arabic musical theories; has contributed to Grove's Dictionary and 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.' He was the founder and conductor of the Glasgow Sym. Orch. (1919-43); has written several overtures and some chamber music.—Publications: Memoirs of the Royal Artillery Band (1904); The Rise and Development of Military Music (1912); The Arabian Influence on Musical Theory (1925); Byzantine Musical Instruments in the 9th Century (1925); The Arabic Musical MSS. in the Bodleian Library (1926); A History of Arabian Music to the 13th Century (1929); Music in Medieval Scotland (1930); Historical Facts for the Arabian Musical Influence (1930); The Organ of the Ancients (1931); Studies in Oriental Musical Instruments (1931); An Old Moorish Lute Tutor (1931); Al-Farabi's Arabic-Latin Writings (Glasgow, 1934); Turkish Instruments of Music in the 17th Century (1937); New Mozartiana (1938); Sa'adyah Gaon on the Influence of Music (1943); A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947); Music Making in the Olden Days (1950); Military Music (1950); Oriental Studies, Mainly Musical (London, 1953); The History of the Royal Artillery Band (1954); other studies and articles.

Farmer, John, Elizabethan madrigal composer, active from 1591 to 1601. In 1595 he was organist at Christ Church Cathedral in Dublin; in 1599 he left Dublin and went to London. Among his madrigals the best known are Fair Phyllis I saw sitting all alone, You pretty flowers, and A little pretty bonny lass, included in his First Set of English Madrigals to Four Voices (London, 1599; reprinted in vol. 8 of E. H. Fellowes' English Madrigal School). He contributed a 6-part madrigal Fair Nymphs, I heard one telling to The Triumphes of Oriana, and several canticles and hymns to Thomas East's Whole Booke of Psalmes (1592). Extant MSS are in the Christ Church Library and Music School at Oxford, and in the British Museum. Farmer was also the author of Divers and sundry waies of two parts in one (London, 1591).—Cf. E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (1921; 2nd ed., 1948).

Farmer, John, English composer; b. Nottingham, Aug. 16, 1836; d. Oxford, July 17, 1901. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. and later at Coburg; then lived in Switzerland, returning to England in 1862; taught at Harrow School (1862-85); became organist at Balliol College, Oxford; was active in educational work. He composed an oratorio Christ and His Soldiers (1878); a fairy opera Cinderella (1882); comic cantata Froggy Would A-wooing Go (1887); settings of nursery rhymes for chorus and orch.; church music; chamber music (2 septets; a piano quintet, etc.).

Farnaby, Giles, English composer; b. Truro, Cornwall, c. 1560; d. London, Nov.

(buried Nov. 25), 1640. He graduated from Oxford in 1592, receiving the degree of B. Mus.; later moved to London, where he remained until his death.—Works: Canzonets to Foure Voyces (1598; includes an added madrigal for 8 voices, one of the few such works in the English school; reprint by E. H. Fellowes, in vol. 20 of the English Madrigal School); vocal religious works in various collections, and motets, psalms, etc., in MS; more than 50 virginal pieces in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (ed. by J. A. Fuller Maitland and W. Barclay Squire, London, 1899); a madrigal, Come, Charon, is in MS at the Royal College of Music; part of another is in the British Museum. Farnaby's son, Richard Farnaby, was also a gifted composer.—Cf. E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (1921; 2nd ed., 1948).

Farnam, W. Lynnwood, Canadian-American organist; b. Sutton, Quebec, Jan. 13, 1885; d. New York, Nov. 23, 1930. He studied with his mother and local teachers; in 1900 won the Montreal Scholarship to the Royal College of Music, London, where he studied organ with James Higgs. He came to America in 1904; was organist at several churches in N. Y. and Boston.

Farnon, Robert, Canadian composer; b. Toronto, July 24, 1917. He studied piano, violin, and trumpet; in 1944 moved to London. He has written an Ottawa Symphony (1941); a set of 4 Fairy-Tale Symphonettes (1943); many pieces for orch. in the popular vein; also music for films.

Farnsworth, Charles Hubert, music educator; b. Cesarea, Turkey, Nov. 29, 1859; d. Thetford, Vt., May 22, 1947. He studied organ in Worcester, Mass.; held various positions as organist; was head of the music dept. at Colorado Univ. (1888-1900); then was on the faculty at Teachers College, Columbia Univ. (1900-25); retired and lived in Vermont. He publ. several pamphlets on music education; among them, The Why and How of Music Study (1927); Short Studies in Musical Psychology (N. Y., 1930). An appreciation of his work was publ. in 'The Musician' (1933).

Farrant, John, English organist and composer, active in the 16th century; he served as organist at the Ely Cathedral (1567-72); then was lay clerk at Salisbury, and subsequently organist at the Salisbury Cathedral (1587-92); he was briefly organist at Hereford (1593). Contemporary records testify to his intractable temper, which resulted in physical clashes with the dean of the Salisbury Cathedral, and led to his expulsion there. As a composer Farrant is chiefly distinguished for his Service in D minor (mis-attributed in a 19th-century ed. to Richard Farrant). His son, also named John Farrant (baptized Salisbury, Sept. 28, 1575; d. there, 1618), was a chorister at the Salisbury Cathedral in 1585, and organist there from 1598 till 1616. Another John Farrant, possibly related to the preceding, was organist at Christ Church, Newgate, London; he was the author of a Magnificat; this work, sometimes referred to as 'Farrant in G minor' is often confused with Richard Farrant's Service in A minor.

Farrant, Richard, English composer; b. c. 1530; d. Windsor, 1581. He was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal during the reign of Edward VI; then became master of the choristers (1564) at St. George's Chapel, Windsor; also served as a lay clerk and organist there. Beginning with 1567 Farrant presented a play annually before the Queen. In 1569 he returned to the Chapel Royal. His will is dated November 30, 1580; this date was formerly erroneously given for his death. Farrant wrote mainly church music; his Cathedral Service in A minor and 2 anthems, Hide not Thou Thy Face and Call to Remembrance, are regarded as the most beautiful examples of English sacred music of the 16th century. A Service in D minor was published as that by Richard Farrant, but this was a misattribution, the real author being John Farrant of Salisbury. Several of Richard Farrant's works are in the British Museum and at Durham Cathedral.

Farrar, Ernest Bristow, English organist and composer; b. London, July 7, 1885; d. in the battle of the Somme, France, Sept. 18, 1918. He studied at the Royal College of Music with Stanford and Parratt; served as organist of the English Church in Dresden (1909); then at various churches in England (1910-14). His orch. suite English Pastoral Impression won the Carnegie Award; he further wrote the orch. pieces The Open Road, Lavengro, The Forsaken Merman, and Heroic Elegy; also 3 Spiritual Studies for strings; variations on an old English sea song, for piano and orch.; the cantatas The Blessed Damozel and Out of Doors; chamber music (Celtic Suite for violin and piano, etc.); songs; preludes for organ, etc.

Farrar (far-rah'), Geraldine, celebrated American soprano; b. Melrose, Mass., Feb.

28, 1882. She studied music with Mrs. J. H. Long of Boston; at 17, she went to Europe; took lessons with Emma Thursby in N. Y., with Trabadello in Paris and Graziani in Berlin; made a successful début at the Berlin Opera on Oct. 15, 1901, as Marguerite, under the direction of Karl Muck; then studied with Lilli Lehmann. She sang at the Monte Carlo Opera for three seasons (1903-6). Her career in Europe was well established before her American début as Juliette at the Metropolitan Opera (Nov. 26, 1906); she remained on the staff for 16 years; made her farewell appearance in Zaza on April 22, 1922, but continued to sing in concert; gave her last public performance at Carnegie Hall in 1931; then retired to Ridgefield, Conn. Her greatest success was Madama Butterfly, which she sang with Caruso on its American première at the Metropolitan on Feb. 11, 1907; subsequently sang this part in America more than 100 times. Her interpretation of Carmen was no less remarkable. She also appeared in silent motion pictures between 1915 and 1919; her film version of Carmen aroused considerable interest. On Feb. 8, 1916, she married the actor Lou Tellegen, from whom she was subsequently divorced. She made adaptations of pieces by Kreisler, Rachmaninoff, and others, for which she published the lyrics. She wrote an autobiography, Such Sweet Compulsion (N.Y., 1938). — Cf. H. T. Finck, Success in Music (N. Y., 1909); Ed. Wagenknecht, Geraldine Farrar: An Authorized Record of her Career (Seattle, 1929); Oscar Thompson, The American Singer (N. Y., 1937).

Farrenc (fah-rahnk'), Jacques-Hippolyte-Aristide, French flutist and music editor; b. Marseilles, April 9, 1794; d. Paris, Jan. 31, 1865. He studied flute; went to Paris in 1815, and studied at the Cons.; at the same time was engaged as second flutist at the Théâtre Italien. In 1821 he established a music shop and printing press; publ. French editions of Beethoven; also composed music for the flute. He married Louise Dumont, a talented musician in her own right. He diligently collected material for the rectification of existing biographies, but generously turned it over to Fétis for use in the 2nd edition of his great work, of which Farrenc also read proofs. Jointly with Fétis' son, Edouard, he began the publication of Trésor des pianistes (20 vols., 1861-72), a collection of piano music from the 16th century to Mendelssohn, with historical notes; it was continued after his death by his wife. From 1854 he contributed papers to 'La France musicale' and other journals.

Farwell, Arthur, American composer and music educator; b. St. Paul, Minn., April 23, 1872; d. New York, Jan. 20, 1952. He studied at the Mass. Inst. of Technology, graduating in 1893; then studied music with Homer Norris in Boston, Humperdinck in Berlin, and Guilmant in Paris. He was lecturer on music at Cornell Univ. (1899-1901); in 1909 was on the editorial staff of 'Musical America'; then directed municipal concerts in N. Y. City (1910-13); was director of the Music School Settlement in N. Y. (1915-18); in 1918 he went to California; lectured on music there; was acting head of music dept. at the Univ. of Calif., Berkeley (1918-19); in 1919 he founded the Santa Barbara Community Chorus, which he conducted until 1921; was first holder of composers' fellowship of the Music and Art Association of Pasadena (1921-25); taught music theory at Michigan State College in East Lansing (1927-39); eventually settled in New York. Farwell was a pioneer in new American music, and tirelessly promoted national ideas in art. He contributed to various ethnological publications. In 1901 he established the Wa-Wan Press at Newton, Mass. Disillusioned about commercial opportunities for American music, including his own, he established at East Lansing, Mich., in April 1936, his own lithographic hand-press, with which he printed his music, handling the entire process of reproduction, including the cover designs, by himself. His works are mostly based on American subjects. He wrote for orch. the following: Symbolistic Study No. 3, after Walt Whitman (1905; revised, 1922; Philadelphia Orch., March 30, 1928); Pageant Scene (1913); The Gods of the Mountain (Minneapolis Symph. Orch., Dec. 13, 1929); music for pageants, including Percy MacKaye's Caliban by the Yellow Sands (N. Y., May, 1916; written for the Shakespeare tercentenary); Pilgrimage Play (Hollywood, 1921); Symph. Song on 'Old Black Joe' (Hollywood, 1923); Symph. Hymn on 'March! March!'; also The Hako for string quartet (1922); violin sonata (1928); concerto for 2 pianos and string orch., a version of Symbolistic Study No. 6 (1931; won first prize of the National Federation of Music Clubs Competition; broadcast by CBS, May 28, 1939); numerous school choruses, and vocal compositions; piano pieces (many of them arranged for various instrumental ensembles); several collections of American Indian melodies and folksongs of the South and West; arrangements of Indian melodies (Dawn, a fantasy on Indian themes, in various versions, dated between 1901 and 1926, is characteristic of these works).

Fasch, Johann Friedrich, German composer; b. Butteltstadt, near Weimar, April 15, 1688; d. Zerbst, Dec. 5, 1758. He studied with Kuhnau at Leipzig, and later (1713) with Graupner and Grunewald at Darmstadt; in 1721 he went to Lukaveč, Bohemia, as Kapellmeister to Count Morzin; after 1722, Kapellmeister at Zerbst. A catalogue of his works, compiled in 1743, enumerates 7 complete series of church cantatas, 12 masses, 69 overtures, 21 concertos (for violin, flute, oboe, etc.), some of which have been printed in modern editions. Many scores are preserved in MS in the libraries of Darmstadt, Dresden, Leipzig, and Brussels; in the archives of the Thomasschule at Leipzig are the parts of five orchestral suites of Fasch in the handwriting of J. S. Bach, who entertained a very high opinion of the works of his contemporary. Hugo Riemann published 5 trio-sonatas and a quartet in 'Collegium Musicum' and 2 orchestral suites in Breitkopf & Härtel's 'Orchesterbibliothek.' Fasch's autobiography appeared in vol. III of F. W. Marburg's Historisch-kritische Beiträge zur Aufnahme der Musik (Berlin, 1754-78). Cf. also J. A. Hiller, Lebensbeschreibungen berühmter Musikgelehrten und Tonkünstler neuerer Zeit (Leipzig, 1784); B. Engelke, Johann Friedrich Fasch, sein Leben und seine Tätigkeit als Vokalkomponist (Leipzig, 1908); B. Fasch, Karl Friedrich Christian, German composer, son of Johann Friedrich Fasch; b. Zerbst, Nov. 18, 1736; d. Berlin, Aug. 3, 1800. He learned to play the violin and harpsichord as a child; studied all musical subjects with Hertel at Strelitz. At the age of 15, he joined the violinist Franz Benda as his accompanist and at the age of 20 he was recommended by Benda as harpsichordist to Frederick the Great, jointly with K. P. E. Bach. He also taught music and composed contrapuntal pieces of considerable ingenuity and complexity. He was conductor at the Berlin Opera (1774-76). In 1790 he organized a choral society, which led to the foundation of the famous Singakademie. Fasch was greatly admired by musicians for his contrapuntal skill; the renown of his name was still strong in the first part of the 19th century; in 1839, 6 vols. of his sacred works were publ. by the Singakademie.—Cf. C. F. Zelter, Biographie von Karl Friedrich Christian Fasch (Berlin, 1801); M. Blummer, Geschichte der Berliner Singakademie (Berlin, 1891); G. Schünemann, Die Singakademie zu Berlin (Regensburg, 1941).

Fattorini, Gabriele, Italian composer; b. Faenza in the latter part of the 16th century; date of death unknown. He was maestro di cappella at Faenza, and possibly in Venice. His compositions include Sacri Concerti a due voci (Venice, 1600; further editions, 1602, 1608); Completorium Romanum (Venice, 1602); motets, madrigals, etc. Several of his works appeared in contemporaneous collections between 1605 and 1622 (Bodenschatz, Donfried, Diruta, etc.). Two of his Ricercare for organ are in vol. III of Torchi's L'Arte Musicale in Italia. Banchieri mentions Fattorini in his Conclusioni del suono dell'Organo (Lucca, 1591; Bologna, 1609). For bibliographical details, see F. Ghisi's article on Fattorini in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Fauchey, Paul, French composer; b. Paris, March 18, 1858; d. there, Nov. 15, 1936. He was active in the theater as chorus master and then began to compose light operas, of which La Carmagnole (Paris, 1897) was quite popular for a time.

Faulkes, William, English organist and composer; b. Liverpool, Nov. 4, 1863; d. there, Jan. 25, 1933. He studied with W. Dawson and H. Dillon-Newman; from 1886 he was active in Liverpool as organist and teacher; composed mostly for organ; publ. several albums of organ pieces.

Fauré (föh-räh'), Gabriel-Urbain, outstanding French composer; b. Pamiers (Ariège), May 12, 1845; d. Paris, Nov. 4, 1924. His father was a provincial inspector of primary schools; noticing the musical instinct of his son, he took him to Paris to study with Louis Niedermeyer; after Niedermeyer's death in 1861, Fauré studied with Saint-Saëns, from whom he received a thorough training in composition. In 1866 he went to Rennes as organist at the church of Saint-Sauveur; returned to Paris on the eve of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870, and volunteered in the light infantry. He was organist at Notre-Dame de Clignancourt, Saint-Honoré d'Eylau, and Saint-Sulpice; in 1877 became second organist at the Madeleine; in 1896 he was appointed chief organist there, and prof. of composition at the Paris Cons. He was an illustrious teacher; among his students were Ravel, Enesco, Koechlin, Roger-Ducasse, Laparra, Florent Schmitt, Louis Aubert, and Nadia Boulanger. In 1905 he succeeded Théodore Dubois as director; resigned in 1920, when growing deafness and ill health made it impossible for him to continue to direct the Conservatory. From 1903 till 1921 Fauré wrote occasional music reviews in 'Le Figaro' (publ. as Opinions Musicales; posthumous, Paris, 1930); he was elected member of the Académie des Beaux Arts in 1909; Commander of the Légion d'honneur in 1910. Fauré's stature as composer is undiminished by the passage of time. He developed a musical idiom all his own; by subtle application of old modes he evoked the aura of eternally fresh art; by using unresolved mild discords and special coloristic effects in his instrumental music he anticipated the procedures of impressionism; in his piano works he shunned virtuosity in favor of the classical lucidity of the French masters of the clavecin; the precisely articulated melodic line of his songs is in the finest tradition of French vocal music. Several of his works (significantly, those of his early period) have entered the general repertory: the great Requiem, first violin sonata, Élégie for cello and piano; songs (Ici-bas, Les roses d'Ispahan, Clair de lune, Au cimetière, etc.).— Works: For the stage: Caligula, incidental music to a play by A. Dumas, Jr. (Paris, Nov. 8, 1888); Shylock, after Shakespeare (Paris, Dec. 17, 1889); Pelléas et Mélisande, after Maeterlinck (London, June 21, 1898; often performed as an orchestral suite); Prométhée, lyric tragedy (Béziers, Aug. 1, 1900); Le Voile du bonheur, incidental music for Clemenceau's play (Paris, Nov. 4, 1901); Pénélope (Monte Carlo, March 4, 1913); Masques et bergamasques, stage music (Monte Carlo, April 10, 1919). For orch.: Symphony in D minor (Paris, March 15, 1885); a suite (1875; only one movement, Allegro symphonique, was publ.); Pavane (1887); Ballade for piano and orch. (1881); Romance for violin and orch. (1882); Fantaisie for piano and orch. (1919). Choral works: Cantique de Jean Racine for mixed chorus, harmonium, and string quartet (1873); Les Djinnis for chorus and orch. (1875); La Naissance de Vénus for soli, chorus, and orch. (1882); Messe de Requiem for soli, chorus, organ, and orch. (1887); Tantum ergo for solo voice and chorus (1890); offertories and other church music. Chamber music: 2 violin sonatas (1879; 1886); 2 piano quartets (1879; 1886); 2 piano quintets (1906; 1921); 2 cello sonatas (1918; 1922); piano trio (1923); string quartet (1924); Élégie for cello and piano (1883); Sérénade for cello and piano (1908); also Fantaisie for flute and piano (1898). Piano works: 13 nocturnes, 13 barcarolles, 5 impromptus, 4 waltzes, etc.—96 songs: 4 to words by Victor Hugo; 4 after Théophile Gautier; 3 after Baudelaire; 16 after Paul Verlaine (including the cycle La Bonne Chanson); etc.—Bibl.: O. Séré, Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui. (Paris, 1911); L. Faure (föhr), Jean-Baptiste, famous French baritone; b. Moulins, Allier, Jan. 15, 1830; d. Paris, Nov. 9, 1914. He was a choir-boy at the Madeleine and other Paris churches; entered the Paris Cons. at the age of 21; after a short period of study he made his début at the Opéra-Comique, in Massé's opera Galathée (Oct. 20, 1852), and continued there for eight years; from 1861-76 he was on the staff of the Paris Opéra; his farewell appearance was in Hamlet by Ambroise Thomas (May 13, 1876), the role that he created in 1868. Subsequently he sang in concerts, appearing with enormous success in Vienna and in London. He was particularly impressive in dramatic roles in Meyerbeer's operas and also in Gounod's Faust, as Mephistopheles. He also wrote a number of songs, of which several became fairly successful (Crucifix, Les Rameaux, etc.).— Cf. H. de Curzon, Jean-Baptiste Faure, in the 'Mus. Fernández Arbós. See Arbós, Enrique Fernández.

Fernández Bordas (fär-nahn'-däth bohr-dahs), Antonio, eminent Spanish violinist; b. Orense, Jan. 12, 1870; d. Madrid, Feb. 18, 1950. He studied at the Madrid Cons. with Jesús de Monasterio, and at the age of 11, won first prize for violin students; gave concerts in England, France, and other European countries; returning to Spain he became prof. of violin at the Madrid Cons.; in 1921 he was elected director.

Fernández Caballero (fär-nähn'-däth käh-bäh-l'ya'-röh), Manuel, Spanish composer, b. Murcia, March 14, 1835; d. Madrid, Feb. 20, 1906. He was a precocious musician; learned to play violin, piano, and the piccolo as a child, and at the age of 7, played in a school band. He then studied violin with Soriano Fuertes in Murcia; in 1850 he entered the Madrid Cons., where his teachers were Eslava and Pedro Albéniz; in 1856 he received first prize in composition; then conducted various theater orchestras and became interested in theatrical composition. During his career as conductor and composer, he wrote more than 200 zarzuelas, several of which attained great popularity: Los Dineros del Sacristan and Los Africanistas (Barcelona, 1894); El cabo primero (Barcelona, 1895); La Rueda de la Fortuna (Madrid, 1896); Los Estudiantes (Madrid, 1900). He also wrote sacred music.

Fernandez, Oscar Lorenzo, Brazilian composer; b. Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 4, 1897; d. there, Aug. 26, 1948. He studied music at the Instituto Nacional de Musica, and appeared as composer, conductor, and pianist in his own works in Brazil and other Latin American countries. He won several prizes. In 1925 he became prof. at the Instituto Nacional, and organized a choral society there; in 1929 he was (with Villa-Lobos) a Brazilian representative at the International Exposition in Barcelona; in 1935 he became prof. at the Instituto de Arte of the University of Rio de Janeiro district; in 1936 he was elected director of the Brazilian Cons. in Rio de Janeiro; in 1938 he was the Brazilian representative at the Bogotá Festival, where he conducted a concert of Brazilian music; he was a member of numerous musical societies, and active in various educational fields. In his music he adopted a strongly national style, derived from Brazilian folksongs, without, however, actual quotation; his mastery of the technique of composition was indisputable.—Works: Opera, Malazarte (Rio de Janeiro, Sept. 30, 1941, composer conducting); ballet on Inca themes, Amayá (Rio de Janeiro, July 9, 1939); suite for orch. Imbapará (Rio de Janeiro, Sept. 2, 1929); suite for orch. Reisado do pastoreio (Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 22, 1930; the last movement of this suite, Batuque, a Brazilian dance, has become very popular); violin concerto (1942); a symphony (performed posthumously by the Boston Symph. Orch., Eleazar de Carvalho conducting, Feb. 25, 1949); also a number of chamber music compositions: Trio Brasileiro (1924; won the prize of the International Chamber Music competition); suite for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn (Rio de Janeiro, Sept. 20, 1927); several piano works; songs.—Cf. Otto Mayer-Serra, Música y Músicos de Latinoamérica (Mexico City, 1947). He studied violin in Copenhagen and Berlin; later took courses in conducting. He settled in Hålsingborg, where he founded an oratorio society. A very prolific composer, he has written 11 symphonies with programmatic titles, 2 operas, several concertos, and a great deal of chamber music. He published an autobiographical book Confessions (1946).

Ferrabosco, Alfonso, Italian composer; son of Domenico Ferrabosco; b. Bologna, Jan. (baptized Jan. 18), 1543; d. there, Aug. 12, 1588. He went to England as a youth; in 1562 he was in the service of Queen Elizabeth; went back to Italy in 1564; and was again in England from 1564 to 1569. He lived in France for some time, and married a woman from Antwerp; after another sojourn in England (1572-78) he was in Turin in the service of the Duke of Savoy, whom he accompanied to Spain (1585); eventually he returned to Bologna. The historical position of Alfonso Ferrabosco is important for the influence of Italian music that he brought to the court of Queen Elizabeth. Some of his madrigals are found in Young's 'Musica transalpina' (London, 1588, 1597), Morley's 'Madrigals to Five Voyces' (London, 1598), Pevernage's 'Harmonia celesta' (1593) and other collections up to 1664; further compositions appear in collections of P. Phalèse (1583, 1591, 1593), A. Morsolina (1588), G. B. Besardo (1603), etc. MSS are in the Bodleian Library and Music School at Oxford, British Museum, St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and Royal College of Music Library.—Cf. G. E. P. Arkwright, Un compositore italiano alla corte di Elisabetta, Alfonso Ferrabosco di Bologna, in the 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1897); S. Cordero di Pamparato, Musici alla Corte di Carlo Emanuele I di Savoia (Turin, 1930); A. Einstein, The Italian Madrigal (Princeton, 1949); see also J. Kerman, Master Alfonso and the English Madrigal, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1952).

Ferrabosco, Alfonso, composer; natural son of the preceding; b. Greenwich, England, c. 1575; d. there, March (buried March 11), 1628. He was educated in England, and remained there after his father returned to Italy in 1578. He was supported from the funds of the English Court; was one of the King's Musicians for the Viols from about 1602 until his death. During the last year of his life he was made Composer of the King's Music; also Composer of Music in Ordinary to the King. He was highly regarded as composer of the music for masques of Ben Jonson, of whom he was a close friend: The Masque of Blackness (1604-05), The Masque of Hymen (1605-06), The Masque of Beauty (1607-08), The Masque for Lord Haddington's Marriage (1607-08), and The Masque of Queens (1608-09). In 1609 he publ. a vol. of Ayres (dedicated to Prince Henry) and a book of Lessons for 1, 2 and 3 Viols; also contributed 3 compositions to Leighton's Tears or Lamentations (1614). MSS are in libraries of the British Museum, the Music School and Church, Oxford, and the Royal College of Music. His works for viols demonstrate extraordinary ability in contrapuntal writing, while preserving the rhythmic quality of the dance forms (pavans, etc.) and the free ornamental style of the fantasies.—Cf. Ferrabosco, Domenico Maria, Italian composer; b. Bologna, Feb. 14, 1513; d. there, Feb. 1574. He was maestro di cappella at San Petronio in Bologna; in 1546 he was at the Vatican, returning to Bologna in 1548; was again at the Vatican from 1550 until 1555. He is chiefly known as a composer of madrigals; his book of 45 madrigals, Il Primo libro de' Madrigali a 4 voci, was publ. by Gardano in 1542; Gardano also publ. motets (1554) and other madrigals (1557) by Ferrabosco; some madrigals and a 4-voiced canzona, the latter in lute tablature, appeared in 1584 (publ. by Scotto).

Ferrari, Benedetto, Italian opera composer, called 'Della Tiorba' from his proficiency on the theorbo; b. Reggio, 1597; d. Modena, Oct. 22, 1681. He studied music in Rome; in 1637 he proceeded to Venice; there he wrote the libretto of Andromeda (music by Francesco Manelli), which was the first opera that was publicly performed anywhere; it was produced at the Teatro Tron di San Cassiano, early in 1637; he then produced in Venice four operas to his own librettos: Armida (Feb. 1639); Il pastor regio (Jan. 23, 1640); La ninfa avara (1641); Il principe giardiniere (Dec. 30, 1643). In 1645 he went to Modena, where he remained until 1651, at the ducal court; from 1651-53 he was in Vienna; then returned to Modena, where he produced an opera Erosilda (1658); he also wrote two cantatas Premo il giogo delle Alpi and Voglio di vita uscir (reprinted in Riemann's Kantatenfrühling, 1912).

Ferrari, Carlotta, Italian composer of operas; b. Lodi, Jan. 27, 1837; d. Bologna, Nov. 23, 1907. She studied with Strepponi and Mazzucato at the Milan Cons.; then devoted herself to the composition of operas to her own librettos. The following operas were produced: Ego (Milan, 1857), Sofia (Lodi, 1866) and Eleanora d'Armoria (Cagliari, 1871).

Ferrari, Domenico, Italian composer and violinist; b. Piacenza, c. 1725; d. Paris, 1780. He studied with Tartini; traveled as a concert violinist, obtaining great success; in 1753 he joined the orch. of the Duke of Württemberg in Stuttgart; in 1754 he went to Paris, where he became extremely successful; he excelled as a virtuoso; his employment of passages in octaves, and particularly of harmonics, was an innovation at the time. He wrote several sets of violin sonatas and also trio sonatas, which were published.

Ferrari, Gabriella, French pianist and composer; b. Paris, Sept. 14, 1851; d. there, July 4, 1921. She studied at the Milan Cons. and later in Paris, where she had lessons with Gounod; appeared as a child prodigy at the age of twelve, and subsequently wrote a number of effective piano pieces (Rapsodie espagnole, Le Ruisseau, Hirondelle, etc.) and songs (Larmes en Songe, Chant d'Exil, Chant d'Amour, etc.); she also wrote for orch. and finally ventured to compose operas, producing Le dernier amour (Paris, June 11, 1895), Sous le masque (Vichy, 1898), Le Tartare (Paris, 1906), and Le Cobar, which proved to be her most successful opera (Monte Carlo, Feb. 16, 1909; several subsequent revivals).

Ferrari, Giacomo Gotifredo, Italian composer; b. Rovereto, Tyrol (baptized April 2), 1763; d. London, Dec. 1842. He studied piano at Verona with Marcola and theory with Marianus Stecher at the Monastery of Mariaberg, Switzerland. He then went to Naples, where he studied with Latilla. There he met Chevalier Campan, household master for Marie Antoinette; he was then appointed as court musician at the Tuileries. He arrived in Paris in 1787; after the Revolution he went to London, where he settled as a singing teacher. He produced in London the operas I due Svizzeri (May 14, 1799), Il Rinaldo d'Asti (March 16, 1802), L'eroina di Raab (April 8, 1813), and Lo sbaglio fortunato (May 8, 1817); he also wrote two ballets and several instrumental works (4 septets; 2 piano concertos, etc.). He publ. a Concise Treatise on Italian Singing (1818); Studio di musica pratica, teorica (1830), and a book of reminiscences, Aneddoti piacevoli ed interessanti (London, 1830, in Italian; contains some vivid recollections of Haydn and other celebrities; new ed., Palermo, 1920).—Cf. D. G. Fino, Giacomo Gotifredo Ferrari, musicista roveretano (Trent, 1928); G. de Saint-Foix, A Musical Traveler, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1939).

Ferrari, Gustave, Swiss composer, conductor, and lecturer; b. Geneva, Sept. 28, 1872; d. there, July 29, 1948. He studied at the Geneva Cons., and later in Paris. In 1900 he went to London, where he remained for many years. From 1917 till 1925 he conducted operetta in America; then returned to Europe and toured with Yvette Guilbert, as her accompanist in a repertory of French folksongs; later on he gave song recitals himself, singing with his own accompaniment folksongs of France and French Canada; also lectured on the subject, and edited collections of French folk music. As a composer, he wrote mostly incidental music for the stage; composed a cantata for the Rousseau Festival (Geneva, 1912); The Wilderness, a Greek dance ballad (London, 1915); other choral works; a song cycle Le Livre pour toi.

Ferrari-Fontana, Edoardo, operatic tenor; b. Rome, July 8, 1878; d. Toronto, Canada, July 4, 1936. As a young man he was engaged in the Italian consular service in South America, and also studied singing. Returning to Italy in 1906, he made his début in Ganne's light opera Hans il suonatore di flauto (Milan, Dec. 5, 1907); his appearance as Tristan in Turin (Dec. 23, 1909) was so successful that he was engaged to sing in the principal theaters of Italy, and later at the Teatro Colón in Buenos Aires; during the 1913-14 season he was with the Boston Opera Co.; also sang at the Metropolitan Opera House (début Jan. 2, 1913). Apart from Wagnerian roles, he was also successful as Don José in Carmen, and as Canio in Pagliacci. He was married (June 26, 1912) to Margarete Matzenauer. In 1926 he settled in Toronto, where he was active as a singing teacher.

Ferrari-Trecate, Luigi, Italian composer; b. Alexandria, Piedmont, Aug. 25, 1884. He studied with Antonia Cicognani at the Cons. of Pesaro, and also with Mascagni. He was active as organist in various churches; from 1928-31 was prof. of organ at the Liceo Musicale in Bologna; in 1931, appointed director of the Parma Cons. He has written numerous operas and lyric fairytales, among them Ciottolino (a marionette play; Rome, Feb. 8, 1922); Pierozzo (Alexandria, Sept. 15, 1922); Bellinda e il mostro (Milan, 1926); Le astuzie di Bertoldo (Genoa, Jan. 10, 1934); Ghirolino (La Scala, Milan, Feb. 4, 1940); Il re Orso (Milan, 1949); La capanna dello Zio Tom (Uncle Tom's Cabin; Parma, Jan. 17, 1953).

Ferrata, Giuseppe, composer; b. Gradoli, Romagna, Jan. 1, 1865; d. New Orleans, March 28, 1928. At the age of 14 he won a scholarship to study at Santa Cecilia in Rome, where he took courses with Scambati and Terziani, graduating in 1885; then had the good fortune of benefiting from the last lessons that Liszt gave; in 1892 came to the U.S.; taught in Pittsburgh and at Tulane Univ. in New Orleans. He wrote a symphony, a piano concerto, and a string quartet, which obtained a prize of the Pittsburgh Art Society (1908) and was publ.; also publ. are numerous songs, to Italian and English texts (Night and the Curtains Drawn, A Song of Thanksgiving, On Music, Alla musa, etc.); piano pieces (Humoresque, A Wave, An Eagle, Leonard Serpent, Serenade triste); compiled a book of scales and Esthetic Exercises of Technique.

Ferrer, Mateo, Catalan composer; b. Barcelona, Feb. 25, 1788; d. there, Jan. 4, 1864. A highly gifted musician, he was famous for his improvisations on the organ. He was organist at the Barcelona Cathedral for 52 years from 1812 until his death. His Sonata (1814), printed by Joaquín Nin in his collection, 16 Sonates anciennes d'auteurs espagnols (Paris, 1925), shows a certain affinity with early Beethoven.

Ferrer, Rafael, Spanish composer and conductor; b. St.-Celoni, near Barcelona, May 22, 1911. He studied with Luis Millet and Enrique Morera (composition) and Eduardo Toldrá (violin). He played the violin in various orchestras in Spain; then devoted himself mainly to conducting. He specializes in Spanish music, and has revived many little-known works of Granados, Turina, and other Spanish composers; he has also conducted zarzuelas. Ferrer has written a violin concerto, and an orchestral suite on Catalan melodies; has arranged for orch. several piano works by Granados.

Ferrero, Willy, conductor; b. Portland, Maine, May 21, 1906; d. Rome, March 24, 1954. He was taken to Italy in his infancy; as a child of six he conducted a performance at the Teatro Costanzi in Rome; at the age of eight he conducted symphony concerts in European capitals with sensational success, and was the object of extravagant praise as a phenomenal musician. World War I interrupted his career; he continued to conduct operas and concerts in Italy, but failed to fulfill the extraordinary promise of his early youth. He received an excellent academic education; studied at the Vienna Academy (graduated in 1924); composed a symph. poem, Il Mistero dell'aurora, and some chamber music.—Cf. Alberto de Angelis, Willy Ferrero in 'Noi e il Mondo' (Rome, 1919).

Ferretti, Dom Paolo, eminent Italian musicologist, b. Subiaco, Dec. 3, 1866; d. Bologna, May 23, 1938. He studied theology at the Benedictine College of San Anselmo in Rome; then taught in Malta, Genoa, and Parma; was abbot of the Benedictine Monastery of San Giovanni in Parma; in 1922 was appointed by Pope Pius XI director of the Pontifical Institute of Sacred Music. During the summers of 1925, 1927, and 1928 he taught courses in Gregorian chant at the Pius X School of Liturgical Music in New York. The importance of his investigations lies in a scholarly analysis of the rhythmic treatment and especially the forms of Gregorian chant. He publ. Principii teorici e pratici del Canto Gregoriano (Rome, 1905); Il Cursus metrico e il Ritmo delle melodie del Canto Gregoriano (Rome, 1913); Estetica gregoriana (Rome, 1934; French trans., Tournai, 1938); also numerous articles in various Italian and French publications.

Ferri, Baldassare, celebrated artificial soprano; b. Perugia, Dec. 9, 1610; d. there, Sept. 8, 1680. At the age of 11 he was choirboy to Cardinal Crescenzio in Orvieto, in whose service he remained until 1625, when he entered the service of Prince Ladislaus of Poland in Warsaw, remaining with him until 1655, with some interruptions for trips to Italy. From 1655 he was in Vienna at the court of Ferdinand III; appeared briefly in London (1671); then returned to Italy. His success at the various courts, and with the public in several countries, must have been great, for he accumulated a fortune. According to contemporary accounts (e. g., A. Bontempi, Historia Musica, 1695), he possessed a phenomenal voice.—Cf. G. Conestabile, Notizie biografiche di Baldassare Ferri (Perugia, 1846).

Ferrier, Kathleen, English contralto; b. Higher Walton, Lancashire, April 22, 1912; d. London, Oct. 8, 1953. She studied piano; for a time made her living as a telephone operator; began studying voice at the age of 25. Having appeared as a soloist in Messiah at Westminster Abbey in 1943, she rapidly advanced to the first rank among English singers. She sang the title role in the première of Britten's Rape of Lucretia (Glyndebourne, 1946); made two highly successful tours in the U. S. in 1947-48 and in 1950-51. Towards the end of her brief career she acquired in England an almost legendary reputation for vocal excellence and impeccable musical taste, so that her death (of cancer) was mourned by musicians as a national calamity. Numerous articles and monographs were publ. on her life and her art, among them a symposium edited by N. Cardus, Kathleen Ferrier, a Memoir (London, 1954), and an extensive biography by Charles Rigby, Kathleen Ferrier (London, 1955). Her sister, Winifred Ferrier, publ. a volume of personal reminiscences, Kathleen Ferrier (London, 1955).

Ferroni, Vincenzo Emidio Carmine, Italian composer and educator; b. Tramutola, Feb. 17, 1858; d. Milan, Jan. 10, 1934. He studied at the Paris Cons. (1876-83) with Savard and Massenet; in 1888 returned to Italy, where he became prof. of composition at the Milan Cons., succeeding Ponchielli; resigned in 1929. He wrote 3 operas: Rudello (Milan, 1892), Ettore Fieramosca (Como, 1896), and Il Carbonaro (Milan, 1900); 2 symphonies, a symph. poem, Risorgimento, and many works in smaller forms. He also publ. Della forma musicale classica.

Ferroud (fehr-rö'), Pierre-Octave, French composer; b. Chasselay, near Lyons, Jan. 6, 1900; d. near Debrecen, Hungary (killed in an automobile accident), Aug. 17, 1936. He attended the Univ. of Lyons, and studied there and in Strasbourg with Erb, Ropartz, Witkowski, and Florent Schmitt; in 1923 settled in Paris, where he developed varied activities as composer, music critic, and adviser for radio broadcasting; was also active in organizing concerts of modern music. He first attracted attention with the performance of a ballet Le Porcher (Ballets suédois, Paris, Nov. 15, 1924); there followed the symph. poem Foules (Paris, March 21, 1926); an operatic sketch, Chirurgie, after Chekhov (Monte Carlo, March 20, 1928); and a symphony in A major (Paris, March 8, 1931, Monteux conducting; also at the Prague Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, Sept. 6, 1935); other works are the ballets, Jeunesse (Paris, April 29, 1933) and Vénus ou l'équipée planétaire (1935); cello sonata (1933); Andante cordial for violin, cello, and piano; trio for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon (1934); also several song cycles and piano pieces. Ferroud's music is distinguished by an adroit application of contrapuntal methods to compositions of essentially popular style; his chief influence was Florent Schmitt, about whom he wrote a book, Autour de Florent Schmitt (Paris, 1927). See René Dumesnil, Pierre-Octave Ferroud, in the 'Revue Musicale' (Oct.-Nov., 1931).

Fesca, Alexander Ernst, German pianist and composer, son of Friedrich Ernst Fesca; b. Karlsruhe, May 22, 1820; d. Brunswick, Feb. 22, 1849. He studied with his father, and later with Taubert. He was extremely successful as a concert pianist in 1839; in 1841 he became chamber musician to Prince Fürstenberg; settled in Brunswick in 1842, where he brought out his operas Der Troubadour (July 25, 1847) and Ulrich von Hutten (1849); he wrote also a piano sextet, 2 piano trios, a violin sonata, and many songs, some of which became popular. His early death at the age of 28 was regretted by many admirers who believed that he was a composer of uncommon talent.

Fesca, Friedrich Ernst, German composer; b. Magdeburg, Feb. 15, 1789; d. Karlsruhe, May 24, 1826. He studied violin; in 1804 he went to Leipzig, where he studied with August Eberhardt Müller; made a début in his own violin concerto; in 1806 he joined the orch. of the Duke of Oldenburg; in 1808 he obtained a similar position at the Westphalian court at Kassel; in 1813 he was in Vienna; in 1814 became a member of the Karlsruhe Orch. He was a prolific composer of chamber music (20 quartets and 5 quintets); also wrote 2 operas, Cantemire (1819) and Omar und Leila (1823); 3 symphonies, 4 overtures, etc.

Fesch, Willem de, Flemish organist; b. Alkmaar, Aug. 25, 1687; d. London, Jan. 3, 1761. He was organist at Antwerp; in 1731 went to London, where he produced his oratorios Judith (1733) and Joseph (1745).—Cf. F. van den Brecht, Willem de Fesch, Nederlands Componist en Virtuoso (Louvain, 1949).

Festa, Costanzo, Italian composer; b. Rome, c. 1490; d. there, April 10, 1545. He was a singer in the Pontifical Chapel from about 1517. He was a composer of much importance, being regarded as a forerunner of Palestrina, whose works were strongly influenced by those of Festa; was the first important Italian musician who successfully fused the Flemish and Italian styles, melodically and harmonically. He may well be considered one of the first, if not the first, of the native Italian madrigalists. The earliest known publ. work of his appeared in 1519. Of his numerous compositions, many sacred works were publ. in various collections from 1513 till 1549; a Te Deum a 4 (publ. in Rome, 1596) is still sung in the Vatican on solemn festivals. A complete list of Festa's works, together with reprints, is found in A. Cametti's Per un precursore del Palestrina; il compositore piemontese Costanzo Festa, in 'Bollettino bibliografico musicale' (April, 1931); publication of a complete edition of his works was begun in 1940 by the Istituto Italiano per la Storia della Musica Sacra (Rome).

Festing, Michael Christian, English violinist; b. London, c. 1680; d. there, July 24, 1752. He was a pupil of Richard Jones and Geminiani. In 1735 he joined the king's private band and became first violin in an amateur group called the Phil. Society; 1737, appointed director of the Italian Opera; 1742, conductor at Ranelagh Gardens. In 1738 he established, with Dr. Greene and others, the 'Society of Musicians,' for the maintenance of impoverished musicians and their families. — Works: numerous solos and concertos for violin; 18 sonatas for violins and bass; cantatas; songs.

Fétis, Edouard-Louis François, Belgian music editor; son of François-Joseph Fétis; b. Bouvigne, near Dinant, May 16, 1812; d. Brussels, Jan. 31, 1909. He edited his father's 'Revue musicale' (1833-35); was for years librarian of the Brussels Library. He publ. Les Musiciens belges (1848) and Les Artistes belges à l'étranger (1857-65), and compiled a catalogue of his father's library. His brother, Adolphe-Louis-Eugène Fétis (b. Paris, Aug. 20, 1820; d. there, March 20, 1873), was a pupil of his father, and of Herz (piano); lived in Brussels and Antwerp, and from 1856 in Paris as a music teacher. He composed music for piano and harmonium.

Fétis (fā-tēs'), François-Joseph, erudite Belgian musical theorist, historian, and critic; b. Mons, March 25, 1784; d. Brussels, March 26, 1871. He received primary instruction from his father, an organist at the Mons cathedral; learned to play the violin, piano, and organ when very young, and in his ninth year wrote a concerto for violin with orch.; as a youth was organist to the Noble Chapter of Sainte-Waudru. In 1800 he entered the Paris Cons., where he studied harmony with Rey and piano with Boieldieu and Pradher; in 1803 he visited Vienna, there studying counterpoint, fugue, and masterworks of German music. Several of his compositions (a symphony, an overture, sonatas and caprices for piano) were published at that time. In 1806 Fétis began the revision of the plainsong and entire ritual of the Roman Church, a vast undertaking completed, with many interruptions, after 30 years of patient research. A wealthy marriage in the same year enabled him to pursue his studies at ease for a time; but the fortune was lost in 1811, and he retired to the Ardennes, where he occupied himself with composition and philosophical researches into the theory of harmony; in 1813, he was appointed organist for the collegiate church of St.-Pierre at Douai. In 1818 he settled in Paris; in 1821 became prof. of composition at the Paris Cons.; in 1824 his Traité du contrepoint et de la fugue was publ. and accepted as a regular manual at the Cons. In 1827 he became librarian of the Cons., and in the same year founded his unique journal 'La Revue musicale,' which he edited alone until 1832; his son edited it from 1833 until 1835, when its publication ceased. Fétis also wrote articles on music for 'Le National' and 'Le Temps.' In 1828 he competed for the prize of the Netherlands Royal Institute with a treatise Quels ont été les mérites des Néerlandais dans la musique, principalement aux XIV<sup>e</sup>-XVI<sup>e</sup> siècles . . .; Kiesewetter's essay on the same subject won the prize, but Fétis' paper was also printed by the Institute. In 1832 he inaugurated his famous series of historical lectures and concerts. In 1833 he was called to Brussels as maître de chapelle to King Leopold I, and Director of the Cons.; during his long tenure of the latter position, for nearly 40 years, the Cons. flourished as never before. He also conducted the concerts of the Academy, which elected him a member in 1845. Fétis was a confirmed believer in the possibility of explaining music history and music theory scientifically; in his scholarly writings he attempted a thorough systematization of all fields of the art; he was opinionated and dogmatic, but it cannot be denied that he was a pioneer in musicology. He published the first book on music appreciation, La Musique mise à la portée de tout le monde (Paris, 1830; numerous reprints and transls. into English, German, Italian, Spanish, Russian); further pedagogical writings are: Solfèges progressifs (Paris, 1837); Traité complet de la théorie et de la pratique de l'harmonie (Brussels, 1844). As early as 1806 Fétis began collecting materials for his great Biographie universelle des musiciens et bibliographie générale de la musique in 8 vols. (Paris, 1833-44; 2nd. ed., 1860-65; supplement of 2 vols. 1878-80, edited by A. Pougin). This work of musical biography was unprecedented in its scope; entries on composers and performers whom Fétis knew personally still remain prime sources of information. On the negative side are the many fanciful accounts of composers' lives taken from unreliable sources; in this respect Fétis exercised a harmful influence on subsequent lexicographers for a whole century. His Histoire générale de la musique, in 5 vols., only goes as far as the 15th century (Paris, 1869-76); this work exhibits Fétis as a profound scholar, but also as a dogmatic philosopher of music propounding opinions without convincing evidence to support them. Of interest are his Esquisse de l'histoire de l'harmonie considérée comme art et comme science systématique (Paris, 1840); Notice biographique de Nicolo Paganini (Paris, 1851; with a short history of the violin); Antoine Stradivari (Paris, 1856; with a commentary on bowed instruments); reports on musical instruments at the Paris Expositions of 1855 and 1867, etc. Fétis was also a composer; between 1820 and 1832 he wrote 7 operas, serious and light, for the Opéra-Comique; he composed church music, 3 string quartets, 3 string quintets, 2 symphonies, and a flute concerto. His valuable library of 7,325 vols. was acquired after his death by the Bibliothèque Royale of Brussels; a catalogue was publ. in 1877.— Cf. K. Gollmick, Fétis als Mensch, Kritiker, Theoretiker und Komponist (Berlin, 1852); L. Alvin, Notice sur François-Joseph Fétis (Brussels, 1874); R. Wangermée, F.-J. Fétis, musicologue et compositeur (Brussels, 1951).

Feuermann (foi'-er-man), Emanuel, cello virtuoso; b. Kolomea, Galicia, Nov. 22, 1902; d. New York, May 25, 1942. He studied with Anton Walter in Vienna and with Julius Klengel in Leipzig; taught at the Cologne Cons. at the age of 16; then toured Europe and the U.S.; from 1930-33 he was prof. at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik; in 1934 went to Vienna. He made his American début with the N.Y. Philharmonic, Jan. 2, 1935; also gave chamber music concerts with Schnabel and Huberman. He owned a rare Stradivarius cello.

Fevin (feu-van'), Antoine de, French composer; b. probably in Arras, 1474; d. Blois, Jan. 1512. He was a younger contemporary of Josquin des Prez, whose style he emulated. He composed 12 masses, 6 of which were printed in collections by Petrucci (1515) and Antico (1516); also 29 motets, 3 Magnificats, and Lamentations (publ. by Montanus in 1549). 3 works by Fevin (in MS) are in the archives of Toledo Cathedral (cf. F. Rubio Piqueras, Música y música toledanos, 1923). 6 motets were printed in Petrucci's Motetti della corona (1514), and some French chansons in various collections. Fevin's mass Mente tota is reprinted in Expert's Maîtres musiciens (vol. 5); a 6-voice motet and parts of masses are in Eslava's Lira sacro-hispana; a 4-voice Kyrie in Burney's General History of Music (Vol. 2); the mass Ave Maria and Benedictus et Hosanna in Delporte's Collection de Polyphonie classique; several motets reprinted by B. Kahmann (Amsterdam, 1951). —Cf. P. Wagner, in Geschichte der Messe (Vol. I); J. Delporte, in 'Revue liturgique et musicale' (Jan.-Feb., 1935).

Fevin, Robert, composer; a native of Cambrai, probably a relative of Antoine Fevin. He was maestro di cappella to the Duke of Savoy at the beginning of the 16th century. One mass, Le vilain jaloux, probably by Robert Fevin, was printed by Petrucci as by Antoine Fevin; another, on La sol fa re mi, is in MS in the Munich Library.

Février (fä-vr'yä'), Henri, French opera composer; b. Paris, Oct. 2, 1875. He studied at the Cons. with Fauré, Leroux, Messager, Pugno, and Massenet; composed the operas Le roi aveugle (Paris, May 8, 1906), Monna Vanna (Paris, Jan. 13, 1909), Gismonda (Chicago, Jan. 14, 1919; Paris, Oct. 15, 1919), La Damnation de Blanche-Fleur (Monte Carlo, March 13, 1920), La Femme nue (Monte Carlo, March 23, 1929); the operettas Agnès, dame galante (1912), Caroline (1913), Île désenchantée (Paris, Nov. 21, 1925), etc. Février is the author of the book André Messager; mon maître, mon ami (Paris, 1948).

Ffrangcon-Davies (frank'-ohn-), David Thomas (real name, David Thomas Davis; the surname Ffrangcon was taken from the Nant-Ffrangcon mountain range near his birthplace), prominent British baritone; b. Bethesda, Caernarvon, Dec. 11, 1855; d. London, April 13, 1918. He was ordained a priest in 1884, but later left the church to take up a musical career; studied singing with Richard Latter, Shakespeare, and Randegger in London; made his concert début in Manchester (Jan. 6, 1890); stage début at Drury Lane Theatre (April 26, 1890). From 1896-8, he sang in festivals throughout the U. S. and Canada; then lived in Berlin (1898-1901); from 1903, professor of singing at the Royal College of Music, London. After a nervous breakdown in 1907 he gave up public singing. His book, The Singing of the Future (London, 1905; preface by Elgar), was republished by his daughter, Marjorie Ffrangcon-

Davies, as Part II of David Thomas Ffrangcon-Davies, His Life and Book (London, 1938; introduction by Ernest Newman).

Fibich, Zdenko, Czech composer; b. Seboriže, Dec. 21, 1850; d. Prague, Oct. 15, 1900. He studied first in Prague, then at the Leipzig Cons. with Moscheles (piano) and Richter (theory). Upon his return to Prague, he occupied the posts of conductor of the National Theater (1875-78) and director of the Russian Church choir (1878-81). From then on, he continued to live in Prague, devoting himself mainly to composition. In his music, he was greatly influenced by Wagner, and applied quasi-Wagnerian methods even when treating national Bohemian subjects. His main distinction was a gift of facile melody, and he was at his best in his short pieces, such as Poème, op. 41, no. 6, for piano, which has become extremely popular through many arrangements for various instrumental combinations.—Works: Operas (produced at Prague): Bukovin (April 16, 1874); Blaník (Nov. 25, 1881); Nevěsta Messinska (The Bride of Messina; March 28, 1884; very popular); Bouře (The Tempest; March 1, 1895); Hédy after Byron's Don Juan (Feb. 12, 1896); Sarka (Dec. 28, 1897); Pad Arkuna (The Fall of Arkun; produced posthumously, Nov. 9, 1900; his most important work); music to the dramatic trilogy Hippodamia by Vrchlický: (1) The Wooing of Pelops (Feb. 21, 1890); (2) The Atonement of Tantalus (June 2, 1891); (3) Hippodamia's Death (Nov. 8, 1891). For orch.: 3 symphonies (No. 1, F, 1883; No. 2, Eb, 1893; No. 3, E minor, 1898); symphonic poems: Othello (1873); Zaboj, Slavoj a Ludek (1873); Toman a lesní panna (Toman and the Wood Nymph; 1875); Bouře (The Tempest; 1880); Věsna (Spring; 1881); Vigilie, for small orch. (1883); V Podvečer (At Twilight; 1893); a choral ballad, Die Windsbraut; melodramas: Stědý Den (Christmas Day; 1875); Vodník (The Water Sprite; 1883); Hákon (1888); Věčnost (Eternity; 1878); Spring Romanza for chorus and orch. (1880); 2 string quartets; piano quartet; Romance for violin and piano; piano pieces; songs; choruses. He also published a method for piano.—Cf. C. L. Richter, Zdenko Fibich (Prague, 1899); Zd. Nejedlý, Fibich (Prague, 1900); O. Hostinský, Erinnerungen an Fibich (1909); J. Bartoš, Zdenko Fibich (1913); A. Rektorys, Zdenko Fibich (2 vols., Prague, 1952).

Ficher (fē-chär'), Jacobo, composer; b. Odessa, Jan. 14, 1896. He studied violin with Korguev and composition with Kalafati and Steinberg at the St. Petersburg Cons., graduating in 1917. He then left Russia and settled in Buenos Aires, where he earned his living by playing in theater orchestras; in the meantime he began to compose; in 1937 he won an Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Prize for his second string quartet. He was a founder, with several Argentine composers, of a society, 'Grupo Renovación,' for the advancement of modern music. He was also active as conductor in Buenos Aires. Much of his early music was inspired by Jewish melodies; the influence of the Russian school was also noticeable. His mature style is characterized by a rhapsodic fluency of development, harmonic fullness, and orchestral brilliance.—Works: chamber operas: The Bear (1952) and Proposal in Marriage (1955), both after Chekhov; the ballets: Colombina de Hoy (1933), Los Invitados (1933), Melchor (1938-39), Golondrina (1942); for orch.: two suites (No. 1, on Jewish themes, 1924; No. 2, 1926); 5 symphonies (No. 1, 1932; No. 2, 1933; No. 3, 1940; No. 4, 1946; No. 5, 1947); Poema Heroico (1927; Leningrad Philh. Prize, 1928); Sulamita, symph. poem (1927; Buenos Aires, July 20, 1929); 2 symphonic poems, after Tagore (1928); Obertura Patética (Buenos Aires, May 17, 1930); 3 Bocetos sinfónicos sobre el Talmud (1930; 1st prize of Buenos Aires Philh.); violin concerto (1942); 2 piano concertos (No. 1, 1945; No. 2, 1954); chamber music: 4 string quartets (No. 1, 1927; No. 2, 1936; No. 3, 1943; No. 4, 1952); 2 violin sonatas (No. 1, 1929; No. 2, 1945); Suite en estilo antiguo, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn (1930); sonata for viola, flute, and piano (1931); sonatina for saxophone, trumpet, and piano (1932); piano trio (1935); flute sonata (1935); clarinet sonata (1937); oboe sonata (1940); cello sonata (1943); sonata for flute and clarinet (1949); sonata for flute, oboe, and bassoon (1950); viola sonata (1953); 2 piano sonatas; several albums of piano pieces (including 2 sets of 'Fables', descriptive of animals, in a humorous vein); also choral works.

Fickenschcer, Arthur, American composer and pianist; b. Aurora, Ill., March 9, 1871; d. San Francisco, April 15, 1954. He studied at the Munich Cons.; appeared there as a pianist (1895); toured the U. S. as accompanist to famous singers, among them Bispham and Schumann-Heink; taught at the Von Meyerinck School of Music, San Francisco, and Jenkins School of Music, Oakland, Calif.; also privately in Berlin, San Francisco, and New York. From 1920 till 1941 he was head of the Music Dept. of the Univ. of Virginia, Charlottesville, and organist of the Christ Episcopal Church there. In 1947 he settled in San Francisco. A musician of an inquisitive mind, he elaborated a system of pure intonation; invented the 'Polytone,' an instrument designed to play music in which the octave is subdivided into 60 tones; publ. an article, The Polytone and the Potentialities of a Purer Intonation, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1941). His major work was the Evolutionary Quintet, evolved from a violin sonata and an orchestral scherzo written in the 1890's; the manuscripts were burned in the San Francisco earthquake and fire of 1906; the musical material was then used from memory for a quintet for piano and strings, in 2 movements; the second movement, entitled The Seventh Realm, became a separate work. He also wrote Willowweave and Walloway for orch. (1925); The Day of Judgment, for orch. (1927; Grand Rapids, Feb. 10, 1934); Out of the Gay Nineties, for orch. (Richmond, Va., Dec. 4, 1934, composer conducting); Variations on a Theme in Medieval Style for string orch. (1937); Dies Irae, for chamber orch. (1927); The Chamber Blue, a mimodrama for orch., soli, women's chorus, and dancers (Univ. of Virginia, April 5, 1938); a large choral work, with orch. The Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon (after William Morris).

Ficker, Rudolf von, distinguished German musicologist; b. Munich, June 11, 1886; d. Igls, near Innsbruck, Aug. 2, 1954. From 1905-1912 he studied at the Univ. of Vienna with Adler (musicology), and in Munich with Thuille and Courvoisier (composition); 1913, Dr. phil.; lecturer at the Univ. of Innsbruck (1920); associate prof. of musicology at the Univ. of Vienna, and co-director of the Musicological Seminary there; succeeded Sandberger as professor at the Univ. of Munich (1930). He was a specialist in early Gothic music.—Writings: Beiträge zur Chromatik des 14. bis 16. Jahrhunderts, in Adler's 'Studien zur Musikwissenschaft' (1914); Formprobleme der mittelalterlichen Musik, in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (1925); Die Musik des Mittelalters und ihre Beziehungen zum Geistesleben, in 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Literaturwissenschaft und Geistesgeschichte' (1925); Primäre Klangformen, in 'Jahrbuch der Musikbibliothek Peters' (1929); Polyphonic Music of the Gothic Period, in the

'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1929); Agwillare, a Piece of Late Gothic Minstrelsy, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1936); Wandlungen des Mozartbildes (1941); Probleme der modalen Notation, in 'Acta Musicologica' (1946). He edited vol. XXVII, 1 (4th selection from the Trent Codices; in collaboration with A. Orel) and vol. XXXI (5th selection) in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich'; likewise the Sederunt principes of Pérotin (1930).

Fiedler, Arthur, American conductor; b. Boston, Dec. 17, 1894. He studied with his father, Emanuel Fiedler, a violinist of the Boston Symphony Orch.; after graduating from high school in Boston, he went to Berlin, where he studied with Willy Hess. He returned to the U. S. in 1914, and soon joined the Boston Symph. as viola player; in 1929 he organized the Esplanade Concerts in Boston, playing light and classical music outdoors; in 1930 he was appointed conductor of the Boston Pops, a series of summer concerts. Adroitly combining music of popular appeal with movements from classical symphonies and occasional modern works, and employing soloists, Fiedler has built an eager audience in Boston; traveled with his especially assembled orchestra all over the U. S.; has also made guest appearances with the San Francisco Orch. and in Europe. At various times he conducted the Cecilia Choral Society of Boston, and several other organizations.

Fiedler, Max, German conductor; b. Zittau, Dec. 31, 1859; d. Stockholm, Dec. 1, 1939. He was a piano pupil of his father, and studied the organ and theory with G. Albrecht; attended the Leipzig Cons. (1877-80); won the Holstein scholarship. In 1882 appointed teacher at the Hamburg Cons.; in 1903 director; 1904, succeeded Barth as conductor of the Hamburg Philh. Society. Although he had won an enviable reputation as a concert pianist, he soon abandoned that career (appearing only occasionally in ensemble), and rapidly won distinction as a conductor. He was guest conductor of the N. Y. Philh. Orch. in the season of 1905-06; 1907, conducted the London Symph. Orch.; 1908-12, conductor of the Boston Symph. Orch.; then returned to Germany, taking up his residence in Berlin; from 1916 conductor of the Symph. Orch. at Essen; 1934, guest conductor in Stockholm; 1935, again in Berlin. He composed a symphony, a piano quintet and a string quartet, a Lustspiel overture, piano pieces, and songs.—Cf. G.

Degmck, Max Fiedler; Werden und Werken (Essen, 1940).

Field, John, Irish pianist and composer; b. Dublin, July 26, 1782; d. Moscow, Russia, Jan. 23, 1837. His father was a violinist; his grandfather, an organist; it was from his grandfather that he received his first instruction in music. He then had lessons with Clementi, and was also employed in the salesrooms of Clementi's music establishment in London. In 1802 he followed Clementi to Paris, and in 1803 to St. Petersburg, where Field settled as a teacher and performer. After many concert tours in Russia, he returned to England temporarily, and performed his Concerto in E $\flat$  with the London Philharmonic (Feb. 27, 1832); he continued a European tour in 1833, playing in Paris, in Switzerland, and in Italy. He was stricken with an ailment at Naples, and remained in a hospital for nine months; at the end of his resources, he was persuaded by a friendly Russian family to return to Moscow. On the way, he was able to give a concert in Vienna with extraordinary success; but the combination of alcoholism and general ill health led to his death two years after arrival in Moscow. Field's historical position is of importance, even though his music in itself does not reveal a great original talent. He was undoubtedly a precursor of Chopin in his treatment of piano technique; he was also the originator of keyboard nocturnes. He greatly developed the free fantasias and piano recitative, while following the basic precepts of classical music. Like Chopin after him, Field wrote mainly for the piano; he composed 7 piano concertos; 4 sonatas; 18 nocturnes; polonaises and other pieces, also a quintet for piano and strings and 2 divertimenti for piano, strings, and flute.—Bibl.: H. Dessauer, John Field, sein Leben und seine Werke (Langensalza, 1912); Wm. H. Grattan Flood, John Field of Dublin (Dublin, 1920); E. von Tidebühl, Reminiscences of John Field in the 'Monthly Musical Record' (1923); E. Blom, John Field in the 'Chesterian' (1930); F. Liszt, Über John Field's Nocturnes (Hamburg, 1859; also in vol. IV of Liszt's 'Gesammelte Schriften,' Leipzig, 1882).

Fieltz, Alexander von, German conductor and composer; b. Leipzig, Dec. 28, 1860; d. Bad Salzungen, July 29, 1930. He was of Slavic origin; his mother was Russian. He studied piano with Julius Schulhoff and composition with Kretschmer in Dresden; in conducting he profited by the advice of Nikisch. He conducted opera in various German towns; a nervous disorder caused him to take a prolonged rest in Italy (1887-97); then he settled in Berlin as a teacher. From 1905-08 he was in Chicago, where he organized an orch. and conducted it for a season; in 1908 he returned to Berlin as teacher and later director (1916) at Stern's Cons. He wrote a number of songs and piano pieces; his song cycle Eliland and his songs based on Tuscan folk music were quite popular; he also wrote 2 operas, Vendetta (Lübeck, 1891) and Das stille Dorf (Hamburg, March 13, 1900).

Figner, Nicolay Nicolayevitch, celebrated Russian tenor; b. St. Petersburg, 1857; d. Kiev, Dec. 13, 1919. He was a lieutenant in the Russian Navy before his voice was discovered; then he studied diligently in Milan; in 1887 he returned to Russia, and was engaged as a tenor at the Imperial Theater in St. Petersburg. He was the favorite tenor of Tchaikovsky, and was selected to sing the leading role in the première of The Queen of Spades; his interpretation of Lensky in Eugene Onegin was also famous. In 1889 he married the Italian soprano Medea Mei, who wrote a book of memoirs (St. Petersburg, 1912), in which she described their careers.

Figuroa, José, Puerto Rican violinist; b. San Sebastian, Puerto Rico, March 24, 1905. He studied with Fernández Bordas in Madrid and J. Thibaud in Paris. He settled in New York in 1941.

Figulus (real name Töpfer), Wolfgang, German writer on music; b. Naumburg, c. 1525; d. Meissen, c. 1591. He studied in Leipzig; 1549-51, cantor at the Thomasschule in Leipzig; 1551-58, at the Fürstenschule in Meissen. He wrote Elementa musicae (1555; many other editions); revised Martin Agricola's Deutsche Musica (1560); publ. a book of motets, Precationes (Leipzig, 1553); Cantiones sacrae (1575); and Hymni sacri et scholastici (revised by his son-in-law, Friedrich Birck, 1604); a collection of Christmas songs, containing works of his own, of Martin Agricola and others, was publ. posthumously in two books (1594 and 1605). For a detailed list of MS works and bibliographical references, see W. Brennecke's article on Figulus in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Figuš-Bystrý (fě-gōōsh bē-strē), Villiam, Slovak composer; b. Banská Bystrica, Feb. 28, 1875; d. there, May 11, 1937. He spent many years in collecting Slovak folk melodies, which he publ. in 5 vols. (1906-15) for voice and piano; also publ. a collection of 1000 arranged for piano only (1928). He further wrote an opera, Detvan (Bratislava, Aug. 1, 1928); a cantata Slovenská Piesen (1913); an orchestral suite From My Youth; piano quartet; piano trio; 3 sonatinas for violin and piano; violin pieces; piano works; choruses and songs.

Filiassi, Lorenzo, Italian composer; b. Naples, March 25, 1878. He studied at the Cons. di S. Pietro a Majella with Nicola d'Arienzo. His first success came with the opera Manuel Menendez, which won the Sonzogno Competition Prize in 1902, and was produced in Milan (May 15, 1904); his other operas were Fior di Neve (La Scala, April 1, 1911), Messidoro (1912), etc. He also wrote a pantomime, Pierrot e Bluette (1895); a choral work with orch., La preghiera del marinaio italiano; Visioni romantiche for orch.; violin pieces and many songs.

Filippi, Filippo, Italian composer and critic; b. Vicenza, Jan. 13, 1830; d. Milan, June 25, 1887. He studied law at Padua, taking his degree in 1853. In 1852 he began his career as a music critic with a warm defense of Verdi's Rigoletto; from 1858 till 1862 was editor of the 'Gazzetta Musicale,' and in 1859 music critic of the newly founded 'Perseveranza.' He publ. a collection of essays on great musicians, Musica e Musicisti (Milan, 1876); as a zealous Wagnerite he wrote a pamphlet, Riccardo Wagner (in German, as Richard Wagner: eine musikalische Reise in das Reich der Zukunft, 1876); also publ. a monograph Della vita e delle opere di Adolfo Fumagalli (Milan, 1857); composed a string quintet, 9 string quartets, piano trio; piano pieces, songs.

Filke, Max, German composer; b. Steubendorf-Leobschütz, Silesia, Oct. 5, 1855; d. Breslau, Oct. 8, 1911. He studied with Brosig in Breslau and with Haberl at the Kirchenmusikschule in Regensburg (1877); then with Piutti at the Leipzig Cons. (1880); was engaged as choirmaster at Straubing (1881) and conductor of the 'Sängerkreis' at Cologne (1890); then became director at the Cathedral in Breslau and prof. at the institute for church music there. His numerous compositions for the church assign him a distinguished position among composers of sacred music.

Filleul (fě-lyöl'), Henri, French composer; b. Laval, May 11, 1877. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Lavignac and Casadesu; since 1908 director of the École nationale de musique at St. Omer, Belgium;

Officier de l'Instruction Publique.—Works: Le Jugement de Triboulet, comic opera (1923); biblical drama, Marie Madeleine, with soli, chorus, and incidental music (1925); oratorios: Le Christ vainqueur (1925), Le Miracle de Lourdes (1927), Les Douces Joies de Notre Dame (1928), Jeanne d'Arc (1929), Eva (1931); Variations symphoniques sur un thème languedocien (1939); Fantaisie concertante for piano with orch. (1950); cello concerto; violin pieces with organ; motets; male choruses; etc.—Cf. Hommage à Henri Filleul (St. Omer, 1952).

Fillmore, Henry, American bandleader and composer of band music; b. Cincinnati, Dec. 2, 1881; d. Miami, Dec. 7, 1956. He was educated at the Miami Military Institute; in 1916 was in Cincinnati, where he organized the Henry Fillmore Concert Band; in 1938 settled in Florida. Under the name Harold Bennett he publ. a collection, Bennett Band Books (4 vols.); also used the names Al Hayes and Harry Hartley as compiler of military band pieces. Among his many marches is the very popular Military Escort March.

Fillmore, John Comfort, American music educator; b. New London, Conn., Feb. 4, 1843; d. there, Aug. 15, 1898. He was a pupil of G. W. Steele at Oberlin College, Ohio; then at Leipzig Cons. (1865-67). He was director of the music department at Oberlin College (1867); at Ripon College, Wis. (1868-78); at Milwaukee College for Women (1878-84). He founded (1884) the 'Milwaukee School of Music,' of which he was the director until 1895, when he took charge of the School of Music of Pomona College, Claremont, Calif. He published: Piano-forte Music: its History, with Biographical Sketches and Critical Estimates of its Greatest Masters (Chicago, 1883); New Lessons in Harmony (1887); Lessons in Music History (1888); On the Value of Certain Modern Theories (i.e., von Oettingen's and Riemann's); A Study of Omaha Indian Music (with Alice C. Fletcher and F. La Flesche; Peabody Museum, 1893); transl. into English Riemann's Klavierschule und Natur der Harmonik.

Filtz (Filz), Anton, talented composer, b. probably in Bohemia, 1730; d. Mannheim, March (buried March 14), 1760. He was a pupil of J. Stamitz; from 1754, first cellist in the Mannheim Orch. He belongs to the school of Mannheim Symphonists, early practitioners of classic instrumental style.

That his works must have enjoyed great popularity seems to be proved by the numerous reprints issued at London and Amsterdam, pirated from the original Paris editions; these works show a very fertile invention; but the technical workmanship cannot rival the masterly treatment of similar works by Stamitz. He was exceptionally prolific; in the brief span of his life, he completed 41 symphonies, many trio-sonatas, string trios, sonatas for violin, cello, flute, etc., and concertos for various instruments. Riemann publ. 4 symphonies by Filtz in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (III, 1, and VII, 2); 2 trios (ibid., XV); and one in 'Collegium Musicum.'

Finagin, Alexei Vassilievitch, Russian musicologist; b. St. Petersburg, March 17, 1890; studied there at the Univ. He publ. (in Russian): Russian Folksongs (Petrograd, 1923); Fomin; His Life and Works (in vol. 1 of Music and Musical Life of Old Russia; Leningrad, 1927); contributed to various periodicals.

Finck, Heinrich, German composer; b. Bamberg, 1445; d. in the Schottenkloster, Vienna, June 9, 1527. He was in the service of 3 Polish kings: Johann Albert (1492), Alexander (1501), and Sigismund (1506); was in Cracow from at least 1491; 1492, visited Budapest, Vienna, and Torgau, but returned to Poland; 1510-13, Kapellmeister to Duke Ulrich at Stuttgart; then at the court of Maximilian I, in Augsburg; 1520, appointed composer of the cathedral chapter at Salzburg; 1525-26, Hofkapellmeister to Ferdinand I at Vienna, where he was succeeded by his pupil Arnold von Bruck.—Extant works: Schöne auserlesene Lieder des hochberühmten Heinrich Finckens (Nuremberg, 1536; reprinted in R. Eitner's 'Publikationen,' vol. VIII); other songs publ. by Salblinger (1545) and by Rhaw (1542). Reprints are to be found in Blume's Das Chorwerk (hymns ed. by R. Gerber; the Missa in summis), in A. W. Ambros' Geschichte der Musik (vol. 5), in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (XXXVII, 2), in H. J. Moser's 'Kantorei der Spätgotik.'—Cf. H. Riemann, in 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1897); P. Wagner, in Geschichte der Messe (I, 275).

Finck, Henry Theophilus, American music critic and editor; b. Bethel, Missouri, Sept. 22, 1854; d. Rumford Falls, Maine, Oct. 1, 1926. He was brought up in Oregon; then entered Harvard Univ., where he studied with J. K. Paine. After graduation in 1876 he went to Germany; attended the first Bayreuth Festival and became greatly absorbed in the study of Wagner's music; returning to America he studied anthropology at Harvard; received a fellowship for travel in Germany; studied comparative psychology in Berlin and Vienna, and published a book Romantic Love and Personal Beauty (1887), propounding a theory that romantic love was unknown to the ancient nations; also wrote travel books and short stories. He was music critic for the 'Nation' magazine from 1881 to 1924; also music editor of the N. Y. 'Evening Post'; from 1888, lectured on music history at the National Cons. Finck was a brilliant journalist; in his books on music he stressed the personal and psychological elements; although an ardent admirer of Wagner, he turned against the further expansion of Wagnerian ideas by R. Strauss.— Publications: Chopin, and Other Musical Essays (1889); Wagner and His Works (N. Y., 1893; German transl., Breslau, 1897); Pictorial Wagner (1899); Songs and Song Writers (1900); Grieg and His Music (1909); Success in Music and How It Is Won (1909); Massenet and His Operas (1910); Richard Strauss (1917); My Adventures in the Golden Age of Music (1926). He edited Fifty Master Songs (1902), Fifty Schubert Songs (1903), and Fifty Grieg Songs (1909).

Finck, Hermann, German composer, great-nephew of Heinrich Finck; b. Pirna, Saxony, March 21, 1857; d. Wittenberg, Dec. 28, 1898. He was educated at the court chapel of King Ferdinand of Bohemia; studied at Wittenberg Univ. (1875); then taught music there (1876); was appointed organist in 1877. His major work is the treatise Practica Musica, publ. by Rhaw (1876), and subdivided into 5 parts. Some of Hermann Finck's works are reprinted by Eitner in his 'Publikationen' (vol. VIII, 1879).

Findeisen, Nicolai Fedorovitch, Russian music historian and editor; b. St. Petersburg, July 24, 1868; d. there, Sept. 20, 1928. He studied with Nikolai Sokolov; in 1893 he founded the 'Russian Musical Gazette' and remained its editor until it ceased publication in 1917; it was one of the most influential music journals in Russia, and supplied ample information on the activities of foreign musicians in addition to a thorough coverage of Russian musical events and publication of new materials on old Russian music. In 1909 Findeisen established in St. Petersburg, jointly with Siloti, a Society of the Friends of Music. His writings include monographs on Verstovsky (1890), Serov (1900), Dargomyzhsky (1902), Anton Rubinstein (1905), and Rimsky-Korsakov (1908); he published a series of brochures and books on Glinka; the first volume of a projected large biography, Glinka in Spain, appeared in 1896; a catalogue of Glinka's manuscripts, letters, and portraits was publ. in 1898; a monograph, Glinka and his opera Russian and Ludmilla, was publ. in German (Munich, 1899); he also edited Glinka's correspondence (1908). He was on the editorial staff of the Russian edition of Ricmann's Musiklexikon (St. Petersburg, 1901). His major achievement and a culminating point of his career was the extensive history of Russian music up to the year 1800, publ. in two vols. (partly posthumously) in Leningrad (1928-29) under the title Sketches of Music in Russia from the most Ancient Times Until the End of the 18th Century. He also contributed articles to foreign publications; among them, The Earliest Russian Operas in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1933).

Findeisen, Otto, composer of operettas and theater conductor; b. Brunn, Dec. 23, 1862; d. Leipzig, Jan. 23, 1947. He conducted in Magdeburg from 1890, and produced two of his operettas there: Der alte Dessauer (1890) and Hennigs von Treffendorf (1891). Other light operas were: Frau Holle (Berlin, 1904); Kleopatra (Hamburg, 1897); Der Spottvogel (Bremen, 1898); Der Sühneprinz (Leipzig, 1904); Sonnenguckerl (Vienna, 1908); Meister Pinkebank (Vienna, 1909), etc.

Fine, Irving, talented American composer; b. Boston, Dec. 3, 1914. He studied with Walter Piston at Harvard Univ. (B.A., 1937; M.A., 1938) and with Nadia Boulanger in Cambridge, Mass. (1938) and in France (1939); also took a course in choral conducting with A. T. Davison. He was assistant prof. of music at Harvard (1947-50); in 1950 appointed prof. at Brandeis Univ.; also a member of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass. He was at first influenced by Stravinsky and Hindemith, and adopted a cosmopolitan style of composition in which contrapuntal elaboration and energetic rhythm were his main concerns; later on, however, he developed a distinctive style of his own with a lyrical flow of cohesive melody supported by lucid polyphony, without abandoning the strong rhythmic design. In some works, he follows a serial thematic method approximating the 12-tone technique. — Works: incidental theater music to Alice in Wonderland

(1942); cantata, The Choral New Yorker (1944); violin sonata (1946); Toccata Concertante for orch. (Boston Symp., 1948); Partita for wind quintet (1948); The Hour Glass, choral cycle (1949); string quartet (1950); piano pieces and songs.

Fine, Vivian, American composer; b. Chicago, Sept. 28, 1913. She studied composition with Roger Sessions; settled in New York as a pianist and teacher; has been associated with various modern societies. Although her style of composition is hyper-modern, in bold and sometimes acrid linear counterpoint, the writing for instruments remains practical for actual performance.—Works: Piano concerto (1944); suite for oboe and piano (1939); Opus 51, ballet for piano and percussion (1940); A Guide to the Life Expectancy of a Rose, stage work commissioned by the Rothschild Foundation for the Arts and Sciences (1956). Her four songs for contralto and strings and The Great Wall of China for voice and flute are published by 'New Music.'

Fink, Christian, German organist and composer; b. Dettingen, Aug. 9, 1822; d. Esslingen, near Stuttgart, Sept. 5, 1911. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; became organist there (1856-60); in 1863 was appointed church organist at Esslingen; published numerous organ works. He was greatly esteemed in Germany; his choral works and organ pieces were often performed.

Fink, Gottfried Wilhelm, German writer on music and editor; b. Sulza, Thuringia, March 7, 1783; d. Leipzig, Aug. 27, 1846. He studied music and theology in Leipzig; wrote the criticism in the 'Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung' from 1808; in 1827 he became editor of this influential publication (until 1841); also contributed articles on music and musicians to various German encyclopedias. His extensive music history remained in MS. Among his publications are the collections of German songs, Musikalischer Hausschatz (Leipzig, 1843) and Die deutsche Liedertafel (Leipzig, 1846). For a complete list of his writings, see the article by W. Boetticher in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Finke, Fidelio Fritz, outstanding composer; b. Josefthal in Northern Bohemia, Oct. 22, 1891; studied with Vítězslav Novák at the Prague Cons.; then taught there; was state inspector of the German music schools in Czechoslovakia; 1920, teacher of composition at the German Musikakademie, Prague; 1927, director; has won many prizes (Brahms Prize, 1910; Choral Prize, Vienna, 1920; Czech State Prize, 1928). He was director of the State Music Academy in Dresden (1946-51); since 1951, prof. of composition in the Hochschule für Musik in Leipzig.—Works: the operas, Die Jakobsfahrt (Prague, 1937) and Der schlagfertige Liebhaber (1950-53); Das Lied der Zeit, choreographic poem (1946); Pan, symph. poem; concerto for piano and orch. (1930); piano quintet; piano trio; 2 string quartets; 2 string trios; 2 sonatas for violin and piano; Chaconne (after Vitali) for violin and piano; Variations and Fugue for 13 solo instruments; Frühling, for soprano, tenor, and orch.; Abschied, for soprano, tenor, and orch.; Mein Trinklied for tenor, male chorus, and orch.; Der zerstörte Tasso, 5 settings for voice and string quartet; Weihnachtskantilene, for mixed voices (1933); pieces for female chorus (3-9 voices); Reiterburleske for piano; Toccata for piano, left hand; many organ works; songs.

Finney, Ross Lee, American composer and teacher; b. Wells, Minn., Dec. 23, 1906. He studied at the Univ. of Minnesota with Ferguson, and in Europe with Nadia Boulanger and Alban Berg; then took additional instruction with Roger Sessions and E. B. Hill; won a Guggenheim Fellowship twice (1937 and 1947); also a Pulitzer scholarship. He taught at Smith College (1929-47) and concurrently at Mt. Holyoke College (1938-44); in 1948 joined the staff of the Univ. of Michigan.—Works: piano concerto (1934); Overture for a Drama (Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1941); Barber Shop Ballad for orch. (C.B.S., Feb. 6, 1940); Communiqué for orch. (1943); violin concerto (1944); John Brown (1929); Trail to Mexico (1941); Pilgrim Psalms (1945); 7 string quartets; 4 piano sonatas; viola sonata; cello sonata; piano trio; several song cycles, etc. He edited Geminiani's 12 sonatas for violin and piano (Northampton, Mass., 1935); publ. The Game of Harmony (N. Y., 1947).

Finney, Theodore Mitchell, American music educator and historian; brother of Ross Lee Finney; b. Fayette, Iowa, March 14, 1902. He studied at the Univ. of Minnesota; then at the American Cons. at Fontainebleau (1926) and in Berlin (1927-28). He was a member of the viola section in the Minneapolis Symp. Orch. (1923-25); then assistant prof. of music at Carleton College (1925-32) and lecturer at the Smith College Summer School (1930-38). In 1936 he was appointed head of the music department at Pittsburgh Univ. He has published a History of Music (N. Y., 1935; revised ed., 1946; successful college textbook); also Hearing Music, A Guide to Music (N. Y., 1941); We Have Made Music (essays; Pittsburgh, 1955).

Fino, Giocondo, Italian composer; b. Turin, May 2, 1867; d. there, April 19, 1950. He studied Oriental languages and theology; concurrently took music lessons with Giovanni Bolzoni; he remained in Turin practically all his life.—Works: the operas La festa del grano (Turin, 1910), Debora (not produced), and Campana a gloria (Turin, 1916); several stage works in the Piedmont dialect; biblical cantata, Noemi e Ruth (Bergamo, 1908); ballets, pantomimes, choral works; chamber music and piano pieces.

Finzi, Gerald, English composer; b. London, July 14, 1901; d. Oxford, Sept. 27, 1956. As a youth, he took a course in composition with R. O. Morris; otherwise, self-taught. His first important work was a Severn Rhapsody for chamber orch. (1924); its contemplative manner of writing and simplicity of harmonic expression remain characteristic of Finzi's music; its materials are often related to the songs of the English countryside. Other works: Introit for violin and orch. (1935); Farewell to Arms for tenor and chamber orch. (1945); concerto for clarinet and strings (1949); Intimations of Immortality for tenor, chorus, and orch. (1950); cello concerto (1955); several groups of choral pieces.

Fiocco (fē-ōk'-koh), Jean-Joseph, composer, second son of Pietro Antonio Fiocco (of the first marriage); b. Brussels, Dec. 1686 (baptized Dec. 15); d. there, March 30, 1746. He succeeded his father as music master at the ducal chapel, and held this post for 30 years (1714-44); wrote 5 oratorios, 8 psalms, 9 Requiems, motets, etc. Two copies of his Sacri concentus for 4 voices and 3 instruments are known to exist; most of his other works are lost.—Cf. Christiane Stellfeld, Les Fiocco (Brussels, 1941).

Fiocco (fē-ōk'-koh), Joseph-Hector, composer, seventh child of Pietro Antonio Fiocco (of his second marriage); b. Brussels, Jan. 1703; d. there, June 22, 1741. He was music master of the cathedral of Antwerp from 1731-37; then at Ste.-Gudule in Brussels until his death. He wrote numerous sacred works published in 'Monumenta Musicae Belgicae' (vol. III, Antwerp, 1936); also wrote Pièces de Clavecin (two suites of 12 pieces each).—Cf. Christiane Stellfeld, Les Fiocco (Brussels, 1941).

Fiocco (fē-ōk'-koh), Pietro Antonio, Italian composer; b. Venice, c. 1650; d. Brussels, Sept. 3, 1714. He traveled to Germany, where he produced an opera Alceste (Hanover, 1681). He then settled in Brussels, marrying a Belgian lady in 1682; she died in 1691, and Fiocco remarried in 1692. He was music master of the ducal chapel in Brussels; in 1694 he established an opera enterprise; wrote special prologues for the operas of Lully; also wrote music for the court; his pastoral play Le Retour du Printemps was produced in 1699. A collection of his sacred concertos was published in Antwerp (1691). Among his instrumental works only a Sonate à quatre is extant. Two of his sons, Jean-Joseph and Joseph-Hector (q.v.), became professional musicians. See the exhaustive monograph, Les Fiocco, by Christiane Stellfeld (Brussels, 1941).

Fioravanti, Valentino, Italian composer; b. Rome, Sept. 11, 1764; d. Capua, June 16, 1837. He studied in Rome with Jannaconi and with Sala and Fenaroli in Naples. Returning to Rome in 1782, he began his career as a prolific composer of operas. He visited Naples quite often; was in Paris in 1807; succeeded his teacher, Jannaconi, as maestro di cappella at St. Peter's in Rome in 1816; during his last period he wrote much church music. His earliest work, an intermezzo, was Le avventure di Bertoldino (Rome, 1784); he produced a comic opera Gl' inganni fortunati in Naples (1786); there followed Il furbo contro al furbo (Venice, Dec. 29, 1796). His greatest success was achieved by his comic opera Le Cantatrici Villane, first produced in Naples (1799) and then in Venice in a new version under the title Le Virtuose ridicole (Dec. 28, 1801); there were performances all over Europe, including Russia; the opera was particularly in favor with German audiences (under the title Die Dorfsängerinnen); other operas were: La capricciosa pentita (Milan, Oct. 2, 1802) and I virtuosi ambulanti (Paris, Sept. 26, 1807; also very successful); Fioravanti produced 77 operas and other stage works during his most active period, between 1784 and 1824. His autobiographical sketch was reprinted by G. Roberti in 'La Gazzetta musicale' (1895).

Fioravanti, Vincenzo, Italian composer, son of Valentino Fioravanti; b. Rome, April 5, 1799; d. Naples, March 28, 1877. He studied with his father, and also with his father's teacher, Jannaconi; he also took lessons with Donizetti. He wrote a number of operas in the Neapolitan dialect; only a few of them (translated into conventional Italian) were produced outside Italy. He composed about 40 operas in all.

Fiorillo, Dante, American composer; b. New York, July 4, 1905. He studied the cello, and later began to compose without formal instruction. He held Guggenheim Fellowships in composition for four successive years (1935-39), and in 1939 received a Pulitzer Prize. Extraordinarily prolific, he has written 12 symphonies; 11 string quartets; piano quintets and trios; piano sonatas; choral music.

Fiorillo, Federigo, violinist and composer; b. Brunswick, Germany (baptized June 1), 1755; date and place of death unknown. He was taught by his father, Ignazio Fiorillo; he traveled as violinist and conductor; was in Riga (1782-84); in 1785 he went to Paris, where he participated in the Concert Spirituel; in 1788 he was in London, where he played the viola in Salomon's quartet. He probably remained in London until about 1815; then he was in Amsterdam and again in Paris. He was a prolific composer for violin and various combinations of string instruments; but he is known chiefly through his useful collection, Études de Violon, comprising 36 caprices, which were frequently reprinted.

Fiorillo, Ignazio, Italian composer, father of Federigo Fiorillo; b. Naples, May 11, 1715; d. Fritzlar, near Kassel, 1787. He studied with Durante and Leo in Naples; composed his first opera Mandane at the age of 20 (Venice, 1736). Other operas were: Artimene (Milan, 1738), Partenope nell'Adria (Venice, 1738), and Il Vincitor di se stesso (Venice, 1741). He traveled as a theater conductor; was appointed court conductor at Brunswick (1751); in 1762 he received a similar post at Kassel, retiring in 1780. He wrote a number of German operas in Brunswick, and 3 Italian operas in Kassel. An oratorio, Isacco, a requiem, and other church works are also noteworthy.

Fiqué, Karl, German organist; b. St. Magnus, near Bremen, April 17, 1867; d. Brooklyn, Dec. 7, 1930. After studying at the Leipzig Cons. with Carl Reinecke he emigrated to the U. S. (1887) and settled in Brooklyn, where he served as church organist and lectured at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences (1897-1915). He married the soprano Katherine Noack (d. 1940). He wrote 2 comic operas in German: Priese-witz (Brooklyn, 1893) and Der falsche Mufti (N. Y., 1901); a string quartet, several choral works, and numerous piano pieces. Shortly before his death, he finished an operetta, Merry Madrid.

Firkušny, Rudolf, brilliant Czech pianist; b. Feb. 11, 1912 at Napajedlá, Moravia. He studied at the Cons. of Brno with Vilem Kurz (piano) and with Janáček (composition); later in Prague with Karel and Suk; also studied with Schnabel. He toured in Europe as pianist (1928-38); made his American début in Town Hall, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1938. Since 1942, he has appeared as soloist with major symph. orchestras in America; toured South America in 1943. He has composed a piano concerto (Prague, 1929, composer soloist) and numerous piano pieces.

Fischer, Carl, music publisher; b. Buttstädt, Thuringia, Dec. 7, 1849; d. New York, Feb. 14, 1923. He came to the U. S. in 1872 and established a musical instrument business in New York in that year. Later the firm undertook all branches of publishing, especially of instrumental music, and has become one of the most important of American music publishing organizations. In 1907, the firm began the publication of a monthly periodical, the 'Musical Observer,' under the editorship of Gustav Sängers; in 1923 the business was incorporated and Carl Fischer's son Walter S. Fischer (b. April 18, 1882; d. New York, April 26, 1946) became president. After his death Frank H. Conner was appointed president. The firm represents the Composers' Music Corp., the Paterson Publishers, the De Paul Univ. Press, Allan & Co., Eastman School of Music, G. Henle-Verlag, and Societas Universalis Sanctae Ceciliae; also acquired the catalogs of William S. Pond & Co. (Robin Ellis), and the Fillmore Music House. Beside its two buildings in New York, the firm maintains branch stores in Boston and Chicago, and branch offices in Chicago, Dallas, and Los Angeles.

Fischer, Edwin, pianist and conductor; b. Basel, Oct. 6, 1886; pupil of Hans Huber in Basel and of M. Krause in Berlin; 1905-14, teacher at the Stern Cons., Berlin; 1926-28, conductor of the Musikverein, Lübeck; 1928-30, of the Bachverein, Munich; later, of a chamber orch. in Berlin; has made many successful tours of Europe; since 1942 living near Lucerne. He publ. J. S. Bach (Potsdam, 1945); Musikalische Betrachtungen (Wiesbaden, 1950; in English as Reflections on Music, London, 1951); Beethovens Klaviersonaten (1957).—Cf. B. Gavoty, Edwin Fischer (Geneva, 1954).

Fischer, Emil, operatic bass singer; b. Brunswick, June 13, 1838; d. Hamburg, Aug. 11, 1914. He received his vocal training entirely from his parents, who were opera singers; made his début in Graz in 1857; then was with the Danzig Opera (1863-70); in Rotterdam (1875-80) and with the Dresden Opera (1880-85); then went to America; made his début with the Metropolitan Opera Co. on Nov. 25, 1885, and remained on the staff for more than 20 years. He sang in public for the last time at the age of 71; lived mostly in N. Y. as vocal teacher; returned to Germany shortly before his death. He was particularly famous for his Wagnerian roles; his greatest impersonation was Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger.

Fischer, Erich, German music editor and composer; b. Kreuzlingen, April 8, 1887. He studied musicology in Berlin at the Univ. under Kretzschmar, Stumpf, and Friedländer; received his Dr. phil. in 1909 with the dissertation Über die Musik der Chinesen (publ. by the 'Internationale Musik Gesellschaft,' 1910); in 1914, he founded in Berlin the 'Musikalische Hauskomödien,' a society for the performance of little-known music by German composers, arranged as 'singspiele' with new words; for this venture he organized his own company of singers. He edited the songs of J. A. Sixt (Donauessingen, 1932); composed musical comedies (Das heilige Kapplein, produced in Hanover, 1913, etc.).

Fischer, Frederick, conductor; b. Munich, May 25, 1868; d. St. Louis, April 17, 1931. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in Munich; then came to the U.S., where he conducted the California Opera Co.; in 1904 he settled in St. Louis and was assistant conductor of the St. Louis Symph.; also guest conductor of the Boston People's Orch., choral societies, etc.; wrote music to the pageant Missouri 100 Years Ago, choral works, and songs.

Fischer, Johann Kaspar Ferdinand, German composer of keyboard music; b. c. 1665; d. Rastatt, March 27, 1746. He served as house musician to the Margrave of Baden (1696-1716). During his lifetime he publ. the following: Le journal du printemps, op.

1 (airs and ballet numbers in the style of Lully; 1696; reprinted in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst,' X, 1); Les pièces de clavecin, op. 2 (1696; reprinted 1698, under the title Musikalisches Blumen-Büschlein); Vesper Psalms, op. 3 (1701); Ariadne musica neo-organoedum, op. 4 (1715; contains 20 preludes and fugues for organ in 20 different keys, thus foreshadowing Bach's Well-tempered Clavier); Litaniae Lauretanae, op. 5 (1711); also Musikalischer Parnassus (9 keyboard suites named after the 9 Muses); and Blumenstrauß (a series of 8 preludes and fugues in 8 church modes). For discussion of Fischer's influence on Bach, see Max Seiffert, Geschichte der Klavier-Musik, vol. 1 (Berlin, 1899); also R. Opel, Fischers Einfluss auf Bach, in the 'Bach-Jahrbuch' (1910).

Fischer, Joseph, music publisher; b. Silberhausen, Germany, April 9, 1841; d. Springfield, Ohio, Nov. 24, 1901. He emigrated to the U.S. as a youth, and established the firm of J. Fischer & Bro. in Dayton, Ohio (1864) with his brother Ignaz Fischer; in 1875 the firm moved to N. Y. Joseph Fischer was succeeded at his death by his sons George and Carl; the sons of George Fischer, Joseph and Eugene, became proprietors of the firm in 1920. During its early years, J. Fischer & Bro. specialized in music for the Roman Catholic Church, but later expanded their activities to include instrumental music by contemporary composers, organ works, and also light opera.

Fischer, Ludwig, German bass singer; b. Mainz, Aug. 18, 1745; d. Berlin, July 10, 1825. He sang in Mainz, Mannheim, and Vienna, and with great success in Paris (1783) and Italy; from 1788 till 1815 was in Berlin. Mozart wrote the part of Osmin, in Die Entführung aus dem Serail, for Fischer.

Fischer, Michael Gotthard, German organist and composer, b. Alach, near Erfurt, June 3, 1773; d. Erfurt, Jan. 12, 1829. He entered the Paris Cons. as a child of nine, and studied piano with Marmontel, organ with Benoist, and composition with Ambroise Thomas till 1860, taking successively all first prizes. He then taught piano at the Paris Cons. (from 1887). He wrote many effective piano pieces (12 Préludes, 2 Ballades, 3 Feuilles d'Album, 12 Pièces de Genre, etc.).

Fistoulari, Anatole, Russian conductor; b. Kiev, Aug. 20, 1907. He studied with his father, the opera conductor Gregory Fistoulari; as a child prodigy, he conducted Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symph. at the age of 8; in 1920 went to Rumania and Germany; was in Paris as ballet conductor in 1933; later toured with the Ballet-Russe de Monte Carlo in the U. S. (1937). He was in the French Army in 1939; in 1940 made his way to London, where he settled as orchestral and theatrical conductor.

Fitelberg (fē'-tel-berg), Gregor, Polish conductor and composer; b. Dvinsk, Latvia, Oct. 18, 1879; d. Katowice, June 10, 1953. He studied at the Warsaw Cons. with Barcewicz and Noskowski; then played the violin in the Warsaw Philharmonic; became concertmaster, and eventually (1908) conductor. After the outbreak of World War I he went to Russia, as conductor of symphony concerts; in 1921 he went to Paris; conducted performances of Diaghilev's Russian Ballet; in 1923 he returned to Poland; in 1940 he was in Buenos Aires, after fleeing Warsaw via Vienna, Italy, and Paris; from 1942-45 he was in the U.S.; in 1947 he went back to Poland, and became conductor at the Polish Radio. At his symphonic concerts he gave many performances of works by Polish composers; was one of the best interpreters of Szymanowski. In 1951 the Polish government awarded him a state prize. Fitelberg was also a composer; he wrote 2 symphonies (1903; 1906); a Polish rhapsody for orch. (1913); a symph. poem In der Meerestiefe (1913), and some chamber music; his violin sonata received the Paderewski prize in 1896.

Fitelberg, Jerzy, talented Polish composer; son of Gregor Fitelberg; b. Warsaw, May 20, 1903; d. New York, April 25, 1951. He received his musical education mainly from his father; then took courses in the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. In 1933 he went to Paris; in May 1940 he came to the U.S., where he remained until his death. In 1936 he received an Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge award for his string quartet, which was performed at the Coolidge Festival of Chamber Music in Washington (1937); his orchestral and chamber music was often performed in Europe; much of it was published. His works are couched in the neo-Classical style, and are cosmopolitan in thematic substance; they are distinguished by energetic rhythm and strong contrapuntal texture; only a few of his compositions reflect Polish melos.—Works: 3 suites for orch. (1926-30); concerto for string orch. (1928); arrangement of the second string quartet; violin concerto No. 1 (Vienna Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, June 20, 1932); violin concerto No. 2 (Paris Festival, June 22, 1937); The Golden Horn for string orch. (1942); Nocturne for orch. (New York Philh., March 28, 1946, Rodzinski conducting); octet for wind instruments; 5 string quartets; sonata for 2 violins and 2 pianos; sonatina for 2 violins; 3 Polish Folksongs for women's voices (1942).—Cf. Emilia Elsner, Jerzy Fitelberg, in the 'Ches-terian' (Sept.-Oct., 1939).

Fitzwilliam, Viscount Richard, wealthy collector of paintings, engravings, books, and musical MSS; b. London, 1745; d. there, Feb. 4, 1816. He bequeathed his library to the Univ. of Cambridge. The musical MSS include especially valuable works: the immensely important Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (often wrongly termed 'Virginal Booke of Queen Elizabeth'), anthems in Purcell's hand, sketches by Handel, and many early Italian compositions. Vincent Novello edited and publ. 5 vols. of the Italian sacred music as 'The Fitzwilliam Music' (London, 1825); J. A. Fuller Maitland and A. H. Mann made a complete catalogue of it (1893). The entire contents of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book were edited and published by J. A. Fuller Maitland and William Barclay Squire (Breitkopf & Härtel, 1894-99; reprint, N. Y., 1949).—Cf. E. W. Naylor, An Elizabethan Virginal Book (London, 1905).

Flackton, William, English organist and composer; b. Canterbury, March, 1709; d. there, Jan. 5, 1798. He was organist at Faversham from 1735-52; wrote church music; also 6 'overtures' for harpsichord; 6 sonatas for 2 violins and cello; 3 cello sonatas and 3 viola sonatas; a song The Chase (with a horn obbligato).

Flagg, Josiah, American conductor; b. Woburn, Mass., May 28, 1737; d. c. 1795. He organized and drilled the first regular militia band of Boston (most probably the first group of that nature in America); on June 29, 1769, presented its first concert and on Oct. 28, 1773, gave a 'final Grand Concert' at Faneuil Hall with about 50 players. Subsequently he settled in Providence and served there as lieutenant colonel during the Revolution; little is known of his other activities. He publ. A Collection of the best Psalm Tunes in 2, 3 and 4 parts . . . To which is added some Hymns and Anthems, the Greater part of them never before printed in America (introduced the anthem to the English colonies; 1764; engraved by Paul Revere) and Sixteen Anthems . . . To which is added a few Psalm Tunes (1766). Flagg was the first in America to establish a connection between sacred and secular music. That he was an educated practical musician and was acquainted with European music is evidenced by the type of programs he conducted.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Early Concert Life in America (Leipzig, 1907); 'Dictionary of American Biography,' vol. VI (N. Y., 1931).

Flagler, Isaac Van Vleck, American organist; born Albany, N. Y., May 15, 1844; d. Auburn, N. Y., March 16, 1909. He studied with H. W. A. Beale at Albany, Edouard Batiste in Paris, and others. He was organist and music director of various churches; at Chautauqua he was organist and musical lecturer for 20 years; was also organ teacher at Syracuse and Cornell Univs., and at Utica Cons.; co-founder of the American Guild of Organists. He published The Organist's Treasury, Flagler's New Collection of Organ Music, and Flagler's New Collection for Choirs and Soloists.

Flagstad, Kirsten, dramatic soprano; b. Hamar, Norway, July 12, 1895. She studied with her mother (coach at the Oslo Opera) and with Ellen Schytte-Jacobsen in Oslo; 1913, début there at the National Theater as Nuri in d'Albert's opera Tiefland; then sang (till 1927) in oratorio, operettas, and musical comedies in Oslo; 1928-30, engaged at the Storm Theater at Göteborg; 1931-32, again at the National Theater; in 1933 and 1934, appeared at the Bayreuth Festival. On Feb. 2, 1935, she made a very successful début at the Metropolitan Opera as Sieglinde in Die Walküre, and sang the roles of Isolde (her most celebrated impersonation), Brünnhilde, Elizabeth, Elsa, and Kundry in her first season there; appeared at Covent Garden, London, as Isolde, May 18, 1936. She also sang with the San Francisco Opera (1935-38), Chicago City Opera (1937), and in numerous guest appearances throughout the U. S. and Australia. In 1941 she returned to Norway; in March, 1947, came to the U. S. for a concert tour, and again in 1948; retired from the concert stage in Dec., 1953; since then, living in Kristiansand, Norway.—Cf. The Flagstad Manuscript (an autobiography narrated to Louis Biancolli; N. Y., 1952).

Flament (fläh-mähn'), Édouard, French composer, conductor, and bassoon virtuoso; b. Douai, Aug. 27, 1880. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Bourdeau (bassoon), Lavignac, Caussade, and Lenepveu (composition). After graduation (1898), he played the bassoon in the Lamoureux Orch. (1898-1907) and in the Société des Instruments à Vent (1898-1923); conducted opera and concerts in Paris (1907-12), Algiers (1912-14), Marseilles (1919-20), summer concerts at Fontainebleau (1920-22); then with the Diaghilev Ballet in Monte Carlo, Berlin, London, Spain (1923-29). In 1930 he became conductor at the Paris Radio; was still active there in 1957. An exceptionally prolific composer, he wrote between 1894 and 1957 some 175 opus numbers, including the operas La Fontaine de Castalie, Le Cœur de la Rose, Lydéric et Rosèle; 8 symphonies; Océano Nox, symph. poem; Variations radio-phoniques; 5 piano concertos; Concertstück for bassoon and orch.; Divertimento for 6 bassoons; quintet for 5 bassoons; quartet for 4 bassoons; 3 string quartets; violin sonata, viola sonata, 2 cello sonatas, etc.; about 180 film scores. Few of his works are publ.; most of the larger ones remain unperformed.

Flammer, Harold, American music publisher; b. New York, Sept. 19, 1889; d. Bronxville, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1939. He studied at Princeton Univ. (Litt. B., 1911). In 1913 he entered G. Schirmer, Inc.; 1917, established Harold Flammer, Inc.; 1929-34, Vice-President and Business Manager of G. Schirmer; 1934, re-established own firm. During the years 1932-36 he was at various times treasurer, president, and vice-president of Music Publ. Association of the U. S. He published piano compositions, songs, and many song texts and translations; was a contributor to 'Musical America' and the 'Mus. Quarterly.'

Flaxland, Gustav-Alexandre, music publisher; b. Strasbourg, Jan. 26, 1821; d. Paris, Nov. 11, 1895. He studied at the Paris Cons.; founded a music publishing business in 1847, and, by acquiring copyrights of compositions of Schumann and Wagner, made it prominent. He sold his firm to Durand et Schönewerk in 1870, and commenced making pianos.

Flecha, Mateo, Spanish composer; b. Prades, Tarragona, 1530; d. Solsona, Lérida, Feb. 20, 1604. He received his musical education from his uncle, also named Mateo Flecha (1481-1553); was chamber musician at the courts of Charles V and Philip II; from about 1575 he was in Prague; returned to Spain in 1599. He publ. a book of madrigals in Venice (1568), and a collection Las Ensaladas (Prague, 1581) containing 'ensaladas' (quodlibets, comic songs) by his uncle, and some by himself. This collection was brought out in a modern edition by Higinio Anglés, with an introductory essay on the Flechas (Barcelona, 1954).

Fleck, Henry T., American music educator; b. Buffalo, N. Y., April 28, 1863; d. Rockaway Beach, Long Island, N. Y., Sept. 6, 1937. He studied music with Wüllner at Cologne; upon returning to the U. S., he organized in New York the Euterpe Choral Society (1889) and the Harlem Philharmonic Society (1890), which he conducted till 1901; also established free concerts of chamber music in N. Y. From 1901 until his death he was prof. of music at Hunter College, N. Y.

Flégier (flä-zh'yä), Ange, French composer; b. Marseilles, Feb. 25, 1846; d. there, Oct. 8, 1927. He studied first at the Cons. of Marseilles and then at the Paris Cons. (1866-9), returning to Marseilles in 1870.—Works: Fatima, comic opera; Ossian, lyric poem for soli, chorus, and orch.; Françoise de Rimini, cantata; miscellaneous orch. pieces (Valse du rêve, Badinage, Habanera, Menuet, Berceuse, Mignardise, etc.); many songs, of which Le Cor is the best known.

Fleischer, Anton, Hungarian conductor and composer; b. Makó, May 30, 1891. He studied in Budapest with Kodály; 1913-15, first conducted at the Budapest Municipal Theater; conducted at the Budapest Opera (1915) and taught at the National Cons. from 1918; won the Hungarian State Prize with his symph. on Oscar Wilde's The Nightingale and the Rose (1915).

Fleischer, Editha, German soprano; b. Falkenstein, April 5, 1898. She studied at the Scharwenka Cons. in Berlin and with Lilli Lehmann; engaged at the Berlin Opera from 1919 to 1921; appeared also at Salzburg Festivals, and was a member of a Wagnerian Opera co. that toured America in 1922-24; made her début at the Metropolitan Opera, Nov. 5, 1926, and remained on the roster until 1935, when she returned to Europe.

Fleischer, Oskar, eminent German musicologist; b. Zörbig, Nov. 2, 1856; d. Berlin, Feb. 8, 1933. He studied philology at Halle (1878-83); then musicology in Berlin under Spitta (till 1885); after 3 years spent in research work in various libraries, he returned to Berlin and was appointed custodian of the royal collection of music instruments (1888). In 1892 he became privatdozent at the Univ. of Berlin; promoted to professorship in 1895. He was a founder and first president of the 'Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft' (1899); together with Johannes Wolf, edited its publications, the 'Zeitschrift' and 'Sammelbände,' until 1904. In 1892 he represented the Prussian government at the Vienna Exhibition, of which he publ. an exhaustive report, Die Bedeutung der internationalen Musik- und Theaterausstellung in Wien für Kunst und Wissenschaft der Musik (Leipzig, 1894).—Writings: Führer durch die königliche Sammlung alter Musikinstrumente (Berlin, 1892); Musikinstrumente aus deutscher Urzeit (1893); W. A. Mozart (1899); Führer durch die Bachausstellung (Berlin, 1901); Neumen-Studien (4 vols., 1895, 1897, 1904, 1923; the 3rd. vol. with facsimiles of late Byzantine notation; the 4th entitled Die germanischen Neumen als Schlüssel zum altchristlichen und gregorianischen Gesang). He also wrote short biographies of the masters of music in Grosse Männer (1922-23); contributed valuable articles to various German music journals.

Fleisher, Edwin A., American patron of music; b. Philadelphia, July 11, 1877. He studied at Harvard Univ. (B. A., 1899). He founded a Symphony Club in Philadelphia (1909) and engaged conductors to rehearse an amateur orch. there; at the same time he began collecting orchestral scores and complete sets of parts, which became the nucleus of the great Edwin A. Fleisher Collection presented by him to the Free Library of Philadelphia. A partial catalogue of the collection was publ. in 1935, 2nd vol. in 1945, supplement in 1956.

Fleisher, Leon, American pianist; b. San Francisco, July 23, 1928 (of Russian parents). He gave his first public concert at the age of seven; then studied with Schnabel at Lake Como, Italy (1938-39). At sixteen he was soloist with the New York Philharmonic (Nov. 4, 1944) under Pierre Monteux; subsequently played in Europe. In 1952 he won the first prize at the International competition for pianists in Brussels.

Flesch, Karl, celebrated violinist and pedagogue; b. Moson, Hungary, Oct. 9, 1873; d. Lucerne, Switzerland, Nov. 14, 1944. He was a violin pupil of Grün at the Vienna Cons. (1886-9), then of Souzay and Marsick at the Paris Cons. (1890-4); début in Vienna, 1895; from 1897 to 1902 he was prof. at the Cons. in Bucharest and chamber virtuoso to the Queen of Rumania; from 1903-8, prof. at the Cons. in Amsterdam. The success of a series of five historical recitals in Berlin, in 1909, induced him to settle there; as a teacher he was no less successful than as a virtuoso, especially since the publication of his famous Urstudien for violin (1910); he toured all European countries, and the U. S. in 1913-14, meeting everywhere with an enthusiastic reception; taught at the Hochschule für Musik, Berlin, in 1921-22; from 1924 till 1928 was head of the violin dept. of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia; then divided his time between the U. S. and Germany; in 1933 he went to England; and then to Switzerland. Karl Flesch wrote a standard pedagogic work for violin Die Kunst des Violinspiels, transl. into 5 languages (vol. I, 1923; vol. II, 1928; publ. in English, N. Y., 1930); also publ. new editions of Kreutzer's Études, Mozart's violin sonatas (with Schnabel), 20 Études of Paganini, and the violin concertos of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Paganini, Brahms, etc. He also wrote Das Klangproblem im Geigenspiel (1931; in English, N. Y., 1934).—Cf. W. Altmann, Karl Flesch als Erzieher, in 'Die Musik' (XXI, 7); W. Brederode, Karl Flesch (Haarlem, 1938).

Fleta (flā'-tah), Miguel, Spanish tenor; b. Albalate, Dec. 28, 1893; d. Burgos, May 30, 1938. He studied in Barcelona; made his début in Trieste Nov. 14, 1919. After a successful career in Europe, Mexico, and South America, he came to the U. S. in 1923 and sang with the Metropolitan Opera; returned to Spain in 1926.

FLETA — FLOERSHEIM

Fleta, Pierre, French tenor, son of Miguel Fleta; b. Villefranche-sur-Mer, July 4, 1925. He studied with his mother, Louise Pierrick-Fleta, a member of La Scala; then sang as a boy soprano at Cannes; went to London, where he was engaged as a professional singer before making his opera début in Barcelona in 1949. He made a concert tour in the Middle East in 1951; then was engaged as first tenor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels (1952). He has also developed a repertory of French, Italian, Spanish, and English folksongs.

Fletcher, Alice C., American ethnologist; b. Cuba (of American parents), March 16, 1888; d. Washington, D. C., April 6, 1923. From 1886 she was assistant in ethnology at the Peabody Museum of American Archaeology and Ethnology, where she held the Thaw Fellowship, created for her in 1891; devoted her life to the study of North American Indians, among whom she lived for a number of years; 1896, became vice-president of American Association for the Advancement of Science; president of American Anthropological Society (1903) and American Folk Lore Society (1905). She is the author of Indian Story and Song from North America (1900); A Study of Omaha Indian Music (1903); Indian Games and Dances (1915); numerous articles in the 'Journal of American Folk Lore,' etc. — Cf. W. Hough, in 'American Anthropologist' (April-June, 1923); 'Dictionary of American Biography,' vol. VI (N. Y., 1931).

Fletcher, Grant, American composer and conductor; b. Hartsburg, Ill., Oct. 25, 1913; he studied at the Univ. of Michigan; then in Toronto with Healey Willan; in Rochester with Bernard Rogers and Howard Hanson; in Cleveland with Herbert Elwell. From 1945 until 1948 he was conductor of the Akron, Ohio, Orch. — Works: The Crisis, after Thomas Paine, for chorus and orch. (1945); An American Overture (Duluth, April 23, 1948); A Song for Warriors (on Yugoslav themes, Rochester, Oct. 25, 1945); Panels from a Theater Wall (Rochester, April 27, 1949); Symphony No. 1 (Rochester, April 24, 1951); 2 books of nocturnes for piano (1935); 4 American dance pieces for piano (1944); 5 string quartets; several choral works; songs.

Fletcher, Percy E., English composer; b. Derby, Dec. 12, 1879; d. London, Sept. 10, 1932. He went to London in 1899 as conductor at various theaters there; he composed many works in a light, melodious style, including the orchestral pieces Woodland Pictures, Sylvan Scenes, Parisian Sketches, Three Frivolities, the overture Vanity Fair; also a short sacred cantata, Passion of Christ.

Fleury, André, French organist and composer; b. Neuilly-sur-Seine, July 25, 1903. He studied with his father; later with Gigout, Marcel Dupré, and Louis Vierne. In 1930 he became organist at St. Augustin, Paris; in 1943 he was appointed prof. of organ playing at the École Normale de Musique; after World War II he taught at the Cons. of Dijon. Fleury has published 2 symphonies for organ and numerous other works for his instrument.

Fleury, Louis, eminent French flutist; b. Lyons, May 24, 1878; d. Paris, June 11, 1925. He studied at the Paris Cons.; from 1905 until his death was head of the famous Société moderne d'instruments à vent, also (1906) of the Société des Concerts d'autrefois (historic concerts), with which he gave concerts in England; made appearances with Melba and Calvé. Debussy composed Syrinx for unaccompanied flute for him. He edited much old flute music, including sonatas and other pieces by Blavet, Naudet, Purcell, J. Stanley, etc., and contributed to French and English periodicals (Souvenirs d'un flûtiste in 'Le Monde musical,' etc.).

Flodin, Karl, Finnish composer and music critic; b. (of German parents) Wasa, July 10, 1858; d. Helsinki, Nov. 29, 1925. A pupil of R. Faltin in Helsinki, then of the Leipzig Cons.; in 1907 he went to Buenos Aires as music critic on a German paper there; returned to Finland in 1920. He publ. numerous essays on Finnish music (in Finnish and German); wrote a biography of Martin Wegelius (1922); also composed incidental music to various plays; publ. some 80 piano pieces. He was married to the singer Adée Leander (1873-1935).

Floersheim (flors'-hīm), Otto, editor and composer, b. Aix-la-Chapelle, March 2, 1853; d. Geneva, Switzerland, Nov. 30, 1917. He was a pupil of Ferdinand Hiller at Cologne; went to New York in 1875, became editor of the 'Musical Courier' in 1880, and from 1894-1904 was manager of its Berlin branch. As a music journalist and a man of musical affairs, he was very influential in America; he was also highly regarded as a composer of competently put together piano pieces and songs in a German romantic vein.

Flood, (William Henry) Grattan, Irish organist and music historian; b. Lismore, Nov. 1, 1859; d. Enniscorthy, Aug. 6, 1928. At the age of 19 he became organist at a church in Dublin; took a few lessons from Dr. Kerbusch and Sir R. Stewart; was organist at Belfast (1878); taught music at the Jesuit College in Tullabeg and at St. Wilfrid's College, Staffordshire; in 1895 became organist at the Cathedral of Enniscorthy; Mus. Doc., Dublin Univ., 1907 (hon. c.). He achieved recognition as an archeologist, historian, and collector of Irish folksongs.—Writings: History of Irish Music (1895; 4th ed., 1927); Story of the Harp (1905); Story of the Bagpipe (1911); W. Vincent Wallace, a Memoir (1912); John Field of Dublin (Dublin, 1920); Introductory Sketch of Irish Musical History (1921); Early Tudor Composers (1925); Late Tudor Composers (1929). He contributed to Grove's 'Dictionary', 'The Catholic Encyclopaedia', 'Dictionary of National Biography'; was the editor of 'Songs and Airs of O'Carolan', 'Moore's Irish Melodies', 'Armagh Hymnal,' and 'The Spirit of the Nation.'

Floquet, Étienne Joseph, French composer; b. Aix-en-Provence, Nov. 23, 1748; d. Paris, May 10, 1785. After studying in his native town, he went to Paris; there he wrote the opera-ballet L'Union de l'Amour et des arts, produced with great success at the Académie Royale de Musique (Sept. 7, 1773); his second opera Azolan, ou le serment indiscret (Nov. 22, 1774, also at the Académie), was a fiasco. Floquet then went to Italy, where he perfected his knowledge by studying with Sala in Naples and with Martini in Bologna. Returning to Paris, he had two operas performed at the Académie: Hellé (Jan. 5, 1779) and Le Seigneur bien-faisant (Dec. 14, 1780). He also wrote a comic opera La nouvelle Omphale (Comédie-Italienne, Nov. 22, 1782). In an attempt to challenge Gluck's superiority, Floquet wrote the opera Alceste on the same subject as Gluck's famous work, but it was never produced.—Cf. A. Pougin, Étienne-Joseph Floquet (Paris, 1863); F. Huot, Étude biographique sur Étienne - Joseph Floquet (Aix, 1903).

Florence, Evangeline (real name, Houghton), American soprano; b. Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 12, 1873; d. London, Nov. 1, 1928. She studied with Henschel and Lilli Lehmann. She made her début in London, in 1892; and carried on her entire concert career in England, where she attained great popularity. She retired from the stage in 1904.

Florida, Pietro, Italian composer; b. Modica, Sicily, May 5, 1860; d. New York, Aug. 16, 1932. He studied in Naples with Cesi (piano) and Lauro Rossi (composition); while at the Naples Cons. he published several piano pieces which became quite popular. On May 7, 1882, he brought out in Naples a comic opera Carlotta Cleprier, but despite a fairly successful production he burned the MS and undertook serious study for another period of several years; in 1889 completed a symphony, which won a prize. From 1888 to 1892 he taught at the Cons. of Palermo; then lived in Milan. In 1904 he emigrated to the U.S.; taught at the Cincinnati College of Music (1906-8); in 1908 settled in New York; in 1913 organized and conducted an Italian Symph. Orch. there. His music (mostly for the stage) is written in a competent manner, in the style of Mascagni.—Works: operas Maruzza (Venice, Aug. 23, 1894); La Colonia libera (Rome, May 7, 1899); Paoletta (Cincinnati, Aug. 29, 1910); also The Scarlet Letter (1902; not produced) and Malia (completed in 1932; not produced); incidental music to Oscar Wilde's A Florentine Tragedy (N. Y., Nov. 27, 1917); piano pieces and songs. Florida edited a valuable collection in 2 vols., 'Early Italian Songs and Airs' (Philadelphia, 1923).

Florimo, Francesco, Italian musician and historian; b. S. Giorgio Morgeto, Calabria, Oct. 12, 1800; d. Naples, Dec. 18, 1888. In 1817 he entered the Collegio di Musica at Naples; Furno, Elia, Zingarelli, and Tritto were his teachers; from 1826-51 he was librarian there. He was Bellini's closest friend; in 1876 he escorted the latter's remains from Paris to Catania, and publ. the pamphlet 'Trasporto delle ceneri di Bellini a Catania'; composed Sinfonia Funebre per la morte di Bellini; founded the 'Bellini Prize,' a competition open to Italian composers not over 30. His chief work is Cenno storico sulla scuola musicale di Napoli (Naples, 1869-71, 2 vols.; republ. 1880-84, in 4 vols., as La scuola musicale di Napoli e i suoi Conservatori), a complete musical history of Naples and its conservatories, their teachers and pupils, etc.; despite numerous errors, it remains an extremely valuable guide. Other writings: Riccardo Wagner ed i Wagneristi (Naples, 1876); Bellini, memorie e lettere (Florence, 1882); an Album Bellini (Naples, 1886), containing opinions by many eminent musicians on Bellini's works; and a Metodo di canto, adopted by the Paris Cons. and described as "magistrale" by Rossini. Florimo was also an excellent singing teacher. — Cf. G. Megali, Francesco Florimo (Naples, 1901).

Florio, Caryl (real name, William James Robjohn), organist; b. Tavistock, Devon, Nov. 3, 1843; d. Morgantown, S. C., Nov. 21, 1920. He left England at the age of 14 and settled in New York; was engaged as a singer and organist at various churches in New York, Baltimore, Indianapolis, etc.; conducted choral societies in New York; eventually settled in Asheville, N. C. He wrote two operas to his own texts: Guilda (1879); and Uncle Tom (Philadelphia, 1882); several operettas; the cantatas Song of the Elements (1872) and Bridal of Bethlehem; two symphonies; a quintet for piano and 4 saxophones (the first work written for such an ensemble); piano concerto; 4 violin sonatas, and 2 piano sonatas.

Flothus (flot'-häus), Marius, eminent Dutch composer; b. Amsterdam, Oct. 30, 1914. He studied with Hans Brandts-Buys; developed an individual style, redolent of neo-romanticism, but marked by a severely disciplined contrapuntal technique. He has written a cello sonata (1938); concerto for chamber orch. (1940); flute concerto (Utrecht, Dec. 19, 1945); horn concerto (1945); piano concerto (1948); partita for violin and piano (1950); Love and Strife, for contralto, flute, oboe d'amore, viola, and cello (Hilversum Radio, Sept. 26, 1951); violin concerto (Utrecht, Jan. 14, 1952); Sonata da camera for flute and harp (1952); 6 Canonic Inventions for 2 recorders (1952); Divertimento for clarinet, bassoon, horn, violin, viola, and double bass (Amsterdam, June 9, 1952); Fantasia for harp and chamber orch. (Amsterdam, May 26, 1955); Sinfonietta Concertante for clarinet, saxophone, and chamber orch. (Amsterdam, June 2, 1955); Rondo festoso for orch. (Amsterdam, July 7, 1956); etc. He has also publ. several monographs, and edited works by Monteverdi and Mozart.

Flotow (flöh-töh), Friedrich von, famous German opera composer; b. Teutendorf, April 26, 1812; d. Darmstadt, Jan. 24, 1883. He was a scion of an old family of nobility, tracing its ancestry to the 13th century; received his first music lessons from his mother; then was a chorister in Güstrow. At the age of 16 he went to Paris, where he studied piano with J. P. Pixis and composition with Reicha. After the revolution of 1830, he returned home; but went to Paris again the following year; there he met Auber, Rossini, and Meyerbeer, and resolved to devote himself to opera. He associated himself with the influential composer Grisar, and contributed several arias and other numbers to Grisar's productions; his first independent work in Paris was the opera Le Naufrage de la Méduse (1839); then followed L'Esclave de Camoëns; also a ballet Lady Henriette (1844). He achieved his decisive success with the romantic opera Alessandro Stradella, based on the life of the composer Stradella; it was staged first in Hamburg (1844), and was produced subsequently in Paris and elsewhere with excellent success. Three years later, the production of his opera Martha (Vienna, 1847) established him as a celebrity; in this opera, which still retains its popularity after a century, Flotow demonstrated his ability to combine the German romantic spirit with Parisian elegance; the libretto (and some of the music) was elaborated from his early ballet Lady Henriette, with a setting in Queen Anne's England; an authentic Irish tune, The Last Rose of Summer, is used in the score as a recurrent theme, lending a certain nostalgic charm to an otherwise incongruous story. Flotow's aristocratic sympathies made it psychologically difficult for him to remain in Paris after the revolution of 1848; he subsequently lived in Schwerin, where he held the post of intendant of court music (1855-63); traveled in Austria and Italy, and revisited Paris (then under the Second Empire); in 1880 he retired and lived near Darmstadt. The list of his compositions includes: Operas: Pierre et Catherine (Schwerin, 1835); Serafine (Royau-mont, Oct. 30, 1836); Le Comte de Saint-Mégrin (Royau-mont, June 10, 1838); Le Naufrage de la Méduse (with Grisar and Pilati; Paris, May 31, 1839; in German as Die Matrosen, Hamburg, Dec. 23, 1845); L'Esclave de Camoëns (Paris, Dec. 1, 1843); Alessandro Stradella (Hamburg, Dec. 30, 1844); L'Âme en peine (or Leoline; Paris, June 29, 1846); Martha (Vienna, Nov. 25, 1847; his greatest success); Sophia Catharina, or Die Grossfürstin (Berlin, Nov. 19, 1850); Indra (a revision of L'Esclave de Camoëns, with a German libretto; Vienna, Dec. 18, 1852); Rübezahl (Frankfurt, Nov. 26, 1853); Albin, or Der Pflegsohn (Vienna, 1856; revived under the title Der Müller von Meran, Königsberg, Jan. 15, 1860); Pianella (Schwerin, Dec. 27, 1857); La Veuve Grapin (Paris, Sept. 21, 1859); Naida (St. Petersburg, Dec. 11, 1865); Zilda (Paris, May 28, 1866); Am Runenstein

(Prague, April 13, 1868); L'Ombre (Paris, July 7, 1870); also separate numbers for Grisar's operas Lady Melvil (1838) and L'Eau merveilleuse (1839). Ballets: Lady Henriette (Paris, Feb. 22, 1844); Die Libelle (Schwerin, Aug. 8, 1856); Die Gruppe der Thetis (Schwerin, Aug. 18, 1858); Tannkönig (Schwerin, Dec. 22, 1861); Der Königsschuss (Schwerin, May 22, 1864). Instrumental music: Trio de salon for piano, violin, and cello (1850); violin sonata (1861); Chants du soir for cello and piano (1845); Études for piano 4-hands (1872); a piano concerto in MS.—Bibl.: G. von Flotow, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Familie von Flotow (Dresden, 1844); W. Neumann, Friedrich von Flotow (Kassel, 1855); F. von Flotow, Erinnerungen aus meinem Leben (in Lewinsky's Vor den Coulissen, Berlin, 1882); R. Swoboda, Friedrich von Flotows Leben; von seiner Witwe (Leipzig, 1892); B. Bardi-Poswiansky, Flotow als Opernkomponist (Königsberg, 1927).

Flower, Sir Newman, English publisher and writer on music; b. Fontmell Magna, Dorset, July 8, 1879. He joined the firm of Cassel & Co. in 1906; purchased it in 1927. As an avocation, he became deeply interested in music; publ. an extensive biography, G. F. Handel (1923; revised ed., 1947); Sir Arthur Sullivan, His Life and Letters (with Herbert Sullivan; 1927; revised ed., 1950); Franz Schubert (1928; revised ed., 1949); also publ. a volume of memoirs, Just as it Happened (1950). He was knighted in 1938.

Floyd, Carlisle, talented American composer; b. Latta, South Carolina, June 11, 1926; studied at Syracuse Univ. with Ernst Bacon; obtained a M. Mus. degree there; also took private lessons with Rudolf Firkušný. In 1947 he joined the staff of the School of Music, Florida State Univ., Tallahassee. His musical drama in 2 acts and 10 scenes, Susannah, was produced there (Feb. 24, 1955); it was later staged at the City Center, N. Y. (Sept. 27, 1956); received the Music Critics Circle of New York Award as the best opera of the year. Floyd's other works include Slow Dusk, a musical play in one act (1949); Fugitives, a musical drama in 3 acts (1951); Lost Eden for 2 pianos (ballet; 1952); Pilgrimage, a cycle of 5 songs (1955), and other vocal and instrumental pieces.

Flury, Richard, Swiss composer; b. Biberist, March 26, 1896. He studied musicology in Basel, Bern, and Geneva, then theory and composition with Kurth, Hubert, Lauber, and Marx; conducted many orchestras and choral societies in Switzerland (Zürich, Bern, and Solothurn); since 1931, teaching at the Solothurn Canton School.—Works: operas: Eine florentinische Tragödie (1926), Die helle Nacht (1932), Casanova e l'Albertoli (1937); ballet Die alte Truhe; several festival music scores; 8 symphonies: No. 1 (1923), Fastnachts-Symphonie (1928), Tessiner Symphonie (No. 2, 1936), Waldsymphonie (1942), Bucheggbergische Symphonie (No. 3, 1946), No. 4 (1950), No. 5 (1952), No. 6 (1953); 6 symph. overtures; 3 violin concertos (1933, 1940, 1944); 2 piano concertos (1927, 1943); chamber music: oboe sonata (1926), 2 cello sonatas (1937, 1941), 4 string quartets (1926, 1929, 1938, 1940), piano quintet (1948); 7 piano sonatas; 50 romantische Stücke for piano; 24 preludes for piano; 15 military marches and other music for band; choruses; about 150 songs. He wrote an autobiography, Lebenserinnerungen (1950; with a list of works).

Foch (real name Fock), Dirk, composer and conductor; b. Batavia, Java (where his father was Governor General of the Dutch East Indies), June 18, 1886. He studied in Holland and Germany; began his career in Sweden; conducted the Göteborg Symph. Orch. (1913-15); was guest conductor of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam and of the orch. at The Hague (1917-19). He made his American début as conductor with a specially assembled orch. at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., April 12, 1920; also conducted orchestral groups in the U. S., and the Konzertverein in Vienna. In 1928 he settled in N. Y. Among his compositions are Ein hohes Lied (5 fragments from the Bible), for recitation and orch. (Amsterdam, 1931); a musical pageant in the style of the medieval mystery plays, From Aeon to Aeon; 3 ballades for piano (1913); a cycle of songs from the Chinese (1921); Java Sketches for piano (1948), etc.

Foerster, Adolph Martin, American composer; b. Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 2, 1854; d. there, Aug. 10, 1927. He owed his first musical training to his mother; studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Richter; then settled in Pittsburgh, where he was active as a teacher of singing and piano. He composed Dedication March for the opening of Carnegie Music Hall in Pittsburgh (Nov. 7, 1895); symph. poem Thunelda; violin concerto; 2 piano trios; 2 piano quartets; 2 string quartets; numerous piano works; songs.

Foerster, Josef Bohuslav, Czech composer; b. Prague, Dec. 30, 1859; d. Nový Vestec, near Stará Boleslav, May 29, 1951. He was the son of the Czech organist, Josef Förster (1833-1907). He studied organ and was for several years organist of St. Adelbert's Church in Prague; conducted choruses; wrote music criticism. He married the opera singer Berta Lauterer in 1888; when she was engaged to sing at the Municipal Theater of Hamburg in 1893, Foerster followed her, and became prof. of the Hamburg Cons. and also music critic of the 'Hamburger Nachrichten'. Subsequently his wife was engaged by Mahler for the Vienna Court Opera (1903), and Foerster obtained a position at the 'Neues Konservatorium' in Vienna. In 1918, he returned to Prague, where he held teaching positions; taught composition at the Prague Cons.; was president of the Czech Academy (1931-39); in 1945, he received the honorary title of National Artist of the Republic of Czechoslovakia. He continued to teach privately and to compose almost to the end of his very long life; many Czech composers of the 20th century were his students. Foerster wrote in every genre; his music is suffused with lyric melos, and reveals characteristic national traits in his treatment of melodic and rhythmic material. His harmonic idiom represents the general style of central European romanticism, stemming from Dvořák, and ultimately from Wagner and Brahms. — Works: operas (all first performed in Prague): Deborah (Jan. 27, 1893), Eva (Jan. 1, 1899), Jessica (April 16, 1905), Nepremoženi (The Conquerors; Dec. 19, 1918), Srdce (The Heart; Nov. 15, 1923), Bloud (The Simpleton; Feb. 28, 1936); incidental music for Shakespeare's plays Love's Labour's Lost, Twelfth Night, and Julius Caesar, and for Strindberg's Journey of Fortunate Peter; 4 masses; oratorio St. Venceslas (1928); cantata May (1936); a cantata on the subject of the Thirty Years' War (1940); cantata entitled 1945, written to celebrate the liberation of Czechoslovakia; 5 symphonies (1888, 1893, 1895, 1905, 1929); symph. poems My Youth (1900) and Enigma (1909); symph. suite Cyrano de Bergerac (1903); Solemn Overture (1907); 2 violin concertos (1911, 1926); cello concerto (1931); Capriccio for flute and small orch. (1940); 4 string quartets (1882, 1893, 1907, 1944); 3 piano trios (1883, 1894, 1921); string quintet (1886); wind quintet (1909); nonet for string and wind instruments (1931); 2 violin sonatas (1889, 1892); Sonata quasi una fantasia for violin and piano (1943); suite for viola and piano (1940). He publ. a book of memoirs, Poutník v Cizině (Prague, 1947; in German as Der Pilger, 1955). A symposium, J. B. Foerster, by various Czech writers, was publ. for his 90th birthday (Prague, 1949). See also Z. Nejedlý, J. B. Foerster (Prague, 1910); J. Bartoš, J. B. Foerster (Prague, 1923).

Fogg, Eric, English composer; b. Manchester, Feb. 21, 1903; d. London, Dec. 19, 1939. He studied organ with his father; composition with Granville Bantock; 1917-19, organist in Manchester; 1924, pianist of the Manchester station of the BBC, later becoming assistant to the North Regional musical director; from 1934, Empire musical director of the BBC and one of its conductors. He wrote Seasheen, for small orch.; The Hillside, for soli, chorus, and orch.; overture to the Comedy of Errors (1922); Poem for cello and piano; Phantasy for cello and piano; Suite for violin, cello, and harp; songs (Love and Life, The Little Folk, 3 Chinese Songs, etc.); piano pieces; choral works; etc.

Foggia (foh'-jäh), Francesco, Italian composer; b. Rome, c. 1604; d. there, Jan. 8, 1688. He was a pupil of A. Cifra; served at several German courts; returning to Rome, he was maestro di cappella at the Lateran (1636-61); at San Lorenzo in Damaso (1661), and, from 1677, at Santa Maria Maggiore. A prolific and masterly composer, he continued the traditions of the Roman School. He wrote the oratorios David fugiens a facie Saul and San Giovanni Battista (1670); numerous masses a cappella a 3-9 (also a few with organ); litanies, motets, etc.

Fogliani (foh-l'yah'-nē), Ludovico, Italian theorist; b. Modena, 2d half of 15th cent.; d. there, 1539. Famous for his book Musica theórica . . . (Venice, 1529), in which he preceded Zarlino in declaring the correct proportion of the major third to be 4:5, and in distinguishing between the major and minor (greater and lesser) semitones. In Petrucci's 'Frottole' (1504-8) are some specimens of his compositions.

Foldes, Andor, concert pianist; b. Budapest, Dec. 21, 1913; studied at the Budapest Music Academy with Dohnányi; gave concerts in Europe until 1939, when he came to the U. S.; naturalized in 1948. He won the International Liszt Prize in 1933 at a piano contest in Budapest. He is the author of a book Two on a Continent (in collaboration with his wife, Lili Foldes; N. Y., 1947); and of Keys to the Keyboard (N. Y., 1948; transl. into several languages).

Foley (Signor Foli), Allan James, bass singer; b. Cahir, Tipperary, Ireland, Aug. 7, 1835; d. Southport, England, Oct. 20, 1899. He was a pupil of Bisaccia in Naples; from 1862-4 he sang in opera at Catania, Turin, Milan, and Paris, as 'Signor Foli'. He then sang at Her Majesty's Theatre, London (1865), in Covent Garden and Drury Lane; also in America, Austria, Russia, Australia, and South Africa (1893).

Folville, Juliette Eugénie-Émilie, composer; b. Liège, Belgium, Jan. 5, 1870; d. Dourgne, France, Oct. 28, 1946. She studied piano with her father, then violin with César Thomson. When she was only 17, her Chant de Noël was performed at the Liège Cathedral. In 1898 she was appointed professor at the Liège Cons. After the outbreak of World War I in 1914, she settled in Bournemouth, England, where she remained several years as a teacher, later returning to the Continent. She wrote an opera, Atala (Lille, 1892); Oceano Nox (symphonic poem); Eva (dramatic scene); miscellaneous pieces for piano, violin, organ; choruses.

Fomin (foh-mēn), Evstigney Ipatovitch, one of the earliest Russian national composers; b. St. Petersburg, Aug. 16, 1761; d. April, 1800. He studied music at the St. Petersburg Academy of Arts and graduated in 1782; was sent to Bologna to study with Padre Martini; returned to St. Petersburg in 1785; then became singing teacher and operatic coach at the theatrical school there. He composed about 10 operas, including Novgorod Hero Vassily Boyeslavitch (St. Petersburg, Dec. 8, 1786); Yamshtchiki (Coachmen; St. Petersburg, Jan. 13, 1787); Witch, Fortune-Teller, and Marriage-Broker (1791); Orpheus and Eurydice (St. Petersburg, Jan. 13, 1792), and The Americans (St. Petersburg, Feb. 19, 1800; MS discovered in 1940, and the opera was revived in a performance at Moscow, Jan. 17, 1947). A number of other operas were erroneously attributed to Fomin, among them the popular Miller, Wizard, Cheat, and Marriage-Broker, produced in Moscow on Jan. 31, 1779, the music of which was actually written by an obscure violinist named Sokolovsky.—Cf. A. Finagin, E. Fomin, in the collection, Music in Old Russia (Leningrad, 1927); N. Find-eisen, The Earliest Russian Operas, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1933); A. Rabinovitch, Russian Opera Before Glinka (Moscow, 1948; pp. 50-57 and 85-105).

Fonseca, Julio, Costa Rican composer; b. San José, May 22, 1885; d. there, June 22, 1950. He studied at the Milan Cons. and upon his return to Costa Rica was active as church organist and teacher.—Works: Suite Tropical for band (San José, Dec. 4, 1934); Cantata a la Música (San José, Oct. 11, 1935); also a number of salon dances and arrangements of folksongs.

Fontanelli, Alfonso, Italian madrigal composer; b. Reggio Emilia, Feb. 15, 1557; d. Rome, Feb. 11, 1622. He was in the service of Duke Alfonso II of Este in Ferrara (1588-97) and of his successor, Cesare II, until 1601, when he left the court to save himself from prosecution for a suspected complicity in the assassination of his second wife's lover. However, he was again in the service of the Estes in 1605, when he was in Rome as emissary of the Duke of Modena; in 1608 he was in Modena; in 1612-13, at the Spanish court. He took holy orders in 1621. He was a friend of Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa, and may have been influenced by him in his madrigals. He published anonymously 2 books of madrigals in 5 voices: Primo libro (Ferrara, 1595; reprint, Venice, 1603); Secondo libro (Venice, 1604; reprints 1609 and 1619). He was greatly esteemed by his contemporaries; Orazio Vecchi contributed an introduction to the 1603 ed. of his Primo libro, praising him for the inventiveness and dignity of his music.—Cf. F. Vatielli, Il Principe di Venosa e Leonora d'Este (Milan, 1941); A. Einstein, The Italian Madrigal (Princeton, 1949; vol. 2, p. 703).

Foote, Arthur, eminent American composer; b. Salem, Mass., March 5, 1853; d. Boston, April 8, 1937. He studied piano with a local teacher in Salem; in 1870 he entered Harvard Univ., studying composition with J. K. Paine; he received the A.M. degree in 1875 (the first such degree in music given in America). From 1874 he also studied organ with B. J. Lang, through whose influence he obtained an organist's position at the Church of the Disciples. In 1876 he attended the Wagner Festival in Bayreuth. In 1878 he became organist in the Boston First Unitarian Church, a post that he held until 1910. In 1881 he organized in Boston a series of chamber music concerts which continued until the end of the century; he was frequently pianist with the Kneisel Quartet (1890-1910), performing several of his own works. For 50 years, from 1883, he was a successful teacher in Boston. He was a member of the Music Teachers National Association; a founding member of the American Guild of Organists, and its president from 1909-12; also member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters and Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. His music is distinguished by a fine lyrical feeling, in a romantic tradition. Many of his orchestral works were presented for the first time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra: overture, In the Mountains (Feb. 5, 1887; also performed at the Paris Exposition, July 12, 1889); Suite for Strings, D major, op. 21 (Nov. 23, 1889); symphonic prologue, Francesca da Rimini (Jan. 24, 1891); Suite in D minor, op. 36 (March 7, 1896); Suite for strings in E major, op. 63 (April 16, 1909). Of these, the Suite for Strings in E major is particularly popular. Other works include: Serenade in E major for strings, op. 25; 4 Character Pieces after Omar Khayyám, op. 48, for orch.; a cello concerto; A Night Piece for flute and strings; the cantatas (for chorus and piano or orchestra): The Farewell of Hiawatha, for men's voices, op. 11; The Wreck of the Hesperus, op. 17; The Skeleton in Armor, op. 28. Chamber music: 3 string quartets, 2 piano trios, violin sonata, piano quartet, piano quintet, cello sonata, various pieces for instruments with piano accompaniment; more than 100 songs, of which the following are the best known: The Night has a Thousand Eyes; I Know a little Garden Path; Constancy; In Picardie; Ashes of Roses; also vocal quartets; church music. He was the author of several manuals: Modern Harmony (jointly with W. R. Spalding, 1905); Some Practical Things in Piano-Playing (1909); Modulation and Related Harmonic Questions (1919); also transl. Richter's Treatise on Fugue; ed. vol. 9 of 'The American History and Encyclopedia of Music' (1908-10). His autobiography was privately printed by his daughter, Katharine Foote Raffy (Norwood, Mass., 1946). See also his article A Bostonian Remembers in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1937).

Foote, George, American composer; b. Cannes, France, of American parents, Feb. 19, 1886; d. Boston, March 25, 1956. He studied with E. B. Hill at Harvard Univ.; then in Berlin with Koch and Klatte. Upon his return to the U. S. he was a member of the staff in the Music Dept. of Harvard Univ. (1921-23) and president of the South End Music School in Boston (until 1943).—Works: Variations on a Pious Theme for orch. (Boston Symph., Feb. 11, 1935); In Praise of Winter, symph. suite (Boston Symph., Jan. 5, 1940); 98th Psalm, for chorus and organ (1934); religious pantomime, We Go Forward (1943); trio for flute, harp, and violin; other chamber music.

Forbes, Henry, English composer; b. London, 1804; d. there, Nov. 24, 1859. He studied with Sir George Smart in London, and with Moscheles and Hummel in Germany; was engaged as church organist and publ. a collection of psalm tunes, National Psalmody (1843). His opera The Fairy Oak was produced in London (Oct. 18, 1845) with considerable success.

Ford, Ernest A. C., English conductor and composer, b. London, Feb. 17, 1858; d. there, June 2, 1919. He was a pupil of Arthur Sullivan in the Royal Academy of Music and of Lalo in Paris; for some years conductor at the Royal English Opera House (where he conducted the première of Sullivan's Ivanhoe in 1891), then at the Empire Theatre; 1897-1908, Royal Amateur Orch. Society; from 1916, prof. of singing at Guildhall School of Music; Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music from 1899.—Works: operas; operettas; motet, Domine Deus (for 250th anniversary of Harvard Univ.); songs, duets, etc.; author of a Short History of Music in England (1912).

Ford, Thomas, English composer and lutenist; b. c. 1580; d. Nov. (buried Nov. 17), 1648. He was appointed musician to Prince Henry in 1611, and to Charles I in 1626. He was especially successful in the 'ayre,' a type of composition developed by Dowland, in which melodic prominence is given to the upper voice. These 'ayres' appear in alternative settings, either as solo songs with lute accomp. or as 4-part a cappella songs. He wrote Musicke of Sundrie Kindes (1607; 1st part contains 11 ayres); 2 anthems in Leighton's Teares; canons in Hilton's Catch that catch can; and the famous madrigal, Since first I saw your face. MSS are at Christ Church, Oxford, and at the British Museum.

Forkel, Johann Nikolaus, famous German music historian; b. Meeder, near Coburg, Feb. 22, 1749; d. Göttingen, March 20, 1818. He was a chorister at Lüneburg (1762-66) and 'Chorpräfekt' at Schwerin (1766). In 1769 he began the study of law in Göttingen, supporting himself by teaching music. To musical history, however, he soon devoted his chief attention; he was appointed Univ. organist, and (1778) Univ. musical director; in 1780 he was made Dr. phil.—Works: Über die Theorie der Musik, sofern sie Liebhabern und Kennern derselben nothwendig und nützlich ist (1774); Musikalisch-kritische Bibliothek (Gotha, 1778-9, 3 vols.); Über die beste Einrichtung öffentlicher Concerte (1779); Genauere Bestimmung einiger musikalischer Begriffe (1780); Musikalischer Almanach für Deutschland (1782, 1783, 1784, and 1789); Allgemeine Geschichte der Musik (Leipzig, 1788 and 1801, 2 vols., covering the period up to 1550; his materials for later times went to the publisher Schwickert); Allgemeine Literatur der Musik, oder Anleitung zur Kenntniss musikalischer Bücher (1792; important as the pioneer work of its class); Über Johann Sebastian Bachs Leben, Kunst und Kunstwerke (Leipzig, 1802; the first full biography of Bach, based on information supplied by Bach's sons; in English, London 1820; new transl., London, 1920, by Terry). Forkel's unique transcriptions, in modern notation, of Graphäus' 'Missae XIII' (1539), and of the 'Liber XV. missarum' of Petrejus (1538; masses by Ockeghem, Obrecht, Josquin, and others), were engraved, and a proof pulled; but the invading French army melted down the plates for cannonballs. The proofsheets, corrected by Forkel, are in the Berlin Library. His publ. compositions include piano sonatas and songs; in MS are the oratorio Hiskias; 2 cantatas Die Macht des Gesangs and Die Hirten an der Krippe zu Bethlehem; symphonies, trios, choruses, etc.—Cf. Heinrich Edelhoff, J. N. Forkel (Göttingen, 1935); W. Franck, Musicology and its Founder, J. N. Forkel, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1949).

Formes, Karl Johann, German bass singer; b. Mülheim, Aug. 7, 1815; d. San Francisco, Dec. 15, 1889. He made his opera début at Cologne, 1841; from 1843-8 he was engaged at Mannheim; 1852-7 at the Royal Italian Opera, London; in 1857 he made his first American tour; then divided his time between Europe and America. He wrote an autobiography, Aus meinem Kunst- und Bühnenleben (1888; in English, San Francisco, 1891).

Formes, Theodor, German tenor, brother of Karl Formes; b. Mülheim, June 24, 1826; d. Endenich, near Bonn, Oct. 15, 1874. He made his début at Ofen (1846); then sang opera in Vienna (1848) and Berlin (1851-66); made a tour in America with his brother. He lost his voice temporarily; returned to the stage for a few years; then suffered a setback, became insane, and died in an asylum.

Fornia-Labey, Rita (née Newman), American soprano; b. San Francisco, July 17, 1878; d. Paris, Oct. 27, 1922. She adopted the name Fornia from her native state of California; married J. P. Labey in 1910. She studied in Paris with Jean de Reszke; began her career as a coloratura soprano; then changed to mezzo-soprano. She made her début in Germany; came to the U. S. in 1906 as a member of H. W. Savage's Opera Co.; from 1908-22 she was on the staff of the Metropolitan Opera; also made appearances at Covent Garden in London. She was particularly effective in Wagnerian roles.

Faroni, Jacopo, Italian conductor and composer; b. Verona, July 25, 1825; d. Stockholm, Sept. 8, 1858 (of cholera). He settled in Stockholm in 1849, and became court conductor there; was very successful at his public concerts, and also as a composer. He wrote several operas, among them I Gladiatori (Milan, Oct. 7, 1851). His opera Advokaten Patelin, performed posthumously in Stockholm (Dec. 4, 1858), was revived several times until 1926.

Forqueray, Antoine, French player on the viola da gamba; b. Paris, 1671; d. Nantes, June 28, 1745. He held an appointment as royal chamber musician to Louis XIV from 1690; publ. pieces for his instrument. His brother, Michel Forqueray (b. Paris, Feb. 15, 1681; d. Montfort l'Amaury, May 30, 1757), was a Paris organist; Jean Baptiste Forqueray (b. Paris, April 3, 1699; d. there, Aug. 15, 1782), son of Antoine Forqueray, was also a player on the viola da gamba; transcribed for the harpsichord some of his father's pieces; Nicolas Gilles Forqueray (b. Paris, Feb. 15, 1703; d. there, Oct. 23, 1761), another son of Antoine, was a church organist.

Forrest, Hamilton, American composer; b. Chicago, Jan. 8, 1901; he sang as a chorister in Chicago churches; studied with Adolf Weidig; has written mainly for the stage: operas Yzdra (1925; received the Bispham Memorial Medal of the American Opera Society of Chicago) and Camille (Chicago, Dec. 10, 1930, with Mary Garden in the title role); also ballet music and Water-colors for 14 wind instruments and harp.

Forsell, John, famous Swedish baritone; b. Stockholm, May 6, 1868; d. there, May 30, 1941. He was in the Swedish Army before embarking on his vocal studies. He made his début in 1896 at the Stockholm Opera; sang there from 1896 to 1901, and again in 1903-09. He was on the roster of the Metropolitan Opera during the season of 1909-10. In 1924 he was appointed director of the Stockholm Opera, a post that he held until 1939; also taught singing at the Stockholm Cons. from 1924. A jubilee collection of essays, Boken om J. Forsell, was publ. on his 70th birthday (Stockholm, 1938).

Förster, Adolph M. See Foerster.

Förster, Alban, German violinist; b. Reichenbach, Oct. 23, 1849; d. Neustrelitz, Jan. 18, 1916. He was a pupil at Reichenbach of R. Blume; later of Dresden Cons.; in 1871, court musician at Neustrelitz, also conducting the Singakademie; 1881, teacher in Dresden Cons., and cond. of the Liedertafel; 1882-1908, court Kapellmeister at Neustrelitz. He wrote a ballet Träumerei in der Waldmühle (Zwickau, 1896); orchestral and chamber music (string trios and quartets), violin music, instructive piano pieces, and songs.

Förster, August, German piano manufacturer; b. 1829; d. Löbau, Feb. 18, 1897. He founded a piano factory in Bohemia; also owned the Förster Saal in Berlin. His firm constructed the first quarter-tone piano with two manuals (1924).

Förster, Emanuel Aloys, German composer and theorist; b. Niederstein, Silesia; Jan. 26, 1748; d. Vienna, Nov. 12, 1823. After service in the Prussian Army, where he played the oboe in a band, he went to Vienna for a thorough course in music, eventually becoming a teacher himself, even though without a school position. He became friendly with Beethoven, who expressed esteem for him. Förster was a prolific composer; he wrote 48 string quartets, 5 oboe concertos, 10 violin sonatas, 21 piano sonatas, etc. His variations on arias from operas by Mozart, Sarti, and others enjoyed great popularity. He also publ. a manual, Anleitung zum Generalbass (1805; several later editions).

Forster, Georg, German composer and compiler of music; b. Amberg, c. 1510; d. Nuremberg, Nov. 12, 1568. He sang at the Heidelberg chapel in 1521, matriculating in classical studies in 1528. In 1531 he undertook medical studies at Ingolstadt; in 1534, studied humanities in Wittenberg with Melancthon. In 1544 he received his degree of doctor of medicine at Tübingen Univ.; then was medical practitioner in Amberg, Würzburg, Heidelberg, and Nuremberg (1544). He edited the valuable collection Ein Auszug guter alter und neuer teutscher Liedlein (in 5 parts; Nuremberg, 1539-56). Reprints are found in the 'Kaiser-Liederbuch,' 'Staatliches Jugend-Liederbuch,' F. Jöde's 'Das Chorbuch,' and Schering's Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (No. 88). Part II of the collection is published in R. Eitner's 'Publikationen,' vol. 29.—Cf. H. J. Moser in 'Jahrbuch Peters' (1928; p. 45 ff.).

Förster, Joseph, Czech organist and composer; b. Osojnitz, Bohemia, Feb. 22, 1833; d. Prague, Jan. 3, 1907. He was organist in several churches in Prague, and prof. of theory at the Prague Cons. He wrote organ pieces, church music, and a treatise on harmony. He was the father of the celebrated Czech composer Joseph Bohuslav Foerster.

Förster, Joseph Bohuslav. See Foerster.

Forsyth Brothers, British music publishers. The firm was established in Manchester in 1857 by Henry and James Forsyth, formerly of John Broadwood & Sons. They opened their business as piano dealers. In 1872 they began publishing music in Manchester and in London. In 1901 the firm was made a limited company with James Forsyth as president. Henry Forsyth died in 1885. The firm specializes in educational music.

Forsyth, Cecil, English composer and writer on music; b. Greenwich, Nov. 30, 1870; d. New York, Dec. 7, 1941. He received his general education at Edinburgh Univ.; then studied at the Royal College of Music with Stanford and Parry. He joined the viola section in the Queen's Hall Orch.; also was connected with the Savoy Theatre, where he produced two of his comic operas, Westward Ho! and Cinderella. After the outbreak of World War I he went to N. Y., where he remained for the rest of his life. He composed a viola concerto and Chant celtique for viola and orch.; also songs, sacred music, and instrumental pieces. He was the author of a comprehensive manual Orchestration (N. Y., 1914; second ed., 1935; reprinted, 1948); Choral Orchestration (London, 1920); also Music and Nationalism (London, 1911; a treatise on English opera); publ. (in collaboration with Stanford) A History of Music (London, 1916); and a collection of essays Clashpans (N. Y., 1933).

Forsyth, Josephine, American song composer; b. Cleveland, July 5, 1889; d. there, May 24, 1940. She was married to P. A. Meyers on April 29, 1928, and wrote a setting of the Lord's Prayer for her wedding. This setting later attained considerable popularity, and was sung for many years at Easter sunrise ceremonies at the Hollywood Bowl.

Fortlage, Karl, German theorist; b. Osnabrück, June 12, 1806; d. Jena, Nov. 8, 1881. He studied theology and philosophy; was prof. at Jena Univ. from 1846. In connection with his study of Greek philosophy, he became interested in the Greek musical system; publ. one of the earliest comprehensive works on the subject, Das musikalische System der Griechen in seiner Urgestalt (Leipzig, 1847).

Fortner, Wolfgang, German composer; b. Leipzig, Oct. 12, 1907. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Grabner (1927-31). In 1931 he joined the faculty of the Evangelical Church Music Institute at Heidelberg. In 1954 became teacher of composition at the Northwestern Music Academy in Detmold. In 1957 he was appointed dozent at the Musikhochschule in Freiburg-im-Breisgau. His works are marked by exceptional contrapuntal skill, in the style of Max Reger; the tonal fabric is clearly outlined, despite the use of an individual system of 12-tone melodies.—Works: operas: Die Witwe von Ephesus (Berlin, Sept. 17, 1952); Der Wald, after Garcia Lorca (Frankfurt, June 25, 1953); Die Bluthochzeit (Cologne, May 25, 1957); ballet Die weisse Rose, after Oscar Wilde's The Birthday of the Infanta (Berlin, April 28, 1951); concerto for strings (1932); Sinfonia concertante (1937); a symphony (1947); organ concerto (1932; revised as harpsichord concerto, 1935); piano concerto (1943); violin concerto (1947); cello concerto (1951); many choral works for various festive occasions; a cantata Die Nachgeborenen (1948); three string quartets; suite for saxophone after Sweelinck (1930); Serenade for flute, oboe, and bassoon (1948); also Phantasie über B-A-C-H for two pianos, 9 instruments, and orch., based on a 12-tone row (1950).—Cf. Karl Laux, Wolfgang Fortner, in Musik und Musiker der Gegenwart (Essen, 1949).

Foss, Hubert James, English writer on music; b. Croydon, May 2, 1899; d. London, May 27, 1953. He attended Bradfield College; 1921, became a member of the educational department of the Oxford Univ. Press and in 1924 founded the music department, of which he was head till 1941;

1922-23, critic of the 'New Witness,' 1923, of the 'Daily Graphic.' He composed Seven Poems by Thomas Hardy for baritone, male chorus, and piano; instrumental pieces; songs. He is the author of Music in My Time (1933); The Concertgoer's Handbook (London, 1946); Ralph Vaughan Williams (London, 1950); ed. 2 vols. of 'The Heritage of Music' (1927, 1934); also a contributor to many musical journals ('Music & Letters,' 'Musical Times,' etc.). His book, London Symphony; Portrait of an Orchestra, remained unfinished at his death, and was completed by Noël Goodwin (London, 1954).

Foss (real name Fuchs), Lukas, brilliant pianist and composer; b. Berlin, Aug. 15, 1922. He studied in Berlin with Julius Goldstein (piano and theory) and, from 1933, in Paris with Lazare Lévy (piano) and Noël Gallon (composition); also pupil of Moyse (flute) and Felix Wolfes (orchestration); in 1937, came with his parents to the U. S.; studied at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, with Isabelle Vengerova (piano), Rosario Scalero (composition), Randall Thompson (composition), and Fritz Reiner (conducting); for several summers was in Koussevitzky's conducting class at the Berkshire Music Center; further took a course with Hindemith at Yale Univ. He was the youngest composer to be awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship (1945). In 1944 he became the pianist of the Boston Symph. Orch., resigning in 1950, when he received a Fulbright Fellowship and went to Rome, remaining there until Dec., 1952. In Feb., 1953 he became a professor of composition and conductor of the Univ. orch. at the Univ. of California, L. A. He has appeared as piano soloist in his own piano concertos and in classical concertos with many American orchestras (Boston Symph., N. Y. Philh., St. Louis Symph., Los Angeles Philh., etc.); and in Europe (at the Venice Festival, etc.); has conducted in the U. S.; taught classes at the Berkshire Music Center. He began to compose at a very early age, and had pieces published at 15. His technical equipment is thorough; he is equally at ease in writing music in a strict polyphonic style and in a complex harmonic idiom; his modernism is circumscribed, however, by a disciplined sense of tonal organization. He has successfully essayed music in an American style.—Works: incidental music to Shakespeare's The Tempest (N. Y., March 31, 1940); The Prairie, cantata for mixed chorus, solo voices, and orch., after Carl Sandburg's poem (Collegiate Chorale, Robert Shaw, conductor, N. Y., May 15, 1944; a suite from it was performed earlier by the Boston Symph. Orch., Oct. 15, 1943); 1st piano concerto (CBS., 1944); Symph. in G (Pittsburgh Symph. Orch., Feb. 4, 1945, composer conducting); Ode for orch. (N. Y. Philh., March 15, 1945); Gift of the Magi, ballet (Boston, Oct. 5, 1945); Song of Anguish, 1st biblical solo cantata (1945; Boston Symph. Orch., March 10, 1950; composer conducting); Pantomime, for orch. (Baltimore Symph., Nov. 13, 1946); Song of Songs, 2nd biblical solo cantata (Boston Symph. Orch., March 7, 1947, Koussevitzky conducting); string quartet (1947); Set of 3 Pieces for 2 pianos; Recordare, for orch. (Boston, Dec. 31, 1948); oboe concerto (radio broadcast première, Feb. 6, 1950); opera, The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County after Mark Twain (Univ. of Indiana, Bloomington, May 18, 1950); 2nd piano concerto (Venice, Oct. 7, 1951, composer soloist; revised, 1953; Music Critics' Award, 1954); A Parable of Death, cantata, after Rilke (Louisville, March 11, 1953; a commissioned work); opera, Griffelkin (NBC television, Nov. 6, 1955); Psalms, for voices and orch. (N. Y., May 9, 1957).

Foster, Fay, American composer; b. Leavenworth, Kansas, Nov. 8, 1886. She studied at the Munich Cons. with H. Schwartz (piano) and S. Jadassohn (composition); studied piano further with M. Rosenthal and Sophie Menter; won a prize of 2000 marks at the International Waltz Competition (Berlin, 1910); 1st prize in American Composers' Contest (N. Y., 1913); also won other composition prizes; made several tours as a pianist; eventually settled in N. Y. She wrote 3 operettas; over 100 songs (The Americans Come!, My Journey's End, etc.); piano studies, etc.

Foster, Muriel, English alto singer; b. Sunderland, Nov. 22, 1877; d. London, Dec. 23, 1937. In 1896 she entered the Royal College of Music, her teacher being Anna Williams; that same year she sang at Bradford in Parry's King Saul; won an Open Scholarship in 1897; in 1898 obtained the London Musical Society's prize; and in 1900 the Musicians' Company's medal for the best student in the College. She sang before Queen Victoria in 1900; in 1901 toured Canada with Mme. Albani; awarded the Beethoven Medal of the London Philh. Society. After her marriage to Ludwig Goetz, in 1906, she appeared infrequently; retired in 1919.

Foster, Myles Birket, English organist; b.

London, Nov. 29, 1851; d. there, Dec. 18, 1922. He was a pupil of Hamilton Clarke; later of Arthur Sullivan, Prout, and Westlake at the Royal Academy of Music; served as organist at Haweis' church (1873-74) and at the Foundling Hospital (1880-92); from 1888, Examiner of Trinity College, London, in which capacity he spent many years in Australia and South Africa; Fellow of the Royal College of Organists and of the Royal Academy of Music. He publ. Anthems and Anthem-Composers (1901), History of the London Philharmonic Society, 1813-1912 (1913), and pedagogic works.

Foster, Stephen Collins, American composer of famous songs; b. Lawrenceville (Pittsburgh), Pa., July 4, 1826; d. New York, Jan. 13, 1864. He learned to play the flute as a child; publ. a song Open thy Lattice, Love at the age of 18. His father was a government worker and business man, active in politics; his brothers were engaged in commerce. About 1846 he went to Cincinnati as accountant for his brother Dunning. The total number of Foster's songs is 189, for most of which he wrote both words and music. Of these, Old Folks at Home, sometimes referred to as Swanee Ribber (from its initial line "Way down upon de Swanee Ribber"), was published on Oct. 21, 1851, with the subtitle "Ethiopian Melody as sung by Christy's Minstrels." Christy's name was given as author, in consideration of a small sum of money received by Foster, whose name was not attached to the song until 1879, upon the expiration of the original copyright. About 40,000 copies of this song were sold during the year after publication. Foster was greatly encouraged, and, as he wrote to Christy, hoped to establish himself as "the best Ethiopian song writer." Of other songs, the most notable are Oh, Susanna! (1848; became popular in the gold-rush of 1849); My Old Kentucky Home, Massa's in de Cold Ground, Jeanie with the Light Brown Hair, Old Black Joe, Nelly was a Lady, Laura Lee, etc. His last song was Beautiful Dreamer (1864). On July 22, 1850, Foster married Jane McDowell in Pittsburgh; they had a daughter, but the marriage was not happy. In 1853 Foster went to New York and stayed there for a year alone; in 1854 he was living in Hoboken, N. J.; went to New York again in 1860, while his wife remained with relatives. Foster died penniless at Bellevue Hospital; yet his earnings were not small; from 1849-1860 he received about $15,000 in royalties. Apart from the songs, Foster wrote 12 instrumental pieces in salon music style, and made numerous arrangements for flute, guitar, violin, etc. for the collection Foster's Social Orchestra. He had some knowledge of instrumental writing; his harmonies, though simple, are adequate. The extant manuscripts are mostly in the Foster Hall Collection at the Univ. of Pittsburgh (dedicated on June 2, 1937); bibliographical bulletins are issued periodically by this organization. A one-penny stamp bearing Foster's picture was brought out by the U. S. post office in 1940. In 1915 W. R. Whitteley and O. G. Sonneck publ. a Catalogue of First Editions of S. Foster.—Bibl.: M. Foster (brother), Biography, Songs and Musical Compositions of Stephen Foster (1896; not always accurate); H. V. Milligan, S. C. Foster (N. Y., 1920); J. T. Howard, Stephen Foster, America's Troubadour (N. Y., 1934; new ed., 1953); J. T. Howard, Stephen Foster and His Publishers, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1934); J. T. Howard also edited Newly Discovered Fosteriana (N. Y., 1935); G. P. Jackson, Stephen Foster's Debt to American Folk-Songs (N. Y., 1936); R. Walters, Stephen Foster, Youth's Golden Gleam (Princeton, N. J., 1936); J. T. Howard, The Literature on Stephen Foster (Washington, D. C., 1944); Evelyn Foster Morneweck, Chronicles of Stephen Foster's Family (2 vols.; Pittsburgh, 1944); Otto Gombosi, Stephen Foster and 'Gregory Walker' in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1944); F. Hodges, Jr., Stephen Foster, Democrat, in the 'Lincoln Herald' (June, 1945; published separately, Pittsburgh, 1946).

Foulds, John Herbert, English composer; b. Manchester, Nov. 2, 1880; d. Calcutta, April 24, 1939. At the age of 14 he played in theater orchestras; 1900-10, member of the Hallé Orch.; then conducted stage music. In 1921 he became director of the Univ. of London Music Society. He experimented with quarter-tones, and as early as 1898 wrote a string quartet using them.—Principal works: dramatic music: Wonderful Grandmamma, The Whispering Well, Julius Caesar, Sakuntala, The Trojan Women, Debureau, The Fires Divine, The Vision of Dante; for orch.: Epithalamium; Music Pictures (London, Sept. 5, 1912); Celtic Suite; incidental music to Bernard Shaw's Saint Joan; cello concerto; vocal works: A World Requiem for chorus (London, 1923), Mood Pictures for 3 voices, The Easter Lover, for alto and orch.; piano works; violin and vocal pieces; songs. He publ. Music To-day: its Heritage from the Past, and Legacy to the Future (London, 1934).

Fourdrain (föör-drän'), Félix, French composer; b. Nice, Feb. 3, 1880; d. Paris, Oct. 23, 1923. He studied with Widor; wrote the operas Echo (Paris, 1906), La Légende du point d'Argentan (Paris, April 17, 1907), La Glaneuse (Lyons, 1909), Vercingétorix (Nice, 1912), Madame Roland (Rouen, 1913), Les Contes de Perrault (Paris, 1913), Les Maris de Ginette, La Mare au diable, La Griffe; the operettas Dolly (Paris, 1922), L'Amour en Cage, Le Million de Colette, La Hussarde (Paris, 1925); incidental music to Cain's Le Secret de Polichinelle (Cannes, 1922); Anniversaire, for orch.; many songs (Le Papillon, Sérénades, Revanche d'amour, Pays des cours, etc.).

Fourestier (foo-rës-t'yä), Louis, French composer and conductor; b. Montpellier, May 31, 1892. He studied at the Paris Cons. under Gédalge and Leroux; won the Rossini Prize in 1924 (for his cantata, Patria), the Grand Prix de Rome in 1925 (for the cantata, La Mort d'Adonis), and the Heugel Prize in 1927 (for the symph. poem Poly-nice); served as conductor at Marseilles and Bordeaux; 1938, appointed conductor at the Paris Opéra; 1947-48, was in the U. S. as guest conductor of the Metropolitan Opera.

Fournier (föör-n'yä), Émile-Eugène-Alix, French composer; b. Paris, Oct. 11, 1864; d. Joinville-le-Pont, Sept. 12, 1897. He was a pupil of Delibes and Dubois at the Paris Cons.; took 2nd Grand Prix de Rome in 1891 and the Prix Cressent in 1892 for the 1-act opera Stratonice (Paris, 1892); publ. a number of songs, and finished a 3-act opera, Carloman (not produced).

Fournier, Pierre, French cellist; b. Paris, June 24, 1906. He made his début in 1925; from 1936 to 1948, toured in Europe; since 1948, annual appearances in the U. S.; teaching at the Paris Cons. — Cf. B. Gavoty, Pierre Fournier (Geneva, 1957).

Fournier, Pierre-Simon, French cutter and founder of music type; b. Paris, Sept. 15, 1712; d. there, Oct. 8, 1768. Instead of the lozenge-shaped types in the style of Hautin's (1525), Fournier introduced round-headed notes, described in his Essai d'un nouveau caractère de fonte . . . (1756); he also publ. a Traité historique sur l'origine et le progrès des caractères de fonte pour l'impression de la musique (Paris, 1765).

Fox, Charles Warren, American musicologist; b. Gloversville, N. Y., July 24, 1904. He studied psychology at Cornell Univ.

(B. A., 1929; Ph. D., 1933); also took courses in musicology with Otto Kinkeldey there. In 1933 he was appointed instructor in psychology at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester; 1934, began teaching musicology as well. He was vice-president of the American Musicological Society (1952-54); since 1952, editor of the Society's 'Journal'; president of the Music Library Association (1954-56); has contributed a number of valuable articles to American music magazines ('Mus. Quarterly,' 'Journal of the American Musicological Society,' 'Music Library Association Notes,' etc.).

Fox, Charlotte (née Milligan), b. Omagh, Ireland, 1860; d. London, Mar. 26, 1916. She was an enthusiastic musical amateur, specially interested in Irish music; in 1904 she founded the 'Irish Folk Song Society'; in her will she left the Bunting MSS to Belfast Univ. She publ. Annals of the Irish Harpers (London, 1911); composed the well known song The Foggy Dew.

Fox, Felix, pianist and teacher; b. Breslau, May 25, 1876; d. Boston, March 24, 1947. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Reinecke (piano) and Jadassohn (theory); then with Isidor Philipp in Paris, where he gave several recitals introducing works by MacDowell. In 1897 he returned to the U. S. and settled in Boston as pianist and teacher; in 1898 he established, with C. Buonamici, a piano school which enjoyed an excellent reputation; after Buonamici's death in 1920 it became the Felix Fox School of Pianoforte Playing; it was discontinued in 1935. Fox wrote many piano pieces; songs; made transcriptions of MacDowell works; also edited numerous piano works.

Fox-Strangways, Arthur Henry, English writer on musical subjects; b. Norwich, Sept. 14, 1859; d. Dinton, near Salisbury, May 2, 1948. He graduated from Oxford; 1893-1901, music director at Wellington College, London; 1911 to 1925, music critic of the 'Times,' London, later of the 'Observer'; In 1920 he founded the quarterly magazine 'Music & Letters,' of which he remained editor until 1936 (succeeded by Eric Blom). He was a specialist on Indian music and wrote several books on the subject, including The Music of Hindustan (1914); also publ. a collection of essays, Music Observed (1936) and a biography of Cecil Sharp (1933). He contributed the article Folk-Song to the introductory vol. of the 'Oxford History of Music' (1929).—Cf. 'Music & Letters' for Oct. 1939 (articles by Blom, Colles, Dent, Dyson, Vaughan Williams, etc.) and for July, 1948.

Fracassi, Américo, composer; brother of Elmérico Fracassi; b. Lucito, Campobasso, Italy, Feb. 29, 1880; d. Goya, Argentina, Aug. 15, 1936. With his brother, he left his native Italy as a very young man and settled in Buenos Aires, where he taught various musical subjects at a music school. He composed some songs and piano pieces.

Fracassi, Elmérico, composer; brother of Américo Fracassi; b. Lucito, Campobasso, Italy, Dec. 19, 1874; d. Buenos Aires, Oct. 12, 1930. He was taken to Buenos Aires as a boy, but returned to Italy in 1890 for his musical training (Cons. of Naples, with Rossomandi and D'Arienzo); toured Europe twice as a concert pianist; 1904, appointed director (together with G. d'Andrea) of the Almagro Cons. in Buenos Aires. He composed 2 operas, Finlandia (Turin, 1914) and Merletti di Burano; a piano concerto; violin sonata; piano studies; songs; and 4 Argentinian anthems, one of which, Himno al Centenario, won a prize from the Argentine Government.

Frackenpohl, Arthur, American composer; b. Irvington, N. J., April 23, 1924. He studied at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, with Bernard Rogers; also with Milhaud at the Berkshire Music Center, and with Nadia Boulanger at Fontainebleau. In 1949 was appointed member of the faculty at the State Univ. Teachers' College, Potsdam, N. Y.—Works: sonatina for clarinet and piano (1948); brass quartet (1949); trio for oboe, horn, and bassoon (1949); cantata, A Child This Day Is Born (1951); Suite for Strings (1953); An Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog (1955); Allegro Giocoso for band (1955); A Jubilant Overture for orch. (1956); etc.

Fradkin, Frederick, American violinist; b. Troy, N. Y., April 2, 1892. At the age of five he became a pupil of Schradieck; later studied with Max Bendix and Sam Franko in N. Y.; then went to Paris; studied at the Cons. there with Lefort, graduating in 1909 with first prize. He was concertmaster of the Bordeaux Opera Co.; then took instruction with Ysaÿe in Brussels. Returning to America, he made his début as concert violinist in N. Y. on Jan. 10, 1911; then gave concerts in Europe; in 1918-19 he was concertmaster of the Boston Symp. Orch.; later settled in N. Y. as private teacher.

Fraemcke, August, German pianist and pedagogue; b. Hamburg, March 23, 1870; d. N. Y., Jan. 18, 1933. He studied at the Hamburg Cons.; then at the Vienna Cons., where he won the Beethoven Prize. In 1891 he emigrated to the U. S., and joined the staff of the N. Y. College of Music, in 1906 becoming its co-director. He was active in the Bohemian Club in N. Y. City.

Framery (frah-mä-rē'), Nicolas Étienne, French composer, writer on music, and poet; b. Rouen, March 25, 1745; d. Paris, Nov. 26, 1810. He composed the text and music for the comic opera La Sorcière par hasard (1768); its performance at Villeroy earned him the position of superintendent of music with the Count of Artois. The opera was played at the Comédie-Italienne (Paris, Sept. 3, 1783), but suffered a fiasco because of the antagonism against Italian opera generated by the adherents of Gluck. He also wrote librettos for Sacchini, Salieri, Paisiello, Anfossi, and other Italian composers; compiled together with Ginguène and Feytaud, the musical part of vol. I of 'Encyclopédie méthodique' (1791; vol. II by Momigny, 1818); edited a 'Calendrier musical universel' (1788-89); also edited the 'Journal de musique' in Paris from 1770 till 1778; besides smaller studies, he wrote De la nécessité du rythme et de la césure dans les hymnes ou odes destinées à la musique (1796); transl. into French Azopardi's Musico pratico (Le Musicien pratique; 2 vols., 1786).—Cf. J. Carlez, Framery, littérateur-musicien (Caen, 1893).

Françaix (frähn-sä'), Jean, talented French composer; b. Le Mans, May 23, 1912. He first studied at Le Mans Cons., of which his father was director; then at the Paris Cons. with Isidor Philipp (piano) and Nadia Boulanger (composition). In his music, Françaix associates himself with the neo-French school of composers, pursuing the twofold aim of practical application and national tradition; his instrumental works represent a stylization of classical French music; in this respect, he comes close to Ravel.—Works: operas: La Main de Gloire (Bordeaux, May 7, 1950) and La Princesse de Clèves (1953); ballets: Scuola di Ballo (1933), Les Malheurs de Sophie (1935), Le Roi Nu, after Andersen (Paris, June 15, 1936), Le Jeu Sentimental (1936), La Lutherie Enchantée (1936), Verreries de Venise (1938), Le Jugement du Fou (1938), Les Demoiselles de la Nuit (1948); L'Apostrophe, musical comedy in 1 act, after Balzac (Amsterdam, July 1, 1951); oratorio, L'Apocalypse de

St. Jean (Paris, June 11, 1942); Cantate de Méphisto for bass solo and strings (Paris, Oct. 8, 1955); a symphony (Paris, Nov. 6, 1932); concertino for piano and orch. (1934); piano concerto (Paris Festival, June 25, 1937); Musique de cour, suite for flute, violin, and orch. (1937); Le Diable boiteux, musical dialogue for men's voices (1937); Paris à nous deux, lyric fantasy (Fontainebleau, Aug. 7, 1954); Divertissement for bassoon and string quartet (1944); Invocation à la volupté for baritone and orch. (1946); Rapsodie for viola and wind instruments (1946); Cantate satirique, after Juvenal, for 4 string instruments and piano -4 hands (1947); wind quintet (1948); Variations sans thème for cello and piano (1951); Sonatine for trumpet and piano (1952); Ode à la gastronomie for mixed chorus (1953).

Francescatti, Zino, brilliant violinist; b. Marseilles, Aug. 9, 1905. His father, a Frenchman of Italian birth, was a cellist. Francescatti made his first public appearance at the age of 5, and played the Beethoven violin concerto with an orch. at 10; settled in Paris as a concert violinist (1927); has since toured Europe, South America, and the U. S. with excellent success.

Francesco, Cieco, or degli Organi. See Landino, Francesco.

Franchetti (fran-kět'-tē), Alberto, Italian composer; b. Turin, Sept. 18, 1860; d. Viareggio, Aug. 4, 1942. He studied in Turin with Niccolò Coccon and Fortunato Magi; then with Rheinberger in Munich and with Draeseke in Dresden. He devoted his entire life to composition, with the exception of a brief tenure as director of the Cherubini Cons. in Florence (1926-28). He wrote the following operas: Asrael (Reggio Emilia, Feb. 11, 1888); Cristoforo Colombo (Genoa, Oct. 6, 1892); Fior d'Alpe (Milan, March 15, 1894); Il Signor di Pourceaugnac (Milan, April 10, 1897); Germania (his most successful opera; produced at La Scala, March 11, 1902; also had repeated performances in New York, London, Buenos Aires, etc.); La figlia di Jorio (Milan, March 29, 1906); Notte di leggenda (Milan, Jan. 14, 1915); Giove a Pompei (with Umberto Giordano; Rome, July 5, 1921); Glauco (Naples, April 8, 1922); also wrote a symphony (1886); a symph. poems Loreley and Nella selva nera; Inno for soli, chorus, and orch. (for the 800th anniversary of the Univ. of Bologna); several pieces of chamber music and songs.

Franchinus. See Gaforio.

Franchi-Verney (frah'nkē-vär-nä'), Giuseppe Ippolito, Conte della Valetta, Italian composer and writer; b. Turin, Feb. 17, 1848; d. Rome, May 15, 1911. He studied jurisprudence, but gave up his career as a lawyer for music. He was one of the founders of the Società del Quartetto (1875); under the pen-name of Ippolito Valetta he wrote for the 'Gazzetta del Popolo'; later for 'Il Risorgimento' and other papers. In 1889 he married the violinist Teresina Tua. Among his compositions (most of them in a Wagnerian vein) are a 'lyric sketch' Il Valdesse (Turin, 1885) and a ballet, Il Mulatto (Naples, 1896).

Franchomme (frahnk-öhm'), Auguste-Joseph, famous French cellist; b. Lille, April 10, 1808; d. Paris, Jan. 21, 1884. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Levasseur; then played cello in various opera houses. In 1846 he was appointed prof. at the Paris Cons. He was an intimate friend of Chopin; established evenings of chamber music in Paris with Hallé and Alard. He wrote cello pieces, mostly in variation form, and operatic potpourris.

Franck (frahnk), César (-Auguste), great Belgian composer and organist; b. Liège, Dec. 10, 1822; d. Paris, Nov. 8, 1890. He studied first at the Royal Cons. of Liège with Daussoigne and others; at the age of 9 he won first prize for singing, and at 12 first prize for piano. As a child prodigy he gave concerts in Belgium. In 1835 his family moved to Paris, where he studied privately with Anton Reicha; in 1837 he entered the Paris Cons., studying with Zimmermann (piano), Benoist (organ), and Leborne (theory). A few months after his entrance examinations he received a special award of 'grand prix d'honneur' for playing a fugue a third lower at sight; in 1838 he received the 1st prize for piano; in 1839, a 2nd prize for counterpoint; in 1840 1st prize for fugue; and in 1841 2nd prize for organ. In 1842 he was back in Belgium; in 1843 he returned to Paris, and settled there for the rest of his life. On March 17, 1843, he presented there a concert of his chamber music; on Jan. 4, 1846, his first major work, the oratorio Ruth, was given at the Paris Cons. On Feb. 22, 1848, in the midst of the Paris revolution, he married; in 1851 he became organist of the church of St.-Jean-St.-François; in 1853, maître de chapelle and, in 1858, organist at Ste.-Clotilde, which position he held until his death. In 1872 he succeeded his former teacher Benoist as prof. of organ at the Paris Cons. Franck's organ classes became the training school for a whole generation of French composers; among his pupils were Vincent d'Indy, Chausson, Bréville, Bordes, Duparc, Ropartz, Pierné, Vidal, Chapuis, Vienne, and a host of others, who eventually formed a school of modern French instrumental music. Until the appearance of Franck in Paris, operatic art dominated the entire musical life of the nation, and the course of instruction at the Paris Cons. was influenced by this tendency. By his emphasis on organ music, based on the contrapuntal art of Bach, Franck swayed the new generation of French musicians towards the ideal of absolute music. The foundation of the famous 'Schola Cantorum' by Vincent d'Indy, Bordes, and others in 1894 realized Franck's teachings. After the death of d'Indy in 1931, several members withdrew from the 'Schola Cantorum' and organized the 'École César Franck' (1938).—César Franck was not a prolific composer; but his creative powers rose rather than diminished with advancing age; his only symphony was completed when he was 66; his remarkable violin sonata was written at 63; his string quartet was composed in the last year of his life. Lucidity of contrapuntal design and fullness of harmony are the distinguishing traits of Franck's music; in melodic writing he balanced the diatonic and chromatic elements in fine equilibrium. Although he did not pursue innovation for its own sake, he was not averse to using unorthodox procedures. The novelty of introducing an English horn into the score of his symphony aroused some criticism among academic musicians of the time. Franck was quite alien to the Wagner-Liszt school of composition, which attracted many of his own pupils; the chromatic procedures in Franck's music derive from Bach rather than from Wagner.—Works: Operas: Le Valet de Ferme (1852); Hulda (1882-85); Monte Carlo, March 8, 1894; Ghisèle (unfinished; orchestration completed by d'Indy, Chausson, Bréville, Rousseau, and Coquard; 1st performance, Monte Carlo, April 6, 1896). Oratorios: Ruth (1845); La Tour de Babel (1865); Les Béatitudes (1869-79); Rédemption (1871; 2nd version 1874); Rébecca (Paris, March 15, 1881; produced as a 1-act sacred opera at the Paris Opéra, May 25, 1918). Symph. poems: Les Éolides (Paris, May 13, 1877); Le Chasseur maudit (Paris, March 31, 1883); Les Djinnns (Paris, March 15, 1885); Psyché (Paris, March 10, 1888). Other works for orch.: Variations symphoniques for piano and orch. (Paris, May 1, 1885); symphony in D minor (Paris, Feb. 17, 1889). Chamber music: 4 piano trios (early works; 1841-42); Andante quietoso for piano and violin (1843); Duo pour piano et violon concertants, on themes from Dalayrac's Gulistan (1844); quintet in F minor for piano and strings (1879); violin sonata (1886); string quartet (1889).—Organ works: 6 pièces (Fantaisie; Grande pièce symphonique; Prélude, Fugue, and Variations; Pastorale; Prière; Finale); 3 pièces (Fantaisie; Cantabile; Pièce héroïque); Andantino; 3 Chorales; an album of 44 Petites pièces; an album of 55 pieces, entitled L'Organiste, etc.—Sacred music; Messe solennelle (1858); Messe à trois voix (1860); Panis angelicus for tenor, organ, harp, cello, and double-bass; offertories, motets, etc.; 16 songs, among them La Procession (also arranged for voice and orch.); piano pieces (4 fantaisies; Prélude, choral et fugue; Prélude, aria et final; Trois petits riens, Danse lente, etc.).

Zimmermann in his similarly titled book, César Franck; ein deutscher Musiker in Paris (Aachen, 1942). A rebuttal is found in M. Monnikendam's biography, César Franck (Amsterdam, 1949), which presents documentary evidence that Franck was of Flemish and Walloon extraction.—Franck's brother, Joseph Franck (b. Liège, Oct. 31, 1825; d. Issy, near Paris, Nov. 20, 1891), was also an accomplished musician. He studied organ with Benoist at the Paris Cons., obtaining the 1st prize (1852); then was organist at the church of St. Thomas d'Aquin in Paris. He composed sacred music, piano works, and publ. several manuals on harmony, piano technique, and other pedagogical subjects.

Franck, Eduard, German pianist, pedagogue, and composer; b. Breslau, Oct. 5, 1817; d. Berlin, Dec. 1, 1893. At the age of 17 he studied with Mendelssohn; later he met Schumann and became his friend. These associations were the formative factor in the development of his career; he wrote piano pieces and songs in a romantic vein, closely adhering to the style of Mendelssohn and, to some extent, of Schumann. As a piano teacher, he enjoyed great renown. He taught in Cologne (1851-58), then in Bern (1859-67) and in Berlin (1867-78). Among his works are 2 piano concertos, 2 violin concertos, much chamber music, and numerous collections of piano pieces. See R. Franck, Musikalische und unmusikalische Erinnerungen (Heidelberg, 1928).

Franck, Johann Wolfgang, German composer; b. Unterschwaningen, June (baptized June 17), 1644; d. c. 1710. He was brought up in Ansbach, and served there as court musician from 1665 till 1679; produced 3 operas at the Ansbach court: Die unvergleichliche Andromeda (1675), Der verliebte Föbus (1678), and Die drei Töchter Cecrops (1679). On Jan. 17, 1679, in a fit of jealousy, he killed the court musician Ulbrecht, and was forced to flee. He found refuge in Hamburg with his wife Anna Susanna Wilbel (whom he married in 1666), and gained a prominent position at the Hamburg Opera; between 1679 and 1686 he wrote and produced 17 operas, most important of which was Diokletian (1682). His private life continued to be stormy; he deserted his wife and their ten children, and went to London, where he remained from 1690 to about 1695. The exact place and date of his death are unknown. In London he organized (with Robert King) a series of 'Concerts of Vocal and Instrumental Music'; publ. 41 English songs. Other publications are: Geistliche Lieder (Hamburg, 1681, 1685, 1687, 1700; republished in 1856 by D. H. Engel, with new words by Osterwald; newly edited by W. Krabbe and J. Kromolicki in vol. 45 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst', series 1, 1911; 12 arrangements for 4 voices by A. von Dommer, publ. 1859; separate reprints by Riemann, Friedlaender, and others); Remedium melancholiae (25 secular solo songs with basso continuo; London, 1690); arias, etc.—Cf. F. Zelle, J. W. Franck, ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der ältesten deutschen Oper (Berlin, 1889); A. Werner, *J. W. Franck, Melchior, German composer, b. Zittau, c. 1579; d. Coburg, June 1, 1639. He went to Nuremberg in 1601 and in 1602 obtained the post of Kapellmeister at Coburg, where he remained to the end of his life. He was an excellent contrapuntist; composed sacred and secular vocal music, and exerted considerable influence on his contemporaries. A selection from his instrumental works was publ. by F. Bölsche in vol. XVI of "Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst"; vol. XVII of the 'Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte' contains a careful description of his printed works, also of MSS preserved in public libraries. Reprints of his sacred vocal works have been publ. by F. Commer, E. Mauersberger, F. Jöde; secular works in the 'Staatliches Liederbuch,' 'Kaiser-Liederbuch,' and other collections.—Cf. Aloys Obrist, Melchior Franck (Berlin, 1892).

Franck, Richard, German pianist, son of Eduard Franck; b. Cologne, Jan. 3, 1858; d. Heidelberg, Jan. 22, 1938. He studied with his father in Berlin and also attended the Leipzig Cons. (1878-80). He was in Basel from 1880-83 and again from 1887 till 1900, and was active there as pianist and teacher. He later lived in Kassel, and finally in Heidelberg. He was highly regarded as an interpreter of Beethoven's sonatas; published a book of memoirs, Musikalische und unmusikalische Erinnerungen (Heidelberg, 1928).

Franckenstein, Clemens von, German composer; b. Wiesentheid, July 14, 1875; d. Munich, Aug. 19, 1942. He spent his youth in Vienna; then went to Munich, where he studied with Thuille; later took courses with Knorr at the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt. He traveled with an opera company in the U. S. in 1901; then was engaged as a theater conductor in London (1902-7). From 1912-18 and from 1924-34 was intendant at the Munich Opera. He wrote several operas, the most successful of which was Des Kaisers Dichter (on the life of the Chinese poet, Li-Tai Po), performed in Hamburg (Nov. 2, 1920) and elsewhere in Germany. Other operas are: Griselda (Troppau, 1898), Fortunatus (Budapest, 1909), and Rahab (Hamburg, 1911). He also wrote several orchestral works.—Cf. W. Zentner, Clemens von Franckenstein, in the 'Zeitschrift für Musik' (1929; pp. 769-75).

Franco of Cologne, medieval theorist and practical musician. His identity is conjectural; there was a learned man known as Magister Franco of Cologne who flourished as early as the 11th century; several reputable scholars regard him as identical with the musical theorist Franco; against this identification is the improbability of the emergence of theories and usages found in Franco's writings at such an early date. The generally accepted period for his activities is the middle of the 13th century (from 1250 to about 1280). The work on which the reputation of Franco of Cologne rests is the famous treatise Ars cantus mensurabilis. Its principal significance is not so much the establishment of a new method of mensural notation as the systematization of rules that had been inadequately or vaguely explained by Franco's predecessors. The treatise is valuable also for the explanation of usages governing the employment of concords and discords. It was reprinted, from different MSS, in Gerbert's 'Scriptores' (vol. III) and in Coussemaker's 'Scriptores' (vol. I). Gerbert attributes it to a Franco of Paris, a shadowy figure who may have been the author of a treatise and three summaries, all beginning with the words 'Gaudent brevi-tate moderni.' The Ars cantus mensurabilis is reproduced in English in O. Strunk's Source Readings in Music History (N.Y., 1950).—Cf. O. Franco of Paris. The reputed author (according to Gerbert's 'Scriptores') of the medieval treatise Ars cantus mensurabilis, generally ascribed to Franco of Cologne (q.v.).

Franco, Johan, composer; b. Zaandam, Holland, July 12, 1908. He studied with Willem Pijper in Amsterdam; in 1936 settled in the U. S.; served in the U. S. Army (1942-45).—Works: Symph. No. 1 (1933); a symph. poem Péripétie (1935); Concertino Lirico for violin and orch. (N. Y., 1938); violin concerto (Brussels, Dec. 6, 1939); Symph. No. 2 (1939); Serenata concertante for piano and chamber orch. (N. Y., March 11, 1940); Symphonie concertante for piano and orch. (N. Y., March 17, 1941); symph. poem Baconiana (1941); Serenade for flute, cello, and 2 harps (1944); Divertimento for flute and string quartet (1945); suite for violin and piano (1947); piano pieces and songs; has contributed articles to the 'Mus. Quarterly' and other journals.

Francœur (frah-n-kör'), François, French violinist; b. Paris, Sept. 28, 1698; d. there, Aug. 7, 1787. He was a member of the orch. of the Paris Opéra, a chamber musician to the King, and one of the '24 violons du roi' (1730). Conjointly with his inseparable friend François Rebel, he was director of the Opéra (1751) and superintendent of the King's music (1760). He wrote 2 books of violin sonatas; produced 10 operas (in collaboration with Rebel).

Francœur, Louis-Joseph, French violinist, nephew of François Francœur; b. Paris, Oct. 8, 1738; d. there, March 10, 1804. He entered the orch. of the Paris Opéra at the age of 14; became its conductor at 27. During the Revolution he was imprisoned as a suspect, but released after the Thermidor coup d'état (1794) and was appointed director of the Paris Opéra. He wrote an act for the opera Lindor et Ismène (Paris, Aug. 29, 1766); publ. a treatise Diapason général de tous les instruments à vent (1772). The MS of his Essai historique sur l'établissement de l'opéra en France is preserved in the library of the Cons. in Paris.

Frank, Alan, English music scholar; b. London, Oct. 10, 1910. He studied the clarinet, conducting, and composition. At the age of 17 he joined the staff of the Oxford Univ. Press; during the war was in the Royal Air Force. In 1947 he was appointed music editor of the Oxford Univ. Press, and in 1954 became head of the Music Department. In 1935 he married Phyllis Tate, the composer. He has published The Playing of Chamber Music (with George Stratton; London, 1935; 2nd ed., 1951); Modern British Composers (London, 1953); he is also co-author (with Frederick Thurston) of A Comprehensive Tutor for the Boehm Clarinet (London, 1939).

Frank, Ernst, German conductor and composer; b. Munich, Feb. 7, 1847; d. Oberdöbling, near Vienna, Aug. 17, 1889. He studied with M. de Fontaine (piano) and F. Lachner (composition); 1868, was conductor at Würzburg; 1869, chorus master at the Vienna Opera; 1872-77, conductor at Mannheim; 1877-79, at Frankfurt; 1879, at the Hanover court opera. He wrote the operas Adam de la Halle (Karlsruhe, 1880), Hero (Berlin, 1884), and Der Sturm (after Shakespeare; Hanover, 1887); completed H. Götz's opera Francesca da Rimini and produced it at Mannheim (1877). Frank was a friend of Brahms.—Cf. A. Einstein, Briefe von Brahms an E. Frank, in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (April, 1922).

Frankel, Benjamin, English composer; b. London, Jan. 31, 1906. As a boy, he worked in the watchmakers' trade; studied in Germany, returning to London in 1923, where he played piano and violin in cafés. He then began to write music for films; since 1946, teaching at the Guildhall School of Music.—Works: The Aftermath for tenor, trumpet, harp, and strings (1947); violin concerto (1951); 4 string quartets; trio for clarinet, cello, and piano; Sonata ebraica for cello and harp; Élégie juive for cello and piano; piano quartet (1953); songs.

Frankenstein, Alfred, American music critic; b. Chicago, Oct. 5, 1906. He studied at the Univ. of Chicago (graduated, 1932); played clarinet in the Civic Orch. of Chicago (1923-30); held a music school scholarship at Yale Univ. (1930-31); was assistant music critic of the 'Chicago American' (1931-34); lecturer in the history of music at the Univ. of Chicago (1932-34); since Dec., 1934, music and art critic of the 'San Francisco Chronicle'; program annotator of the San Francisco Symph. Orch. since 1935; visiting lecturer at the Univ. of California, Stanford, and Harvard (2 sessions, 1951, 1952). He published a collection of essays, Syncopating Saxophones (Chicago, 1925); became deeply interested in art; in 1947, held a Guggenheim Fellowship to prepare a book on the 19th-century American still-life; the resulting publication was After the Hunt (Univ. of California Press, 1953; deals with William Harnett). He was the first to discover and publish the sketches of Victor Hartmann that inspired Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition (in the 'Mus. Quarterly,' July, 1939); also brought out an illustrated edition of this score (1951).

Franklin, Benjamin, the great American statesman; b. Boston, Jan. 17, 1706; d. Philadelphia, April 17, 1790. An amateur musician, he invented (1762) the Harmonica, an instrument consisting of a row of glass discs of different sizes set in vibration by light pressure. A string quartet attributed to him came to light in Paris in 1945, and was publ. there (1946). The parts are arranged in an ingenious 'scordatura'; only open strings are used, so that the quartet can be played by rank amateurs. Franklin also wrote entertainingly on musical subjects; his letters on Scotch music are found in vol. VI of his collected works.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Sum cuique: Essays in Music (N. Y., 1916); Lionel de la Laurencie, Benjamin Franklin and the claveciniste Brillon de Jouy, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1923); L'harmonica de Benjamin Franklin in 'Dissonances' (Geneva, July-Aug., 1944).

Franko, Nahan, American violinist and conductor; brother of Sam Franko; b. New Orleans, July 23, 1861; d. Amityville, N. Y., June 7, 1930. As a child prodigy he toured with Adelina Patti; then studied in Berlin with Joachim and Wilhelmj. Returning to America, he joined the orch. of the Metropolitan Opera; was its concertmaster from 1883-1905; was the first native-born American to be engaged as conductor there (1905-1907).

Franko, Sam, American violinist; b. New Orleans, Jan. 20, 1857; d. New York, May 6, 1937 (from skull fracture as a result of a fall). He was educated in Germany; studied in Berlin with Joachim, Heinrich de Ahna, and Eduard Rappoldi. Returning to the U. S. in 1880, he joined the Theodore Thomas Orch. in N. Y., and was its concertmaster from 1884-91; in 1883 he toured the U. S. and Canada as soloist with the Mendelssohn Quintette Club of Boston. In order to prove that the prejudice against native orchestral players was unfounded, he organized in 1894 the American Symphony Orchestra of 65 American-born performers; this orchestra he later used for his 'Concerts of Old Music' (1900-09); from 1893 to 1901 he gave chamber music concerts at the Aschenbrödel Club in N. Y. In 1910 he went to Berlin and taught at Stern's Cons.; he returned to N. Y. in 1915 and remained there for the rest of his life. At the celebration of his 79th birthday (1936), he gave his valuable collection of music MSS to the Music Division of the N. Y. Public Library. He publ. for piano Album Leaf (1889); Viennese Silhouettes (a set of 6 waltzes, 1928), etc.; several violin pieces; practical arrangements for violin and piano of works by Bach, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Rimsky-Korsakov, etc.; and string orch. transcriptions of works by Bach, Vivaldi, Pergolesi, etc.; also edited classical music albums. His memoirs were publ. posthumously under the title Chords and Discords (N. Y., 1938).

Franz, J. H. Pen-name of Count Bolko von Hochberg (q.v.).

Franz, Robert, famous German song composer; b. Halle, June 28, 1815; d. there, Oct. 24, 1892. His family name was Knauth; his father, Christoph Franz Knauth, legally adopted the name Franz in 1847. The parents did not favor music as a profession, but Franz learned to play the organ and participated as an accompanist in performances in his native city. In 1835, he went to Dessau, where he studied with Friedrich Schneider; in 1837, he returned to Halle. He published his first set of songs in 1843; they attracted immediate attention and were warmly praised by Schumann. Shortly afterwards he received an appointment as organist at the Ulrichskirche in Halle, and also as conductor of the Singakademie there; later he received the post of music director at Halle Univ., which conferred on him the title of Mus. Doc. in 1861. The successful development of his career as a musician was interrupted by a variety of nervous disorders and a growing deafness, which forced him to abandon his musical activities in 1868. Liszt, Joachim, and others organized a concert for his benefit, collecting a large sum of money (about $25,000); his admirers in America (Otto Dresel, S. B. Schlesinger, B. J. Lang) also contributed funds for his support. Franz was undoubtedly one of the finest masters of the German lied. He published about 350 songs; among those best known are Schlummerlied, Die Lotosblume, Die Widmung, and Wonne der Wehmuth. He also wrote: 117th Psalm for double chorus a cappella; Kyrie for chorus a cappella and solo voices; Liturgy; arranged works by Bach (St. Matthew Passion, Christmas Oratorio, 10 cantatas, etc.) and Handel (Messiah; L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, ed Il Moderato, etc.); published Mitteilungen über J. S. Bachs Magnificat (Leipzig, 1863); Offener Brief an Ed. Hanslick über Bearbeitungen älterer Tonwerke, namentlich Bachscher und Händelscher Vokalwerke (Leipzig, 1871). Both were reprinted by R. Bethge as Gesammelte Schriften über die Wiederbelebung Bachscher und Händelscher Werke (Leipzig, 1910).—Cf. F. Liszt, R. Franz (Leipzig, 1855; reprinted in 'Gesammelte Schriften,' vol. IV, Leipzig, 1882); H. M. Schuster, R. Franz (Leipzig, 1874); La Mara, R. Franz, in vol. III of 'Musikalische Studienköpfe' (Leipzig, 1868-82; publ. separately, 1911); W. Waldmann, R. Franz, in 'Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung' (1915); S. E. Barbak, Die Lieder von R. Franz (Vienna, 1922); H. von der Pfordten, R. Franz (Leipzig, 1923).

Fränzl, Ferdinand, German violinist and composer, son of Ignaz Fränzl; b. Schwetzingen, May 24, 1770; d. Mannheim, Nov. 19, 1833. He studied with his father; later was a pupil in composition of F. X. Richter and Pleyel at Strasbourg, and of Mattei at Bologna. He entered the Mannheim court orchestra at the age of 12; in 1785 began to travel on concert tours with his father. He was appointed conductor of the Munich Opera in 1806, but continued his tours; retired in 1826; finally settled in Mannheim. As a master violinist he enjoyed great renown. He was a prolific composer: wrote 8 violin concertos; a double concerto for 2 violins; 6 operas; 9 string quartets; 6 string trios; symphonies, overtures, and songs.

Fränzl, Ignaz, German violinist and composer, father of Ferdinand Fränzl; b. Mannheim, June 3, 1736; d. there, 1811. He entered the Mannheim court orchestra as a boy of 11, and was its conductor from 1790 to 1803. He made several concert tours with his son; composed symphonies and music for the violin, and also wrote for the stage. His 'Singspiel,' Die Luftbälle, was produced in Mannheim with excellent success (April 15, 1787); he also wrote music for Shakespeare's plays.

Fraser, Norman, Chilean-English pianist and writer on music; b. of English parents, Valparaiso, Chile, Nov. 26, 1904. He pursued his musical studies in Chile and later in Lausanne; gave concerts in Europe (1924-30); then settled in London. He made several trips to South America as a representative of various organizations; contributed articles on Latin American composers to the 5th edition of Grove's Dictionary. He is married to Janet Fraser, British mezzo-soprano (b. Kirkcaldy, May 22, 1911), with whom he has given numerous joint recitals.

Frazzi, Vito, Italian composer; b. San Secondo Parmense, Aug. 1, 1888. He studied organ at the Parma Cons.; also took courses in piano and theory. In 1912 he joined the staff of the Florence Cons. He has written a music drama Re Lear after Shakespeare (Florence, 1939); an opera Don Quixote (Florence, April 27, 1952); several symph. poems; chamber music; has orchestrated Monteverdi's stage works.

Freccia, Massimo, Italian conductor; b. Florence, Sept. 19, 1906. He studied at the Florence Cons. and later in Vienna with Franz Schalk. In 1933-35 he conducted the Budapest Symph. Orch.; was guest conductor at the Lewisohn Stadium in N. Y. in 1938-40; then was conductor of the Havana Philh. Orch. (1939-43), and of the New Orleans Symph. Orch. (1944-52). In 1952, he was appointed conductor of the Baltimore Symph. Orch.

Frederick II (the Great), of Prussia; b. Berlin, Jan. 24, 1712; d. Potsdam, Aug. 17, 1786. He was an enlightened patron of music, a flute player of considerable skill, and an amateur composer. He studied flute with Quantz; in 1740, when he ascended the throne, he established a court orchestra and an opera house; Bach's son Karl Philipp Emanuel was his harpsichordist until 1767. In 1747 J. S. Bach himself was invited to Potsdam; the fruit of this visit was Bach's Musical Offering, written on a theme by Frederick II. A collection of 25 flute sonatas and 4 concertos by Frederick was publ. by Spitta (3 vols., Leipzig, 1889); other works were publ. in vol. XX of 'Die Musik am preussischen Hofe.' Selections from different compositions were edited by Barge, G. Lenzevski, E. Schwarz-Reiflingen, H. Osthoff, G. Müller, G. Thouret, and others. Besides instrumental works, Frederick contributed arias to several operas: Demofoonte by Graun (1746); Il re pastore (1747; with Quantz and others); Galatea ed Acide (1748; with Hasse, Graun, Quantz, and Nichelmann); and Il trionfo della fedeltà (1753; with Hasse and others).—Cf. K. F. Müller, Friedrich der Grosse als Kenner und Dilettant auf dem Gebiete der Tonkunst (Potsdam, 1847); W. Kothe, Friedrich der Grosse als Musiker (Leipzig, 1869); G. Thouret, Friedrichs des Grossen Verhältnis zur Musik (Berlin, 1895); G. Quarterly' (April, 1934); John Bourke, Frederick the Great as Music Lover and Musician, in 'Music & Letters' (Jan., 1947). Frederick's correspondence with Algarotti was publ. by F. Förster (Berlin, 1837); correspondence between him and the margravine of Bayreuth is contained in chapter IV of Mary Burrell's Thoughts for Enthusiasts at Bayreuth (London, 1891).

Freed, Arnold, American composer; b. New York, Sept. 29, 1926; studied with Mark Brunswick at the City College of N. Y. and with Philip James at N. Y. Univ.; also with Vittorio Giannini at the Juilliard School of Music. He won a Fulbright Scholarship for travel in Italy and studied with Luigi Dallapiccola there (1952-54). Among his works are a violin sonata, a piano sonata, and a number of choral works and songs.

Freed, Isadore, composer; b. Brest-Litovsk, Russia, March 26, 1900. He came to the U. S. at an early age; graduated from the Univ. of Pennsylvania in 1918 (Mus. Bac.); then studied with Ernest Bloch and with Vincent d'Indy in Paris; returned to the U. S. in 1934; held various teaching positions; in 1944 was appointed head of the music department at Hartt College of Music, Hartford, Conn.—Works: For the stage: Vibrations, ballet (Philadelphia, 1928); operas, Homo Sum (1930) and The Princess and the Vagabond (Hartford, May 13, 1948). For orch.: Jeux de Timbres (Paris, 1933); Symph. No. 1 (1941); Appalachian Symphonic Sketches (Chautauqua, July 31, 1946); Festival Overture (San Francisco, Nov. 14, 1946); Rhapsody for trombone and orch. (radio première, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1951); Symph. No. 2, for brass (San Francisco, Feb. 8, 1951, composer conducting); violin concerto (N. Y., Nov. 13, 1951); cello concerto (1952); concertino for English horn and orch. (1953). Chamber music: 3 string quartets (1931, 1932, 1937); trio for flute, viola, and harp (1940); Triptych for violin, viola, cello, and piano (1943); Passacaglia, for cello and piano (1947); quintet for woodwinds and horn (Hartford, Dec. 2, 1949); sonatina for oboe and piano (Boston, March 31, 1954); also choral works; piano and organ pieces; songs; co-editor of 'Masters of Our Day' (contemporary educational material for piano; N. Y., 1936-37).

Freeman, Harry Lawrence, American Negro composer; b. Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 9, 1869; d. New York, March 24, 1954. He studied theory with J. H. Beck and piano with E. Schonert and Carlos Sobrino; taught at Wilberforce Univ. (1902-4) and Salem School of Music (1910-13); organized and directed the Freeman School of Music (1911-22) and the Freeman School of Grand Opera (from 1923); conducted various theater orchestras and opera companies. In 1920 he organized the Negro Opera Co.; in 1930 received the Harmon Gold Award; conducted a pageant O Sing a New Song, at the Chicago World's Fair in 1934. He was the first Negro composer to conduct a symphony orchestra in his own work (Minneapolis, 1907), and the first Negro to write large operatic compositions. All his music is written in folksong style; his settings are in simple harmonies; his operas are constructed of songs and choruses in simple concatenation of separate numbers.—Works: the grand operas (all on Negro, Oriental, and Indian themes): The Martyr (Denver, 1893); Valdo (Cleveland, May, 1906); Zuluki (1898); African Kraal (Wilberforce Univ., Chicago, June 30, 1903; with an all-Negro cast, composer conducting; revised 1934); The Octoroon (1904); The Tryst (N. Y., May, 1911); The Prophecy (N. Y., 1912); The Plantation (1914); Athalia (1916); Vendetta (N. Y., Nov. 12, 1923); American Romance, jazz opera (1927); Voodoo (N. Y., Sept. 10, 1928); Leah Kleschna (1930); Uzziah (1931); Zululand, a tetralogy of music dramas: Nada, The Lily (1941-44; vocal score contains 2150 pp.), Allah (1947), and The Zulu King (1934); The Slave, ballet for choral ensemble and orch. (Harlem, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1932); songs (Whither, If thou did'st love, etc.).—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and its Composers (Philadelphia, 1934; pp. 189-95).

Freer, Eleanor (née Everest), American composer; b. Philadelphia, May 14, 1864; d. Chicago, Dec. 13, 1942. She studied singing in Paris (1883-86) with Mathilde Marchesi; then took a course in composition with Benjamin Godard. Upon her return to the U. S., she taught singing at the National Cons. of Music, N. Y. (1889-91). On April 25, 1891, she married Archibald Freer of Chicago; they lived in Leipzig from 1892-99; then settled in Chicago where she studied theory with Bernard Ziehn (1902-7). She publ. some light pieces under the name Everest still as a young girl, but most of her larger works were written after 1919; she composed 9 operas, of which the following were performed: The Legend of the Piper (South Bend, Ind., Feb. 28, 1924), The Court Jester (Lincoln, Nebr., 1926), A Christmas Tale (Houston, Dec. 27, 1929), Frithiof (1929), The Masque of Pandora (1930), and A Legend of Spain (1931); a song cycle (settings of Elizabeth Browning's entire Sonnets from the Portuguese); about 150 songs; piano pieces. Vocal scores of several of her operas, and many songs, have been published. She wrote an autobiography, Recollections and Reflections of an American Composer (Chicago, 1929). See also A. G. Foster, Eleanor Freer and her Colleagues (Chicago, 1927); E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and its Composers (Philadelphia, 1927; pp. 196-204).

Freitas Branco, Luiz de, Portuguese composer; b. Lisbon, Oct. 12, 1890; d. there, Nov. 26, 1955. He studied in Berlin with Humperdinck, later in Paris; wrote 3 symphonies, a cello concerto, ballade for piano and orch., an oratorio, organ works, chamber music, and songs.

Fremstad, Olive, famous dramatic soprano; b. Stockholm, March 14, 1871 (entered into the parish register as the daughter of an unmarried woman, Anna Peterson); d. Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., April 21, 1951. She was adopted by an American couple of Scandinavian origin, who took her to Minnesota; she studied piano in Minneapolis; came to New York in 1890 and took singing lessons with E. F. Bristol; then held several church positions; in 1892 she sang for the first time with an orch. (under C. Zerrahn) in Boston. In 1893 she went to Berlin to study with Lilli Lehmann; made her operatic début in Cologne as Azucena in Il Trovatore (1895); sang contralto parts in Wagner's operas at Bayreuth during the summer of 1896; in 1897 made her London début; also sang in Cologne, Vienna, Amsterdam, and Antwerp. From 1900 to 1903 she was at the Munich Opera. She made her American début as Sieglinde at the Metropolitan Opera on Nov. 23, 1903. Subsequently she sang soprano parts in Wagnerian operas; at first she was criticized in the press for her lack of true soprano tones; however, she soon triumphed over these difficulties, and became known as a soprano singer to the exclusion of contralto parts. She sang Carmen with great success at the Metropolitan (March 4, 1906), with Caruso; her performance of Isolde under Mahler (Jan. 1, 1908) produced a deep impression; until 1914, she was one of the brightest stars of the Metropolitan Opera, specializing in Wagnerian roles, but also was successful in Tosca and other Italian operas. She sang Salomé at the first American performance of the Strauss opera (N. Y., Jan. 27, 1907) and in Paris (May 8, 1907). After her retirement from the Metropolitan, she appeared with the Manhattan Opera, the Boston Opera, the Chicago Opera, and in concerts; presented her last song recital in N. Y. on Jan. 19, 1920. In 1906 she married Edson Sutphen of N. Y. (divorced in 1911); in 1916 she married her accompanist, Harry Lewis Brainard (divorced in 1925). In Willa Cather's novel, The Song of the Lark, the principal character was modeled after Olive Fremstad.

French, Jacob, American composer of psalm-tunes; b. 1754; d. ?. He publ. New American Melody (1789), Psalmist's Companion (1793), and Harmony of Harmony (1802).—Cf. J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., revised ed., 1939).

Frere, Rudolph Walter Howard, English music scholar; b. Dungate, near Cambridge, Nov. 25, 1863; d. Mirfield, Yorkshire, April 2, 1938. He studied at Trinity College, Cambridge; was ordained curate in 1887; from 1923 to 1934 he was bishop of Truro. He specialized in plainsong, and contributed valuable articles on this subject to Grove's Dictionary and to the 'Oxford History of Music.' Among his important publications are Bibliotheca musica liturgica (1901) and an introduction to Hymns, Ancient and Modern (1909). He edited the 'Graduale Sarisburiense' (1893), 'The Sarum Gradual and the Gregorian Antiphonale Missarum'; and, with John Stainer and H. B. Briggs, A Manual of Plainsong (1902); also 'Pars antiphonarii' (1923); 'Holy Week Services of the Church of England' (2nd ed., 1933).

Freschi (frěš-kě), Giovanni Domenico, Italian composer; b. Bassano, Vicenza, 1640; d. Vicenza, 1690. He was maestro di cappella at the Cathedral of Vicenza; publ. 2 masses and a number of psalms (1660; 1673). In 1677, he went to Venice, remaining there for eight years; wrote 10 operas, which were successfully produced there, and a series of short pieces for an opera house in Piazzola near Padua. He also wrote two oratorios, Giuditta and Il Miracolo del mago.—Cf. Paolo Camerini, Piazzola (Milan, 1925).

Frescobaldi, Girolamo, famous Italian organist and composer; b. Ferrara, 1583 (baptized Sept. 9); d. Rome, March 1, 1643. After studying under Luzzasco Luzzaschi at Ferrara, he traveled to Flanders and in 1607 took up residence in Brussels; in 1608 he publ. his first work, a collection of 5-part madrigals, at Antwerp (printed by Phalèse), and visited Milan and Ferrara; also in 1608 he was appointed organist of St. Peter's, at Rome, succeeding Ercole Pasquini; his fame was already such that 30,000 people are said to have attended his first performance. He held this post until his death, leaving Rome only once, from 1628-34, during which period he was court organist at Florence, and was represented in Rome by a deputy. From 1637-41, Froberger, court organist of Vienna, came to Rome especially to study with Frescobaldi. As a composer, Frescobaldi occupies a very prominent place; his works are distinguished by an effective use of chromatic devices.—Works: Fantasia a 2, 3, e 4 (Milan, 1608, Book I); Ricercari e canzoni francese (Rome, 1615); Toccate e partite d'intavolatura di cembalo (Rome, 1615); Il 2º libro di toccate, canzoni, versi d'inni, magnificat, gagliarde, correnti ed altre partite d'intavolatura di cembalo ed organo (Rome, 1616); Capricci sopra diversi soggetti (Rome, 1624); Arie musicale a più voci (Florence, 1630); etc. The 3 fugues ascribed to Frescobaldi by Clementi in his Selection of Practical Harmony (London, 1811-15) are probably spurious (cf. G. Benvenuti in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana,' 1920, p. 133 ff.). Haberl publ. a selection of Frescobaldi's organ pieces, prefaced by a biographical sketch (Leipzig, 1888); smaller collections were publ. by B. Litzau, E. Pauer (12 toccatas), L. Torchi in vol. III of 'L'Arte musicale' (20 pieces), Casella in Nos. 43-47 of 'Raccolta nazionale delle musiche italiane,' H. David (2 canzoni; 1933), Opel (2 pieces), F. Boghen (Arie musicali; 1933), F. Germani (Toccate e partite; Rome, 1936), and in Davison and Apel, Historical Anthology of Music, vol. II (Cambridge, Mass., 1950).—Cf. A. Frešo, Tibor, Slovak conductor and composer; b. Stiaivnik, Nov. 20, 1918. He studied with Alexander Moyzes, and later with Pizzetti in Rome. In 1951 he was appointed opera conductor at Košice. He has written choral music, and several suites for various instruments based on native folksongs.

Freudenberger, Wilhelm, German composer and conductor; b. Raubacher Hütte, near Neuwied, March 11, 1838; d. Schweidnitz, May 22, 1928. He studied in Leipzig; held various positions as theater conductor; founded a conservatory in Wiesbaden (1870); in 1886 went to Berlin, where he was active as choral conductor. He produced several comic operas: Die Pfahlbauer (Mainz, 1877), Die Mühle im Wispertale (Magdeburg, 1883), Das Jahrmarktsfest zu Plundersweilen (Bremen, 1908), etc.; a symph. poem Ein Tag in Sorrent, and numerous choral works.

Freund, John Christian, music journalist and editor; b. London, Nov. 22, 1848; d. Mt. Vernon, N. Y., June 3, 1924. He studied in London and in Oxford; in 1871 he settled in N. Y., where he became the editor of the 'Musical and Dramatic Times'; in 1890 he began publishing a magazine 'Music Trades.'

In 1898 founded 'Musical America,' and was its editor until his death. In his editorials and public lectures he urged American musicians to form a national movement in composition, performance, and musical scholarship.

Freund, Marya, soprano; b. Breslau, Dec. 12, 1876. She first studied violin, taking lessons with Sarasate; then began to study singing; made successful appearances in Europe and America with symphony orchestras and in recital. Her career as a singer is mainly significant, however, not for the excellence of her performances in standard repertory, but for her devotion to modern music. She sang the principal vocal works by Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Ravel, Bloch, Milhaud, and many others; eventually settled in Paris as singing teacher.

Freundt, Cornelius, German composer; b. Plauen, 1535; d. Zwickau, Aug. 26, 1591. He was a cantor at Borna; in 1565, became organist at Zwickau, where he remained until his death. His compositions were designed for use in church and school; most of his sacred works remain in MS. Georg Göhler wrote a dissertation on him (Leipzig, 1896).

Frey, Adolf, pianist; b. Landau, Germany, April 4, 1865; d. Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1938. He was a pupil of Clara Schumann; served as court musician to Prince Alexander Friedrich of Hesse (1887-93); then emigrated to the U. S. and became prof. of music at Syracuse Univ.; was head of the piano dept. there for 20 years (1893-1913); in 1935, he founded the Frey School of Music in Watertown, N. Y.

Frey, Emil, Swiss pianist and composer; b. Baden, Switzerland, April 8, 1889; d. Zürich, May 20, 1946. He studied in Switzerland and in Paris; won the Rubinstein Composition Award with his piano trio in 1910; was prof. at the Moscow Cons. (1912-17); returned to Switzerland in 1918; toured South America as a pianist several times. He wrote a piano concerto, a violin concerto, a Swiss Festival Overture, many songs, and some chamber music; publ. a book, Bewusst gewordenes Klavierspiel und seine technischen Grundlagen (Zürich, 1933).

Frey, Walter, distinguished Swiss pianist, brother of Emil Frey; b. Basel, Jan. 26, 1898. He studied at the Zürich Cons. and taught there after 1930; won an international reputation as a performer of modern piano music; toured Europe several times.

Freytag, Werner, German musicologist; b. Stettin, Aug. 11, 1907; studied at the Univ. of Vienna (1929-35); from 1939, in Berlin, working in acoustic laboratories. After 1946 he devoted himself mainly to music history; publ. valuable papers on music in Pomerania; contributed articles to 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Fricker, Herbert Austin, organist and composer; b. Canterbury, England, Feb. 12, 1868; d. Toronto, Nov. 11, 1943. He was a pupil of Dr. W. H. Longhurst (organist of Canterbury Cathedral), Sir Frederick Bridge, and Edwin Lemare; 1877-83, choirboy at Canterbury Cathedral; 1884-91, deputy organist there; 1891-98, organist and choirmaster at Holy Trinity Church, Folkestone; 1898-1917, organist to the Corporation of the City of Leeds; organist and chorusmaster of the Leeds Festival (1904-13) and conductor of the Leeds Philh. and Choral Societies; from 1917 lived in Toronto, Canada. His compositions include sacred and secular vocal works, organ works and arrangements.

Fricker, Peter Racine, English composer; b. London, Sept. 5, 1920. He studied at the Royal College of Music and later with Matyas Seiber. In 1952, appointed musical director at Morley College in London. Works: Rondo scherzoso for orch. (1948); 1st symph. (1949; awarded the Koussevitzky prize; Cheltenham Festival, July 5, 1950); 2nd symph. (1951; Liverpool Philh. Orch., July 26, 1951); Canterbury Prologue, ballet (London, 1951); concerto for viola and orch. (1952; commissioned and played by William Primrose, Edinburgh, Sept. 3, 1953); piano concerto (London, March 21, 1954); Rapsodia Concertante for violin and orch. (Cheltenham Festival, July 15, 1954); Concertante for 3 pianos, strings, and timpani (London, Aug. 10, 1956). Chamber music: wind quintet (1947); 3 sonnets of Cecco Angiolieri, for tenor, wind quintet, cello, and double-bass (1947); string quartet in one movement (1948; Brussels Festival, 1950); Prelude, Elegy, and Finale for strings (1949); concerto for violin and chamber orch. (1950); violin sonata (1950); Concertante for English horn and strings (1950); 2nd string quartet (1953); also piano works and choruses.

Fricksay (frē'-chī), Ferenc, Hungarian conductor; b. Budapest, Aug. 9, 1914. He studied with Kodály and Bartók; conducted at Szeged in 1936. In 1945 he was conductor of the Budapest Opera; from 1945-49, in Vienna, Salzburg, Holland, and in South America. In 1949 he became conductor of the RIAS Orch., in the American sector of Berlin. His American début, with the Boston Symph. Orch., was on Nov. 13, 1953. In the autumn of 1954 he was engaged as conductor of the Houston Symphony Orch., but owing to disagreements in matters of musical policy, he conducted only a few concerts there, later returning to Europe.

Frid, Géza, Hungarian pianist and composer; b. Mármározziget, Jan. 25, 1904. He studied at the Budapest Cons.; settled in Amsterdam (1929); since 1946, teaching at the Rotterdam Cons.; made a tour of the East Indies as pianist (1948-49)—Works: Paradou, symph. fantasy (1949); cello concerto; Serenade for wind quintet; 3 string quartets; piano pieces; choruses.

Friderici, Daniel, German composer and theorist; b. Klein-Eichstedt, near Querfurt, 1584; d. Rostock, Sept. 23, 1638. He served as a choirboy; then studied music in Magdeburg; settled in Rostock, where he was cantor of St. Mary's Church from 1617 till his death. He died of pestilence. He publ. in Rostock a number of sacred and secular songs to German words, and a theoretical work, Musica Figuralis oder neue Unterweisung des Singe Kunst (1618; 6th ed., 1677).—Cf. W. Voll, Daniel Friderici (Kassel, 1936).

Fried (fröd), Oskar, German conductor and composer; b. Berlin, Aug. 10, 1871; d. Moscow, July, 1941. He studied with Humperdinck in Frankfurt and Ph. Scharwenka in Berlin; played the horn in various orchestras until the performance of his choral work with orch., Das trunkene Lied, given by Karl Muck in Berlin (April 15, 1904), attracted much favorable attention; he continued to compose prolifically; wrote Verklärte Nacht for solo voices and orch.; Andante und Scherzo for wind instruments, 2 harps, and kettledrums; Präludium und Doppelfuge for string orch., etc. At the same time he began his career as conductor, achieving considerable renown in Europe; he was conductor of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' in Berlin (1907-10) and of the Berlin Symph. Orch. (1925-26); left Berlin in 1934 and went to Russia; became a Soviet citizen in 1940. For several years before his death he was conductor of the Tiflis Opera, in the Caucasus.—Cf. Paul Bekker, Oskar Fried (Berlin, 1907); Paul Stefan, Oskar Fried (Berlin, 1911).

Friedberg, Carl, well-known pianist; b.

Bingen, Germany, Sept. 18, 1872; d. Merano, Italy, Sept. 8, 1955. He studied at the Frankfurt Cons. with Kwast, Knorr, and Clara Schumann; also took a course in composition with Humperdinck; subsequently taught piano at the Frankfurt Cons. (1893-1904) and at the Cologne Cons. (1904-14). In 1914 he made his first American tour with excellent success; taught piano at the Institute of Musical Art in N. Y.; was a member of the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music, N. Y. Among his pupils were Percy Grainger, Ethel Leginska, Elly Ney, and other celebrated pianists.

Friedheim, Arthur, pianist; b. St. Petersburg (of German parents), Oct. 26, 1859; d. New York, Oct. 19, 1932. He was a pupil of Anton Rubinstein and Liszt, and became particularly known as an interpreter of Liszt's works. He made his first American tour in 1891; taught at the Chicago Musical College in 1897; then traveled; lived in London, Munich, and (after 1915) New York, as teacher and pianist; composed a piano concerto and many pieces for solo piano, as well as an opera, Die Tänzerin (Karlsruhe, 1897).

Friedlaender, Max, eminent German musicologist; b. Brieg, Silesia, Oct. 12, 1852; d. Berlin, May 2, 1934. He was first a bass singer; studied voice with Manuel Garcia in London; appeared at the London Monday Popular Concerts in 1880. He returned to Germany in 1881 and took a course at Berlin Univ. with Spitta; obtained the degree of Dr. phil. at Rostock with the thesis Beiträge zur Biographie Franz Schuberts (1887); then was 'Privatdozent' at Berlin Univ. in 1894, and prof. in 1903. He was Exchange Prof. at Harvard Univ. in 1911; lectured at many American universities and received the degree of LL.D. from the Univ. of Wisconsin; retired in 1932. He discovered the MSS of more than 100 lost songs by Schubert and publ. them in his complete edition (7 vols.) of Schubert's songs. Together with Johann Bolte and Johann Meier he searched for years in every corner of the German Empire in quest of folksongs still to be found among the people; some of these he publ. in a volume under the title 100 Deutsche Volkslieder (1885); was a member of the commission that published the monumental 'Volksliederbuch für Männerchor' (1906); was also editor of 'Volksliederbuch für gemischten Chor' (1912); ed. songs of Mozart, Schumann, and Mendelssohn, Beethoven's Scotch Songs, the first version of Brahms' Deutsche Volkslieder (1926), Volksliederbuch für die deutsche Jugend (1928), etc. Besides numerous valuable essays (in 'Goethe Jahrbuch,' 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft,' etc.), he publ. Goethes Gedichte in der Musik (1896); Gedichte von Goethe in Kompositionen seiner Zeitgenossen (1896 and 1916); Das Deutsche Lied im 18. Jahrhundert (2 vols., 1902); Brahms' Lieder (1922; in English, London, 1928); and Franz Schubert, Skizze seines Lebens und Wirkens (1928).—Cf. E. J. Dent, Max Friedlaender in the 'Monthly Musical Record' (June, 1934).

Friedman, Ignaz, famous pianist; b. Podgorze, near Cracow, Feb. 14, 1882; d. Sydney, Australia, Jan. 26, 1948. He was a pupil of Riemann (composition) in Leipzig, Adler (history) and Leschetizky (piano) in Vienna; from 1905 made successful tours in Europe, South America, and Australia. In 1920 he played concerts in America; in 1940 went to Sydney. He was especially notable as an interpreter of Chopin, of whose works he prepared a new ed. in 12 vols. (Breitkopf & Hartel); composed about 100 piano pieces (Thème varié; Elle danse; Passacaglia; Fantasiestücke, etc.); made many arrangements for piano; edited the piano works of Schumann and Liszt for Universal Edition.

Friedrich II (der Grosse). See Frederick.

Fries (frës), Wulf (Christian Julius), cellist and teacher; b. Garbeck, Germany, Jan. 10, 1825; d. Roxbury, Mass., April 29, 1902. As a self-taught cellist he played in Norway, at the Bergen theater orch. (from 1842), and at Ole Bull's concerts. In 1847 he went to Boston, where he became a founder member of the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, with A. Fries (1st violin), Gerloff (2nd violin), Edward Lehmann (1st viola), Oscar Greiner (2nd viola), and himself as cellist. He belonged to it for 23 years; also figured in the Musical Fund Society and the Harvard Musical Association; played in trios with Anton Rubinstein, and until 1901 took part in concerts in New England.

Frijs (frish), Povla, concert soprano; b. Marstal, Denmark; first studied piano and theory in Copenhagen with O. Christensen, later voice in Paris with Jean Périer; made her début in Paris at the age of 19; appeared in concert and recital in Paris and briefly in opera in Copenhagen; made her American début in 1915; gave many first performances of modern vocal music (Bloch's Poèmes d'Automne, Loeffler's Canticle of the Sun, songs by Griffes, etc.), and made a specialty of modern international song literature. She introduced Negro spirituals to Paris and Copenhagen.

Friml, Rudolf, operetta composer; b. Prague, Dec. 7, 1879. He was a pupil at Prague Cons. of Juranek (piano) and Foerster (theory and composition); toured Austria, England, Germany, and Russia as accompanist of Kubelik, the violinist, coming with him to the U. S. in 1900 and again in 1906; remained in the U. S. after the second tour; gave numerous recitals, appeared as soloist with several of the large symphony orchestras (played his piano concerto with the N. Y. Symph. Orch.), and composed assiduously; lived in New York and Hollywood, Calif., composing for motion pictures.—Works: The operettas The Firefly (Syracuse, Oct. 14, 1912), High Jinks (Syracuse, Nov. 3, 1913), Katinka (Morristown, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1915), You're in Love (musical comedy; Stamford, Conn., 1916), Glorianna (1918), Tumble In (1919), Sometime (1919), Rose Marie (N. Y., Sept. 2, 1924; very popular), Vagabond King (N. Y., Sept. 21, 1925; highly successful). In 1937 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer made a film of The Firefly, the popular Donkey Serenade being added to the original score. He also wrote a great number of piano pieces in a light vein; paraphrases, pot-pourris, etc.

Frimmel, Theodor von, Austrian writer on music; b. Amstetten, Dec. 15, 1853; d. Vienna, Dec. 25, 1928. He first studied medicine in Vienna; then became interested in art and maintained an art gallery; taught history of art at the Athenäum in Vienna. In 1908 he became editor of the 'Beethoven-Jahrbuch.' His writings about music include valuable papers on Beethoven.—Publications: Beethoven und Goethe (1883); Neue Beethoveniana (1887, with 9 authentic portraits of Beethoven; 2nd enlarged ed., 1889); Danhäuser und Beethoven (1892); Beethovens Wohnungen in Wien (1894); Ritratti e caricature di Beethoven, in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1897); Beethoven, in 'Berühmte Musiker' (1901; 5th ed., 1919); Beethoven Studien: I. Beethoven's äussere Erscheinung (1905), II, Bausteine zu einer Lebensgeschichte des Meisters (1906); Beethoven im zeitgenössischen Bildnis (Vienna, 1923); Loose Blätter zur Beethoven-Forschung (1911-28; 10 issues); Beethoven-Handbuch (2 vols., 1927).

Frischenschlager, Friedrich, Austrian composer and music scholar; b. Gross-Florian, Styria, Sept. 7, 1885. He studied at the Graz Cons. and later with Humperdinck in Berlin (1909-15). In 1918 he settled in Salzburg; from 1918 was librarian at the Mozarteum; also taught there. An industrious composer, he has written orchestral works (Symphonische Aphorismen, Vaterländische Ouvertüre, etc.), children's operas, instrumental music, and songs. His chamber opera, The Princess and the Dwarf, was performed in 1937 at Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

Friskin, James, pianist and composer; b. Glasgow, March 3, 1886. He entered the Royal College of Music in 1900 and studied with E. Dannreuther (piano) and Stanford (composition); then taught at the Royal Normal College for the Blind (1909-14). In 1914 he came to the U. S.; taught at the Juilliard Graduate School. In 1934 he gave 2 recitals in New York consisting of the complete Wohltemperiertes Clavier of Bach. In 1944 he married Rebecca Clarke (q.v.). Among his works are Phantasy-Quintet for piano and strings; violin sonata. He published The Principles of Pianoforte Practice (London, 1921; new ed., N. Y., 1937); also (with Irwin Freundlich) Music for the Piano (N. Y., 1954).

Fritsch, Ernst Wilhelm, German music publisher; b. Lützen, Aug. 24, 1840; d. Leipzig, Aug. 14, 1902. He was a pupil (1857-62) at Leipzig Cons.; lived several years in Bern, and in 1866 took over the music publishing firm of Bromnitz in Leipzig, carried on under his own name until 1903, then acquired by C. F. W. Siegel. A warm advocate of progress in music, and of Wagner's tendencies in particular, he published the latter's Gesammelte Schriften, edited the radical 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt' (from 1870), and in 1875 started the 'Musikalische Hausblätter.' By publishing the works of rising composers (Rheinberger, Svendsen, Grieg, Cornelius), he very practically promoted modern musical development. He was an excellent musician and for many years a member of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipzig.

Froberger, Johann Jakob, famous German organist; b. Stuttgart, May 18, 1616; d. Héricourt, Haute-Saône, France, May 7, 1667. Shortly after 1630 he went to Vienna, where he entered the Institute of 'Singer oder Canthoreyknaben'; there it was the custom to allow the choir-boys, when their voices had changed and when they had attained a certain degree of musical scholarship, to serve as apprentices to famous masters of the time on stipends given by Emperor Ferdinand II. Froberger, however, did not apply for the subvention until late 1636, when it was refused him; thereupon, he held the position of 3rd organist at the court from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1637. He then again applied for leave of absence, with success, and was granted a stipend of 200 gulden; in Oct. of that year he left to study under Frescobaldi in Rome, remaining there for three and a half years. In March, 1641, he returned to Vienna, where he again was organist from 1641-45 and 1653-57; after this he made long concert tours (to Paris and London). Stories of his adventures in London, and of his appointment first as organ blower at Westminster Abbey and then as court organist to Charles II (first publ. by Mattheson, but not corroborated from any English sources) must be dismissed as apocryphal. He spent his last years in the service of the Duchess Sybille of Württemberg at her chateau near Héricourt. Although two collections of toccate, canzoni, and partite were publ. long after his death (1693 and 1696), there is internal evidence that the majority of these works were written before 1650. Thus Froberger must be regarded as the real creator of the keyboard suite as well as the master who definitely fixed the order of movements in the suite (Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Gigue).—Organ works: Toccatas, fantasias, canzoni, fugues, etc., of which 3 MS vols. are in the Vienna Library; in Berlin are 2 printed vols., Diverse ingegnossissime, rarissime, et non mai più viste curiose partite di toccate, canzoni, ricercari, capricci, etc. (1693; reprinted at Mainz in 1695) and Diverse curiose e rare partite musicali, etc. (1696); also a vol. of suites de clavecin.—A complete ed. of Froberger's works was publ. by G. Adler in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (IV, 1; VI, 2; X, 2). A monograph on Froberger was publ. by Fr. Beier in Waldersee's 'Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge' (Nos. 59 and 60); and 2 letters from Duchess Sybille to Chr. Huygens concerning him were publ. by E. Schebek (Prague, 1874). A MS preface to Fuchs' thematic catalogue of Froberger's works (in the Berlin Library) also throws some light on his career.—Cf. A. W. Ambros, Geschichte der Musik (vol. IV, p. 463 ff.); E. Schebek, Zwei Briefe über J. J. Froberger (Prague, 1874); H. Riemann, Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (vol. II, 2; p. 364 ff.); A. Tessier, Une pièce inédite de Froberger, in the 'Adler-Festschrift' (1930); K. Seidler, Untersuchungen über Biographie und Klavierstil Johann Jakob Frobergers (1930).

Froidebise, Pierre, Belgian composer; b. Ohey, May 15, 1914. He studied at the Brussels Cons. with Moulaert and L. Jongen; became organist in Liège, and in 1949 founded a progressive society there under the name 'Variation.'—Works: Antigona for soli, chorus, and orch.; Iustorum Animae for chorus and orch.; 5 Comptines for voice and 11 instruments (Brussels International Festival, June 27, 1950), chamber music and songs.

Froment, Louis de, French conductor; b. Paris, Dec. 5, 1921. He studied at the Paris Cons.; won the Premier Prix de Direction d'Orchestre there (1948); conducted the orchestra of Radiodiffusion Française; was music director at the Casinos in Cannes, Deauville, and Vichy (1950-54); conducted at various festivals in France; toured in Germany, England, Sweden, Holland, and Spain.

Fromm, Andreas, German composer; b. Pänitz, near Wusterhausen, 1621; d. Strahow, 1683. A son of a Lutheran pastor, he studied theology; in 1649, he became cantor in Stettin; he was subsequently in Rostock (1651), Wittenberg (1668), and Prague, where he turned to the Roman Catholic Church. His principal musical work was an 'actus musicus' Die Parabel von dem reichen Mann und dem armen Lazarus (1649); the opinion that it was the first German oratorio (cf. R. Schwartz, Das erste deutsche Oratorium, in the 'Jahrbuch der Musikbibliothek Peters' 1899) is discounted by later analysts. See Hans Engel's article in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Fromm, Herbert, composer; b. Kitzingen, Germany, Feb. 23, 1905. He studied privately with A. Reuss in Munich. He was conductor at the Civic Theater in Bielefeld (1930) and at Würzburg (1931-33). Came to the U. S. in 1937; was organist at Temple Beth Zion, Buffalo (1937-41); since 1941, music director at Temple Israel in Boston. He has published 12 choral works for the Hebrew service; also a violin sonata. His cantata The Stranger was performed in N. Y., March 12, 1957.

Frontini, Francesco Paolo, Italian composer; b. Catania, Aug. 6, 1860; d. there, July 28, 1939. He was a pupil of his father, Martino Frontini, who was also an opera composer, and of Lauro Rossi at Naples; was director of the Catania Cons. until 1923. He wrote the following operas: Nella (Catania, March 30, 1881), Malia (Bologna, May 30, 1893), Il Falconiere (Catania, Sept. 15, 1899); the oratorio Sansone e Dalila (Catania, Aug. 23, 1882) and numerous choral pieces and songs. Ricordi published his collection of Sicilian songs Eco di Sicilia (1883) and of Sicilian dances Antiche danze di Sicilia (3 vols., 1936).—Cf. G. C. Balbo, Note critico-biografiche su F. P. Frontini (Catania, 1905).

Froschauer, Johann, an Augsburg printer (end of 15th century), once thought to have been the first to print music with movable type, in Michael Keinspeck's 'Lilium musicae planae' (1498); however, it is now known that wood blocks were employed for the music illustrations in that work; it also appears fairly certain that music printing with movable type preceded Froschauer's work.

Frost, Charles Joseph, English composer; b. Westbury-on-Trym, June 20, 1848; d. Brockley, Oct. 13, 1918. He was engaged as organist and choral leader in various provincial towns in England; was active also as a lecturer; he wrote a cantata By the Waters of Babylon (1876), much sacred music, and pieces for organ (55 hymn-tune voluntaries, 40 preludes, a sonata, etc.).

Frost, Henry Frederick, English organist and writer; b. London, March 15, 1848; d. there, May 3, 1901. He was a boy chorister at Windsor; was organist of the Chapel Royal (1865-91); then taught organ at the Guildhall School of Music (1880-88); also wrote for 'The Athenaeum' and 'The Standard.' He wrote a biography of Schubert for the 'Great Musicians' series; publ. Savoy Hymn-tunes and Chants.

Frotscher, Gotthold, German musicologist; b. Ossa, near Leipzig, Dec. 6, 1897. He studied in Bonn and Leipzig; was univ. instructor in Danzig (1924-32); professor at Berlin Univ. (1935-45). He wrote a valuable history of organ playing, Geschichte des Orgelspiels und der Orgelkomposition (2 vols., Berlin, 1935).

Frotzler, Carl, Austrian organist and composer; b. Stockerau, Lower Austria, April 10, 1873. Of very precocious talent, he wrote a grand mass at 14; then entered the Vienna Cons., where he studied with Franz Krenn. He later occupied various posts as organist: at the Pfarrkirche, Stockerau (1887-93); at Tosis, Hungary, as Kapellmeister to Count Nicolaus Esterhazy (1893-97); then lived in Linz; in 1938 was in Vienna; in 1953 lived in retirement in Stockerau.

Frugatta, Giuseppe, Italian pianist and composer; b. Bergamo, May 26, 1860; d. Milan, May 30, 1933. He studied with A. Bazzini (composition) and C. Andreoli (piano) at Milan Cons., where he became prof. He composed a number of effective piano pieces (Polonaise de concert, Moments poétiques, etc.); also a piano trio (prize of the Academy at Florence, 1893); a string quartet (prize of St. Cecilia Academy at Rome, 1898); and a piano quintet with clarinet (prize, London, 1899). He published Preparazione al 'Gradus ad Parnassum' di Clementi (1913).

Früh, Armin Leberecht, German musical inventor; b. Mühlhausen, Thuringia, Sept. 15, 1820; d. Nordhausen, Jan. 8, 1894. He invented, in 1857, the 'Semeiomelodicon' (an apparatus for facilitating musical instruction, consisting of a series of note-heads which, when pressed by the finger, produced tones of corresponding pitch); he traveled to introduce his invention to prominent musicians, and established a factory in Dresden in 1858, but soon failed.

Früh, Huldreich Georg, Swiss pianist and composer; b. Zürich, June 16, 1903; d. there, April 25, 1945. He studied at the Zürich Cons.; wrote ballets and chamber operas, designed mainly for community festivals; also wrote popular songs and music for films.

Frumerie, (Per) Gunnar (Fredrick) de, Swedish composer; b. Nacka, near Stockholm, July 20, 1908. He studied at Stockholm Cons. (1929); was a stipendiary of the Jenny Lind Foundation until 1931; later studied with Erwin Stein and Emil von Sauer (Vienna) and Leonid Sabaneyev and Alfred Cortot (Paris). His works include a suite for chamber orch. (1930); 2 piano concertos (1929; 1935); variations and fugue for piano and orch. (1933); concerto for violin and orch. (1936); partita for string orch. (1938); En moder, melodrama to text by Andersen; Singoailla, opera (Stockholm, March 16, 1940); Fader var, cantata (1946).

Fry, William Henry, American composer and journalist, one of the first to champion the cause of the American composer and of opera in English; b. Philadelphia, Aug. 10, 1813; d. Santa Cruz, West Indies, Sept. 21, 1864. He was a pupil of L. Meignen in harmony and counterpoint. On June 4, 1845, he brought out at Philadelphia his Leonora, the first publicly performed grand opera by a native American; shortly after which he went to Europe as a foreign correspondent for the N. Y. 'Tribune'; there he became acquainted with several important European musicians, including Berlioz. In 1852-53 he gave a comprehensive series of lectures on music in New York, in the last of which he attacked the complete indifference of American artists and audiences alike to their own native music and emphasized the importance of having American works produced and their composers encouraged. Fry's symph. picture, Niagara, was given in New York, May 4, 1854. His 4 symphonies, Santa Claus, The Breaking Heart, Childe Harold, and A Day in the Country, were perf. by Jullien in 1853. He wrote 3 more operas: The Bridal of Dunure; Aurelia the Vestal; and Notre Dame de Paris, the last of which was produced at the Philadelphia Festival, May 3, 1864; he also composed a Stabat Mater, several cantatas, many songs.—Otto Kinkeldey presented excerpts from Leonora in concert form at a concert of the 'Pro Musica' Society (N. Y., Feb. 27, 1929).—Cf. J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., rev. ed., 1939); W. T. Upton, The Musical Works of William Henry Fry (Philadelphia, 1946); W. T. Upton, William Henry Fry, American Journalist and Composer-Critic (N. Y., 1954).

Frye, Walter, English composer of the 15th century; nothing is known regarding his life, but from indirect indications, it appears that he was attached to the court of Burgundy. Of his 3 Masses (in MS at the Royal Library in Brussels) two are without a Kyrie, a lack characteristic of the English school; his Ave Regina is an early example of the 'song motet'.—Cf. M. Bukofzer, An Unknown Chansonnier of the 15th Century, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1942); reproduces a chanson by Frye on p. 42 ff.; G. Reese, Music in the Renaissance (N. Y., 1954, pp. 92-95; contains Frye's Ave Regina on p. 94 f); D. Plamenac, A Reconstruction of the French Chansonnier in the Bibl. Colombina, Seville, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1951).

Fryer, George Herbert, English pianist and pedagogue; b. London, May 21, 1877; d. there, Feb. 7, 1957. He studied at the Royal College of Music; then with Matthay in London and Busoni in Weimar. He made his début as a pianist in London (Nov. 17, 1898); then traveled in Europe; in 1914 he made a tour in the U. S.; in 1915 gave recitals for the British Army in France; in 1917 returned to London; taught at the Royal College of Music (1917-47). He wrote miscellaneous pieces for piano; also publ. a book, Hints on Pianoforte Practice (N. Y., 1914).

Fryklöf, (fräk'-lōf), Harald Leonard, Swedish composer and teacher, b. Upsala, Sept. 14, 1882; d. Stockholm, March 11, 1919. He studied theory with J. Lindegren at the Stockholm Cons. and piano with Ph. Scharwenka in Berlin. In 1911 he became prof. of harmony at the Cons. of Stockholm. With G. Sandberg, A. Hellerström, and H. Palm, he edited the choral series Musica sacra (1915); also publ. Koralharmonisering-Kyrkotonarterna (Choral Harmonizations-Church Modes; 1915); wrote a concert overture, songs, piano pieces.

Fryklund (fräk'-lund), Lars Axel Daniel, Swedish musicologist and specialist on musical instruments; b. Västerås, May 4, 1879. He studied Romanic philology at the Univ. at Upsala; taught at the Univ. of Hölisingborg (1921-44).—Publications: Swedish Instruments (Upsala, 1910), African Instruments (1915), Study on the Pocket Violin (1917), Tromba Marina (1919), Viola d'amore (1921), etc.

Frysinger, J. Frank, American organist; b. Hanover, Pa., April 7, 1878; d. York, Pa., Dec. 4, 1954. He began to play the organ at the age of 8; then studied with F. W. Wolff in Baltimore (1887-95) and with E. S. Kelley (1898-1900); was organist at First Presbyterian Church at York, Pa., from 1909-11 and again from 1922-53; retired a year before his death. He publ. about 200 works for organ; also piano pieces and songs.

Fuchs (fööks), Albert, composer and pedagogue; b. Basel, Aug. 6, 1858; d. Dresden, Feb. 15, 1910. He studied with Selmar Bagge in Basel, and later at the Leipzig Cons. with Reinecke and Jadassohn (1876-79). He conducted oratorios in Trier (1880-83); then lived in Dresden; was subsequently director of the Wiesbaden Cons. (1889-98). In 1898 he joined the staff of the Dresden Cons.; was also conductor at the Schumann Singakademie (from 1901); wrote music criticism for the 'Dresdener Zeitung.' He was a prolific composer, and publ. a number of choral works and songs; wrote 2 oratorios: Selig sind, die in dem Herrn sterben (1906) and Das tausendjäh- riges Reich (1908); several instrumental concertos; publ. Taxe der Streichinstrumente (1907; many reprints); edited an album of Italian songs of the early 18th century, and a collection of Italian arias.—Cf. F. A. Seissler, Albert Fuchs, in vol. III of 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (Leipzig, 1909).

Fuchs, Johann Nepomuk, Austrian composer; b. Frauenthal, Styria, May 5, 1842; d. Vöslau, near Vienna, Oct. 5, 1899. He studied with Sechter at Vienna; appointed Kapellmeister of the Pressburg Opera in 1864; held similar positions at Cologne, Hamburg, Leipzig, and at the Vienna Opera. In 1894 he succeeded Hellmesberger as director of the Vienna Cons. He produced the opera Zingara (Brünn, 1892) and several others.

Fuchs, Karl Dorius Johann, distinguished German music scholar; b. Potsdam, Oct. 22, 1838; d. Danzig, Aug. 24, 1922. He studied piano with Hans von Bülow, Weitzmann, and Kiel; took the degree of Dr. phil. at Greifswald, with the dissertation Präludien zu einer Kritik der Tonkunst. In 1868 he became teacher at the Kullak Academy in Berlin; then gave piano concerts in Germany. In 1874 he went to Danzig, where he was organist at the Petrikirche and music critic of the 'Danziger Zeitung' (1887-1920); was also organist for many years at the Synagogue in Danzig, and wrote Andachtslieder für Tempel und Haus. Fuchs was a friend of Nietzsche, with whom he corresponded.—Writings: Betrachtungen mit und gegen Arthur Schopenhauer ('Neue Berliner Musikzeitung', 1868); Ungleiche Verwandte unter den Neudeutschen (1868); Virtuos und Dilettant (Leipzig, 1871); Die Zukunft des musikalischen Vortrags (Danzig, 1884); Die Freiheit des musikalischen Vortrags (Danzig, 1885); Praktische Anleitung zum Phrasieren (Berlin, 1886, with Hugo Riemann; English transl., N. Y., 1892); Künstler und Kritiker (1898); Takt und Rhythmus im Choral (Berlin, 1911); Der taktgerechte Choral, Nachweisung seiner 6 Typen (Berlin, 1923). His letters were publ. by his son, Hans Fuchs in 'Ostdeutsche Monatshefte' (Sept. 1923).

Fuchs, Robert, Austrian composer and pedagogue; brother of Johann Nepomuk Fuchs; b. Frauenthal, Feb. 15, 1847; d. Vienna, Feb. 19, 1927. He taught at the Vienna Cons. from 1875, and was reputed to be one of the best teachers of composition there; wrote several serenades for string orch., a piano concerto, and a symphony.—

Cf. Anton Mayr, Erinnerungen an Robert Fuchs (Graz, 1934).

Fučík (foo'-tchik), Julius, Czech composer of band music; b. Prague, July 18, 1872; d. Leitmeritz, Sept. 25, 1916. He was a bassoon player at the German Opera in Prague (1893) and later in Zagreb and Budapest; studied composition with Dvořák; was bandmaster of the 86th and 92nd Austrian regiments. He wrote a great number of dances and marches for band, including the immensely popular march, Entrance of the Gladiators.

Fuenllana (föen-l'yah'-nah), Miguel de, blind Spanish vihuela virtuoso and composer: b. Navalcarnero, Madrid, early in the 16th century; date of death unknown. He was chamber musician to the Marquesa de Tarifa, and later at the court of Philip II, to whom he dedicated (1554) his Libro de música para vihuela, intitulado Orphenica Lyra. From 1563, he was chamber musician to Queen Isabel de Valois, 3rd wife of Philip II. The Libro gives evidence of a high state of musical art in Spain during the 16th century; besides fantasias and other compositions for vihuela by Fuenllana and old Spanish ballads (such as the famous Ay de mí, Alhama), it contains arrangements for vihuela of works by Vásquez, Morales, P. and F. Guerrero, Flecha, Bernal, and several Flemish masters.—Cf. H. Riemann, in 'Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte' (1895); G. Morphy, Les Luthistes espagnols (Leipzig, 1902); A. Kocirz, Die Gitarrekompositionen in Miguel de Fuenllana's Orphenica Lyra, in 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (1922); H. Anglès, Dades desconegudes sobre Miguel de Fuenllana, vihuelista, in 'Revista Musical Catalana' (April, 1936).

Fuentes (y Pelaez), Eduardo Sanchez de. See Sanchez de Fuentes.

Fuentes (fwehn'-tä's), Juan Bautista, Mexican composer; b. Guadalajara, Jalisco, March 16, 1869; d. Leon, Guanajuato, Feb. 11, 1955. He studied in Mexico City; then taught music in various schools there. He published the manuals Teoría de la Música (1899); Tratado de Intervalos y Trasposición (1909); Método de Armonía (1920); composed a number of piano pieces in a salon style; also some orchestral works, among them Sinfonia Mexicana.

Fuerstner, Carl, composer and conductor; b. Strasbourg, June 16, 1912. At the age of 11 he made his first public appearance as pianist, in Jena; then studied in Cologne at the Hochschule für Musik with Abendroth, Braunfels, and Jarnach (1930-34); still as a student he conducted opera at Cologne; in 1939 he emigrated to the U. S.; was assistant conductor of the San Francisco Opera Company; was also active as accompanist. He has taught at Brigham Young University at Provo, Utah, and at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester. He began to compose early in life; as a youth wrote incidental music for the Cologne Opera. Among his works is a Concerto Rapsodico for cello and orch. (Rochester, May 11, 1947); Metamorphoses on a Chorale Theme, scored for 20 trombones, 2 tubas, and percussion (Rochester, April 5, 1949); Divertimento for string quartet (1949); quintet for clarinet and string quartet; Berceuse for 4 recorders; violin sonata, etc.

Fugère (fuh-zhär'), Lucien, French baritone; b. Paris, July 22, 1848; d. there, Jan. 15, 1935. He began as a singer in cabarets; then sang in light opera; in 1877 joined the Opéra-Comique, and acquired a great following as a brilliant performer of the comic parts; his best roles were Figaro and Bartolo. He was also well known as a teacher; among his pupils was Mary Garden.

Führer, Robert (Johann Nepomuk), composer and organist; b. Prague, June 2, 1807; d. Vienna, Nov. 28, 1861. He studied with Johann Vitásek; was organist in provincial towns before succeeding his teacher as Kapellmeister at the Prague Cathedral in 1839. He became involved in fraudulent transactions and was dismissed from his post in 1845. He then held various positions as organist and choral conductor in Vienna, Salzburg, Munich, Augsburg, and Gmunden. A series of embezzlements and other criminal offenses perpetrated by him resulted in his dismissal from several of his positions, but he continued to compose and perform; in 1856 he was Bruckner's competitor for the organist's post in Linz, arousing great admiration for his skill, even though Bruckner was selected. He served a prison term in 1859, but was given full freedom to write music. He published numerous sacred works (32 masses, 14 Requiems, 4 litanies, etc.) and many organ pieces; also handbooks on harmony and organ playing. Despite his notoriously dishonest acts and professional untrustworthiness (he publ. one of Schubert's masses under his own name), he enjoyed a remarkably high reputation for his musicianship among his colleagues. See F.

Haberl's detailed article on him in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Fukai, Shiro, Japanese composer; b. in Akita-City, April 4, 1907. He studied composition in Tokyo with M. Sugawara; among his works are the orchestral suite Paradise (Tokyo, Jan. 29, 1937); Tropical Scene (Tokyo, Jan. 14, 1943); a large choral work, Prayer for Peace (Tokyo, Aug. 15, 1949); a cantata, Heiankyo (1939); and the ballets A City (Tokyo, June 18, 1936), Ocean (Tokyo, Jan. 30, 1938), and Distorted Letters ABC (1955).

Fuleihan (föö-lā-hahn'), Anis (äh-nēs), American pianist, conductor, and composer; b. Kyrenia, Cyprus, April 2, 1900; studied there at the English School; came to the U. S. in 1915 and continued his study of the piano in New York with Alberto Jonás; toured the U. S., also the Near East, from 1919 to 1925; then lived in Cairo, returning to the U. S. in 1928; was on the staff of G. Schirmer, Inc. (1932-39); 1947, became prof. at Indiana Univ.; 1953, director of the Beirut Cons., Lebanon.—Works: for orch.: Mediterranean Suite (1922; Cincinnati, March 15, 1935); Preface to a Child's Story Book (1932); symphony No. 1 (N. Y. Philharmonic, Dec. 31, 1936); concerto No. 1 for piano and string orch. (Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1937, composer soloist); concerto No. 2 for piano and orch. (N. Y., 1938); Fantasy for viola and orch. (1938); violin concerto (1930); Fiesta (Indianapolis Symph. Orch., Dec. 1, 1939); Symphonie Concertante, for string quartet and orch. (N. Y. Philharmonic, April 25, 1940); concerto for 2 pianos and orch. (Hempstead, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1941); Epithalamium for piano and strings (Philadelphia, Feb. 7, 1941); concerto for theremin and orch. (N. Y., 1945); Invocation to Isis (Indianapolis Symph. Orch., Feb. 28, 1941); Three Cyprus Serenades for orch. (Philadelphia Orch., Dec. 13, 1946, Ormandy cond.); Rhapsody for cello and string orch. (Saratoga Springs, Sept. 12, 1946); Overture for Five Winds (N. Y., May 17, 1947); The Pyramids of Giza, symph. poem (1952); 2 string quartets; 4 piano sonatas; choral pieces; songs.

Fuller Maitland, John Alexander, eminent English music scholar, b. London, April 7, 1856; d. Carnforth Lane, March 30, 1936. He studied at Westminster School and Trinity College in Cambridge (M.A., 1882); then took piano lessons with Dannreuther and W. S. Rockstro. He was the music critic of the 'Pall Mall Gazette' (1882-84); of the 'Manchester Guardian' (1884-89); lectured extensively on the history of English music; appeared as pianist with the Bach Choir and as performer on the harpsichord in historical concerts; contributed to the first ed. of 'Grove's Dictionary' and edited the 'Appendix'; editor-in-chief of the 2nd ed. (1904-10); ed. of 'English Carols of the 15th Century' (1887), 'English Country Songs' (1893; with L. E. Broadwood), 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book' (1899; with W. Barclay Squire, his brother-in-law), 12 trio sonatas and St. Cecilia Ode of Purcell in the monumental edition of the Purcell Society, the piano works of Purcell's contemporaries (1921). Together with Clara Bell he translated Spitta's Bach (3 vols., 1884; 2nd ed., 1899); compiled the catalogue of the music division of the Fitzwilliam Museum (1893). He is the author of the following books: Schumann (1884); Masters of German Music (1894); The Musician's Pilgrimage (1899); English Music in the 19th Century (1902); The Age of Bach and Handel (vol. IV of 'The Oxford History of Music,' 1902; new ed., 1931); Joseph Joachim (1905); Brahms (1911; in German, 1912); The Concert of Music (1915); The "48"—Bach's Wohltemperiertes Clavier (2 vols., 1925); The Keyboard Suites of J. S. Bach (1925); The Spell of Music (1926); A Door-Keeper of Music (1929); Bach's Brandenburg Concertos (1929); Schumann's Concerted Chamber Music (1929); The Music of Parry and Stanford (Cambridge, 1934).

Fumagalli, four brothers, natives of Inzago, Italy: Disma, b. Sept. 8, 1826; d. Milan, March 9, 1893. He was a pupil at, and from 1857 prof. in, Milan Cons. Prolific composer of piano music (over 250 numbers).—Adolfo, b. Oct. 19, 1828; d. Florence, May 3, 1856, at the age of 27. Pianist, pupil of Gaetano Medaglia, and later of Angeleri and Ray at Milan Cons.; then undertook tours throughout Italy, France, and Belgium, earning the sobriquet of the 'Paganini of the pianoforte.' During his brief lifetime he publ. about 100 elegant and effective piano pieces, which obtained an extraordinary vogue. Filippo Filippi wrote a sketch, Della vita e delle opere di Adolfo Fumagalli (Milan, 1857).—Polibio, b. Oct. 26, 1830; d. Milan, June 21, 1891. Pianist; composer for piano and for organ.—Luca, b. May 29, 1837; d. Milan, June 5, 1908. He was a pupil of the Milan Cons.; played with great success in Paris (1860), and published salon-music for piano; also produced an opera, Luigi XI (Florence, 1875).

Fumet, Dynam-Victor, French organist and composer; b. Toulouse, May 4, 1867; d. Paris, Jan. 2, 1949. He studied with César Franck and with Guiraud at the Paris Cons. At an early age he became involved in the political activities of French anarchists and was forced to leave school. For a time he earned his living as piano player in Paris night clubs; in 1910 became organist of St. Anne's Church in Paris. His music follows the precepts of French Wagnerism; the influence of Franck is also noticeable. Fumet wrote several orchestral works on mystic themes, among them Magnetisme céleste for cello and orchestra (1903); Trois âmes (1915); Transsubstantiation (1930); Notre mirage, notre douleur (1930). During the German occupation he wrote La Prison glorifiée (1943).

Fumi, Vincenslao, Italian conductor; b. Montepulciano, Tuscany, Oct. 20, 1823; d. Florence, Nov. 20, 1880. He conducted opera in various Italian cities; also in Constantinople, Montevideo, and Buenos Aires; finally at Florence. His compositions include the opera, Atala (Buenos Aires, 1862), a symphony, and other orchestral works. A collection of folksongs of all times and nations, which he undertook, remained unfinished.

Fursch-Madi, Emma, operatic soprano; b. Bayonne, France, 1847; d. Warrenville, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1894. She studied at the Paris Cons.; her first opera engagement was in Paris as Marguerite. She visited America in 1874 with the New Orleans French Opera Co.; sang at Covent Garden (1879-81) and at the Metropolitan Opera, where her final appearance (Feb. 6, 1894) was as Ortrud in Lohengrin. She was married three times: to Madi Manjour, a violinist, to Henry Verié, and to M. Wurst.

Fürstenau, Moritz, German writer on music and flutist; b. Dresden, July 26, 1824; d. there, March 25, 1889. He was a member of the Dresden court orch. from 1842; librarian of the music section, Royal Library, from 1852; from 1858, flute teacher in the Cons. He published: Beiträge zur Geschichte der königlich-sächs. musikalischen Kapelle (1849); Zur Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters am Hofe zu Dresden (1861-2, 2 vols.; a supplement, by Dr. Hans van Bressius, entitled Die königliche sächs. musikalische Kapelle von Reissiger bis Schuch, 1826-98, was publ. at Dresden, 1898); Die Fabrikation musikalischer Instrumente im königlich sächsischen Vogtland (1876, with Th. Berthold); also essays and articles in musical journals, in 'Mittheilungen des königlich sächsischen Alterthumsvereins,' in Mendel's 'Musikal. Conversations-Lexikon,' etc.

Fürstner, Adolf, German publisher; b. Berlin, April 3, 1833; d. Bad Nauheim, June 6, 1908. He was a member of a family of merchants; although lacking in musical education he showed a keen understanding of commercial values of good music. He founded a music publishing firm under his own name in Berlin in 1868; in 1872 he acquired the catalogue of the Dresden firm of C. F. Meser, which owned several operas by Wagner and some works of Liszt; he subsequently purchased the rights of operas by Massenet, and later demonstrated his business acumen by securing Pagliacci. His firm distinguished itself as the earliest publisher of Richard Strauss. Fürstner was succeeded after his death by his son Otto (b. Berlin, Oct. 17, 1886); in 1933, Otto Fürstner was compelled to leave Germany; he went to England, where he resumed his business and gradually won back the German rights to the original editions of the firm.

Furtwängler (fööhrt-väng-ler), Wilhelm, celebrated German conductor; b. Berlin, Jan. 25, 1886; d. Baden-Baden, Nov. 30, 1954. He grew up in Munich, where he studied music with Schillings, Rheinberger, and Beer-Waldbrunn; conducting with Mottl. His first appearances as conductor were in opera, at Zürich and Strasbourg; then in Lübeck (1911-15) and Mannheim (1915-19). From 1919-21, he conducted the Tonkünstler Orch. in Vienna; from 1920-22, the Staatskapelle, Berlin. In 1919 he became musical director of the Berlin State Opera. In 1922 he was appointed conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic as successor to Nikisch; he also conducted the Gewandhaus Orch. in Leipzig (until 1928) and at the Bayreuth Festivals (1931-32). He made a sensationally successful American début with the N. Y. Philharmonic on Jan. 3, 1925, and led the orch. again in February, 1926, and March, 1927. On April 17, 1932, he was awarded the Goethe Gold Medal. In 1933-34, he had several clashes with the Nazi Government on questions of policy, and on Dec. 4, 1934, resigned his posts at the Berlin Philharmonic, the State Opera, and the Reichsmusikkammer (of which he had been briefly deputy president). However, a few months later, he made an uneasy peace with the Nazi authorities and agreed to resume his post with the Berlin Philharmonic (April 25, 1935). In 1936 he was offered a contract as permanent conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic, but declined when objections were raised in America against his collaboration with the Nazis. He continued conducting in Germany during World War II; in 1945 he went to Switzerland. Returning to Germany in 1946, he was absolved from the charges of pro-Nazi activities (Dec. 17, 1946). He was tentatively engaged to conduct the Chicago Symph. Orch. in 1949, but the contract was cancelled when public opinion proved hostile. In Western Europe, however, Furtwängler was received most enthusiastically, when he led the Berlin Philharmonic in guest appearances in England and France. He was to conduct the Berlin Philharmonic in its first American tour in 1955, but death intervened, and Herbert von Karajan was appointed his successor. Furtwängler was also a composer; he wrote 2 symphonies, a piano concerto, a Te Deum, and some chamber music; publ. a monograph, Johannes Brahms und Anton Bruckner (Leipzig, 1942); collections of essays, Gespräche über Musik (Zürich, 1948; in English as Concerning Music, London, 1953); Ton und Wort (Wiesbaden, 1954); and Der Musiker und sein Publikum (Zürich, 1954).—Cf.: R. Specht, Wilhelm Furtwängler (1922); A. Einstein, Wilhelm Furtwängler, in the 'Monthly Mus. Record' (Jan., 1934); O. Schrenck, Wilhelm Furtwängler (1940); F. Herzfeld, Wilhelm Furtwängler, Weg und Wesen (Leipzig, 1941); Berta Geissmar, Two Worlds of Music (N. Y., 1946); Willy Siebert, Furtwängler, Mensch und Künstler (Buenos Aires, 1950); Curt Riess, Furtwängler; Musik und Politik (Bern, 1953).

Furuhjelm (föö'-röö-yelm), Erik Gustav, Finnish composer, b. Helsinki, July 6, 1883. He studied violin; then took lessons in composition with Sibelius and Wegelius; continued his studies in Vienna with Robert Fuchs. In 1909 he was appointed prof. at the Helsinki Cons. He wrote two symphonies, a Romantic Overture, a Konzertstück for violin and orch., Exotica-Suite for orch., Intermezzo and Pastorale for orch., a Konzertstück for piano and orch., a piano quintet, and other orchestral and chamber works. He has also written a book on Sibelius (Helsinki, 1916; in Swedish and in Finnish).

Fussan, Werner, German composer; b. Plauen, Dec. 25, 1912. He studied at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; was in the army (1940-45); then taught at the Wiesbaden Cons. (1946-48). Among his works are a Capriccio for orch.; wind quintet; duo for flute and piano; 2 piano sonatinas; and songs.

Fux (fööks), Johann Joseph, Austrian composer and learned theorist; b. Hirtenfeld, Styria, 1660; d. Vienna, Feb. 14, 1741. Nothing definite is known concerning his teachers or course of study. In 1696 he was appointed organist at the Schottenkirche, Vienna; in 1698 he was made court composer; in 1704 Kapellmeister at St. Stephen's, and assistant Kapellmeister to the court in 1713, succeeding Ziani as first Kapellmeister (the highest position attainable for a musician) in 1713. This office he held until his death, under 3 successive emperors, and received many tokens of imperial favor. Of his 405 extant works, comparatively few have been published. The greatest and the most enduring is his treatise on counterpoint, Gradus ad Parnassum, published originally in Latin (Vienna, 1725), since then in German, Italian, French, and English (1791; part of the Gradus ad Parnassum was published in English as Steps to Parnassus, N. Y., 1943); Mozart and Haydn studied it; Cherubini and Albrechtsberger adopted its method, which was sanctioned by Piccini and Padre Martini. Vogler, however, condemned it (see introduction to Vogler's Choral-System, p. 1; Fröhlich's biography of Vogler, p. 18). Fux was well aware of the weakness of contemporary music practice and, in trying to arrive at a satisfactory remedy, disregarded the modern idiom already established when he was writing and chose, as the basis of his theory, the style of Palestrina. Although his presentation of that style is not very strong or even authentic, for, among other things, he could not have been very well acquainted with the main body of Palestrina's works because they were not commonly available at the time, the method is still valuable for its organization and the discipline it affords (cf. K. Jeppesen's Counterpoint, 1931; in English, N. Y., 1939).—His compositions include 18 operas; 10 oratorios; 29 partitas (among them the Concentus musico-instrumentalis); much sacred music: 50 Masses (the Missa canonica is a contrapuntal masterpiece), 3 Requiems, 2 Dies irae, 57 vespers and psalms, etc., and 38 'sacred sonatas.' A selection from his works is publ. in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' I, 1 (4 Masses), II, 1 (27 motets), IX, 2 (2 sacred sonatas, 2 overtures), XVII (the opera Costanza e fortezza; later ed. by G. P. Smith, Northampton, Mass., 1936), XXIII, 2 (the Concentus musico-instrumentalist), LXXXV, ed. by E. Schenk (Vienna, 1947).—Cf. L. von Köchel,

Gabriel, Mary Ann Virginia, English composer; b. Banstead, Surrey, Feb. 7, 1825; d. London, Aug. 7, 1877. She studied with Pixis, Döhler, Thalberg, and Molique; married George E. March (1874), who wrote most of her libretti.—Works: 3 cantatas, Evangeline (Brighton Festival, Feb. 13, 1873), Dreamland, and Graziella; 6 operettas, Widows Bewitched (London, Nov. 13, 1867), Grass Widows, Shepherd of Cornouailles, Who's the Heir?, Follies of a Night, and A Rainy Day; piano pieces.

Gabrieli, Andrea, eminent Italian organist and composer; b. Venice, c. 1520; d. there, 1586. He was a pupil of Adrian Willaert at San Marco and chorister there (1536); then traveled in Germany and Bohemia; was in Bavaria in 1562 and went to Frankfurt, to the coronation of Maximilian II, as court organist of Duke Albert V of Bavaria. In 1566 he returned to Venice and was appointed 2nd organist at San Marco; became 1st organist on Jan. 1, 1585, succeeding Merulo. He enjoyed a great reputation as organist (his concerts with Merulo, on 2 organs, were featured attractions). Among his pupils were his famous nephew, Giovanni Gabrieli, and Hans Leo Hassler. A prolific composer, he wrote a large number of works of varied description, many of which were published posthumously, edited by his nephew. His versatility is attested by the fact that he was equally adept in sacred music of the loftiest spirit, and in instrumental music, as well as in madrigals, often of a comic nature.—Works: Sacrae cantiones (37 motets, 1565); Libro I di madrigali a 5 voci (30 madrigals, 1566); Libro II di madrigali a 5 voci (28 madrigals, 1570); Greghesche e justiniane (15 numbers, 1571); Primus Liber Missarum 6 vocum (4 Masses, 1572); Libro I di madrigali a 6 voci (30 madrigals, 1574); Libro di madrigali a 3 voci (30 madrigals, 1575); Ecclesiasticæ cantiones a 4 voci (58 motets, 1576); Libro II de madrigali a 6 voci (22 madrigals, 1580); Psalmi Davidici a 6 voci (7 Psalms, 1583); Sonate a 5 strumenti (lost, 1586); Concerti di Andrea et di Giovanni Gabrieli (39 motets, 26 madrigals, 1587); Edippo Tiranno (choruses for Sophocles' Oedipus, performed in Vicenza in 1585, 1588); Libro III di madrigali a 5 voci (22 madrigals, 1589); Madrigali et ricercari (24 madrigals, 7 ricercars, 1589); Intonazioni d'organo (12 intonazioni, 1593); Ricercari di Andrea Gabrieli (13 ricercars, 1595); Libro III de ricercari (6 ricercars, 1 fantasia, 1 motet, 1 canzon, 2 madrigals, 1 capriccio on the passamezzo antico, 1596); Mascherate di Andrea Gabrieli et altri (3 mascherate, 3 madrigals, 1601); Canzoni alla francese et ricercari (4 canzoni, 7 ricercars, 1605); Canzoni alla francese (9 canzoni, one ricercar, 1605); and a large number of detached works in contemporary and later collections.—Modern editions: G. Benvenuti, 'Istituzioni e monumenti dell' arte musicale italiana' (vol. I; vocal and instrumental pieces); L. Torchi, 'L'arte musicale in Italia' (vols. II and III; 16 motets and pieces for organ); K. von Winterfeld, in *Joh. Gabrieli (Gabrielli), Domenico (called the 'Menghino dal violoncello,' Menghino being the diminutive of Domenico), Italian composer; b. Bologna, c. 1650; d. there, July 10, 1690. An excellent cellist, he played in the orchestra of San Petronio, Bologna (1680-87); was a member of the Bologna Philharmonic Academy (1676); then became its president (1683). He was one of the earliest composers for cello solo. He produced 12 operas in Bologna, Venice, Modena, and Turin; his last opera, Tiberio in Bisanzio, was performed posthumously in Lucca (Jan. 20, 1694). Other works: Ricercari per violoncello solo (1689; MS at the Liceo in Bologna); Balletti, gighe, correnti e sarabande for 2 violins, cello, and basso continuo (1684; 2nd ed., 1704); Vexillum pacis (motets for contralto with instrumental accompaniment; posthumous, 1695). L. Landshoff edited 3 Arie with instrumental obbligato (in Alte Meister des Bel Canto, 1912) and 2 cello sonatas (1930); A. Einstein printed a chamber cantata in the music supplement (No. 28) of his A Short History of Music (N. Y., 1938).—Cf. E. Albini, Domenico Gabrieli, il Corelli del violoncello, in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1937).

Gabrieli, Giovanni, celebrated Venetian composer; nephew and pupil of Andrea Gabrieli; b. Venice, between 1554 and 1557; d. there, Aug. 12, 1612. He lived in Munich from 1575-79, taken to that court by Lassus. On Nov. 1, 1584 he was engaged to substitute for Merulo as 1st organist at San Marco in Venice; on Jan. 1, 1585, was permanently appointed as 2nd organist (his uncle meanwhile took charge of the 1st organ); retained this post until his death. As a composer, he stands at the head of the Venetian school; he was probably the first to write vocal works with parts for instrumental groups in various combinations, partly specified, partly left to the conductor, used as accompaniment as well as interspersed instrumental sinfonie (Sacrae Symphoniae). His role as a composer and teacher is epoch-making; through his innovations and his development of procedures and devices invented by others (free handling of several choirs in the many-voiced vocal works, 'concerted' solo parts and duets in the few-voiced vocal works, trio-sonata texture, novel dissonance treatment, speech-rhythm, root-progressions in fifths, use of rational and range-levels for structural purposes, coloristic effects) and through his numerous German pupils (particularly Schütz) and other transalpine followers, he gave a new direction to the development of music. His instrumental music helped to spark the composition of German instrumental ensemble music, which reached its apex in the symphonic and chamber music works of the classical masters. Of interest also is the fact that one of his ricercars, a 4-part work in the 10th tone (1595), is an early example of the 'fugue with episodes' (reprinted in Riemann's Musikgeschichte in Beispielen, No. 52, Leipzig, 1913).—Publications (very few) contain both sacred and secular vocal, as well as instrumental, works: Concerti di Andrea et di Giovanni Gabrieli (5 motets, 5 madrigals; 1587); Intonazioni d'organo di Andrea Gabrieli et di Giovanni suo nepote (11 intonazioni; 1593); Sacrae Symphoniae Joannis Gabrieli (42 motets, Mass, 12 instrumental canzoni, 3 sonatas; 1597); Sacrarum Symphoniarum Continuatio (9 motets, of which 5 are reprints; 1600); Canzoni per sonare (6 canzoni; 1608); Sacrae Symphoniae Diversorum Autorum (26 motets; 1613); Sacrae Symphoniae, Liber II (26 motets, Mass, 3 Magnificats; 1615); Canzoni et Sonate (15 canzoni, 5 sonatas; 1615); Reliquiae Sacrorum Concertum (1 Magnificat, 19 motets, of which 10 are reprints; 1615). Detached pieces in collections up to 1625: 25 more madrigals, 1 canticle, Magnificats, motets, ricercars, toccatas, fantasias.—G. Benvenuti publ. 3 secular vocal pieces in vol. I (1931) and G. Cesari, 13 canzoni and 2 sonate (from Sacrae Symphoniae, 1597) in vol. II (1932) of the 'Istituzioni e monumenti dell'arte musicale italiana' (Andrea e Giovanni Gabrieli e la musica strumentale in S. Marco). Other reprints are by K. von Winterfeld in Johannes Gabrieli und sein Zeitalter (1834; 2 vols. and a vol. of music supplements); by Proske, Griesbacher, Commer, etc. (motets); by J. von Wasielewski in Geschichte der Instrumental-Musik im 16. Jahrhundert (1878) and in the music supplement of Die Violine im 17. Jahrhundert (2nd ed., 1905); by Riemann in Alte Kammermusik (Sonata a 3 violini and Canzona a 8); by Torchi in 'L'arte musicale in Italia' (vols. II, III); by H. Bessler in Blume's Das Chorwerk (3 motets); by A. Schering in Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (Nos. 130, 148); by G. Tagliapietra in 'Antologia di musica antica e moderna per piano' (vol. II, 1931); by A. Einstein (Canzoni a 4, 1933, Schott Antiqua; motet in the music supplement of his Short History of Music, No. 19, 1938; madrigal in

The Golden Age of the Madrigal, 1942, No. 6); by W. Danckert (Sonata a 3 violini, 1934); by Davison and Apel in Historical Anthology of Music (vol. I, Nos. 157, 173), by F. Stein (Sonata pian e forte, 1931), by J. F. Williamson (motet, 1932); by G. W. Woodworth (3 motets, 1950-52); by Bongiovanni (5 motets, 1954). Hans David has adapted several of Gabrieli's canzoni for modern use. A complete edition of Gabrieli's works was begun in 1956 (vol. I, 25 Motets, ed. by Denis Arnold).—Cf. A. G. Gabrielli, Caterina, famous soprano; b. Rome, Nov. 12, 1730; d. there, Feb. 16, 1796. She was known under the nickname 'La Coghetta' (that is, little cook, for her father was a cook in a Roman nobleman's palace). She made her début at Venice in 1754; then went to Vienna, where she was hailed as a 'new star on the musical firmament' and was coached by Gluck and Metastasio; she sang many parts in the Vienna productions of Gluck's operas, up to 1761; made triumphant appearances in Milan, Turin, and Naples; then went to Russia (with Traetta) and sang in St. Petersburg with unfailing acclaim (1772-74). In 1775 she made her first appearance in London, arousing admiration among the cognoscenti; but she was also the object of common gossip related to her notoriously loose morals. She returned to Italy after only one season in London, and eventually settled in Rome.

Gabrielli, Nicolò, Italian composer; b. Naples, Feb. 21, 1814; d. Paris, June 14, 1891. He was a pupil of Buonamici, Conti, Donizetti, and Zingarelli at Naples Cons.; from 1854 he lived in Paris. He wrote 22 operas and 60 ballets, produced at Naples, Paris, and Vienna.

Gabrilovitch (gah-brē-loh'-vitch), Ossip Solomonovitch, notable pianist and conductor; b. St. Petersburg, Feb. 7, 1878; d. Detroit, Sept. 14, 1936. From 1888-94 he was a pupil at the St. Petersburg Cons., studying piano with A. Rubinstein and composition with Navrátil, Liadov, and Glazunov; graduated as winner of the Rubinstein Prize, and then spent two years (1894-6) in Vienna studying with Leschetizky; then toured Germany, Austria, Russia, France, and England. His first American tour (début Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1900) was eminently successful, as were his subsequent visits (1901, 1906, 1909, 1914, 1915, 1916). During the season 1912-13 he gave in Europe a series of six historical concerts illustrating the development of the piano concerto from Bach to the present day; on his American tour in 1914-15 he repeated the entire series in several of the larger cities, meeting with an enthusiastic reception. On Oct. 6, 1909, he married the contralto Clara Clemens (daughter of Mark Twain), with whom he frequently appeared in joint recitals. He conducted orchestral concerts in New York in 1917, and was appointed conductor of the Detroit Symph. Orch. in 1918. In 1928 and the following years he also conducted the Philadelphia Orch., sharing the baton with Leopold Stokowski, but still retaining his Detroit position.—Cf. Clara Clemens, My Husband Gabrilovitch (N. Y., 1938).

Gabussi, Giulio Cesare, Italian composer; b. Bologna, 1555; d. Milan, Sept. 12, 1611. He was a pupil of Costanzo Porta; in 1582 he was called to Milan as singer and composer at the cathedral, and remained in that post until his death, with the exception of a brief stay in Poland in the service of Sigismund III (1604). He publ. 2 books of madrigals for 5 voices (Venice, 1580 and 1598); motets for 4 and 5 voices (Venice, 1586); Te Deum for 4 voices (Milan, 1598), etc. He was one of the first composers whose works in the Ambrosian ritual (litanies, etc.) appeared in print.

Gade, Axel Willy, Danish violinist, son of Niels Gade; b. Copenhagen, May 28, 1860; d. there, Nov. 9, 1921. He studied with his father and with Joachim; was active in Copenhagen as theater conductor and teacher. He wrote a violin concerto and an opera, Venezias Nat (Copenhagen, Jan. 18, 1919).

Gade, Jacob, Danish composer; b. Vejle, Nov. 29, 1879. He studied violin; was a member of the New York Symph. Orch. (1919-21); then returned to Copenhagen and was active there as conductor. Among his light compositions, Jalousie (1925) attained great popularity. He also wrote several symphonic poems (Den sidste Viking, Leda and the Swan, etc.).

Gade (gah'-dē), Niels (Wilhelm), Danish composer and founder of the modern Scandinavian school of composition; b. Copenhagen, Feb. 22, 1817; d. there, Dec. 21, 1890. He was the only child of an instrument maker; studied violin with a member of the Danish court band, and gave a concert in Copenhagen at the age of 16. He then took composition lessons with A. P. Berggreen; soon he began writing songs to German texts. At the age of 23, he wrote his overture, Nachklänge von Ossian, for which he was awarded a prize by the Copenhagen Musical Society. The work was performed in Copenhagen on Nov. 19, 1841, and was soon published; this early overture remained the most popular work of Gade, and endured in the orchestral repertory for many years. His next important work was a symphony in C minor. Gade sent this to Mendelssohn in Leipzig, and Mendelssohn performed it at a Gewandhaus concert on March 2, 1843. Subsequently Gade received a government stipend for travel in Germany; he went to Leipzig, where Mendelssohn accepted him as a friend, and let him conduct some of the Gewandhaus concerts. Gade's talent flourished in the congenial atmosphere; an ardent admirer of Mendelssohn and Schumann, he adopted a Romantic style in the prevalent Germanic spirit. After Mendelssohn's death in 1847, Gade assumed the conductorship of the Gewandhaus concerts, but on the outbreak of the Schleswig-Holstein war in the spring of 1848, he returned to Copenhagen. In 1850, he became chief conductor of the Copenhagen Musical Society; also was a co-founder of the Copenhagen Cons. in 1866. He visited Birmingham in 1876 to conduct his cantata, Zion, at the festival there. In the same year, the Danish government granted him a life pension. In Denmark, his position as a prime musician was by then fully established; but he was accepted in Germany, too, as a master composer. Despite his adherence to the Germanic school, he infused elements of national Danish melodies into his works, and so led the way to further development of Scandinavian music. — Works: 8 symphonies (1841-71); overtures: Nachklänge von Ossian (1840), Im Hochlande (1844), Hamlet (1861), Michelangelo (1861); violin concerto (1880); cantatas: Comala (1846), Elverskud (1853), The Holy Night (1861), At Sunset (1865), Kalanus (1871), Zion (1873), The Crusaders (1873), The Mountain Thrall (1873), Gefion (1875), Psyche (1882), Der Strom, after Goethe's Mahomet (1889); chamber music: 2 string quintets, string octet, piano trio, string quartet, 3 violin sonatas, Folk Dance for violin and piano, Pictures of the Orient for violin and piano; for piano solo: Spring Flowers, Aquarelles (3 books), Idylls, 4 Fantastic Pieces, Folk Dance, Sonata in E minor; also 21 vocal works for various combinations, in the style of folksongs; incidental music for a play, Mariotta; ballet music, etc.—Cf. Gade's autobiographical Aufzeichnungen und Briefe, ed. by Dagmar Gade (German transl., Basel 1893); C. Rubner, Niels Wilhelm Gade, in Remembrance of the Centenary of His Birth, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1917); C. Kjerulf, Niels Wilhelm Gade (Copenhagen, 1917); W. Behrend, Gade (Leipzig, 1917); W. Behrend, Minder om Gade (Copenhagen, 1930).

Gadsby, Henry Robert, English music teacher; b. Hackney, London, Dec. 15, 1842; d. Putney, Nov. 11, 1907. He was a chorister at St. Paul's from 1849 to 1858; organist at St. Peter's, Brockley; in 1884 succeeded Hullah as prof. of harmony at Queen's College, London; was prof. at the Guildhall School of Music from its foundation (1880) until his death. He wrote 3 symphonies, several overtures, songs, etc.

Gadski, Johanna (Emilia Agnes), German soprano; b. Anclam, June 15, 1872; d. Berlin, Feb. 22, 1932. She was trained from her eighth year by Frau Schroeder-Chaloupka at Stettin. She made her début at Kroll's Theater, Berlin, in May, 1889, as Undine in Lortzing's opera; sang during the summers of 1889-93 at Kroll's, winters in Mainz, Stettin, Bremen, and Berlin. She went on a concert tour of Holland in 1894. On March 1, 1895, she made her American début as Elsa with the Damrosch Opera Co., winning instant favor; during the next three seasons she continued there, singing Elisabeth, Eva, Sieglinde, and creating the role of Hester Prynne in Walter Damrosch's opera The Scarlet Letter (1896); from 1898-1904 she was a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company and became one of the prime favorites through her superb interpretation of Brünnhilde and Isolde. From 1899 to 1901 she was at Covent Garden and in 1899 sang Eva at Bayreuth. From 1904-6 she made two transcontinental tours of the U. S., establishing her reputation as a great lieder singer. In 1907 she returned to the Metropolitan, where she sang every season until 1917. She then sang 4 more seasons at Covent Garden; toured the U. S. again as concert singer; returned to the stage with the German Grand Opera Co. (1929-31). On Nov. 11, 1892, she was married to Lieutenant Hans Tauscher. In addition to a voice of great volume and purity, she had a stately presence and histrionic ability.

Gadzhibekov, Uzeir, Azerbaidzhan composer; b. Agdzhahedy, near Shusha, Sept. 17, 1885; d. Baku, Nov. 23, 1948. He studied in Shusha; then lived in Baku, where he produced his first opera on a native subject, Leyly and Medzhnun (Jan. 25, 1908). His comic opera Arshin Mal Alan (Baku, Oct. 25, 1913) had numerous performances; another opera Kyor-Oglu (A Blind Man's Son) was produced at the Azerbaidzhan Festival in Moscow (Jan. 13, 1937).

Gaforio (or Gafori, Gafuri, Gaffurio), Franchino (Latinized Franchinus Gafurius; often simply Franchinus), celebrated Italian theorist; b. Lodi, Jan. 14, 1451; d. Milan, June 24, 1522. He studied theology and music; lived in Mantua, Verona, and Genoa (1477); he formed an intimacy with the Doge Prospero Adorno (then in exile) and fled with him to Naples. There he met various distinguished musicians, and held public disputation with Johannes Tinctoris, Guarnier, and Hycart. The plague and the Turkish invasion compelled him to return to Lodi; he was choirmaster at Monticello for 3 years, made a short visit to Bergamo in 1483, and in 1484 became singer and master of the boys in Milan cathedral, and first singer in the choir of Duke Lodovico Sforza. In 1485 he also founded a music school at Milan, which prospered.—Writings: Theoricum opus harmonicae disciplinae (Naples, 1480; 2nd ed., Milan, 1492, as Theorica musicae; facsimile reprint, Rome, 1934); Practica musicae Franchino Gaforio Laudensis . . . in IV libris (Milan 1496; his magnum opus, with examples of mensural notation in block-print; other editions, 1497, 1502, 1508, 1512, 1522); Angelicum ac divinum opus musicae materna lingua scriptum (Milan, 1496); De harmonia musicorum instrumentorum (Milan, 1518, with biography of Gaforio by P. Meleguli); Apologia Franchini Gafurii musici adversus Ioannem Spatarium et complices musicos Bononienses (Turin, 1520; concerning the controversy between the Milanese and Bolognese schools). A complete ed. of his compositions, ed. by Lutz Finscher, was begun in 1955.—Cf. E. Prätorius, Die Mensuraltheorie des Franchino Gaforio und der folgenden Zeit bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1905); G. Cesari, Musica e Musicisti alla corte Sforzesca, in Rivista Musicale Italiana (1922; with reprints); P. Hirsch, Gagliano (gahl-yäh'-noh), the name of a family of famous violin makers at Naples. Alessandro, who worked from 1695 to 1725, was a pupil of Stradivari, and he, as well as his sons Nicola (1700-40) and Gennaro (1710-50), followed largely the Stradivari model. The instruments of Ferdinando Gagliano (1736-81), a son of Nicola, exhibit less skillful workmanship than those of the older members of the family.

Gagliano, Marco da, Italian opera composer; b. Gagliano, c. 1575; d. Florence, Feb. 24, 1642. He was a pupil of L. Bati; 1608, became maestro at S. Lorenzo in Florence; 1609 canon, and 1614 Apostolic Protonotary. In 1607 he founded the 'Accademia degli Elevati.' Gagliano was among the first composers to write in the 'stile rappresentativo,' which he developed further by ornamentation. His compositions include: Dafne, 'opera in musica' (his most important work; first played at Mantua, 1608; published in Florence, 1608, and reprinted in shortened form by R. Eitner in vol. 10 of the 'Publikationen älterer Musikwerke'); La Flora, opera (with Peri; Florence, 1628); Due Messe, a 4, 5 (Florence, 1594); 6 vols. of madrigals a 5 (1602-17); Sacrae cantiones (I a 6, with a Mass, 1614; II a 1-6, with basso continuo, 1622); Musiche a 1, 2, e 3 voci (Venice, 1615, with continuo); etc.—Reprints have been publ. by L. Torchi in vol. IV of 'L'Arte Musicale in Italia' (2 madrigals and a Benedictus) and in 'Eleganti canzoni ed arie italiane del secolo XVII' (aria from La Flora); by L. Landshoff in 'Alte Meister des Bel Canto' (vol. I; sacred duet, Vergine chiara); and by A. Schering in Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (No. 175).—Cf. L. Piccianti, Marco da Gagliano, in the 'Gazzetta Musical di Milano' (1843-44); E. Vogel, Marco da Gagliano Zur Geschichte des florentiner Musiklebens 1570-1650, in 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (1899); A. Solerti, Musica alla Corte Medicea (1905).

Gagnebin (gah-n'yā-bän'), Henri, composer and pedagogue; b. Liège, March 13, 1886, of Swiss parents. He studied in Lausanne, Berlin, Geneva, and at the Schola Cantorum, Paris, with Vincent d'Indy and Vierne; was organist at the Église de la Rédemption, Paris (1910-16) and at St. Jean, Lausanne (1916-25); prof. at the Cons. in Lausanne; since 1926 director of the Cons. of Geneva. He has written 2 symphonies, several string quartets, 2 oratorios; publ. a book, Entretien sur la musique (Geneva, 1943).

Gailhard (gah-yahr'), Pierre, French operatic singer; b. Toulouse, August 1, 1848; d. Paris, Oct. 12, 1918. He began his vocal studies in his native city, and entered the Paris Cons. in 1866. After one year of study under Révial he graduated in 1867, winning three first prizes. He made his début at Opéra-Comique (Dec. 4, 1867) as Falstaff in Thomas' Songé d'une nuit d'été; on Nov. 3, 1871, he made his début at the Opéra as Mephistopheles in Gounod's Faust. At the height of his powers and success he gave up the stage when, in 1884, he accepted, jointly with M. Ritt, the management of the famous institution; on the appointment of M. Bertrand as successor to Ritt, in 1892, he retired, but joined Bertrand the following year as co-director; after the latter's death, in 1899, he remained sole director till 1907. His administration was remarkably successful, considering both the novelties produced and the engagement of new singers (Melba, Eames, Bréval, Caron, Ackté, Alvarez, Saléza, Renaud, the two de Reszkes, etc.). Against violent opposition he introduced, and maintained in the repertory, Lohengrin (1895), Walküre (1893), Tannhäuser (1895; the first perf. after the notorious fiasco of 1861), Meistersinger (1897), Siegfried (1902).—His son, André Gailhard (b. Paris, June 29, 1885), composed the operas Amaryllis (Toulouse, 1906), Le Sortilège (Paris, 1913), and La Bataille (Paris, 1931), and the cantata La Sirène.

Gaillard, Marius-François, French composer and conductor; b. Paris, Oct. 13, 1900. He studied with Diémer and Leroux at the Paris Cons. He began his career as a pianist; then started a series of symphonic concerts in Paris, which he conducted from 1928 till 1949. He traveled all over the world, collecting materials of primitive music. His compositions follow a neo-Impressionist trend.—Works: for the stage: La Danse pendant le Festin (1924) and Détresse, ballet (1932); 3 symphonies; Guyanes, symph. suite (1925); Images d'Epinal, for piano and orch. (1929); violin sonata (1923); string trio (1935); Sonate baroque for violin and piano. (1950); Minutes du Monde, suite for cello and piano (1952); string quartet (1954); many songs and piano pieces.

Gaines, Samuel Richards, American vocal teacher; b. Detroit, April 23, 1869; d. Boston, Oct. 8, 1945. He studied composition with Goetschius and Chadwick; was active as vocal teacher, organist, choir dir., and lecturer in various cities; lived in Boston and Wellesley, Mass., as teacher. He won several national and international prizes for his choral compositions.

Gaisser, Dom Ugo Atanasio (Josef Anton), German music scholar; b. Aitrach, Dec. 1, 1853; d. Monastery Ettal, March 26, 1919. He specialized in the study of Byzantine church-music, on which he wrote a number of important studies.—Principal writings: Guido von Arezzo oder St. Mauro (Aix-la-Chapelle, 1889); review of Jacobsthal's Die chromatische Alteration im liturgischen Gesänge der abendländischen Kirche, in 'Revue Bénédictine de Maredsous' (1897-98); Le Système musicale de l'Eglise grecque d'après la tradition, in 'Rassegna Gregoriana' (Rome, 1901); Les 'hirmoi' de pâques dans l'office grec (Rome, 1905); Die Antiphon 'Nativitas tua' und ihr griechisches Vorbild, in the 'Riemann-Festschrift' (1909).

Gaito (gi'-toh), Constantino, Argentine composer; b. Buenos Aires, Aug. 3, 1878; d. there, Dec. 14, 1945. He studied in Naples with Platania; lived in Buenos Aires as a teacher; wrote the operas (all produced at Buenos Aires) Caio Petronio (Sept. 2, 1919), Flor de Nieve (Aug. 3, 1922), Ollantay (July 23, 1926), and La Sangre de las Guitarras (Aug. 17, 1932); the ballet, La Flor de Irupé (Buenos Aires, July 17, 1929); oratorios, songs, and piano pieces.

Gál, Hans, composer and music scholar; b. Brunn, near Vienna, Aug. 5, 1890. He studied at the Univ. of Vienna with Mandyczewski and Guido Adler; obtained his degree of Dr. phil. in 1913 with the thesis Die Stileigentümlichkeiten des jungen Beethoven (publ. in the 'Studien zur Musikwissenschaft,' 1916); awarded the Austrian state prize for composition in 1915; prize of the City of Vienna, 1926; Schubert Centennial Prize, 1928; from 1919-29 he lectured at the Vienna Univ.; then went to Germany; was director of the Cons. of Mainz from 1929-33; returned to Vienna in 1933; after the advent of the Nazi government was compelled to leave Vienna in 1938, and settled in Edinburgh, where he became lecturer on music at the Univ., while continuing to compose. He has written works in every genre: the operas Der Arzt der Sobside (Breslau, 1919), Die heilige Ente (Düsseldorf, April 29, 1923), Das Lied der Nacht (Breslau, April 24, 1926), Der Zauberspiegel (Breslau, 1930; also as an orchestral suite), Die beiden Klaas (1933); 2 symphonies (1928; 1949); A Pickwickian Overture (1939); violin concerto (1933); 2 string quartets (1916; 1929); string trio (1931); piano quartet (1915); piano trio (1948); violin sonata (1921); numerous choral works, sacred and secular. He publ. a manual, Anleitung zum Partiturren (Vienna, 1923; in English under the title Directions for score-reading, 1924).

Galajikian (gah-lah-jē-kē-ahn), Florence Grandland, American pianist and composer; b. Maywood, Ill., July 29, 1900. She graduated from Northwestern Univ. School of Music (Mus. Bac., 1918) and Chicago Musical College (1920); was a pupil of Oldberg, Lutkin, Beecher, Goldmark, and Noelte; toured extensively as a concert pianist, wrote a Symphonic Intermezzo for orch. (NBC award, 4th prize, 1932; perf. by NBC Symph., May 8, 1932); Tragic Overture (Chicago, Jan. 24, 1937); Transitions, ballet (Chicago, 1937); choral works; etc.

Galamian, Ivan, eminent violinist and pedagogue; b. Tahrig, Persia, Feb. 5, 1906; studied at the Moscow Philh. Institute, graduating in 1922; then with Lucien Capet in Paris (1923-24); played in recitals in France and Germany; emigrated to the U. S. in 1930, and was appointed to the staff of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and the Juilliard School in New York; also teaches privately.

Galandia. See Garlandia.

Galeotti, Cesare, Italian composer; b. Pietrasanta, June 5, 1872; d. Paris, Feb. 19, 1929. He studied piano with Sgambati and composition with Guiraud at the Paris Cons. Several of his symphonic works were performed in Paris; his opera Anton was staged at La Scala, Milan (Feb. 17, 1900). Another opera, Dorisse, was first given in Brussels (April 18, 1910).

Gales, Weston, American organist and conductor; b. Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 5, 1877; d. Portsmouth, N. H., Oct. 21, 1939. He studied composition with Horatio Parker at Yale Univ. and organ with Gaston-Marie Déthier in N. Y.; held various posts as church organist in Boston; then took additional instruction with Widor and Vierne in Paris. Returning to America, he was active as choral conductor. In 1914, he organized the Detroit Symph. Orch., of which he was conductor until 1917; then conducted the Wagnerian Opera Co. and the State Symph. Orch. in N. Y. (1924); was guest conductor with various European operatic organizations; returned to the U. S. in 1933.

Galilei, Vincenzo, celebrated writer on music, father of Galileo Galilei, the astronomer; b. Florence, c. 1520; d. there, June (buried July 2), 1591. A skilful lutenist and violinist, and student of ancient Greek theory, he was a prominent member of the artistic circle meeting at Count Bardi's house; his compositions for solo voice with lute accompaniment may be regarded as the starting-point of the monody successfully cultivated by Peri, Caccini, etc., the founders of the 'opera in musica.' A zealous advocate of Grecian simplicity, in contrast with contrapuntal complexity, he publ. a Dialogo . . . della musica antica et della moderna (Florence, 1581; to the 2nd ed. [1602] is appended a polemical Discorso . . . intorno all'opere di messer Gioseffo Zarlino da Chioggia, which had appeared separately in 1589); and Fronimo. Dialogo . . . (in 2 parts: Venice, 1568 and 1569; new ed. 1584); all of considerable historical interest.—Vol. IV of 'Istituzioni e Monumenti dell'Arte Musicale Italiana' (Milan, 1934), ed. by F. Fano, is devoted entirely to Galilei; it contains a large selection of music reprints from his Fronimo. Dialogo . . . (lute transcriptions by Galilei and original compositions), Libro d'intavolatura di Liuto (1584), Il Secondo Libro de Madrigali a 4 et a 5 voci (1587), and a 4 part Cantilena, together with biographical details, list of works, notes about extant MSS, reprints, transcriptions, etc. His Contrapunti a due voci (1584) was edited by Louise Read (Northampton, Mass., Smith College Music Archives, vol. VIII, 1947).—Cf. Otto Fleissner, Die Madrigale Vincenzo Galileis und sein Dialogo della musica antica e moderna (Munich, 1922).

Galín (găh-lăn'), Pierre, French music pedagogue; b. Samatan, Gers, 1786; d. Bordeaux, Aug. 31, 1821. He was teacher of mathematics at the Lycée in Bordeaux, and conceived the idea of simplifying music instruction by a method which he termed the 'Méloplaste' and explained in his work Exposition d'une nouvelle méthode pour l'enseignement de la musique (1818; 2nd and 3rd eds., 1824 and 1831). The method attracted attention, and was energetically promoted by Chevê (q. v.).

Galindo, Blas, Mexican Indian composer; b. San Gabriel, Jalisco, Feb. 3, 1910. He studied music with Chávez, Rolón, and Huízar in Mexico, and later with Copland at the Berkshire Music Center. In his music Galindo stresses native elements, but has also written in neo-classical contrapuntal style.—Works: ballets, La mulata de Córdoba (1939), La creación del hombre (1939), Feria (1947), La Manda (1951); Impresión campestre, for orch. (1940); Tres Preludios para ballet (Mexico, Nov. 23, 1940); piano concerto (Mexico, May 15, 1942); Obra para orquesta mexicana (with native instruments, 1938); Sones Mariachi (1940); suite for violin and cello (1933); sextet for wind instruments (1941); violin sonata (1945); Sinfonia (1956; first prize, shared with Camargo Guarnieri, at the Caracas Festival, 1957); also choral works and piano music.—Cf. C. Chávez, Blas Galindo ('Nuestra Musica,' Mexico, March, 1946).

Galitzin (gah-lě'-tsēn), Nicolas Borissowitch, a Russian prince; b. 1794; d. (murdered) Kursk, Oct. 23, 1866. Beethoven dedicated an overture (op. 124) and 3 quartets (opp. 127, 130, 132) to him; he also corresponded with Beethoven until the latter's death. Galitzin was an amateur of fine attainments, and a skilful cellist; in 1820 he founded a Philharmonic Society at St. Petersburg.

Gallay, Jules, French cellist and music publisher; b. Saint-Quentin, 1822; d. Paris, Nov. 2, 1897. A wealthy amateur, he became a good cello-player and a zealous student of lutherie in all its forms; publ. the following valuable pamphlets: Les Instruments à archet à l'Exposition universelle de 1867 (Paris, 1867); Les Luthiers italiens aux XVII<sup>e</sup> et XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècles, nouvelle édition du 'Parfait Luthier' (la Chélonomie) de l'abbé Sibire, suivie de notes sur les maîtres des diverses écoles (Paris, 1869); a reprint of du Manoir's Le Mariage de la musique avec la danse, with historical introduction (Paris, 1870); Les Instruments des écoles italiennes, catalogue précédé d'une introduction et suivi de notes sur les principaux maîtres (Paris, 1872). As a member of the jury at Vienna, 1873, he edited the Rapport sur les Instruments de Musique à archet (Paris, 1875).

Gallenberg, Wenzel Robert, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Dec. 28, 1783; d. Rome, March 13, 1839. He studied under Albrechtsberger; in 1803 he married Countess Giulietta Guicciardi (to whom Beethoven dedicated his Sonata Op. 27, No. 2). In Naples, shortly thereafter, he made the acquaintance of the impresario Barbaja; wrote numerous successful ballets for him, and from 1821-3 was his partner when Barbaja was director of opera in Vienna. He attempted the management of the Kärntnerthor-Theater in 1829, but failed, and was obliged to return to Italy, rejoining Barbaja. He wrote about 50 ballets; a sonata, marches, fantasies, etc., for piano. On one of his themes Beethoven wrote a set of variations.

Gallès, José, Catalan organist and composer; b. Castellersol, Catalonia, 1761; d. Vich, 1836. He was for many years organist of the Vich Cathedral; was ordained priest. J. Nin published his piano sonata (1800) in the collection 17 Sonates et pièces anciennes d'auteurs espagnols (Paris, 1929).

Galli, Amintore, Italian composer; b. Talamello, near Rimini, Oct. 12, 1845; d. Rimini, Dec. 8, 1919. He was a pupil of Mazzucato at Milan Cons. (1862-7); was musical editor for the publisher Sonzogno, and critic of 'Il Secolo'; later edited 'Il Teatro Illustrato' and 'Musica Popolare'.—Works: the operas Il Corno d'oro (Turin, Aug. 30, 1876) and David (Milan, Nov. 12, 1904); oratorios Espiazione (after Moore's Paradise and Peri) and Cristo al Golgota; Goethe's Totentanz for baritone solo and orch.; string quintet, etc. He published Musica e Musicisti dal secolo X sino ai nostri giorni (1871); Estetica della musica (1900); Storia e teoria del sistema musicale (1901); Piccolo lessico di musica (1902).

Galliard, Johann Ernst, German oboist; b. Zell, Hanover, 1687; d. London, 1749. He was a pupil of A. Steffani at Hanover. A skilful oboist, he went to London, 1706, as chamber musician to Prince George of Denmark; succeeded Draghi as organist at Somerset House; and composed industriously; 1713, played in the Queen's Theatre orch.; 1717 till 1736, engaged in writing music for the stage productions at Covent Garden and Lincoln's Inn Fields. He last appeared as an oboist probably in 1722. Besides the music to numerous plays, masques, and pantomimes, he wrote cantatas, a Te Deum, a Jubilate, anthems, soli for flute and cello, etc.; set to music the Morning Hymn of Adam and Eve, from Milton's Paradise Lost, and Hughes' opera Calypso and Telemachus (1712). He also made some translations.—Cf. 'Dictionary of National Biography' (London, 1921-22).

Gallico, Paolo, composer and pianist; b. Trieste, May 13, 1868; d. New York, July 6, 1955. At the age of 15, he gave a recital at Trieste; then studied at the Vienna Cons. under Julius Epstein, graduating at 18 with highest honors. After successful concerts in Italy, Austria, Russia, Germany, etc., he settled in New York in 1892 as concert pianist and teacher; toured the U. S. frequently as pianist in recitals and as soloist with the principal orchestras. He won the $500 prize of the National Federation of Music Clubs in 1921 with his dramatic oratorio The Apocalypse (performed by the New York Oratorio Society, Nov. 22, 1922). His symphonic episode, Euphorion, was performed in Los Angeles (April 6, 1923), New York, and Detroit; his sextet was performed by the Society of the Friends of Music, N. Y. He also wrote an opera, Harlekin, piano pieces, and songs. His son, Paul Gallico, is a well known writer.

Galli-Curci, Amelita, brilliant coloratura-soprano; b. Milan, Nov. 18, 1882. She studied in Milan and intended to be a pianist; graduated in 1903 from the Milan Cons., winning the 1st prize. She never took regular voice lessons, but acquired an excellent vocal technique by devising a unique method of self-instruction, listening to recordings of her own voice. She received advice from Mascagni and William Thorner. She made her début in Rome as Gilda (1909), then sang in various opera houses in Italy and in South America (1910). She continued her successful career as an opera singer in Europe until 1915; after the entry of Italy into the war, she went to America; made a sensationally successful début with the Chicago Opera Co. as Gilda (Nov. 18, 1916); she appeared in N. Y. with the Chicago Opera as Dinorah (Jan. 28, 1918). She made her first appearance with the Metropolitan Opera as Violetta (Nov. 14, 1920); remained as a member of the Metropolitan until 1930; then gave concert recitals; eventually retired to California, living near Beverly Hills. She was married twice: to the painter, Luigi Curci (1910; divorced 1920), and to Homer Samuels, her accompanist.—Cf. E. LeMassena, Galli-Curci's Life of Song (N. Y., 1945).

Gallignani (gähl-lën-yäh'-nē), Giuseppe, Italian composer and writer on music; b. Faenza, Jan. 9, 1851; d. (suicide) Milan, Dec. 14, 1923. He studied at the Milan

Cons.; was then choir leader at the Milan Cathedral; edited the periodical 'Musica Sacra' (1886-94); was director of the Parma Cons. (1891-97); from 1897, director of the Milan Cons. He produced the operas Il grillo del focolare (Genoa, Jan. 27, 1873), Atala (Milan, March 30, 1876), and Nestor (Milan, March 31, 1888), which were unsuccessful; but his church music was greatly appreciated (particularly his Requiem for King Umberto I).

Galli-Marié, Célestine (née Marié de l'Isle), French dramatic mezzo-soprano; b. Paris, Nov., 1840; d. Vence, near Nice, Sept. 22, 1905. Her father, an opera-singer, was her only teacher. She made her début at Strasbourg (1859); sang in Toulouse (1860); and in Lisbon (1861). She sang the Bohemian Girl at Rouen (1862) with such success that she was immediately engaged for the Paris Opéra-Comique; made her début there (1862) as Serpina in La Serva padrona. She created the roles of Mignon (1866) and Carmen (1875).

Gallo, Fortune, impresario; b. Torremaggiore, Italy, May 9, 1878. He studied the piano in Italy; migrated to the U.S. in 1895; first directed the tours of a number of famous bands (1901-9), then founded the San Carlo Opera Co. (1909); in 1920, brought Anna Pavlova and her Ballet Russe to America; 1923, organized an opera season in Havana, Cuba; 1925, was director of the tour of Eleanor Duse; 1926 built and operated the Gallo Theater; 1928, made a film version of Pagliacci; presented performances of operetta in New York and elsewhere.

Gallon, Jean, French composer and pedagogue; b. Paris, June 25, 1878. He studied piano with Diémer and theory with Lavignac and Leneveu at the Paris Cons.; was chorus director of the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1906-14) and at the Paris Opéra (1909-14). From 1919 till 1949 he taught harmony at the Paris Cons. Among his pupils were Robert Casadesus, Marcel Delannoy, Henri Dutilleul, Olivier Messiaen, and Jean Rivier. He published harmony exercises for use at the Cons.; with his brother Noël Gallon, he composed several pieces of theater music, among them a ballet, Hansli le Bossu (1914); also some chamber music and songs.

Gallon, Noël, French composer; brother of Jean Gallon; b. Paris, Sept. 11, 1891; studied piano with I. Philipp and Risler, theory with Caussade and Leneveu at the Paris Cons., and also with Rabaud. In 1910 he received 1st Prix de Rome. From 1920, on the faculty of the Paris Cons. as instructor in solfège, counterpoint, and fugue. As a composer, he was influenced by his brother, who was his first tutor in music; with him he wrote a ballet, Hansli le Bossu (1914); his own works comprise a few symph. pieces; suite for flute and piano (1921); quintet for horn and strings (1953); teaching pieces.

Gallus, Jacobus, a native of Carniola, whose real name was Jacob Händl (or Handl, Hähnel), composer; b. Reifnitz, July 31, 1550; d. Prague, July 24, 1591. He was Kapellmeister to the Bishop of Olmütz, later imperial Kapellmeister at Prague. As a composer he was an eminent contemporary of Palestrina and Lassus. Besides detached pieces in Bodenschatz's Florilegium Portense, Proske's Musica divina, and collections of Schöberlein, Zahn, Becker, Rochlitz, and others, many printed works are extant. They include: Missae (8, 7, 6, 5, 4 voices; 1 vol. reprinted in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' 1934, ed. by P. Pisk); Opus Musicum harmoniarum, 4, 5, 6, 8 et plurium vocum (1st part, 1586; 2nd and 3rd, 1587; 4th, 1590; reprinted in its entirety in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich,' vols. Bezecny); Moralia 5, 6 et 8 vocibus concinnata (1586); a Latin Passion (1587); Epicedion harmonicum (1589); Harmoniae variae 4 vocum (1591); Harmoniarum moralium (1589-90). After Gallus' death the following were printed: Sacrae cantiones de praecipuis festis 4-8 et plurium vocum (1597); Motettae quae praestant omnes (1610). Handel borrowed Gallus' well known motet, Ecce quomodo moritur justus, for his Funeral Anthem.—Cf. Paul Pisk, Das Parodieverfahren in den Messen von Gallus in 'Studien zur Musikwissenschaft,' V; Peter Wagner, Geschichte der Messe (p. 330 ff.); Th. Kroyer, in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft,' I (p. 146 ff.).

Gallus, Johannes (Jean le Cocq, Maître Jean, Mestre Jhan), a Flemish contrapuntist; d. c. 1543. He was maestro di cappella to Duke Ercole of Ferrara in 1534 and 1541. Many pieces were publ. in collections and in a vol. of motets printed by Scotto (1543). He was long confused with Jhan Gero.

Galpin, Rev. Francis William, English writer on music; b. Dorchester, Dorset, Dec. 25, 1858; d. Richmond, Surrey, Dec. 30, 1945. He graduated with classical honors from Trinity College, Cambridge, B. A. (1882), M. A. (1885); received his music education from Dr. Garrett and Sterndale Bennett; held various posts as vicar and canon (1891-1921); Hon. Freeman Worshipful Company of Musicians (1905); wrote many articles on the viola pomposa and other old instruments in 'Music & Letters' and 'Monthly Mus. Record' (1930-33). A Galpin Society was formed in London in 1946 with the object of bringing together all those interested in the history of European instruments and to commemorate the pioneer work of Galpin; it published (at irregular intervals) 'The Galpin Society Journal.'—Books: Descriptive Catalogue of the European Instruments in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, N. Y. (1902); The Musical Instruments of the American Indians of the North West Coast (1903); Notes on the Roman Hydraulus (1904); The Evolution of the Sackbut (1907); Old English Instruments of Music (1910; new ed., London, 1932); A Textbook of European Musical Instruments (London and N. Y., 1937); The Music of the Sumerians, Babylonians and Assyrians (1937); The Music of Electricity (1938). Galston, Gottfried, pianist; b. Vienna, Aug. 31, 1879; d. St. Louis, April 2, 1950. He was a pupil of Leschetizky in Vienna, and of Jadassohn and Reinecke at the Leipzig Cons.; 1903-7, taught at Stern's Cons. in Berlin. On his extended concert tours he proved himself a player of keen analytical powers and intellectual grasp; 1902, toured Australia; then Germany, France, and Russia; 1912-13, America; toured Russia 11 times (last, in 1926); 1921-27, lived in Berlin; returned to the U.S. in 1927 and settled in St. Louis. He published a Studienbuch (1909; 3rd ed., Munich, 1920; analytical notes to a series of 5 historical recitals).

Galuppi, Baldassare, surnamed Il Buranello from the island of Burano, near Venice, on which he was born; Italian composer; b. Oct. 18, 1706; d. Venice, Jan. 3, 1785. He studied with his father, a barber and violin player; in 1722 he brought out at Vicenza an opera, La fede nell' incostanza, which attracted attention to his talent; he then studied under Lotti in Venice, and in 1729 produced his opera Dorinda. He cultivated comic opera with such success as to earn the title of 'padre dell' opera buffa.' He was also a distinguished player on the harpsichord. In 1740 he was appointed 'maestro del coro' at the Ospizio dei Mendicanti; 1741, visited London and in 1743, St. Petersburg; 1748, returned to Venice, where he was 2nd maestro at San Marco; 1762-4, principal maestro there. From 1766-8 he acted as maestro to the Russian court; taught many Russian singers and composers; Bortniansky, who later followed him to Venice, was one of his pupils. Galuppi wrote a prodigious amount of music, some 112 operas and 20 oratorios; also sacred music and 12 harpsichord sonatas.—Reprints: Selected arias from his opera Il filosofo di campagna, ed. by G. F. Malipiero in 'Raccolta nazionale delle musiche italiane' (Nos. 54-58; Milan, 1919); aria from his opera Il mondo della luna in A. della Corte's 'Piccola antologia settecentesca' ('Raccolta nazionale delle musiche italiane', Milan, 1925); Missa in C ed. by H. Bäuerle (Leipzig, 1927); 2 sonatas in vol. V. of E. Pauer's 'Alte Meister'; 2 sonatas ed. by J. Henius (N. Y., 1909, 1912); 2 sonatas (together with a free transcription of the latter), in G. Tagliapietra's 'Antologia di musica antica e moderna' (Milan, 1932).—Cf. A. Wotquenne, Baldassare Galuppi in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1899); F. Gamba, Pierino, precocious Italian conductor; b. Rome, Sept. 16, 1937. He conducted in Italy at the age of 8; made a European tour; also appeared in South America and the U. S.

Gamucci, Baldassare, Italian music scholar; b. Florence, Dec. 14, 1822; d. there, Jan. 8, 1892. He was a pupil of C. Fortini (piano) and L. Picchianti (composition). In 1849 he founded the 'Società Corale del Carmine,' which later became the 'Scuola Corale' of the Music Institute at Florence. He publ. Intorno alla vita ed alle opere di Luigi Cherubini (Florence, 1869); Rudimenti di lettura musicale (several times reprinted); many essays for the reports of the Institute; also contributions to various music journals.

Ganche, Edouard, French writer on music; b. Baulon (Ille-et-Vilaine), Oct. 13, 1880; d. Lyon, May 31, 1945. He studied with Imbert, Henry Expert, and others in Paris. He devoted his life to the study of Chopin and published La vie de Chopin dans son œuvre (1909); Frédéric Chopin, sa vie et ses œuvres (1913). He was also the editor of the Oxford edition of Chopin's works (1932).

Gandolfi, Riccardo (Cristoforo Daniele Diomede), Italian composer; b. Voghera, Piedmont, Feb. 16, 1839; d. Florence, Feb. 5, 1920. He was a pupil of Carlo Conti at the Naples Cons., then of Mabellini in Florence; appointed inspector of studies at the 'Real Istituto di Musica' in Florence (1869); chief librarian in 1889; pensioned in 1912. He began as a dramatic composer, then turned to the larger instrumental and vocal forms, and finally abandoned composition altogether, devoting himself to historical studies, which won him distinction.—Compositions: operas Aldina (Milan, 1863), Il Paggio (Turin, 1865), Il Conte di Monreale (Genoa, 1872), Caterina di Guisa (Catania, 1872); Messa da Requiem; a cantata, Il Battesimo di S. Cecilia; several overtures; chamber music.—Writings: Sulla relazione della poesia colla musica melodrammatica (1868); Una riparazione a proposito di Francesco Landino (1888); Commemorazioni di W. A. Mozart (1891); Illustrazioni di alcuni cimeli concernanti l'arte musicale in Firenze (1892); Appunti di storia musicale (1893); Onoranze Fiorentine a G. Rossini (1902).

Gange, Fraser, distinguished baritone; b. Dundee, Scotland, June 17, 1886. He studied there with his father; later was a pupil of Amy Sherwin in London; made his début as a basso at the age of 16 in Queen's Hall, London; toured England, Scotland, Australia, and New Zealand twice; taught singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London; 1923, came to the U.S. and made his American début at Aeolian Hall, N. Y. (Jan. 18, 1924); from 1932-46 prof. of voice at the Juilliard Summer School, N.Y.; since 1934 at Peabody Cons., Baltimore. His repertory includes 40 oratorios and more than 2000 songs; he presented in Baltimore a concert of songs on his 70th birthday.

Ganne, Louis Gaston, French composer; b. Buxières-les-Mines, Allier, April 5, 1862; d. Paris, July 13, 1923. He was a pupil of Th. Dubois, Massenet, and C. Franck at the Paris Cons. He was conductor of the balls at the Opéra, and at the municipal Casino at Monte Carlo; wrote successful comic operas, ballets, and divertissements.—Operas: Rabelais (Paris, Oct. 25, 1892); Les Colles des femmes (Paris, 1893); Les Saltimbanques (Paris, Dec. 30, 1899); Miss Bouton d'Or (Paris, Oct. 14, 1902); Hans le joueur de flûte (his most successful operetta; Monte Carlo, April 14, 1906); Les Ailes (Paris, Sept. 1, 1910); the ballets Phryné, Au Japon (1903; very successful), Kermesse flamande (1917); many orchestral dances, of which La Czarine and La Tsigane became favorites, and patriotic tunes, La Marche Lorraine and Le Père de la Victoire, immensely popular in France; about 150 piano pieces.

Gänsbacher, Johann, Austrian composer; b. Sterzing, Tyrol, May 8, 1778; d. Vienna, July 13, 1844. He studied with Abbé Vogler and Albrechtsberger in Vienna (1801); visited Prague, and Dresden and Leipzig; then resumed study under Vogler, at Darmstadt (Weber and Meyerbeer were his fellow-pupils). With Weber, he went to Mannheim and Heidelberg, and rejoined him later in Prague. In Vienna Gänsbacher also met Beethoven. He served in the war of 1813, led a roving life for several years, and finally (1823) settled in Vienna as Kapellmeister of the cathedral. Of his 216 compositions (Masses, requiems, etc.), orchestral works, piano pieces, songs, etc.), only a small part has been published.—Cf. C. Fischner, Johann Gänsbacher (Innsbruck, 1878).

Gantvoort, Arnold Johann, Dutch musician; b. Amsterdam, Dec. 6, 1857; d. Los Angeles, Calif., May 18, 1937. He came to America in 1876; gave private lessons, and taught in various colleges; in 1894, head of dept. for preparing public school music teachers, College of Music, Cincinnati. He published Familiar Talks on the History of Music (N. Y. 1913), and a series of public school music readers.

Ganz, Rudolph, distinguished pianist and conductor; b. Zürich, Switzerland, Feb. 24, 1877. He was a pupil of R. Freund (piano) and F. Hegar (cello) in Zürich (1893-6); of C. Eschmann-Dumur (piano) and Ch. Blanchet (composition) in Lausanne; 1897-98, of F. Blumer (piano) in Strasbourg; 1899 of F. Busoni (piano) and H. Urban (composition) in Berlin. Although he had played occasionally in public (chiefly as cellist) since his twelfth year, his début as a mature artist took place with the Berlin Philh. Orch., Dec. 1899 (Beethoven's Eb and Chopin's E minor concertos); in May of the following year the same orch. perf. his first Symphony; from 1900-05 he was head of the piano department at the Chicago Musical College, succeeding A. Friedheim; 1905-8, made successful tours of the U. S. and Canada; 1908-11, tours of Europe, playing 16 different piano concertos; after 1912 he divided his time touring in Europe and America; 1921-27, conductor of the St. Louis Symphony; 1938-49 conductor of the N. Y. Philh. Young People's Concerts; guest conductor at the Lewisohn Stadium (N. Y.), Hollywood Bowl, etc.; 1929-54, director of Chicago Musical College. He played for the first time many important works by contemporary composers (Busoni, Ravel, Bartók, Debussy, Dohnányi, d'Indy, Loeffler, Korngold etc.), and revived older works that had fallen into undeserved neglect. In July, 1900, he married Mary Forrest, an American concert singer.—Works: Symphony in E; Animal Pictures, a suite of 20 pieces for orch. (Detroit, Jan. 19, 1933, composer conducting); Konzertstück for piano and orch. (Chicago Symp. Orch., Feb. 20, 1941, composer soloist); Variations on a Theme by Brahms, for piano; several choruses for male voices; about 200 songs.

Ganz, Wilhelm, German pianist; b. Mainz, Nov. 6, 1833; d. London, Sept. 12, 1914. He studied music with his father, Adolf Ganz (b. Mainz, Oct. 14, 1796; d. London, Jan. 11, 1870) and with Anschütz. He followed his father to London, where he appeared as pianist; in 1856 he became accompanist to Jenny Lind. In 1879 he organized the Ganz Orchestral Concerts in London, and gave 1st London performances of works by Liszt and Berlioz; many celebrated artists (Saint-Saëns, Pachmann, etc.) made their English débuts at his concerts. After the discontinuance of his enterprise, in 1883, he devoted himself mainly to teaching. He publ. Memories of a Musician (London, 1913).

Garaguly, Carl, Hungarian-Swedish violinist and conductor; b. Budapest, Dec. 28, 1900. He studied with Hubay and in Berlin with Marteau. From 1923-30, he was concertmaster of the Göteborg Orch.; then violinist in the Stockholm Orch. In 1941, he was appointed conductor of the Stockholm Orch.; also formed a string quartet there.

Garat (gäh-räh'), Pierre-Jean, famous French concert-singer and teacher; b. Bordeaux, April 27, 1762; d. Paris, March 1, 1823. His remarkable talent was discovered early, and he studied theory and singing with Franz Beck in Bordeaux; his father wished him to become a lawyer, and sent him to the Univ. of Paris in 1782. However, Garat neglected his legal studies, and aided by the Count d'Artois, he was introduced to Marie Antoinette, whose special favor he enjoyed up to the Revolution. He earned his livelihood as a concert-singer; accompanied Rode, in 1792, to Rouen, where he gave numerous concerts before being arrested as a suspect during the Terror; subsequently he went to Hamburg; he returned to Paris in 1794, and sang (1795) at the Feydeau Concerts, where his triumphs speedily procured him a professorship of singing in the newly established Conservatory. For 20 years longer, his fine tenor-baritone voice, trained to perfection, made him the foremost singer on the French concert stage. Nourrit, Levasseur, and Ponchard were his pupils.—Cf. Paul Lafond, Garat (Paris, 1899); B. Miall, Pierre Garat, Singer and Exquisite; his Life and his World (London, 1913); Isidoro de Fagoaga, Pedro Garat, el Orfeo de Francia (Buenos Aires, 1948).

GARAUDÉ — GARCIA

Garaudé (găh-roh-dă'), Alexis de, French singer and composer; b. Nancy, March 21, 1779; d. Paris, March 23, 1852. He studied theory under Cambini and Reicha, and singing under Crescentini and Garat; was a singer in the royal choir from 1808-30 and prof. of singing in the Cons. from 1816-41. He publ. 3 string quintets, many ensemble pieces for violin, flute, clarinet, and cello, sonatas and variations for piano, a solemn Mass, vocalises, arias, duets, and songs; also a Méthode de chant (1809, op. 25; 2nd revised ed. as Méthode complète de chant, op. 40); Solfège, ou méthode de musique; Méthode complète de piano; and L'Harmonie rendue facile, ou théorie pratique de cette science (1835). He also arranged the vocal scores of Meyerbeer's Le prophète and other operas.

Garay, Narciso, Panamanian violinist, composer, and diplomat; b. Panama, June 12, 1879; d. there, March 27, 1953. He studied at the Brussels Cons., graduating with a Premier Prix; later he attended courses at the Schola Cantorum in Paris. He published a violin sonata and a valuable treatise on Panamanian folk music, Tradiciones y Cantares de Panama (1930). He also occupied diplomatic posts and at one time was Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Garbousova, Raya, cellist; b. Tiflis, Russia, Sept. 25, 1906; studied at the Cons. there (graduated 1923), and later with Hugo Becker, Felix Salmond, and Pablo Casals. After many concerts in Europe, she settled in the U. S. (1927); appeared with major American orchestras.

Garbuzov, Nikolai Alexandrovitch, eminent Russian musicologist; b. Moscow, July 5, 1880; studied at the Moscow Cons. In 1921 he was appointed a director of the State Institute of Musicology; published numerous essays dealing with acoustics and musical theory.

Garcia, Eugénie (née Mayer), wife and pupil of Manuel; French soprano; b. Paris, 1818; d. there, Aug. 12, 1880. She sang for several years in Italian theaters, then (1840) at the Opéra-Comique, Paris; 1842 in London; finally, separated from her husband, she lived as a singing teacher in Paris.

García, Francisco Javier (Padre García, called in Rome 'lo Spagnoletto'), Spanish composer of church music; b. Nalda, 1731; d. Saragossa, Feb. 26, 1809. He lived for some years in Rome as a student and singing teacher; in 1756 he was appointed maestro at Saragossa cathedral. His works show a marked contrast to the fugal style prevailing before, being more natural and simple. Wrote an oratorio, Tobia (1773); the operas La Finta Schiava (Rome, 1754), Pompeo Magno in Armenia (Rome, 1755), La Pupilla (Rome, 1755), Lo Scultore deluso (Rome, 1756); Masses and motets, chiefly in 8 parts. His most noted pupil was Caterina Gabrielli.

Garcia, Manuel del Popolo Vicente, famous tenor, singing teacher, and dramatic composer; b. Seville, Jan. 22, 1775; d. Paris, June 9, 1832. A chorister in Seville cathedral at 6, he was taught by Ripa and Almarcha, and at 17 was already well known as a singer, composer, and conductor. After singing in Cadiz, Madrid, and Málaga, he proceeded (1806) to Paris, and sang to enthusiastic audiences at the Théâtre-Italien; in 1809, at his benefit, he sang his own monodrama El poeta calculista with extraordinary success. From 1811 to 1816 he was in Italy. On his return to Paris, his disgust at the machinations of Catalani, the manageress of the Théâtre-Italien, caused him to break his engagement and go to London (1817), where his triumphs were repeated. From 1819-24 he was again the idol of the Parisians at the Théâtre-Italien.

sang as first tenor at the Royal Opera, in London (1824) and in 1825 embarked for New York with his wife, his son Manuel, and his daughter, Maria (Malibran), and the distinguished artists Crivelli filis, Angriani, Barbieri, and de Rosich; from Nov. 29, 1825, to Sept. 30, 1826, they gave 79 performances at the Park and Bowery Theaters in New York; the troupe then spent 18 months in Mexico. Garcia returned to Paris, and devoted himself to teaching and composition. His operas, all forgotten, comprise 17 in Spanish, 18 in Italian, and 8 in French, besides a number never performed, and numerous ballets. A preeminently successful teacher, his 2 daughters, Mmes. Malibran and Pauline Viardot-Garcia, Nourrit, Rimbault, and Favelli were a few of his best pupils.—See the 'Mus. Quarterly,' July, 1915 to Jan., 1916: Pauline Viardot-Garcia to Julius Rietz (letters).

Garcia, Manuel Patricio Rodriguez, distinguished Spanish vocal teacher, son of preceding; b. Madrid, March 17, 1805; d. London, July 1, 1906 (aged 101). He was intended for a stage singer; in 1825 went to New York with his father, but in 1829 adopted the vocation of a singing teacher (in Paris) with conspicuous success. An exponent of his father's method, he also carefully investigated the functions of the vocal organs; invented the laryngoscope, for which the Königsberg Univ. made him Dr. phil. In 1840 he sent to the Academy a Mémoire sur la voix humaine, a statement of the conclusions arrived at by various investigators, with his own comments. He was appointed prof. at the Paris Cons. in 1847, but resigned in 1848 to accept a similar position in the London Royal Academy of Music, where he taught uninterruptedly from Nov. 10, 1848 until 1895. Among Garcia's pupils were his wife, Eugénie, Jenny Lind, Henriette Nissen, and Stockhausen. His Traité complet de l'art du chant was publ. in 1847; English ed., 1870; revised ed. by Garcia's grandson Albert Garcia, as Garcia's Treatise on the Art of Singing (London, 1924). He also publ. (in English) a manual, Hints on Singing (London, 1894).—Cf. M. Sterling Mackinlay, Garcia, the Centenarian, and His Time (Edinburgh, 1908); J. M. Levien, The Garcia Family (London, 1932).

García Estrada, Juan Agustín, Argentine composer; b. Buenos Aires, Nov. 8, 1895. He studied law; then went to Paris, where he took lessons in composition with Jacques Ibert. Returning to Argentina, he became a municipal judge. Among his works are Tres aires argentinos for orch. (Paris, Feb. 28, 1929); an opera, La Cuarterona (Buenos Aires, Aug. 10, 1951); a number of songs.

Gardano, Antonio, one of the earliest and most celebrated Italian music-printers; b. c. 1500; d. Venice, 1571. From 1537 he reprinted many current publications as well as important novelties, and compositions of his own, e.g., Motetti del frutto (1538) and Canzoni franzese (1539). His works also appeared in various collections of the time. After 1571 his sons Alessandro and Angelo carried on the business till 1575, when they separated; the former later set up for himself in Rome (1582-91), while the latter remained in Venice till his death (1610); his heirs continued publishing under his name till 1677.

Garden, Mary, celebrated operatic soprano; b. Aberdeen, Scotland, Feb. 20, 1877. She came to the United States as a child; lived in Hartford, Conn., and then in Chicago. She studied violin and piano; in 1893 she began the study of singing with Mrs. Robinson Duff in Chicago; in 1895 she went to Paris, where she studied with many teachers (Sbriglia, Bouhy, Trabadello, Mathilde Marchesi, and Lucien Fugère). Her funds, provided by a wealthy patron, were soon depleted, and Sybil Sanderson, the American soprano living in Paris, came to her aid and introduced her to Albert Carré, director of the Opéra-Comique. Her operatic début was made under dramatic circumstances on April 10, 1900, when the singer who performed the title role of Charpentier's Louise at the Opéra-Comique was taken ill during the performance, and Mary Garden took her place. She revealed herself not only as a singer of exceptional ability, but also as a skilful actress. She subsequently sang in several operas of the general repertory; also created the role of Diane in Pierné's opera La Fille de Tabarin (Opéra-Comique, Feb. 20, 1901). A historic turning point in her career was reached when she was selected to sing Mélisande in the world première of Debussy's opera (Opéra-Comique, April 30, 1902). She also became the center of a raging controversy, when Maurice Maeterlinck, the author of the drama, voiced his violent objection to her assignment (his choice for the role was Georgette Leblanc, his common-law wife), and pointedly refused to have anything to do with the production. Mary Garden won warm praise from the critics for her musicianship, despite the handicap of her American-accented French. She remained a member of the Opéra-Comique; also sang at the Grand Opéra, and at Monte Carlo. She made her American début as Thais at the Manhattan Opera House, N. Y. (Nov. 25, 1907), and presented there the first American performance of Pelléas et Mélisande (Feb. 19, 1908). She also undertook the performance of Salome at its 2nd production in N. Y. (Jan. 27, 1909). In 1910 she joined the Chicago Opera Co.; she became its impresario in the season 1921-22, during which the losses mounted to about one million dollars. She sang in the first American performances of Honegger's Judith (Chicago, Jan. 27, 1927), Alfano's Resurrection (1930), and Hamilton Forrest's Camille (1930), an opera she specially commissioned. After 1930 she made sporadic appearances in opera and concerts; in 1935, she gave master classes in opera at the Chicago Musical College; acted as technical adviser for opera sequences in motion pictures in Hollywood; in 1939 she returned to Scotland; made a lecture tour in the U. S. in 1947. With Louis Biancolli she wrote a book of memoirs, Mary Garden's Story (N. Y., 1951).

Gardes, Roger, French tenor; b. Paris, March 4, 1922; he sang in the chorus of the Opéra-Comique in 1950; in 1954, won first Grand Prix at a contest of tenors in Cannes, and was engaged as soloist at the Opéra-Comique (début, Aug. 14, 1954, in La Bohème); subsequently sang tenor roles in Lakmé, Eugene Onegin, Les Pêcheurs de Perles, etc.

Gardiner, Henry Balfour, English composer; b. London, Nov. 7, 1877; d. Salisbury, England, June 28, 1950. He was a pupil of Iwan Knorr in Frankfurt; taught singing for a short time in Winchester, but then devoted his whole time to composition. Among his works are a Phantasy for orch.; English Dance; a symphony in D; a string quintet; News from Wydah, for soli, chorus, and orch.; piano pieces; songs. His most successful piece was Shepherd Fennel's Dance (Promenade Concert, London, 1911).

Gardiner, William, British writer on music; b. Leicester, March 15, 1770; d. there, Nov. 16, 1853. His father, a hosiery manufacturer, was an amateur musician from whom he acquired rudiments of music. During his travels on the continent on his father's business he gathered materials for a collection Sacred Melodies (1812-15) adapted to English words from works by Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven. His book The Music of Nature (London, 1832) enjoyed a certain vogue; he also published memoirs, Music and Friends, or Pleasant Recollections of a Dilettante (3 vols.; I-II, London, 1838; III, 1853); Sights in Italy, with some Account of the Present State of Music and the Sister Arts in that Country (London, 1847).

Gardner, John Linton, English composer; b. Manchester, March 2, 1917. He studied organ at Exeter College, Oxford, with Sir Hugh Allen, Ernest Walker, R. O. Morris, and Thomas Armstrong (Mus. B., 1939). In 1940 he joined the Royal Air Force. From 1946-54 he was opera coach at Covent Garden; in 1955 appointed instructor at Morley College. He began to compose at the age of 16; progressed rapidly, and soon acquired a solid technique of composition; he is adept equally in theater music, instrumental writing, and vocal works. His style is characteristically fluent and devoid of attempts at experimentation; modernistic devices are used sparingly.—Works: for the stage: incidental music to Masque of Satan (1936), The Stoker's Dream (1937), Marlowe's Tamburlaine (1951), King Lear (1953), Hamlet (1953); opera The Moon and Sixpence, after Somerset Maugham (commissioned by Sadler's Wells Opera, and produced there, May 24, 1957); for orch.: Concert Overture (1934), Suite for School Orchestra (1935), Serenade for oboe, piano, and strings (1937), Chorale Prelude for string orch. (1944), 1st symphony (Cheltenham, July 5, 1951), A Scots Overture (London, Aug. 16, 1954); chamber music: Comic March for 2 cellos and piano (1935), 4 Miniatures for clarinet and piano (1935), Rhapsody for oboe and string quartet (1935), string quartet (1938), Theme and Variations for 2 trumpets, horn, and trombone (1951), Romanza for trombone and piano (1951), sonata for oboe and piano (1953); sacred and secular choruses; 2 piano sonatas and other piano pieces; songs.

Gardner, Samuel, violinist and composer, b. Elizabethgrad, Russia, Aug. 25, 1891. He came early to the U. S. and studied violin with Felix Winternitz and Franz Kneisel, composition with Goetschius, and later with Loeffler in Boston. He was a member of the Kneisel String Quartet (1914), of the Chicago Symph. Orch. (1915-16), the Elshuco Trio (1916-17), etc. He wrote Country Moods, for string orch. (Staten Island Civic Symph., Dec. 10, 1946); a tone poem, Broadway (Boston Symph., April 18, 1930, composer conducting); violin pieces (5 Preludes, Slovak, Romance, Jazzetto, From the Rockies, Coquetterie, Old Virginia, From the Canebrake, etc.); piano quintet (1925). His early string quartet was given the Pulitzer Prize (1918).

Gariel, Edoardo, Mexican music pedagogue; b. Monterey, Aug. 5, 1860; d. Mexico City, March 15, 1923. He studied with Marmontel in Paris; upon his return to Mexico he occupied various teaching jobs (1887-1908). In 1915 he visited the U. S. From 1916 to his death he was in charge of the School of Theater Arts in Mexico City. He published Chopin, Consideraciones sobre algunas de sus obras y la manera de interpretarlas (1895); Nuevo Sistema de Armonía basado en cuatro acordes fundamentales (1916; also in English as A New System of Harmony based on four fundamental chords).

Garlandia, Johannes de (sometimes called Johannes de Garlandia the Elder to distinguish him from a hypothetical Joh. Garlandia the Younger, proposed by H. Riemann on rather suppositional grounds), 13th-century writer on mathematics, theology, and alchemy; b. England, c. 1195. He studied at Oxford, then went to Paris; joined the Crusade against the Albigenses; quently returned to Paris; was probably still living in 1272. He is the supposed author of several tracts on music, among them the De Musica Mensurabili Positio, a valuable treatise on mensural music, 2 versions of which were printed by Coussemaker in his 'Scriptores,' vol. I. There are altogether 4 works printed under his name in Gerbert and Coussemaker.—Cf. H. Riemann, Geschichte der Musiktheorie im 9.-19. Jahrhundert (1898); L. J. Paetow, The Life and Works of John of Garland, in 'Memoirs' of the Univ. of Calif., IV, 2 (1927); G. Reese, Music in the Middle Ages, chap. 10 (N. Y., 1940).

Garratt, Percival, English composer, b. Little Tew Grange, May 21, 1877; d. London, April 16, 1953. He studied in Vienna, Berlin, and at Marlborough College; toured Europe and South Africa; was accompanist of Clara Butt and Elman; composed many piano pieces (Pageant Piece, Rondel, Night Piece, Arabesque, Helston Furry Dance, Mock Antiques, and others);

Cherry-stones, a children's musical play; A Cartload of Villains, 3-act pantomime.

Garreta, Juli, Catalan composer; b. San Feliu, March 12, 1875; d. there, Dec. 2, 1925. Entirely self-taught, he learned piano and composition. He wrote a great number of 'sardanas' (the Catalan national dance); a friendship with Casals stimulated several larger works; his Impressions symphoniques for string orch. were performed in Barcelona on Oct. 29, 1907. His Suite Empordanesa for orch. received first prize at the Catalan Festival in 1920. He also wrote a cello sonata, a piano sonata, and a piano quartet.

Garrett, George Mursell, English composer and organist; b. Winchester, June 8, 1834; d. Cambridge, April 8, 1897. A pupil of Elvey and Wesley, he was assistant organist at Winchester cathedral (1851-4); organist of Madras cathedral (1854-6); of St. John's College, Cambridge (1857); organist to the Univ., 1873, succeeding Hopkins. He took the degree of Mus. Bac. 1857, Mus. Doc. 1867; also received the degree of M.A. propter merita in 1878. From 1883, he was Univ. Lecturer on harmony and counterpoint; also Examiner in Music of Cambridge Univ. He wrote 5 cantatas, 4 services, and other church music.

Garrison, Mabel, American coloratura soprano; b. Baltimore, Md., April 24, 1886. She was a pupil of W. E. Heimendahl and P. Minetti at Peabody Cons. (1909-11); then of O. Saenger in New York (1912-14), and of H. Witherspoon (1916). She made her debut as Filina (Mignon) in Boston, April 18, 1912; was a member of Metropolitan Opera from 1914-22; made a world tour; in 1933 she taught singing at Smith College; then retired.

Gaspari, Gaetano, Italian historiographer; b. Bologna, March 15, 1807; d. there, March 31, 1881. He entered the Liceo Musicale in 1820; took 1st prize in composition in 1827. He served as maestro di cappella at various churches; then devoted himself to historical research.—Writings: Ricerche, documenti e memorie riguardanti la storia dell' arte musicale in Bologna (1867); Ragguagli sulla cappella musicale della Basilica di S. Petronio in Bologna (1869); Memorie dell'arte musicale in Bologna al XVI secolo (1875), etc.—Cf. F. Parisini, Elogio funebre del professore Gaetano Gaspari (1882).

Gasparini, Francesco, Italian composer; b. Camaiore, n. Lucca, March 5, 1668; d. Rome, March 22, 1727. He was a pupil of Corelli and Pasquini in Rome, where he taught for a time; about 1700, became director of music at the Cons. della Pietà, Venice. In 1725 he was appointed maestro di cappella at the Lateran, Rome. Between 1702-23 he produced about 50 operas at Venice, Rome, and Vienna, with great success; he also wrote Masses, motets, cantatas, psalms, oratorios, etc. His chief work was a method of thorough-bass playing, L'Armonico pratico al cimbalo (Venice, 1708; 7th ed., 1802), used in Italy for nearly a hundred years. His most famous pupil was Benedetto Marcello.—Cf. E. Celani, Il primo amore di P. Metastasio, in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1904; pp. 243-51).

Gasparo da Salò (family-name Bertolotti), Italian instrument maker; b. Salò, 1540 (baptized May 20); d. Brescia, April (buried 14th), 1609. He came to Brescia in 1562, and settled there as a maker of viols, viole da gamba, and contrabass viols, which gained much celebrity; his violins were less valued. His pupils were his eldest son, Francesco; Giovanni Paolo Maggini, and Giacomo Lafranchini. Dragonetti's favorite double-bass was an altered 'viola contrabasso' of Gasparo's.—Cf. V. M. Rhò-Guerriero, Gasparo da Salò (Rome, 1892); P. Bettoni, Gasparo da Salò e l'invenzione del violino, in 'Commentari del Ateneo di Brescia' (1901); M. Butturini, Gasparo da Salò: Studio critico (Salò, 1901); G. Bignamì, Gasparo da Salò, in 'Musica d'oggi' (Feb., 1940); A. M. Mucchi, Gasparo da Salò (Milan, 1940).

Gasparini, Guido, Italian musicologist; b. Florence, June 7, 1865; d. Naples, Feb. 20, 1942. He was a pupil of Tacchinardi (composition) and Sbolci (cello); from 1902, librarian and teacher of music history at Parma Cons.; later, librarian at Naples Cons.; in 1908 he founded the 'Associazione dei Musicologi Italiani,' one of the main purposes of which was the examination and cataloguing of all books on music and musical MSS in the Italian libraries; in 1909 it was affiliated with the 'Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft' (as its Italian branch), and began the issue of a quarterly 'Catalogo delle opere musicali . . . esistenti . . . nelle biblioteche e negli archivi pubblici e privati d'Italia.' Gasparini's writings are Storia della musica (1899; a series of 10 lectures); Dell'arte d'interpretare la scrittura della musica vocale del Cinquecento (1902); Storia della

Semiografia musicale (1905); I caratteri peculiari del Melodramma italiano (1913); Musicisti alla Corte dei Farnesi; L'Ari Italiani avant Palestrina, in 'Mercure musical' II, 6-8; Noterelle su due liutiste al servizio di Casa Farnese (1923).

Gassmann, Florian Leopold, composer; b. Brüx, Bohemia, May 3, 1729; d. Vienna, Jan. 20, 1774. His father insisted on his adopting a commercial career, but Gassmann ran away from home and made his way to Padre Martini in Bologna, who taught him music for two years. After living at Venice in the service of Count Leonardo Veneri, he was called by Emperor Francis I (1764) to Vienna as theater conductor; in 1772, he succeeded Reutter as court Kapellmeister and founded the 'Tonkünstler-Societät' for the relief of the widows and orphans of musicians. He wrote 7 serious operas, 14 comic operas, 3 stage cantatas, and a quantity of orchestral and chamber music (which was highly esteemed by Mozart). His symphony in B minor was edited by Karl Geiringer (Univ. Ed., 1933). A selection of his sacred music was publ. in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' XLV. His most famous pupil, Salieri, was the teacher of Gassmann's two daughters, Maria Anna and Maria Theresia (Rosenbaum), distinguished opera-singers in Vienna.—Cf. R. Haas and G. Donath, F. L. Gassmann als Opernkomponist, in 'Studien zur Musikwissenschaft' (1914); F. Kosch, F. L. Gassmann als Kirchenkomponist, ibid. (1927); E. Girach, F. L. Gassmann (Reichenberg, 1930).

Gassner, Ferdinand Simon, Austrian violinist; b. Vienna, Jan. 6, 1798; d. Karlsruhe, Feb. 25, 1851. In 1816, he was violinist at the National Theater in Mainz; 1818, he became music director at Giessen Univ., which in 1819 made him Dr. phil. and lecturer on music. In 1826 he joined the court orch. at Darmstadt, and afterwards became teacher of singing and chorusmaster at the theater. From 1822-35 he publ. the 'Musikalischer Hausfreund' at Mainz; he edited (1841-5) the 'Zeitschrift für Deutschlands Musikvereine und Dilettanten.' He wrote Partiturkenntniss, ein Leitfaden zum Selbstunterricht (1838; French ed. 1851, as Traité de la partition); and Dirigent und Ripienist (1846); contributed to the Supplement of Schilling's 'Universalexikon der Tonkunst' (1842) and edited an abridgment of the entire work (1849). He composed 2 operas, several ballets, a cantata, songs, etc.

Gast, Peter. See Köselitz, Heinrich.

Gastaldon, Stanislas, Italian composer; b. Turin, April 7, 1861; d. Florence, March 7, 1939. At the age of 17 he began publishing nocturnes, ballabili, and other pieces for piano; was, for a number of years, music critic for the 'Nuovo Giornale' in Florence. He wrote about 300 songs, some of which have had great vogue (La musica proibita; Ti vorrei rapire; Frate Anselmo; Donna Clara); he was fairly successful with his operas Mala Pasqua (Rome, 1890), Il Pater (Milan, 1894), Stellina (Florence, 1905), Il Sonetto di Dante (Genoa, 1909), Il Reuccio di Caprilana (Turin, 1913). He also wrote marches for military band; a piano fantasia, La dansa delle scimmie; etc.

Gastinel, Léon-Gustave-Cyprien, French composer; born Villers, near Auxonne, Aug. 13, 1823; d. Fresnes-les-Rurgis, Oct. 20, 1906. He was a pupil of Halévy at the Paris Cons., taking 1st Grand Prix de Rome for his cantata Vélasquez in 1846. A successful composer of operas, he produced Le Miroir (1853), L'Opéra aux fenêtres (1857), Titus et Bérénice (1860), Le Buisson vert (1861), Le Barde (Nice, 1896), and the ballet Le Rêve (Opéra, 1890) besides other stage works: La Kermesse, Eutates, Ourania, and La Tulipe bleue; also 4 oratorios and 3 solemn Masses, orchestral compositions, chamber music, choruses, etc.—Cf. F. Boisson, Léon Gastinel (1893).

Gastoldi, Giovanni Giacomo, Italian composer; b. Caravaggio; d. 1622. In 1581 he was a singer at the court of Mantua; contributed part of the score of Idropica, produced in Mantua on June 2, 1608. In 1609 he was maestro di cappella in Milan. A number of his works were publ.: 4 books of madrigals (1588, 1589, 1592, 1602); 4 books of canzonette (1592, 1593, 1596, 1597); many individual pieces are reproduced in contemporary collections. His 'balletti' (dance songs) are remarkable for their rhythmic vigor in folksong style.—Cf. A. Einstein, The Italian Madrigal, vol. III (Princeton, 1949). See also Denis Arnold's article on Gastoldi in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Gastoué (gäh-stwä'), Amédée, French music scholar; b. Paris, March 13, 1873; d. there, June 1, 1943. He studied piano and harmony with A. Deslandres (1890), harmony with Lavignac (1891), then organ with Guilmant and counterpoint and composition with Magnard. From 1896-1905 he was editor of 'Revue du Chant Grégorien'; in 1897 he began to contribute to the 'Tri-bune de St.-Gervais,' became editor in 1904, and, on the death of Ch. Bordes (1909), editor-in-chief and director; he was prof. of Gregorian Chant at the Schola Cantorum from its foundation (1896); also music critic of 'La Semaine Littéraire' in 1905; he was appointed advisory member of the Pontifical Commission of the Editio Vaticana in 1905. For many years he was organist and maître de chapelle at St.-Jean-Baptiste-de-Belleville, Paris, where he also gave concerts of works in the Palestrina style; lecturer at the Catholic Univ. and École des Hautes Etudes Sociales; Laureate of the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres; commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great; 1925, member of the Académie des Beaux Arts.—Writings: Cours théorique et pratique de plain-chant romain grégorien (1904); Historie du chant liturgique à Paris (vol. I: Des Origines à la fin des temps carolingiens, 1904); Les Origines du chant romain, l'antiphonaire grégorien (1907); Catalogue des manuscrits de musique byzantine de la Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris et des bibliothèques publiques de France (1907; with facsimiles); Nouvelle méthode pratique de chant grégorien (1908); Traité d'harmonisation du chant grégorien (1910); L'Art grégorien (1911); La Musique de l'église (1911); Variations sur la musique d'église (1912); Musique et liturgie. Le Graduel et l'Antiphonaire romain (Lyons, 1913); L'Orgue en France de l'antiquité au début de la période classique (1921); Les primitifs de la musique française (1922); Le Cantique populaire en France: ses sources, son histoire (Lyons, 1924); La Vie musicale de l'église (1929); La Liturgie et la musique (1931); Le Manuscrit de musique polyphonique du trésor d'Apt, XIV<sup>e</sup>—XV<sup>e</sup> siècles (1936); L'Eglise et la musique (Paris, 1936). Gastoué edited several volumes of ecclesiastical music, collected from old sources, and wrote various articles on the subject.

Gatti, Guido Maria, eminent Italian music critic and writer; b. Chieti, May 30, 1892. He was editor of 'La Riforma Musicale,' Turin (1913-15) and 'Il Pianoforte,' Turin (1920-27), which changed its name in 1927 to 'La Rassegna Musicale.'—Publications: Guida musicale della Giovanna d'Arco di Enrico Bossi; Biografia critica di Bizet (1914); Figure di musicisti francesi, in 'Biblioteca della Riforma musicale' (Turin, 1915); Musicisti moderni d'Italia e di fuori (Bologna, 1920; 2nd ed. 1925); Le Barbier de Seville de Rossini (Paris, 1925); Debora

e Jaelle di I. Pizzetti (1922); Dizionario Musicale (in collaboration with A. della Corte; 1925, 2nd ed. 1930; revised ed. 1952); Ildebrando Pizzetti (Turin, 1934; in English, London, 1951); contributed to Grove's Dictionary; wrote numerous articles for music magazines in Europe and America.

Gatti-Casazza (gät-ti-cäh-zäht'-tsäh), Giulio, Italian impresario; b. Udine, Feb. 3, 1868; d. Ferrara, Sept. 2, 1940. He was educated at the universities of Ferrara and Bologna, and graduated from the Naval Engineering School at Genoa; when his father, who had been chairman of the Board of Directors of the Municipal Theater at Ferrara, accepted a position in Rome in 1893, Gatti-Casazza abandoned his career as engineer and became director of the theater. His ability attracted the attention of the Viscount di Modrone and A. Boito, who, in 1898, offered him the directorship of La Scala at Milan. During the ten years of his administration the institution came to occupy the first place among the opera houses of Italy. From 1908-35 he was general director of the Metropolitan Opera, and the period of his administration was, both artistically and financially, the most flourishing in the history of the house; he vastly improved the orch., chorus, and all mechanical departments; one of his first suggestions to the Board of Directors was to offer a $10,000 prize for the encouragement of native operatic composers (won by Horatio Parker with Mona, 1912); the doors were opened to American composers (starting with Converse, Damrosch, and Herbert), and eminent foreign composers gladly accepted invitations to have the world première of new works take place at the Metropolitan (Humperdinck's Königskinder, Puccini's Girl of the Golden West, Granados' Goyescas, Giordano's Madame Sans-Gêne, etc.); the list of novelties produced is a long one, numbering 110 works; besides, there were noteworthy revivals of older works, e.g., Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride (revised by Richard Strauss), etc. During this period, Giulio Setti was chorus master and set a high standard for the opera chorus. Gatti-Casazza procured the services of the best conductors available, bringing with him from La Scala such a master as Arturo Toscanini, and such able conductors as Polacco and Panizza. He resigned in 1935, Giulio Setti leaving with him, and went to Italy, where he lived in retirement. On April 3, 1910, Gatti-Casazza married the soprano Frances Alda; divorced in 1929; in 1930 he married Rosina Galli (d. April 30, 1940), première danseuse and ballet-mistress.—Cf. I. Kolodin, The Metropolitan Opera, 1883-1935 (N. Y., 1936); Pitts Sanborn, Metropolitan Book of the Opera (N. Y., 1937). Gatti-Casazza's Memoirs of the Opera was posthumously published in English in 1941.

Gatty, Nicholas Comyn, English composer; b. Bradfield, Sept. 13, 1874; d. London, Nov. 10, 1946. He was educated at Downing College, Cambridge (B.A., 1896; Mus. B., 1898); then studied with Stanford at the Royal College of Music; was organist to the Duke of York's Royal Military School at Chelsea; music critic of 'Pall Mall Gazette,' 1907-14; also acted as assistant conductor at Covent Garden.—Works: the 1-act operas (all produced in London) Greysteel (1906), Duke or Devil (1909), The Tempest (April 17, 1920), Prince Fere-lon (1921; received the Carnegie Award for this opera); Macbeth, 4-act opera (MS); King Alfred and the Cakes; Milton's Ode on Time, for soli, chorus, and orch.; 3 Short Odes; Variations for orch. on Old King Cole; Suite for string orch.; piano concerto; piano trio; string quartet; waltzes for piano; songs.

Gatz, Felix Maria, German conductor; b. Berlin, May 15, 1892; d. Scranton, Pennsylvania, June 20, 1942. He studied at the Univs. of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Erlangen (Dr. phil., 1917), and conducting with Nikisch and Paul Scheinpflug; in 1922-23, he was conductor of the Lübeck Civic Opera; 1923-33, conductor of Bruckner Society series with Berlin Philh.; 1925-34, prof. of esthetics at State Academy of Music, Vienna. In 1934 he settled in the U.S.; 1934-36, prof. at Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh; 1936-37, visiting prof. at N. Y. Univ.; from 1937 head of music and art dept. of the Univ. of Scranton, Pa.; he was also founder (1938) and conductor (1938-39) of Scranton Philh. Orch.; publ. Musik-Aesthetik grosser Komponisten (Stuttgart, 1929), etc.

Gaubert (goh-bär'), Philippe, French conductor and composer; b. Cahors, July 3, 1879; d. Paris, July 8, 1941. He studied flute with Taffanel at the Paris Cons.; 1905, won second Prix de Rome; from 1919-38, was conductor of the Paris Conservatory concerts; 1920, first conductor at the Opéra, Paris.—Works: the operas Sonia (Nantes, 1913) and Naila (Paris, April 7, 1927); a ballet, Philotis (Paris, 1914); the oratorio Josiane (Paris, Dec. 17, 1921); symphonic works: Rhapsodie sur des thèmes populaires (1909), Poème pastoral (1911), Le Cortège d'Amphitrite (Paris, April 9, 1911); Fresques, symph. suite (Paris, Nov. 12, 1923); Les Chants de la mer, 3 symph. pictures (Paris, Oct. 12, 1929); violin concerto (Paris, Feb. 16, 1930); Les Chants de la terre (Paris, Dec. 20, 1931); Poème romanesque, for cello and orch. (Paris, Jan. 30, 1932); Inscriptions sur les portes de la ville, 4 symph. tableaux (Paris, Nov. 18, 1934); symphony in F (Paris, Nov. 8, 1936); Poème des champs et des villages (Paris, Feb. 4, 1939); chamber music: Médailles antiques, for flute, violin, and piano; Divertissement grec, for flute and harp; Sur l'eau, for flute and piano; Intermède champêtre, for oboe and piano; violin sonata; songs; Méthode complète de flûte, in 8 parts (1923); many transcriptions for flute of works by Mozart, Beethoven, Lully, Rameau, etc.

Gaul, Alfred Robert, English composer; b. Norwich, April 30, 1837; d. Worcestershire, Sept. 13, 1913. A chorister in the cathedral at 9, he was apprenticed to Dr. Buck; was organist at Fakenham, Birmingham, and Edgbaston; graduated (1863) as Mus. Bac., Cantab.; became conductor of the Walsall Philharmonic in 1887, then teacher and conductor at the Birmingham and Midland Institute, and teacher at King Edward's High School for Girls and at the Blind Asylum.—Works: An oratorio, Hezekiah (1861); several sacred cantatas, some of which (Ruth and The Holy City) are popular in the U.S.; Passion music; the 96th Psalm; an ode, A Song of Life; glees, vocal trios and duets, songs and part-songs, etc.

Gaul, Harvey Bartlett, American conductor and composer; b. New York, April 11, 1881; d. Pittsburgh, Dec. 1, 1945. He studied harmony, composition, and organ in New York with G. F. Le Jeune and Dudley Buck (1895); later (1906), in England, he studied composition with A. R. Gaul and Dr. Armes. In Paris he attended the Cons. and the Schola Cantorum; studied composition and orchestration with Vincent d'Indy, and organ with Widor, Guilmant, and Decaux (1910). He was conductor of the Pittsburgh Civic String Orch. and guest-conductor elsewhere; member of the faculty of Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh; lectured on music in various cities. He was also well known as a critic ('Post,' 'Sun,' 'Pittsburgh Index') and a contributor to music magazines. He composed many choruses (Appalachian Mountain Melodies, Prayer of Thanksgiving, etc.), chamber music, songs, organ pieces, etc.; won prizes in various competitions with his songs.

Gaultier (goh-t'yä'), Denis, famous French lute player and composer; b. Marseilles, c. 1600; d. Paris, late Jan., 1672. He was active as a composer from about 1625 or 1630; lutenist in Paris in 1626.—Works: La Rhétorique des Dieux, a collection of 69 compositions compiled between 1664-72 (facsimile reprint, together with transcription into modern notation, ed. by A. Tessier in 'Publications de la Société française de musicologie,' vols. VI, 1932, and VII, 1932-33); Pièces de luth (1669, publ.); Livre de tablature (publ. by his widow and Jacques Gaultier, 1672); many other MSS in the Berlin, Vienna, and Paris libraries. Much of his work is in the form of dance suites, each selection in the various groups bearing a descriptive title. As a composer Gaultier developed a type of ornamentation which influenced the keyboard style of Froberger and Chambonnières. Among his pupils were Mouton, DuFaux, Gallot, and others.—Cf. O. Fleischer, Denis Gaultier, in 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft' II, 1 ff (with transcription of La Rhétorique, 1886; also publ. separately, Leipzig, 1886); L. de la Laurencie, Le Luthiste Gaultier, in the 'Revue Musicale' (1924).

Gauthier (goh-t'yä'), Eva, soprano; b. Ottawa, Canada, Sept. 20, 1885; studied voice there and at the Paris Cons. with Frank Buels and Jacques Bouhy, later with Schoen-René in Berlin; in 1909, she made her operatic début as Micaela in Pavia, Italy; 1910, appeared at Covent Garden, London (Yniold in Pelléas et Mélisande); later devoted herself to a concert career; performed many works of contemporary composers; during her world tours she also made a study of Javanese and Malayan folksongs.

Gauthier-Villars (goh-t'yä' vë-yahr'), Henri (called Willy), French music critic; b. Villiers-sur-Orge, Aug. 10, 1859; d. Paris, Jan. 12, 1931. He was music critic for the 'Revue des Revues'; writer for the 'Revue Internationale de musique,' the 'Écho de Paris' (over the signature 'L'Ouvreuse du Cirque'), and other Paris papers. Several volumes of his numerous criticisms have been published: Lettres de l'ouvreuse, Bains de sons, Rythmes et rires, La Mouche des croches, Entre deux airs, Notes sans portées, La colle aux quintes; he also wrote a biography of Bizet (1912).

Gautier, Jean-François-Eugène, French composer; b. Vaugirard, near Paris, Feb. 27, 1822; d. Paris, April 3, 1878. He was a pupil of Habeneck (violin) and Halévy (composition) at the Paris Cons.; 1848, 3rd conductor at the Théâtre-Italien; also prof. of harmony at the Cons.; and in 1872 prof. of history. He composed 14 comic operas; an oratorio, La Mort de Jesus; a cantata, Le 15 août; an Ave Maria; etc.

Gavazzeni, Gianandrea, Italian composer and writer on music; b. Bergamo, July 25, 1909. He studied at the Milan Cons. with Pizzetti and Pilati; has written Preludio Sinfonico for orch. (1928); La Morte di Dafne for voice and orch. (1929); violin sonata (1930); cello sonata (1930); piano trio (1931); Concerto Bergamasco for orch. (1931); Paolo e Virginia, melodrama (1932); Il furioso nell' Isola di San Domingo, ballet (1933); etc. He is the author of Musicisti d'Europa (Milan, 1954).

Gaviniès (gäh-vën-ñās'), Pierre, French violinist and composer; b. Bordeaux, May 11, 1728; d. Paris, Sept. 8, 1800. He learned to play the violin as a child in the workshop of his father, who was a lute maker. In 1734, the family moved to Paris. Gaviniès made his first public appearance in a Concert Spirituel at the age of 13; he reappeared at these concerts as a youth of 20; his success with the public was such that Viotti described him as 'the French Tartini.' From 1773 to 1777 he was director (with Gossec) of the Concerts Spirituels. When the Paris Cons. was organized in 1794, he was appointed professor of violin. His book of technical exercises Les 24 Matinées (violin studies in all the 24 keys) demonstrates by its transcendental difficulty that Gaviniès must have been a virtuoso; he attracted numerous pupils, and is regarded as the founder of the French school of violin pedagogy. His original works are of less importance; he wrote 3 sonatas for violin accompanied by cello (publ. posthumously; the one in F minor known as Le Tombeau de Gaviniès); his most celebrated piece is an air, Romance de Gaviniès, which has been publ. in numerous arrangements; he wrote further 6 sonatas for 2 violins and 6 violin concertos, and produced a comic opera, Le Prétendu (Paris, Nov. 6, 1760). —Cf. C. Pipelet, Éloge historique de Pierre Gaviniès (Paris, 1802); L. de la Laurencie, L'école française du violon (Paris, 1923).

Gavoty, Bernard, French writer on music; b. Paris, April 2, 1908; studied philosophy and literature at the Sorbonne; also music at the Paris Cons. Under the nom-de-plume Clarendon, he wrote music criticism in 'Le Figaro.' He publ. Louis Vienne, le musicien de Notre-Dame (Paris, 1943); Jehan Alain, musicien français (Paris, 1945); Souvenirs de Georges Enesco (Paris, 1955); also issued a series of de luxe publications, under the general title Les Grands Interprètes (Geneva, 1953, et seq.), containing biographies and photographs of Gieseking, Furtwängler, Menuhin, etc.

Gawronski, Adalbert, Polish pianist and composer; b. Seimony, near Vilna, April 27, 1868; d. Kowanónak near Poznan, Aug. 6, 1910. He studied with Noskowski at the Warsaw Music Institute and later, in Berlin and Vienna; then went to Russia, where he organized a music school in Orel, returning to Warsaw after a few years. He wrote 2 operas, Marja and Pojata; a symphony; 3 string quartets (the 1st won the Leipzig Paderewski prize, 1898; the 2nd won the Moscow prize, 1903); piano pieces, songs, etc.

Gay, John, English librettist of The Beggar's Opera; b. Barnstaple, Devon, Sept. (baptized 16th), 1685; d. London, Dec. 4, 1732. The opera was brought out in London Jan. 29, 1728, and was immensely popular for a century, chiefly because of its sharp satire and the English and Scots folk melodies it used. It has had a number of successful revivals. The government disliked The Beggar's Opera, and forbade the performance of its sequel, Polly, the score of which was printed in 1729. When Polly was finally performed in 1777, it was a fiasco, because the conditions satirized no longer prevailed.—Cf. 'Dictionary of National Biography' VII (reprinted Oxford, 1921-22); C. E. Pearce, Polly Peachum: the Story of 'Polly' and 'The Beggar's Opera' (London, 1923); W. E. Schultz, Gay's Beggar's Opera (New Haven, Conn., 1923); O. Sherwin, Mr. Gay; being a Picture of the Life and Times of the Author of the Beggar's Opera (N. Y., 1929); Cäcilie Tolksdorf, John Gay's Beggar's Opera and Bert Brechts Dreigroschenoper (Rheinberg, 1934); E. Gagey, Ballad Opera (N. Y., 1937).

Gay (gäh-ē'), Maria, dramatic contralto; b. Barcelona, June 10, 1879; d. New York, July 29, 1943. She studied sculpture and the violin and became a singer almost by chance, when Pugno, traveling in Spain, heard her sing and was impressed by the natural beauty of her voice. She sang in some of his concerts; also with Ysaÿe in Brussels; made her début there as Carmen (1902), a role that became her finest. She then studied in Paris with Ada Adiny, and when she returned to the operatic stage made an international reputation. After tours in Europe, she made her American début at the Metropolitan Opera as Carmen on Dec. 3, 1908, with Toscanini conducting. She sang with the Boston Opera Co. in 1910-12 and with the Chicago Opera Co. from 1913 to 1927, when she retired from the stage. She and her husband, the tenor, Giovanni Zenatello, whom she married in 1913, settled in N. Y.

Gaynor, Mrs. Jessie Smith, American composer of children's songs; b. St. Louis, Feb. 17, 1863; d. Webster Groves, Missouri, Feb. 20, 1921. After studying piano with L. Maas and theory with A. J. Goodrich and A. Weidlig, she taught in Chicago, St. Louis, and St. Joseph, Mo. Among her published works are: Songs of the Child World (2 books), Playtime Songs, etc. and a children's operetta, The House That Jack Built.

Gaztambide (gäth-tähm-bē-dē), Joaquín, Spanish composer; b. Tudela, Navarre, Feb. 7, 1822; d. Madrid, March 18, 1870. He studied at Pamplona and at the Madrid Cons. with Pedro Albéniz (piano) and Ramón Carnicer (composition). After a stay in Paris, he returned to Madrid as manager of several theaters and as conductor of the Cons. concerts; he became director of the 'Concert Society' in 1868. He was best known, however, for his zarzuelas, the satiric musical productions which are identified with the Madrid stage. Gaztambide wrote 44 zarzuelas, many of which became popular; one, El juramento, first produced in 1858, was revived in Madrid in 1933. He took a zarzuela company to Mexico and Havana in 1868-69.

Gazzaniga, Giuseppe, Italian opera composer; b. Verona, Oct. 1743; d. Crema, Feb. 1, 1818. He was a pupil of Porpora in Naples; after the production of his early opera Il barone di Trocchia there (1768), he traveled to Venice and to Vienna; his opera Don Giovanni Tenorio (Venice, Feb. 5, 1787) anticipated Mozart's Don Giovanni; he wrote 50 operas in all, several of which became quite popular at the time (La locanda, L'isola di Alcina, La vendemmia, La moglie capricciosa, etc.). Mozart's librettist, Lorenzo da Ponte, wrote the libretto of Gazzaniga's opera Il finto cieco (Vienna, Feb. 20, 1770).

Gebel, Georg (Jr.), German composer; b. Brieg, Silesia, Oct. 25, 1709; d. Rudolstadt, Sept. 24, 1753. He studied with his father; was organist at St. Maria Magdalene, Breslau, and Kapellmeister to the Duke of Oels. In 1735 he joined Count Brühl's orch. at Dresden, where he met Hebenstreit, the inventor of the 'Pantaleon,' and learned to play that instrument. In 1747 he was appointed Kapellmeister to the Prince of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt. He was a precocious composer, and wrote a number of light operas (to German rather than Italian librettos, thus upholding the national tradition), and more than 100 symphonies, partitas, and concertos. Many MSS of his instrumental works are still preserved in German libraries.

Gebhard, Heinrich, pianist, composer, and teacher; b. Sobernheim, July 25, 1878. As a boy of 8, he came with his parents to Boston where he studied with Clayton Johns; after a concert début in Boston (April 24, 1896), he went to Vienna to study with Leschetizky. A fine interpreter of the classics, he also showed a decided predilection for the moderns, particularly of the impressionist school. He gave first American performances of works by Vincent d'Indy; his most notable interpretation was Loeffler's work for piano and orch., A Pagan Poem, which he played nearly 100 times with U. S. orchestras. His own works are also in an impressionistic vein: Fantasy for piano and orch. (N. Y. Philh., Nov. 12, 1925, composer soloist); symph. poem, Across the Hills (1940); Divertimento for piano and chamber orch. (Boston, Dec. 20, 1927); a string quartet; a Waltz Suite for two pianos; a song cycle, The Sun, Cloud and the Flower; many piano pieces. He also arranged Loeffler's A Pagan Poem for two pianos.

Gedalgé (zheu-dahlzh'), André, eminent French theorist, composer, and pedagogue; b. Paris, Dec. 27, 1856; d. Chessy, Feb. 5, 1926. He began to study music rather late in life, and entered the Paris Cons. at the age of 28. However, he made rapid progress, and obtained the 2nd Prix de Rome after a year of study (under Guiraud). He then elaborated a system of counterpoint, later published as a Traité de la fugue (Paris, 1901), which became a standard work. In 1905, Gedalgé was engaged as prof. of counterpoint and fugue at the Paris Cons.; among his students were Ravel, Enesco, Koehlin, Roger-Ducasse, Milhaud, and Honegger. He also publ. Les Gloires musicales du monde (1898) and other pedagogic works. As a composer, Gedalge was less significant. Among his works are a pantomime, Le petit Savoyard (Paris, 1891); an opera, Pris au piège (Paris, 1895), and 3 operas that were not performed: Sita, La Farce du Cadi, Hélène; he also wrote 3 symphs., several concertos, some chamber music, and songs. See Homage à Gedalge in the 'Revue musicale' (March 1, 1926), containing articles by Koechlin, F. Schmitt, Honegger, Milhaud, and others.

Geehl, Henry Ernest, English composer; b. London, Sept. 28, 1881. A pupil of R. O. Morgan, he was appointed professor at Trinity College of Music, London, in 1919, and was still holding this post in 1954. He has written a symphony; a violin concerto; a piano concerto; pieces for brass band, including Cornwall and Cornish Rhapsody; pedagogic piano pieces; songs.

Gehot (gā-hoh'), Jean (also Joseph), Belgian violinist and composer; b. Brussels, April 8, 1756; d. in the U. S., about 1820. He went to London after 1780; there he publ. A Treatise on the Theory and Practice of Music (1784), Art of Bowing the Violin (1790), and Complete Instructions for Every Musical Instrument (1790). In 1792, he went to America; gave concerts in New York, where he presented his work, Overture in 12 movements, expressive of a voyage from England to America. He then played violin at the City Concerts in Philadelphia, under the management of Reinagle and Capron. However, he failed to prosper in America; most of his works were publ. in London, among them 17 string quartets, 12 string trios, and 24 'military pieces' for 2 clarinets, 2 horns, and bassoon. Some information on Gehot's life is found in J. R. Parker's Musical Reminiscences in the 'Euterpiad' (Feb. 2, 1822). See also O. Sonneck, Early Concert Life in America (1907).

Gehrkins, Karl Wilson, American music educator; b. Kelleys Island, Ohio, April 19, 1882. After graduation from Oberlin College (B.A., 1905; M.A., 1912), and attending Columbia Univ., he became prof. of school music at the Oberlin Cons. of Music in 1907; retired in 1942. He has been mainly influential in the field of school music teaching; formulated a new plan, adopted by many institutions, for the training of music supervisors. He was editor of 'School Music' from 1925 to 1934; co-editor, with Walter Damrosch and George Gartlan, of the 'Universal School Music Series,' a series of song-books and teachers' manuals for grade and high schools (1923-36), etc.—Writings: Musical Notation and Terminology (1914); Essentials in Conducting (1919); An Introduction to School Music Teaching (1919); Fundamentals of Music (1924); Handbook of Musical Terms (1927); Twenty Lessons in Conducting (1930); Music in the Grade Schools (1934); Music in the Junior High School (1936); with P. W. Dykema, The Teaching and Administration of High School Music (1941).

Geiringer (gī-rin-gēr), Karl, eminent musicologist; b. Vienna, April 26, 1899. He studied in Vienna at the Cons. and Univ. with Guido Adler; later in Berlin with Curt Sachs; from 1923-38, he was custodian of the archives and instrument collection of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna; then lived in London; appointed professor at Boston University in 1941. In 1955 he was elected president of the American Musicological Society. During the American period of his activities he wrote his books in English.—Writings: Die Flankelwirbelinstrumente in der bildenden Kunst des 14.-16. und der 1. Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts (dissertation, 1923); the section devoted to musical instruments in Adler's Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (1924); Vorgeschichte und Geschichte der europäischen Laute (1928); Joseph Haydn in Bücken's 'Grosse Meister' (1932); Johannes Brahms, Leben und Schaffen eines deutschen Meisters (Vienna, 1935; in English, London, 1936; 2nd ed., 1947); Musical Instruments, Their History from the Stone Age to the Present Day (London 1943; N.Y., 1945); Haydn, a Creative Life in Music (N.Y., 1946); The Bach Family (N.Y., 1954); Music of the Bach Family (Cambridge, Mass., 1955). He edited Pergolesi's Servia Padrona and several little known works by Haydn; arranged and publ. orch. works by Dittersdorf, Johann Christian Bach, Florian Gassmann, Michael Haydn, and others; also a collection of piano works, Wiener Meister um Mozart und Beethoven (Vienna, 1935).

Geiser, Walther, Swiss composer; b. Zofingen, May 16, 1897. He studied in Basel with Hermann Suter and in Berlin with Busoni. Since 1924, he has taught at the Basel Cons. He has written a symphony (1953); 3 Fantasies for orch.; a violin concerto (1930); Konzertstück for organ and chamber orch. (1940); 2 string quartets; a string trio and pieces for solo wind instruments with piano; also choral works. His style, determined by Busoni's influence, is neo-Classical.

Geisler, Paul, German conductor and composer; b. Stolp, Aug. 10, 1856; d. Posen, April 3, 1919. He was a pupil of his grandfather, who was a conductor at Marienburg, and also of Constantine Decker. As a conductor, Geisler was associated with the Leipzig musical theater (1881), A. Neumann's traveling Wagner company (1882); for the following two years he was conductor at Bremen. He lived in Leipzig and Berlin for most of his career before going to Posen, where he became director of the Cons. He wrote much music for the stage; his other work, including two cyclic cantatas, symphonic poems, and incidental stage music, is mostly in manuscript.

Geistinger, Maria (Marie) Charlotte Cäcilia, Polish operetta singer; b. Graz, Styria, July 26, 1833; d. Rastendorf, Sept. 29, 1903. She sang chiefly in Vienna, but also in Prague, Leipzig, Berlin, etc. In 1897 she made a successful appearance in New York.

Gelinek (properly Jelinek), Joseph, composer; b. Seltzsch, near Beraun, Bohemia, Dec. 3, 1758; d. Vienna, April 13, 1825. He studied philosophy in Prague and at the same time took lessons in music with Segert; became a good pianist (Mozart praised him); ordained priest in 1786, but did not abandon music; went to Vienna and settled there as a piano teacher; in 1795, became music master to Prince Esterhazy. He was a prolific composer; 92 opus numbers are listed in a catalogue issued by André; his fantasias, variations, and dances for piano were quite successful.

Geminiani (jeh-mē-ñah'-nē), Francesco, Italian violinist and writer; b. Lucca (baptized Dec. 5), 1687; d. Dublin, Sept. 17, 1762. He studied with Corelli in Rome and Alessandro Scarlatti in Naples; in 1706 returned to Lucca and played violin in the town orch. In 1714 he went to London, where he won a reputation as a teacher and performer; in 1731 he presented a series of subscription concerts in London; in 1733 he went to Dublin, where he established a concert hall and gave concerts; in 1734 he returned to London; in 1740 he was briefly in Paris; he was again in Paris for a longer period between 1749 and 1755, when he went back once more to London; in 1759 he settled in Dublin, where he was music master to Count Bellamont. Both in London and Dublin he was financially successful; besides music, he was interested in art, and bought and sold pictures. As a virtuoso, Geminiani continued the tradition established by his teacher, Corelli, and made further advances in violin technique by the use of frequent shifts of position, and by a free application of double-stops. In his compositions, he adopted the facile method of the Italian school; he excelled particularly in brisk allegro movements. During his years in England and Ireland he made a determined effort to please English tastes; his works are often extremely effective, but his inherent talents fell far short of Corelli's, and in music history he remains but a secondary figure. He publ. the earliest known violin method, The Art of Playing on the Violin, which appeared anonymously in Prelleur's The Modern Musick Master, or the Universal Musician (London, 1730); it was later publ. under Geminiani's own name as The Compleat Tutor for the Violin; in 1751 a third ed. appeared under the original title; it was translated into French (Paris, 1752) and German (Vienna, 1785); a facsimile edition, prepared by D. D. Boyden, was publ. in 1952. This manual is extremely valuable because it sets forth the principles of violin playing as formulated by Corelli, with many of the rules still in common use. Other didactic publications by Geminiani comprise: Rules for Playing in a true Taste on the Violin, German Flute, Violoncello and Harpsichord (London, 1745); A Treatise on good Taste, being the second Part of the Rules (London, 1749); Guida Armonica o Dizionario Armonico being a Sure Guide to Harmony and Modulation (London, 1742; in French, 1756; in Dutch, 1756); A Supplement to the Guida Harmonica (London, 1745); The Art of Accompaniment [sic] or a new and well digested method to learn to perform the Thorough Bass on the Harpsichord (London, 1755); The Art of Playing the Guitar or Cittra, Containing Several Compositions with a Bass for the Violoncello or Harpsichord (London, 1760); also compiled The Harmonical Miscellany (London, 1758). His musical works (all instrumental) comprise: op. 1, 12 sonatas for violin and figured bass (1716); op. 2, 6 concerti grossi (1732); op. 3, 6 concerti grossi (1733); op. 4, 12 sonatas for violin and figured bass (1739); op. 5, 6 sonatas for cello and figured bass (1739); op. 6, 6 concerti grossi (1741); op. 7, 6 concerti grossi (1746); also 12 string trios and arrangements of Corelli's works for various instrumental combinations. The concerti grossi have been publ. in modern editions by P. Mies (op. 2, no. 2) in 'Musik im Haus' (1928) (M. Esposito (op. 2, no. 2, arranged for string orch., London, 1927); H. J. Moser (op. 2, nos. 4, 5, 6, arranged for strings and piano) in 'Das Musik-Kränzlein' (Leipzig, 1937); R. Hernried (op. 3, nos. 1-6, Leipzig, 1935). Violin sonatas have been publ. by: R. L. Finney (op. 1, nos. 1-12, Northampton, Mass., 1935); A. Moffat (op. 4, no. 8, Mainz, 1910; op. 4, no. 11, Berlin, 1899).—Cf. W. H. Grattan Flood, Geminiani in England and Ireland in the 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1910-11; pp. 108-12); A. Betti, La Vita e l'arte di Francesco Geminiani (Lucca, 1933); R. Hernried, Geminiani's Concerti Grossi, op. 3, in 'Acta musicologica' (1937; pp. 22-30).

Gemünder, August Martin Ludwig, violin maker; b. Ingelfingen, Württemberg, Germany, March 22, 1814; d. New York, Sept. 7, 1895. He established a shop at Springfield, Mass., in 1846; then moved to Boston, where he was joined by his brother Georg (b. April 13, 1816; d. Jan. 15, 1899), also a violin maker, a pupil of J. B. Vuillaume in Paris. In 1852, the brothers settled in New York, where they established themselves as the foremost manufacturers of musical instruments; between 1860 and 1890 they received numerous medals for excellence at expositions in Europe and America. After the death of August Gemünder, the business was continued by 3 of his sons, as August Gemünder & Sons. Georg Gemünder wrote an autobiographical sketch, with an account of his work, Georg Gemünder's Progress in Violin Making (1880, in German; 1881, in English).—Cf. Dictionary of American Biography VII (N.Y., 1931).

Genée (zhū-nā'), (Franz Friedrich) Richard, German opera composer; b. Danzig, Feb. 7, 1823; d. Baden, near Vienna, June 15, 1895. At first a medical student, he took up music, and studied under Stahlknecht at Berlin; was theater conductor (1848-67) at Riga, Cologne, Düsseldorf, Danzig, Amsterdam, and Prague; from 1868-78, conductor at the Theater an der Wien, Vienna, then retiring to his villa at Pressbaum, near Vienna. He wrote (some with F. Zell) several of his own libretti; he also wrote libretti for Strauss, Suppé, and Millöcker.—Operettas: Der Geiger aus Tirol (1857), Der Musikfeind (1862), Die Generalprobe (1862), Rosita (1864), Der schwarze Prinz (1866), Am Runenstein (with Fr. von Flotow, 1868), Der Seekadett (1876), Nanon (1877), Im Wunderlande der Pyramiden (1877), Die letzten Mohikaner (1878), Nisida (1880), Rosina (1881), Die Zwillinge (1885), Die Piraten (1886), Die Dreizehn (1887).

Generali, Pietro (real name, Mercandetti), Italian opera composer; b. Masserano, Oct. 23, 1773; d. Novara, Nov. 3, 1832. He studied in Rome; began to compose sacred music at an early age, but soon turned to opera. He traveled all over Italy as producer of his operas and also went to Vienna and Barcelona. Returning to Italy, he became maestro di cappella at the Cathedral of Novara. He anticipated Rossini in the effective use of dynamics in the instrumental parts of his operas and was generally praised for his technical knowledge. He wrote about 50 stage works, both in the serious and comic genre, but none survived in the repertory after his death. The following were successful at their initial performances: Pamela nubile (Venice, April 12, 1804); Le lagrime di una vedova (Venice, Dec. 26, 1808); Adelina (Venice, Sept. 16, 1810); L'impostore (Milan, May 21, 1815); I Bacchanali di Roma (Venice, Jan. 14, 1816; reputed to be his best work); Il servo padrone (Parma, Aug. 12, 1818); Il divorzio persiano (Trieste, Jan. 31, 1828).—Cf. C. Piccoli, Elogio del maestro Pietro Generali (1833).

Genet (called Il Carpentasso or Carpentras, from his native place). See Carpentras.

Genetz, Emil, Finnish choral composer; b. Impilahti, Oct. 24, 1852; d. Helsinki, May 1, 1930. He studied at the Dresden Cons. (1875-77); returning to Finland, he devoted himself chiefly to vocal music; many of his male choruses are well known and frequently sung in Finland.

Gennrich, Friedrich, German musicologist; b. Colmar, March 27, 1883. He studied Roman philology at the Univ. of Strasbourg; took courses in musicology with F. Ludwig. In 1921 he went to Frankfurt where he was docent of the Univ. from 1929 (prof. in 1934), teaching musicology and Romance literature. He is regarded as a leading authority on music of the troubadours, trouvères, and Minnesinger.—Writings: Musikwissenschaft und romanische Philologie (Halle, 1918); Der musikalische Vortrag der altfranzösischen Chansons de geste (Halle, 1923); Die altfranzösische Rotrouenge (Halle, 1925); Das Formproblem des Minnesangs (Halle, 1931); Grundriss einer Formenlehre des mittelalterlichen Liedes (Halle, 1932; a comprehensive work); Die Strassburger Schule für Musikwissenschaft (Würzburg, 1940); Abriss der frankonischen Mensuralnotation (Nieder-Modau, 1946; 2nd ed., Darmstadt, 1956); Abriss der Mensuralnotation des XIV. und der 1. Hälfte des XV. Jahrhunderts (Nieder-Modau, 1948); Melodien altdeutscher Lieder (Darmstadt, 1954); Franco von Köln, Ars Cantus Mensuralis (Darmstadt, 1955). He further contributed numerous papers to special publications on Romance literature; for a complete list of his publications see his autobiographical entry in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Genzmer, Harald, German composer; b. Blumental, near Bremen, Feb. 9, 1909. He studied with Stephani in Marburg, later with Hindemith in Berlin; music theory with Sachs and Schünemann. From 1934-37, he was in Breslau; 1937-46, in Berlin; 1946-57, prof. of composition at the Hochschule für Musik in Freiburg-im-Breisgau; 1957, appointed to the faculty of the Hochschule für Musik in Munich. He made a study of the electronic instrument, Trautonium; his concerto for Trautonium and orch. was performed for the first time in a radio broadcast Dec. 17, 1952. Other works include: Bremen Symphony (1943); flute concerto (1946); cello concerto (1950); Racine, cantata (1948); septet for harp, 3 string instruments, and 3 wind instruments (1949); 2 violin sonatas; string quartet; 2 flute sonatas; 2 suites for Trautonium and piano.

Georges, Alexandre, French composer; b. Arras, Feb. 25, 1850; d. Paris, Jan. 18, 1938. He studied at the Niedermeyer School in Paris, and later became a teacher of harmony there. He occupied various posts as organist in Paris churches, and was a successful organ teacher. As a composer, he was mainly interested in opera; the following operas were produced in Paris: Le Printemps (1888); Poèmes d'Amour (1892); Charlotte Corday (March 6, 1901); Miarka (Nov. 7, 1905; his most successful work; revived and shortened, 1925); Myrrha (1909); Sangre y sol (Nice, Feb. 23, 1912). He also wrote the oratorios Notre Dame de Lourdes, Balthazar, Chemin de Croix; the symph. poems Léila, La Naissance de Vénus, Le Paradis Perdu. He wrote some chamber music for unusual combinations: A la Kasbah for flute and clarinet; Kosaks for violin and clarinet, etc. He is best known, however, for his melodious Chansons de Miarka for voice and piano (also with orch.). His arrangement of Chansons champenoises à la manière ancienne, by G. Dévignes, is also well known.

Georgescu, Georges, Rumanian conductor; b. Sulina, Oct. 16, 1887. He studied at the Bucharest Cons., then took cello lessons with Hugo Becker in Berlin; conducted symphony concerts in Bucharest (1919-38); from 1926 to 1932, made guest appearances in Europe; also was a guest conductor with the N. Y. Philharmonic (1930).

Georgiades, Thrasybulos, Greek musicologist; b. Athens, Jan. 4, 1907. He studied piano in Athens; then went to Munich, where he took a course in musicology with Rudolf von Ficker (1930-35); also studied composition with Carl Orff. In 1936, he was appointed prof. at the Odeon College in Athens. In 1947, he went again to Germany; lectured at the Univ. of Munich; in 1949, appointed prof. of musicology at Heidelberg Univ.; in 1955, settled in Munich. He contributed valuable papers to German music magazines on ancient Greek, Byzantine, and medieval music; publ. Englische Diskanttraktate aus der ersten Hälfte des 15. Jahrhunderts (Würzburg, 1937); Volkslied als Bekenntnis (Regensburg, 1947); Der griechische Rhythmus (Hamburg, 1940). See his autobiographical notice in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Georgii, Walter, German pianist and musicologist; b. Stuttgart, Nov. 23, 1887. He studied piano in Stuttgart and musicology in Leipzig, Berlin, and Halle. In 1914, he became piano teacher at the Cologne Cons.; then taught at other schools there. In 1946, he was appointed piano teacher at the Munich Hochschule für Musik. Although Georgii appeared in recitals in Germany, he is mainly known as a pedagogue. He publ. several valuable books on piano playing: Weber als Klavierkomponist (Leipzig, 1914); Geschichte der Musik für Klavier zu 2 Hände (Zürich, 1941; revised ed., with added material on piano music for 1 hand, 3, 5, and 6 hands, 1950); Klavierspielerbüchlein (Zürich, 1953). He also edited piano works by Brahms, and publ. an anthology of piano music, 400 Jahre europäischer Klavier Musik (Cologne, 1950).

Gérardy (zhā-rähr-dē'), Jean, Belgian cellist; b. Spa, Dec. 6, 1877; d. there, July 4, 1929. At the age of 5 he began to study the cello with R. Bellmann; he was a pupil of Massau at Liège Cons. from 1885-89, receiving the gold medal at graduation. In 1888 he played as a student in a trio with Ysaÿe and Paderewski; he made his début as soloist in London in 1890. He then toured Europe and America. He was noted as an ensemble player; with Ysaÿe and Godowsky, he formed a trio and toured the U.S. in 1913-14. Gérardy's instrument was a Stradivari, made in 1710.

Gerber, Ernst Ludwig, celebrated German lexicographer, son and pupil of Heinrich Nikolaus Gerber; b. Sondershausen, Sept. 29, 1746; d. there, June 30, 1819. He likewise studied law and music in Leipzig, becoming a skilful cellist and organist, in which latter capacity he became (1769) his father's assistant, and succeeded him in 1775. He was also a chamber musician. He was able to visit Weimar, Kassel, Leipzig, and other cities, and gradually gathered together a large collection of musicians' portraits; to these he appended brief biographical notices, and finally conceived the plan of writing a biographical dictionary of musicians. Though his resources, in a small town without a public library, and having to rely in great measure on material sent him by his publisher, Breitkopf, were hardly adequate to the task he undertook, his Historisch-biographisches Lexikon der Tonkünstler (Leipzig, 2 vols., 1790-92) was so well received, and brought in such a mass of corrections and fresh material from all quarters, that he prepared a supplementary edition, Neues historisch-biographisches Lexikon der Tonkünstler (4 vols., 1812-14). Though the former was intended only as a supplement to Walther's dictionary, and both are, of course, out of date, they contain much material still of value, and have been extensively drawn upon by more recent writers. He composed sonatas for piano, chorale preludes for organ, and music for wind band. The Viennese 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' purchased his large library.

Gerber, René, Swiss composer; b. Travers, June 29, 1908. He studied with Andrae in Zürich and with Nadia Boulanger and Paul Dukas in Paris. Upon his return to Switzerland he devoted himself to teaching; in 1947 was appointed director of the Cons. of Neuchâtel. He has written several orchestral suites, concertos, and songs.

Gerber, Rudolf, German musicologist; b. Flehingen, Baden, April 15, 1899; d. Göttingen, May 6, 1957. He attended the Universities of Halle and Leipzig, receiving his Dr. Phil. from the latter in 1925. He went as Abert's assistant to the Univ. of Berlin in 1926; in 1928, Gerber became professor at Giessen Univ.; he was head of the Music-Historical Institute there from 1937 to 1943, when he became a professor at Göttingen Univ. An authority on German music, he published the following: Der Operntypus J. A. Hasses und seine textlichen Grundlagen (Leipzig, 1925); Das Passionsrezitativ bei H. Schütz (Gütersloh, 1929); Johannes Brahms (Potsdam, 1938); Christoph Willibald Gluck (Potsdam, 1950); Bachs Brandenburgische Konzerte (Kassel, 1951). He was editor of the 'Mozart-Jahrbuch' III (1929); a collaborator in F. Blume's collected edition of Prätorius, and in 1943, began to edit the collected works of Gluck.

Gerbert, Martin, German scholar; b. Hornau, near Horb-on-Neckar, Aug. 12, 1720; d. St.-Blasien, May 13, 1793. A student in the Benedictine monastery at St.-Blasien, he joined the order in 1737, became a priest in 1744, then prof. of theology there; 1759-62, he made trips to Germany, France, and throughout Italy, collecting old MSS, particularly those on music history, of which he later made valuable use in his own works; also visited Padre Martini in Bologna, corresponding with him from 1761 until Martini's death in 1784; in 1764, he was elected Prince-Abbot of the monastery at St.-Blasien. His writings on music are De cantu et musica sacra (St.-Blasien, 1774, 2 vols.; from the beginnings of music to the 18th cent.), Vetus liturgia alemannica (1776, 2 vols.), Monumenta veteris liturgiæ alemannicæ (1777, 2 vols.), and Scriptores ecclesiastici de musica sacra potissimum (1784, 3 vols.; facsimile ed., Berlin, 1905; also reprinted in 'Bollettino bibliografico musicale,' Milan, 1931); the first and last are still among the most valued sources for the study of music history, the last being one of the two great collections of treatises by theorists of the Middle Ages (for the other see Coussemaker).—Cf. J. Bader, Fürstabt Martin Gerbert (Freiburg, 1875); Fr. Niecks, Martin Gerbert: Priest, Prince, Scholar and Musician, in the 'Mus. Times' (Nov.-Dec., 1882); A. Lamy, Martin Gerbert (Rheims, 1898); A. Brinzinger, Zu Martin Gerbert's ... 200jährigem Geburtsfest, in 'Neue Musik-Zeitung' (Sept. 2, 1920); G. Pfeilschifter, Die Korrespondenz des Fürstabtes Martin Gerbert von St. Blasien (vol. I, 1752-73; 1931); Eliz. Hegar, Die Anfänge der neueren Musikgeschichtsschreibung um 1770 bei Gerbert, Burney und Hawkins (Strasbourg, 1932).

Gerhard, Roberto; b. Valls, near Tarragona (Spain), Sept. 25, 1896. Though of Swiss parentage and nationality, he has been prominently associated with the Catalanian musical movement. He studied with Pedrell in Barcelona (1916-21) and Schoenberg in Vienna. He went to England as a result of the Spanish civil war in 1936, and settled in Cambridge. He edited vol. I of the complete works of A. Soler (q.v.) for the Institut d'Estudis Catalans, and translated into Spanish J. Wolf's History of Music (1934).—Works: opera, The Duenna, after Sheridan (Frankfurt Festival, June 27, 1951); ballet, Don Quixote (London, Feb. 20, 1950); ballet, Pandora (Cambridge, Jan. 26, 1944, Kurt Jooss choreographer); cantata L'alta naixença del Rei En Jaume (1931); 6 cançons populars catalanes, for soprano and orch. (Vienna, Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, June 16, 1932); Ariel, ballet suite (Barcelona Festival, April 19, 1936); Albada, Interludi i Dansa, for orch. (London Festival, June 24, 1938); Alegrias, ballet suite (London, BBC, April 4, 1944); violin concerto (Florence, Maggio Musicale, May, 1950); concerto for piano and strings (Aldeburg, June, 1951); symphony (Baden-Baden Festival, June 21, 1955); concerto for harpsichord, strings, and percussion (1956); quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn (1928); Capriccio for solo flute (1949); viola sonata (1950); string quartet (1955); Akond of Swat, for voice and percussion (London, Feb. 7, 1956); incidental music to Shakespeare's plays (Romeo and Juliet, Cymbeline, Taming of the Shrew, Midsummer Night's Dream, King Lear); film music; harmonizations of Catalan melodies, etc. Gerhard's early style of composition followed the Catalan traditions of his teacher Felipe Pedrell; after his study with Schoenberg, he gradually veered towards the 12-tone method; in his later works he extended the dodecaphonic principle into the domain of rhythms (12 different time units in a theme, corresponding to the intervallic distances of the notes in the tone-row from the central note). See the Sept. 1956 issue of 'The Score,' publ. on the occasion of Gerhard's 60th birthday, with articles by Donald Mitchell, Norman Del Mar, John Gardner, Roman Vlad, David Drew, Laurence Picken, and Roberto Gerhard himself.

Gerhardt (gär-hahrdt), Elena, celebrated lieder singer (mezzo-soprano); b. Leipzig, Nov. 11, 1883. After studying at the Leipzig Cons. (1899-1903) with Marie Hedmont, she made her Leipzig début in 1903 in recital, with Nikisch as her accompanist. She toured Europe as a lieder singer with great success; made her English début at Queen's Hall, London, in 1906, and her American début in New York, Jan. 9, 1912. In 1928, she sang Schubert's complete Winterreise cycle in N. Y. From 1929 she taught in Leipzig and London; in 1933 she settled in London as a teacher. She compiled 'My Favorite German Songs' (1915), edited a selection of Hugo Wolf's songs (1932), and wrote her autobiography, Recital (London, 1953; preface by Dame Myra Hess).

Gericke (gä'ri-kéh), Wilhelm, Austrian conductor; b. Schwanberg, Styria, April 18, 1845; d. Vienna, Oct. 27, 1925. He was a pupil of Dessoff in the Vienna Cons. 1862-5, and then became Kapellmeister of the theater at Linz; 1874, 2d Kapellmeister of the Vienna court opera (with Hans Richter); in 1880, succeeded Brahms as conductor of the 'Gesellschaftsconcerte,' and also conducted the Singverein. From 1884-9 he was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orch.; returning to Vienna, he resumed the direction of the 'Gesellschaftsconcerte' until 1895; from 1898-1906 he again conducted the Boston Symph. Orch., succeeding Emil Paur; after that he lived in retirement in Vienna. Gericke was a remarkably competent conductor and an efficient drill-master.—Cf. J. N. Burk, Wilhelm Gericke: a Centennial Retrospect in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1945).

Gerlach, Theodor, German conductor and composer; b. Dresden, June 25, 1861; d. Kiel, Dec. 11, 1940. A student of Fr. Wüllner, and also at Berlin Univ., Gerlach first attracted attention by an effective cantata, Luthers Lob der Musica. He went to Italy in 1884; in 1886, he became conductor of the German Opera in Posen. The success of his Epic Symphony resulted in his appointment as court conductor at Coburg in 1891. After several other posts as conductor, he settled in Karlsruhe as director of the 'Musikbildungsanstalt.' He wrote an opera Matteo Falcone, to his own libretto, which was produced with considerable success in Hanover (1898); of greater interest are his experiments with 'spoken opera' employing inflected speech; of these, Liebeswogen was produced in Bremen (1904) and Das Seegespens in Altenburg (1914); he applied the same principle, using the spoken word over an instrumental accompaniment in his Gesprochene Lieder. He also wrote a number of other vocal works, and military marches.

Gerle, Hans, German lutenist; b. Nuremberg, c. 1500; d. there, 1570. He was well known in his time both as performer on the lute and manufacturer of viols and lutes. His works in tablature are of considerable historic value. They include Musica Teusch auf die Instrument der grossen unnd kleinen Geygen, auch Lautten (Nuremberg, 1532; 2nd ed., 1537; 3rd ed., under the title Musica und Tabulatur, 1546); Tabulatur auff die Lautten (Nuremberg, 1533); Ein neues sehr künstlichs Lautenbuch (Nuremberg, 1552; with pieces by Francesco da Milano, Ant. Rotta, Joan da Crema, Rosseto, and Gintzler). Reprints of his works have been ed. by W. Tappert in Sang und Klang aus alter Zeit (1906) and by H. D. Bruger in Schule des Lautenspiels I, 2, and Alte Lautenkunst I.—Cf. W. Tappert, Die Lautenbücher des Hans Gerle in 'Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte' (1886).

German, Sir Edward (real name Edward German Jones), English composer; b. Whitchurch, Feb. 17, 1862; d. London, Nov. 11, 1936. He began serious music-study in Jan., 1880, under W. C. Hay at Shrewsbury; in Sept. he entered the Royal Academy of Music, studying organ (Steggall), violin (Weist-Hill and Burnett), theory (Banister), and composition and orchestration (Prout), graduating with a symphony; he was elected Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music in 1895. In 1888-9 he conducted the orch. at the Globe Theatre; here his incidental music to Richard Mansfield's production of King Richard III was so successful that Sir Henry Irving commissioned him to write the music to Henry VIII (1892). German was then enabled to give up teaching and to devote himself entirely to composition. He was knighted in 1928; awarded the gold medal of the Royal Philh. Society in 1934. His works include: 2 symphonies; Gypsy Suite (1892); Suite in D minor (1895); English fantasia, Commemoration (1897); symph. poem, Hamlet (1897); symph. suite, The Seasons (1899); Rhapsody on March-themes (1902); Funeral March in D minor for orch.; Welsh Rhapsody (1904); Coronation March and Hymn (1911); Theme and 6 variations (1919); The Willow Song (1922); Serenade, for voice, piano, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn; The Guitar; Bolero for violin and orch.; incidental music to Richard III (1889), Henry VIII (1892), As You Like It (1896), Much Ado About Nothing (1898), Nell Gwyn (1900), The Conqueror (1905).—Operas: The Emerald Isle (with Sullivan; 1901); Merrie England (1902); A Princess of Kensington (1903); Tom Jones (1907); Fallen Fairies (1909); the last libretto written by Sir W. S. Gilbert;—all at the Savoy Theatre; operetta The Rival Poets (1901);—many piano solos (incl. a suite) and duets; chamber music, organ pieces, etc.; Te Deum in F; Patriotic Hymn, Canada; Intercessory Hymn, Father Omnipotent; Three Albums of Lyrics (with Harold Boulton); The Just So Song Book (words by Rudyard Kipling); other songs; etc.—Cf. W. H. Scott, Sir Edward German (London, 1932).

Gernsheim, Friedrich, German composer and conductor; b. Worms, July 17, 1839; d. Berlin, Sept. 11, 1916. He studied piano with Rosenhain at Frankfurt, and as a young boy appeared in public there. He later studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Moscheles (piano) and Hauptmann (theory); then was in Paris (1855-61) for further studies. Returning to Germany, he became prof. at the Cologne Cons. (1865-74); then conducted choral concerts in Rotterdam (1874-80), subsequently taught at the Stern Cons. in Berlin (1890-97); also conducted various choral societies and continued to appear as a pianist. He was greatly appreciated as a composer in his lifetime. His works are marked by a characteristic Romantic quality, mostly as an epigone of Schumann; he was also influenced by Brahms, who was his friend. He wrote 4 symphonies, several overtures, a piano concerto, a violin concerto; 4 string quartets, 3 piano quartets, 2 piano trios, 1 string quintet, 3 violin sonatas, 2 cello sonatas, and numerous choral works, songs, and piano pieces, aggregating to 92 opus numbers.—Cf. K. Holl, Friedrich Gernsheim, Leben, Erscheinung und Werk (Leipzig, 1928).

Gérolde (zhā-rōhl'), Théodore, eminent Alsatian music scholar; b. Strasbourg, Oct. 26, 1866; d. Allenwiller, Feb. 16, 1956. He studied theology at the Univ. of Strasbourg, and musicology with Gustaf Jacobsthal. In 1890 he went to Frankfurt to study singing with Jules Stockhausen; then took courses at the Paris Cons. He received his Dr. phil. from the German Univ. of Strasbourg with a dissertation, Zur Geschichte der französischen Gesangkunst; was a lecturer on music at the Univ. of Basel from 1916 to 1918; returned to Strasbourg in 1919 to lecture on music at the new French Univ., from which in 1921 he received the degree of Dr. ès lettres, and in 1927, the degree of Dr. en théologie. He retired from the Univ. in 1937; occupied an ecclesiastical lecturing position in Allenwiller in 1951. Among his writings are Le Manuscrit de Bayeux, chansons du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle; Kleine Sängerbibel (Mainz, 1908); Chansons populaires des XV<sup>e</sup> et XVI<sup>e</sup> siècles (Strasbourg, 1913);

Les Psaumes de Clément Marot et leurs mélodies (Strasbourg, 1919); La musicologie médiévale (Paris, 1921); L'Art du chant en France au XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Strasbourg, 1921); Schubert (Paris, 1923); J. S. Bach (Paris, 1925); Les Pères de l'église et la musique (Paris, 1931); La musique au moyen âge (Paris, 1932); Histoire de la musique des origines à la fin du XIV<sup>e</sup> siècle (Paris, 1936). Gérold also made important contributions to Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie' and to the 'New Oxford History of Music.' He transcribed into modern notation (with critical notes) the melodies of the 14th-century 'drame provençal' Le Jeu de Ste. Agnès, ed. by A. Jeanroy (Paris, 1931).

Gerschefski, Edwin, American composer; b. Meriden, Conn., June 10, 1909. He studied composition at Yale Univ. with D. S. Smith and R. Donovan, graduating in 1931 (M.B.; Ph.D.). He was the first recipient of the C. Ditson Fellowship for study abroad; he went to London and entered the Matthay School as a piano pupil, winning the silver medal; he then took lessons with Schnabel in Italy; on his return to America he studied with Schillinger in New York. In 1940 he was appointed instructor in piano, theory, and composition at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C.; since 1947, dean of the Converse College School of Music. As composer, Gerschefski often adopts experimental techniques. He is the author of a book, Anyone Can Compose (in MS). Works: Classic Symphony; violin concerto; piano concerto in one movement; Toccata and Fugue, for orch.; cantata Half Moon Mountain, after a story in 'Time' magazine (Spartanburg, April 30, 1948); Discharge in E and Streamline for band; septet for brass instruments; piano quintet; Patterns for string quartet; Songs Without Words for trumpet and piano; Workout for saxophone and piano; sonatina for clarinet and piano; 100 variations for unaccompanied violin; numerous choral and piano pieces.

Gershkovich, Jacques, conductor; b. Irkutsk, Siberia, Jan. 4, 1884; d. Sandy, Oregon, Aug. 12, 1953. He studied at the St. Petersburg Cons. with Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazunov, and Nicolas Tcherepnin. He graduated with honors, and received a scholarship to study in Germany under Artur Nikisch. Upon his return to Russia, he became director of the Irkutsk Cons.; after the Revolution, he joined the orch. of Pavlova's ballet troupe as flutist, and traveled with it to the Orient. He settled in Tokyo, where he organized special concerts for young people; after the earthquake of 1923, he went to the U. S.; conducted guest engagements with the San Francisco Symph.; then settled in Portland, Oregon, where he founded the Portland Junior Symphony; he conducted it for 30 years until his death.

Gershwin, George, greatly talented American composer; b. Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1898; d. Beverly Hills, Calif., July 11, 1937. His real name was Jacob Gershin, according to birth registry; his father was an immigrant from Russia whose original name was Gershovitz. Gershwin's extraordinary career began when he was 16, playing the piano in music stores to demonstrate new popular songs. His studies were desultory; he took piano lessons with Ernest Hutcheson and Charles Hambitzer in N. Y.; he studied harmony with Edward Kilenyi and with Rubin Goldmark; later on, when he was already a famous composer of popular music, he continued to take private lessons; he studied counterpoint with Henry Cowell and with Wallingford Riegger; during the last years of his life, he applied himself with great earnestness to studying with Joseph Schillinger in an attempt to organize his technique in a scientific manner; some of Schillinger's methods he applied in Porgy and Bess and in the piano preludes. But it was his melodic talent and a genius for rhythmic invention, rather than any studies, that made him a genuinely important American composer. As far as worldly success was concerned, there was no period of struggle in Gershwin's life; one of his earliest songs, Swanee, written at the age of 19, became enormously popular (more than a million copies sold; 2,250,000 phonograph records). Possessing phenomenal energy, he produced musical comedies in close succession, using the fashionable jazz formulas in original and ingenious ways. A milestone of his career was Rhapsody in Blue, for piano and jazz orchestra, in which he applied the jazz idiom to an essentially classical form. He played the solo part at a special concert conducted by Paul Whiteman at Aeolian Hall, N. Y., on Feb. 12, 1924. The orchestration was by Ferde Grofé, a circumstance that generated rumors of Gershwin's inability to score for instruments; this, however, was quickly refuted by his production of several orchestral works, scored by himself in a brilliant fashion. He played the solo part of his piano concerto in F, with Walter Damrosch and the N. Y. Symph. Orch. (Dec. 3, 1925); this work had a certain vogue, but its popularity never equalled that of the Rhapsody in Blue. Reverting again to a more popular idiom, Gershwin wrote a symphonic work, An American in Paris (N. Y. Philh., Dec. 13, 1928, Damrosch conducting). His Rhapsody No. 2 was performed by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symph. on Jan. 29, 1932, but was unsuccessful; there followed a Cuban Overture (1934) and 3 Preludes for piano (1936). In the meantime, Gershwin became engaged in his most ambitious undertaking: the composition of Porgy and Bess, an American opera in a folk manner, for Negro singers, after the book by Dubose Heyward. It was first staged in Boston on Sept. 30, 1935, and shortly afterwards in N. Y. Its reception by the press was not uniformly favorable, but its songs rapidly attained great popularity (Summertime, I Got Plenty o' Nuttin', It Ain't Necessarily So, Bess, You Is My Woman Now); the opera has been successfully revived in N. Y. and elsewhere; it received international recognition when an American company of Negro singers toured South America and Europe in 1955, reaching a climax of success with several performances in Russia (Leningrad, Dec. 26, 1955, and also Moscow); it was the first American opera company to visit Russia. Gershwin's death (of a brain tumor) at the age of 38 was mourned as a great loss to American art; memorial concerts have been held at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y., on each anniversary of his death, with large attendance. His musical comedies include: numbers for George White's Scandals of 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, and 1924; Our Nell (1922); Sweet Little Devil (1923); Lady Be Good (1924); Primrose (1924); Tip Toes (1925); Song of the Flame (1925); 135th Street (one-act, 1923; produced in concert form Dec. 29, 1925, Paul Whiteman conducting); Oh Kay! (1926); Strike Up the Band (1927); Funny Face (1927); Rosalie (1928); Treasure Girl (1928); Show Girl (1929); Girl Crazy (1930); Of Thee I Sing (1931; a political satire which was the first musical to win a Pulitzer Prize); Pardon My English (1932); Let 'Em Eat Cake (1933); for motion pictures: Shall We Dance, Damsel in Distress, Goldwyn Follies (left unfinished at his death; completed by Vernon Duke). A collection of his songs and piano transcriptions, George Gershwin's Song Book, was publ.—Cf. S. N. Behrman, Troubadour, in 'The New Yorker' (May, 1929); I. Goldberg, George Gershwin, A Study in American Music (N. Y., 1931); C. Engel, George Gershwin's Song Book in Views and Reviews of the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1932); V. Gerstberger, Karl, German music scholar and composer; b. Neisse, Feb. 12, 1892; d. Bremen, Oct. 30, 1955. He studied in Cologne with Othegraven and in Munich with Courvoisier. In 1926 he gave a concert of his works in Berlin. In his music he endeavored to revive the spirit of Lutheran polyphony. He wrote choral works, lieder, a string quartet, 2 string trios, etc.; published a collection of essays, Zum Schicksal der Musik.

Gerster, Etelka, Hungarian dramatic soprano; b. Kaschau, June 25, 1855; d. Pon-techio, near Bologna, Aug. 20, 1920. One of the renowned singers of her century, a 'prima donna assoluta,' she studied with Mathilde Marchesi in Vienna, then made her debut in Venice as Gilda in Rigoletto, Jan. 8, 1876. Her great success resulted in engagements in Berlin and Budapest in Italian opera under the direction of Carlo Gardini. She married Gardini on April 16, 1877, and continued her successful career, making her London debut on June 23, 1877 as Amina in Sonnambula, and her U. S. debut in the same role on Nov. 18, 1878 at the N. Y. Academy of Music. She returned to London for three more seasons (1878-80), then sang again in N. Y. in 1880-83 and in 1887. After retiring, she taught singing in Berlin, and in N. Y. at the Institute of Musical Art (1907). She wrote Stimmführer (1906; 2nd. ed., 1908).

Gerster, Ottmar, German violist and composer; b. Braunfels, June 29, 1897. He studied in Frankfurt (1913-16); was in the Army during World War I; from 1927-39, teaching at the Folkwang-Schule in Essen; then again in the Army (1940); since 1946, prof. of composition at the Musik-Hochschule in Weimar; appointed director there (1948). He wrote the operas Liselotte (Essen, 1933), Enoch Arden (Düsseldorf, 1936; very successful), Die Hexe von Passau (Düsseldorf, 1941), and Das verzauberte Ich (1949); a Thuringian Symphony (1953), and a great deal of instrumental music.—Cf. O. Goldhammer, Professor Ottmar Gerster (Berlin, 1953).

Gerstman, Blanche, South African composer; b. Cape Town, April 2, 1910. She studied at the South African College of Music with W. H. Bell; in 1950 she went to London and took additional courses at the Royal Academy of Music. Upon her return to South Africa she played double bass in the municipal orch. of Cape Town. She has written mainly for chorus, and has set a number of South African poems to music.

Gertler, André, Hungarian violinist; b. Budapest, July 26, 1907. He studied with Hubay and Kodály; in 1928 settled in Belgium; in 1931 he formed the 'Quatuor Gertler' in Brussels; since 1940 prof. at the Brussels Cons. Has made numerous tours in Europe, specializing in modern music.

Gervaise (zhär-väs'), Claude, French composer of the 16th century. He was a viol-player, chamber musician to François I and Henri II. He composed many dances and chansons; 6 vols. of his Danceries à 4 et 5 parties were published by Attaignant from about 1545 to 1556, but only 3 vols. remain; a selection of his dances is included in vol. 23 (Danceries) of 'Les Maîtres Musiciens' ed. by H. Expert (1908). Several chansons by Gervaise appear in 16th-century collections.

Gerville-Réache (zhär-vël'-rā-ähsh), Jeanne, French dramatic contralto; b. Orthez, March 26, 1882; d. New York, Jan. 5, 1915. She spent her childhood in Guadeloupe, French West Indies, where her father, from whom she received almost her entire education, was governor. In 1898 she was sent to Paris to study singing with Laborde; 1899-1900, pupil of Mme. Viardot-García, and in 1901 of Jean Criticos; début as Orfeo at the Opéra-Comique in 1900; engaged there for the season; 1902, at Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels; 1903, again at Opéra-Comique; 1904-6, tour of France; 1907-10, member of Manhattan Opera Co., New York; 1911-12, of Chicago Opera Co.; 1913-14, of National Grand Opera Co. of Canada. In 1908 she married Dr. G. Gibier-Rambeaud, director of the Pasteur Institute in New York. She created the rôles of Catherine (Erlanger's Le Juif polonais, 1900) and Geneviève (Pelléas et Mélisande, 1902).

Gesensway, Louis, American violinist and composer; b. Dvinsk, Latvia, Feb. 19, 1906. The family moved to Canada when he was a child; he studied violin and gave numerous recitals in Toronto and other Canadian cities. In 1926 he joined the Philadelphia Orch. as a violinist. Among his works are a Suite for Strings and Percussion (1935); flute concerto (Philadelphia, Nov. 1, 1946); A Double Portrait (N. Y. Philharmonic, Nov. 1, 1952); The Four Squares of Philadelphia, orchestral sketch (Philadelphia, Feb. 25, 1955); quartet for clarinet and strings (1950); quartet for oboe, bassoon, violin, and viola (1951); sonata for solo bassoon, etc. Gesensway has developed a system of 'color harmony' by expanding and contracting the diatonic scale into new intervallic progressions.

Gesualdo, Don Carlo, Prince of Venosa, lutenist and composer; b. Naples, c. 1560; d. there, Sept. 8, 1613. Probably studied with Pomponio Nenna; 1590, his unfaithful wife and 1st cousin, Maria d'Avalos, and her lover were murdered at Gesualdo's orders; 1594, he was at the court of the Estensi in Ferrara, where he married his 2nd wife, Leonora d'Este, in that year; some time after the death of the Duke of Ferrara, in 1597, Don Carlo returned to Naples, where he remained till death. Living at the epoch when the 'new music' (the homophonic style) made its appearance, he was one of the most original musicians of the time. Like Rore, Banchieri, and Vincenzino, he was a so-called 'chromaticist'; his later madrigals reveal a distinctly individual style of expression and are characterized by strong contrasts, new (for their time) harmonic progressions, and a skilful use of dissonance; he was a master in producing tone-color through the use of different voice registers and in expressing the poetic contents of his texts.—Publ. 6 vols. of madrigals a 5 (Genoa, 1585, each part separately; an edition in score was publ. by G. Pavoni, Venice, 1613). Reprints of his works have been publ. by L. Torchì in 'L'Arte Musicale in Italia' IV, by A. Schering in Musikgeschichte in Beispielen (No. 167), by W. Weismann (a selection of 8 pieces; Peters Ed., 1931), etc. A group of 5-part madrigals, transcribed into modern notation by I. Pizzetti, is contained in Nos. 59-62 of the 'Raccolta nazionale delle musiche italiane' (Milan, 1919). The publ. of a complete ed. of his works was begun by the Istituto Italiano per la Storia della Musica (Rome); only one vol. (2 books of madrigals) appeared (1942).—Cf. Ferd.

Gevaert (gě-vahrt'), François Auguste, eminent Belgian composer and musicologist; b. Huyse, near Audenarde, July 31, 1828; d. Brussels, Dec. 24, 1908. He was a pupil of Sommère (piano) and Mengal (composition) at Ghent Cons. (1841-7), taking the Grand Prix de Rome for composition; from 1843 he was also organist at the Jesuit church. He produced 2 operas in 1848, with some success; lived in Paris for a year (1849-50), and was commissioned to write an opera for the Théâtre-Lyrique; then a year in Spain, his Fantasia sobre motivos españoles winning him the order of Isabella la Católica; he also wrote a Rapport sur la situation de la musique en Espagne (Brussels, 1851). After a short visit to Italy and Germany, he returned to Ghent in 1852, and up to 1861 brought out 9 operas in quick succession. In 1857 his festival cantata De nationale verjaerdag won him the order of Léopold. In 1867 he was appointed chorus master at the Opéra, Paris; in 1870, the German investment caused him to return home, and from 1871 he was director of the Brussels Cons., succeeding Fétis. In this position he gave evidence of remarkable talent for organization. As conductor of the 'Concerts du Cons.' he exerted a far-reaching influence through his historical concerts, producing the works of all nations and periods. In 1873 he was elected member of the Academy, succeeding Mercadante; in 1907 he was created a baron.—Works: 12 operas; 3 cantatas; a Missa pro defunctis and Super flumina Babylonis (both for male chorus and orch.); overture Flandre au lion; ballads (Philipp van Artevelde, etc.); songs (many in the collection 'Nederlandsche Zangstukken').—Even more important than Gevaert's compositions are his scholarly books: Leerboek van den Gregoriaenschen Zang (1856); Traité d'Instrumentation (1863; revised and enlarged as Nouveau traité de l'Instrum., 1885; German translation by Riemann, 1887; Spanish by Neuparth, 1896; Russian by Rebikov, 1899); Histoire et Théorie de la musique de l'antiquité (2 vols., 1875, 1881); Les Origines du chant liturgique de l'église latine (1890; German translation by Riemann; threw new [for that time] light on the Gregorian tradition); Cours méthodique d'Orchestration (2 vols., 1890; complement of Nouveau traité); La Mélodie antique dans l'église latine (1895; a monumental work); Les Problèmes musicaux d'Aristote (3 vols., 1899-1902; adopts the theories of Westphal, certain of which were later proved untenable); Traité d'Harmonie théorique et pratique (2 vols., 1905, 1907). Edited 'Les gloires de l'Italie' (a collection of vocal numbers from operas, oratorios, cantatas, etc., of the 17th and 18th centuries); 'Recueil de chansons du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle' (transcribed in modern notation); 'Vademecum de l'organiste' (classic transcriptions).—Cf. F. Dufour, Le Baron François Auguste Gevaert (Brussels, 1909); E. Closson, Gevaert (Brussels, 1928).

Ghedini, Giorgio Federico, Italian composer; b. Cuneo, July 11, 1892. He studied piano and organ with Evasio Lovazzano in Turin, cello with S. Grossi, and composition with G. Cravero; then at the Liceo Musicale in Bologna with M. E. Bossi, graduating in 1911. In 1918 he became instructor at the Liceo Musicale in Turin; from 1938-41, taught composition at the Cons. of Parma; in 1941, held a similar post at the Cons. of Milan; in 1951, was appointed its director.—Works: operas: Maria d'Alessandria (Bergamo, Sept. 9, 1937); Re Hassan (Venice, Jan. 26, 1939); La Pulce d'oro (Genoa, Feb. 15, 1940); Le Baccanti (Milan, Feb. 22, 1948); Billy Budd (Venice, Sept. 7, 1949); L'Ippocrita felice, after Max Beerbohm's The Happy Hypocrite (Milan, March 10, 1956); for orch.: Marinaresca e Baccanale (Rome, Feb. 2, 1936); Architecture (Rome, Jan. 19, 1941); Concerto dell'Albatro, after Melville's Moby Dick, for narrator and small orch. (Rome, Dec. 11, 1945); piano concerto (1946); Musica notturna (1947); concerto for 2 pianos and chamber orch. (1947); concerto for violin and string orch., subtitled Il Belprato (1947); concerto for flute, violin, and chamber orch., subtitled L'Alderina (1951); concerto for 2 cellos and orch., subtitled L'Olmeneta (1951); Concentus Basilienensis for violin and orch. (1954); piano quartet; violin sonata; several sacred choral works; songs; several transcriptions for modern performance of works by Monteverdi, Andrea Gabrieli, Giovanni Gabrieli, etc.

Gheyn (gān), Matthias van den, Flemish organist and composer; b. Tirlemont, Brabant, April 7, 1721; d. Louvain, June 22, 1785. From 1741, organist at St. Peter's, Louvain, and, from 1745, town 'carillonneur'; he was celebrated in both capacities.—Publications: Fondements de la basse continue (lessons and sonatinas for organ and violin); 6 Divertissements pour clavecin (c. 1760); also pieces for organ and for carillon.—Cf. S. van Elewyck, Matthias van den Gheyn (Louvain, 1862).

Ghione (gē-ōh'-nā), Franco, Italian conductor; b. Acqui, Aug. 26, 1889. He studied violin with his father, organized a band which he later conducted. After study at the Parma Cons., he became assistant conductor to Toscanini at La Scala (1922-23). After guest appearances in Europe, he made his American début with the Detroit Civic Opera Co. (1937); from 1937 to 1940 he was associate conductor of the Detroit Symph. Orch. He is the composer of several orchestral works.

Ghis, Henri, French pianist and composer; b. Toulon, May 17, 1839; d. Paris, April 24, 1908. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Marmontel (piano); received 1st prize in 1854; also organ with Benoist (graduated in 1855). He became a fashionable piano teacher in Paris; many aristocratic ladies (to whom he dedicated his pieces) were his pupils. He was also the first teacher of Ravel. He publ. salon music for piano: waltzes, mazurkas, polonaises, polkas, gavottes, caprices, etc., often with superinduced titles, as Séduction, Menuet de la petite princesse, La Marquise, etc.; but his name is mostly known through his extremely popular arrangement of an old aria, which he publ. for piano as Air Louis XIII (1868); the actual melody was definitely not by Louis XIII; its authorship is unknown; in all probability it is an old French folksong.

Ghisi, Federico, Italian musicologist; b. Shanghai, China (of Italian parents), Feb. 25, 1901. His father was a member of the diplomatic corps in China; the family returned to Italy in 1908, and settled in Milan. Ghisi studied music with Ghedini; graduated from the Turin Liceo Musicale; in 1932, settled in Florence; in 1937, became instructor at the Univ. of Florence; gave lectures on Italian music in France, England, and the U. S.—Publications: I Canti Carnascialeschi (Florence, 1937); Le Feste musicali della Firenze Medicea (Florence, 1939); Alle Fonti della Monodia (Milan, 1940); contributed to various musical journals. See his autobiographical entry in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Ghislanzoni, Antonio, Italian writer and dramatic poet; b. Lecco, Nov. 25, 1824; d. Caprino-Bergamasco, July 16, 1893. Intended for the church, his fine baritone voice led him to adopt the career of a stage singer (Lodi, 1846), which he speedily abandoned, however, for literary work. He became the manager of 'Italia Musicale,' and was for years the editor of the Milan 'Gazzetta Musicale,' to which he remained a faithful contributor till death. He wrote over 60 opera libretti, that of Aida being the most famous; publ. Reminiscenze artistiche (which contains an episode entitled La casa di Verdi a Sant' Agata, etc.).—Cf. T. Mantovani, Librettisti Verdiani, VI: Antonio Ghislanzoni, in 'Musica d'oggi' (March-April, 1929).

Ghys (gēs), Joseph, Belgian violinist; b. Ghent, 1801; d. St. Petersburg, Aug. 22, 1848. A pupil of Lafont at Brussels Cons., he later taught in Amiens and Nantes, and, beginning in 1832, made concert tours in France, Belgium, Germany, Austria, and northern Europe. He wrote Le Mouvement perpétuel for violin with string quartet, a violin concerto, and other music for the violin.

Giacche, Giacchetto. See Berchem and Buus.

Giacomelli (jah-cōh-mēl'-lē), Geminiano, Italian composer; b. Piacenza, c. 1692; d. Parma, Jan. 24, 1740. He studied with Capelli at Parma, and wrote his first opera, Ipermestra, in 1724. It was the first of 19 operas which he wrote for Venice, Parma, Naples, and other Italian towns; the most popular was Cesare in Egitto (Milan, 1735). He was maestro di cappella for the church of San Giovanni in Piacenza from 1727 to 1732; he held a similar post at Santa Casa in Loreto from 1738. His many church compositions include an oratorio, La conversione di Santa Margherita, and a setting of Psalm VIII for two tenors and bass.—Cf. G. Tebaldini, L'Archivio musicale della Cappella Lauretana (Loreto, 1929); C. Anguissola, Geminiano Giacomelli e Sebastiano Nasolini, musicisti piacentini (Piacenza, 1935).

Gialdini (jähl-dē'nē), Gialdino, Italian conductor and composer; b. Pescia, Nov. 10, 1843; d. there, March 6, 1919. He was a pupil of T. Mabellini at Florence. His first opera, Rosamunda (prize opera in a competition instituted by the Pergola Theater, Florence), given in 1868 was unsuccessful; after producing 2 'opere buffe,' La Secchia rapita (Florence, 1872) and L'Idolo cinese (1874), in collaboration with other musicians, he gave up opera writing, and devoted himself with success to conducting. Later he again turned to dramatic composition, producing the operas I due soci (Bologna, Feb. 24, 1892), La Pupilla (Trieste, Oct. 23, 1896), La Bufera (Pola, Nov. 26, 1910); these operas were successful. He also publ. 'Eco della Lombardia,' a collection of 50 folk songs.

Gianettini (jäh-něht-tě'-nē) (or Zanettini), Antonio, Italian composer; b. 1648; d. Munich, July 12, 1721. He was organist at San Marco, Venice (1676-86); produced 3 operas in Venice, winning a reputation that led to his appointment as maestro di cappella at the court of Modena; was organist at Modena from 1686 till 1721, except during 1695, when he brought out 3 operas in Hamburg. He moved to Munich with his family in May, 1721. He composed 6 operas; 6 oratorios; several cantatas; a Kyrie a 5; and Psalms a 4, with instruments (Venice, 1717).— Cf. E. J. Luin, Antonio Gianettini e la musica a Modena alla fine del secolo 17 (Modena, 1931).

Gianneo, Luis, Argentinian composer; b. Buenos Aires, Jan. 9, 1897. He studied with Gaito and Drangosch; composed Turay-Turay, symph. poem (Buenos Aires, Sept. 21, 1929); Overture for a Children's Comedy (NBC Symph. Orch., Dec. 2, 1941); sinfonietta (Buenos Aires, Sept. 20, 1943); violin concerto (Buenos Aires, April 13, 1944); piano pieces and teaching material.

Giannetti, Giovanni, Italian composer; b. Naples, March 25, 1869; d. Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 10, 1934. He studied in Naples, Trieste, and Vienna; 1912-13, director of the Liceo Musicale, Siena; 1915, in Rome, where (from 1920) he was musical director of the Teatro dei Piccoli with which he toured Europe and South America.— Operas: L'Erebo (Naples, April 9, 1891), Padron Maurizio (Naples, Sept. 26, 1896), Milena (Naples, Nov. 15, 1897), Il Violinaro di Cremona (Milan, Nov. 23, 1898), Don Marzio (Venice, March 2, 1903), Il Cristo alla festa di Purim (Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 16, 1904), Il Nazareno (Buenos Aires, Jan. 20, 1911), La Serenata di Pierrot, pantomime (Rome, April 18, 1917), Cuore e bauta (Rome, June 5, 1918), and Il Principe Re, operetta (Rome, July 7, 1920).

Giannini, Dusolina, American soprano; b. Philadelphia, Dec. 19, 1902. She came of a musical family: her mother was a violinist; her father, Ferruccio Giannini (1869-1948), was a tenor who sang in Italy and made one of the earliest phonograph recordings (1896). She studied with Marcella Sembrich, made her concert début at Carnegie Hall in 1925. Her operatic début in Hamburg in 1927 was followed by appearances in London (1930-31), Berlin, Vienna, Oslo, and other European cities; she also sang at the Salzburg Festival (1934-36). She made her début with the Metropolitan Opera on Feb. 12, 1936 in the role of Aida. She continued to sing with the Metropolitan; created the part of Hester in The Scarlet Letter, by her brother, Vittorio Giannini, at Hamburg, June 2, 1938.

Giannini, Vittorio, American composer (brother of Dusolina Giannini); b. Philadelphia, Oct. 19, 1903. He won a scholarship at the Milan Cons. and studied there four years; returning to the U. S., he studied privately with Martini and Trucco in N.Y.; in 1925, entered the Juilliard Graduate School, where he was a pupil of Rubin Goldmark and Hans Letz. He graduated in 1931, and the next year won the Grand Prix de Rome of the American Academy and studied there for four years. He was appointed teacher of composition and orchestration at the Juilliard and Manhattan Schools of Music in 1939.— Works: operas: Lucedia (Munich, Oct. 20, 1934); Flora (1937); The Scarlet Letter, based on Hawthorne's novel (Hamburg, June 2, 1938); operas for radio: Beauty and the Beast (1938); Blennerhasset (1939); The Taming of the Shrew (in concert form, Cincinnati Symph. Orch., Jan. 31, 1953; in color telecast, NBC opera theater, March 13, 1954); for orch.: Prelude and Fugue for string orch. (1926); Suite, in 4 movements (1931); symph. (NBC orch., Jan. 19, 1936, composer conducting); piano concerto (N. Y., 1937); Triptych (1937); organ concerto (Vienna, 1937); symph. commissioned for N. Y. World's Fair (1939); concerto for 2 pianos (N. Y., 1940); vocal works: Stabat Mater (1920); Madrigal for vocal quartet (1930); cantata, Primavera (1933); Requiem (1937); cantata, Lament for Adonis (1940); Canticle of the Martyrs (commissioned for the 500th anniversary of the Moravian Church, 1957; Moravian Festival at Winston-Salem, N. C., June, 1957); piano quintet (1931); Concerto grosso for strings (1931); woodwind quintet (1933); piano trio (1933); 2 violin sonatas (1926, 1945); piano sonata; many songs.

Giarda (jahr'-dah), Luigi Stefano, Italian cellist and composer; b. Cassolnuovo, Pavia, March 19, 1868; d. Viña del Mar, Chile, Jan. 3, 1953. He was a pupil at the Milan Cons.; teacher at the Padua music school (1893-7); instructor at the Royal Cons. in Naples (1897-1910); then went to Santiago, Chile, where he was vice-director of the Cons. of Santiago; also taught theory there.—Works: The operas Reietto (Naples, 1898) and Giorgio Byron (Santiago, Chile, 1910); symph. poems, Loreley; La vida; Triptico (Civilization, War, Peace) for 3 voices and orch.; concert pieces for cello and orch.; a string quartet; Adagio for 4 celli; 2 cello sonatas; Prelude and Scherzo for violin and cello; Suite for piano and violin; studies in the thumb position for cello; etc. He was also the author of a Trattato di armonia (1920).

Giardini (jahr-dē-nē), Felice de', Italian violinist and composer; b. Turin, April 12, 1716, d. Moscow, June 8, 1796. He was a chorister at the cathedral of Milan; studied singing with Paladini and violin with Somis. As a young man, he played in various theater orchestras in Rome and Naples, and often improvised cadenzas at the end of operatic numbers. He acquired popularity in Italy, and made a tour in Germany (1748); then went to London (1750) where he made a series of successful appearances as a concert violinist. In 1752 he joined the Italian opera in London as concertmaster and conductor; he became its impresario in 1756, and was connected with the management, with interruptions, for several more seasons, returning to the career of virtuoso and teacher in 1766. He conducted the Three Choirs festival (1770-76), and was concertmaster at the Pantheon Concerts (1774-80), also conducted other theater orchestras. From 1784-89, he was in Italy, but returned to London in 1789 and led three seasons of Italian opera, without financial success. In 1796 he was engaged as violinist in Russia, and gave his initial concert in Moscow on March 24, 1796, but soon became ill, and died shortly afterwards. As a violinist he was eclipsed in London by Salomon and Cramer, but he left his mark on musical society there. He also wrote music for various pasticcios; among operas entirely by him were: Rosmira (April 30, 1757), Siroe (Dec. 13, 1763), Enea e Lavinia (May 5, 1764), and Il re pastore (March 7, 1765). He also wrote several overtures, concertos, string quartets, and violin sonatas.—Cf. R. A. Mooser, Annales de la Musique et des Musiciens en Russie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Lausanne, 1951; vol. 2, p. 657f.).

Giazotto, Remo, Italian musicologist; b. Rome, Sept. 4, 1910. He studied piano at the Milan Cons. and later took a course in literature at the Univ. of Genoa; undertook a detailed study of the musical history of Genoa, and publ. a work of fundamental value, La musica a Genova nella vita pubblica e privata dal XIII al XVIII secolo (1952). He is also the author of a definitive biography of Tomaso Albinoni (Milan, 1945), containing newly discovered materials as well as a thematic catalogue. He further publ. a monograph, Ferruccio Busoni, la vita nell'opera (Milan, 1948).

Gibbons, Christopher, English organist and composer; b. London (baptized Aug. 22), 1615; d. there, Oct. 20, 1676. He was the son of Orlando Gibbons; pupil at the Chapel Royal; in 1638, he became organist at Winchester Cathedral; in 1660, he was appointed organist of the Chapel Royal, private organist to Charles II, and organist at Westminster Abbey. He received the degree of Mus. D. from Oxford in 1663, at the special request of the king. He wrote anthems and many string fantasies, now in MS in the British Museum, Christ Church, Oxford, the Royal College of Music, Marsh's Library, Dublin, and Durham and Ely Cathedrals; some of his motets are in Playford's 'Cantica sacra' (1674). He also collaborated with Matthew Locke in the music for Shirley's masque, Cupid and Death.

Gibbons, Edward, English musician; b. Cambridge, 1568; d. probably Exeter, c. 1650. The eldest living son of William Gibbons, who founded this musical family, he was the brother of Ellis and Orlando. He received a B. Mus. degree from both Oxford and Cambridge; after serving as a lay clerk at King's College, Cambridge, he became master of choristers in 1593, and kept the post until 1598, when he went to Exeter Cathedral, where he served for many years, with the titles of "priest-vicar" and succentor, though he remained a layman. Little of his music is in existence; a few of his compositions, all for the church, are in the British Museum, at Christ Church, Oxford, and in the Bodleian Library.

Gibbons, Ellis, English composer and organist, brother of Edward and Orlando Gibbons; b. Cambridge, 1573; d. May, 1603. The only compositions of his which are known to exist are two madrigals included by Morley in his collection 'The Triumphes of Oriana' (Long live fair Oriana and Round about her charret).

Gibbons, Orlando, celebrated English composer and organist, brother of Edward and Ellis Gibbons; b. Oxford (baptized Dec. 25), 1583; d. Canterbury, June 5, 1625. He was taken to Cambridge as a small child; in 1596, he became chorister at King's College there; matriculated in 1598; composed music for various occasions for King's College (1602-3). On March 21, 1605, he was appointed organist of the Chapel Royal, retaining this position until his death. He received the degree of B. Mus. from Cambridge Univ. in 1606. In 1619 he became chamber musician to the King; in 1623, organist at Westminster Abbey. He conducted the music for the funeral of James I (1625); died of apoplexy 2 months later. His fame as a composer rests chiefly on his church music; he employed the novel technique of the 'verse anthem' (a work for chorus and solo voices, the solo passages having independent instrumental accompaniment, either for organ or strings); other works followed the traditional polyphonic style, of which Gibbons became a master. He was also one of the greatest English organists of the time. His works comprise: Fantasies of 3 Parts . . . composed for viols (1610; described on the title-page as 'Cut in copper, the like not heretofore extant in England'; ed. by E. F. Rimbault and reprinted 1843; new ed. by E. H. Fellowes, 1924); pieces for the virginal, in 'Parthenia' (1611, 21 pieces of Gibbons, Byrd, and John Bull; reprinted, 1834, by Musical Antiquarian Society; new ed. by Margaret H. Glyn, 1927); The First Set of Madrigals and Mottets of 5 Parts (London, 1612; reprinted, 1841, by Musical Antiquarian Society; new ed. by E. H. Fellowes in vol. V of 'The English Madrigal School,' 1921); 9 Fancies, appended to 20 konincklijke Fantasien op 3 Violen by Th. Lupo, Coperario, and Wm. Daman (Amsterdam, 1648; reprinted by Rimbault, 1847); 2 anthems in Leighton's Teares or Lamentacions of a Sorrowfull Soule (the only sacred works by Gibbons publ. during his lifetime).—A 'complete' ed. of all extant sacred comps. is contained in vol. IV of 'Tudor Church Music' (Oxford, 1925); Gibbons' entire keyboard works were ed. by Margaret H. Glyn in 5 vols. (London, 1925). Further new eds. follow: The madrigal God give you good morrow (from 'The Cryes of London,' an early 17th cent. MS [in the Brit. Museum] containing 2 other sets of street-cries likewise polyphonically treated by T. Weelkes and R. Deering), ed. by Sir Fred. Bridge (London, 1920); 2 Fantazias for string quartet or small string orch. and a Pavan and Galliard for string sextet or small string orch., ed. by E. H. Fellowes (London, 1925); 10 pieces from the virginal book of B. Cosyn, arranged for modern organ by J. A. Fuller Maitland (London, 1925).—Cf. E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (1921); Margaret H. Glyn, About Elizabethan Virginal Music and Its Composers (1924); E. H. Fellowes, Orlando Gibbons, a Short Account of His Life and Work (1925); and Orlando Gibbons and His Family (1951).

Gibbs, Cecil Armstrong, English composer; b. Great Baddow near Chelmsford, Aug. 10, 1889. He studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, and at the Royal College of Music in London; later became an instructor there; in 1934 he received the Cobbett Gold Medal for his services to British chamber music. Among his works are the operas The Blue Peter (1924), Twelfth Night (1947), and The Great Bell of Burley (children's opera, 1949); 3 symphonies; Spring Garland for strings; oboe concerto; Peacock Pie, suite for piano and strings; rhapsody for violin and orch.; Essex Suite for strings; several string quartets; a lyric sonata for violin and piano; a piano trio; cantatas: La Belle Dame sans Merci, The Lady of Shalott, Deborah and Barak, Before Daybreak, Odyssey; also a Pastoral Suite for baritone, chorus, and orch. (1951). Gibbs has written more than 100 songs, many of them to poems of Walter de la Mare. His musical style adheres to the Romantic school; the influence of folk melodies and rhythms is also noticeable. See the entry on Gibbs in Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music.

Gibson, Archer, American organist; b. Baltimore, Dec. 5, 1875; d. Lake Mahopac, N. Y., July 15, 1952. He studied with his father, later with W. G. Owst (composition) and Harold Randolph (organ and piano); held various positions as church organist; wrote the cantatas Emancipation and A Song to Music; an opera, Yzdra; organ pieces; choral and orchestral arrangements.

Gideon, Miriam, American composer; b. Greeley, Col., Oct. 23, 1906. She studied in Boston with Felix Fox (piano); later in New York with Lazare Saminsky and Roger Sessions (composition); musicology at Columbia Univ. She subsequently taught music at Brooklyn College.—Works: Three-cornered Pieces, for flute, clarinet, and piano (1936); Incantation on an Indian Theme, for viola and piano (1940); Epigrams, for chamber orch. (1941); Lyric Pieces, for string orch. (1942); sonata for flute and piano (1943); The Hound of Heaven, for baritone, oboe, and string trio (1945); string quartet (1946); Allegro for woodwinds (1948); piano sonata; other piano pieces; songs.

Gieburowski, Wacław, eminent Polish musicologist; b. Bydgoszcz, Feb. 6, 1876; d. Warsaw, Sept. 17, 1943. He was a student of theology in Regensburg, where he also took courses in church music with Haberl; then in Berlin with Wolf and Kretzschmar and in Breslau with Otto Kinkeldey; obtained a doctorate with his dissertation Die Musica Magistri Szydlowitae, ein polnischer Choraltraktat des 15. Jahrhunderts (1913; publ. Poznań, 1915). He settled in Poznań as prof. of church music at the Univ.; in 1916 was appointed choir conductor at the Poznań cathedral; wrote church music. In 1928 he began the publication of the valuable series 'Cantica Selecta Musices Sacrae in Polonia'; restored to use many sacred works by Polish composers of the Renaissance; published several treatises on this subject; also composed several sacred choral works.

Giegling, Franz, musicologist; b. Buchs, near Aarau, Feb. 27, 1921. He studied piano and theory at the Zürich Cons. with Cherbuliez; received his Ph.D. with the valuable dissertation, Giuseppe Torelli, ein Beitrag zur Entwicklungsgeschichte des italienischen Konzerts (1949); was music critic of the 'Neue Zürcher Zeitung' (1949-55); contributed articles to 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Gieseking, Walter, distinguished pianist; b. Lyons, France, of German parents, Nov. 5, 1895; d. London, Oct. 26, 1956. He studied with Karl Leimer at the Hanover Cons., graduating in 1916; then served in the German army during World War I; began his concert career with extensive tours of Europe; made his American début at Aeolian Hall, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1926, and after that appeared regularly in the U. S. and Europe with orchestras and in solo recitals. He became one of the most brilliant and musicianly pianists of his generation, capable of profound and intimate interpretations of both classical and modern piano music. His dual German-French background enabled him to project with the utmost authenticity the piano masterpieces of both cultures. His playing of Debussy was remarkable; he was also an excellent performer of works by Prokofiev and other modernists. He composed some chamber music and made piano transcriptions of songs by Richard Strauss. He became the center of a political controversy when he arrived in the U. S. early in 1949 for a concert tour; he was accused of cultural collaboration with Nazi régime, and public protests forced the cancellation of his scheduled performances at Carnegie Hall. However, he was later cleared by an Allied court in Germany, and was able to resume his career in America. He appeared again at a Carnegie Hall recital on April 22, 1953, and until his death continued to give numerous performances in both hemispheres. —Cf. B. Gavoty, Gieseking, in the series 'Les grands interprètes' (Geneva, 1955).

Gigli (jě'l-yě), Beniamino, famous Italian tenor; b. Recanati, March 20, 1890. He studied with Rosati in Rome; made his operatic début in Rovigno, near Venice, in 1914, as Enzo in La Gioconda; then sang in many Italian cities. His first American appearance was as Faust in Boito's Mefistofele with the Metropolitan Opera (Nov. 17, 1920); he remained on its staff until 1932, and returned there for one season in 1938. He then went back to Italy, where he remained during World War II. He revisited the U. S. in 1955 and gave a series of concerts with considerable success despite his age. At the height of his career, he ranked among the best tenors in opera; he was particularly impressive in the lyric roles of Verdi's and Puccini's operas; he also sang in the German and French repertory; his interpretation of Lohengrin was acclaimed. His voice possessed great strength and a variety of expressive powers. See R. Rosner, Beniamino Gigli (Vienna, 1929); R. de Rensis, Il cantatore del popolo: Beniamino Gigli (Rome, 1933; in German, Munich, 1936); D. Silvestrini, Beniamino Gigli (Bologna, 1937). Gigli's memoirs were publ. in English at London (1957).

Gigout (zhě-goo'), Eugène, French organ-virtuoso and composer; b. Nancy, March 23, 1844; d. Paris, Dec. 9, 1925. He began music studies in the maîtrise of Nancy Cathedral; at 13 he entered the Niedermeyer School at Paris, in which he subsequently taught from 1863-85, and from 1900-5; for a time, pupil of Saint-Saëns. From 1863, Gigout was organist at the church of St.-Augustin; he won fame as a concert organist in France, England, Germany, Switzerland, Spain, and Italy; he was especially famous for his masterly improvisations. In 1885 he founded at Paris an organ school subsidized by the government, from which many excellent pupils graduated (Boëllmann, Fauré, Messager, A. Georges, A. Roussel, C. Terrasse, etc.); from 1911, prof. of organ and improvisation at the National Cons., Paris. He was also an esteemed writer on music and critic; Commander of the Order of Isabella la Católica; Officer of Public Instruction (from 1885); and Chevalier of the Legion of Honor (from 1895). As a composer he followed the severe style.—Works: For organ: Cent pièces brèves (Gregorian), Album Grégorien (3 vols., each containing 100 pieces exclusively in the church modes), Rhapsodie sur des Noëls, Toccata, Scherzo, Prélude et Fugue in Bb, Marche de Fête, Rhapsodie sur des Airs Catalans, Rhapsodie sur des Airs Canadiens, Poèmes Mystiques, piano sonata in F; other pieces for piano (2 and 4 hands); sacred choruses, songs.—Cf. Hommage à Eugène Gigout (Paris, 1923; contains a biographical sketch by Gabriel Fauré and catalogue of works).

Gilardi, Gilardo, Argentine opera composer; b. San Fernando, May 25, 1889. He studied with Pablo Berutti, then devoted himself to teaching and composing. Two of his operas were produced at the Teatro Colón in Buenos Aires: Ilse (July 13, 1923); La Leyenda de Urutau (Oct. 25, 1934). He also wrote Sonata Popular Argentina for violin and piano (1939) and many dances and songs based on native melodies.

Gilbert, Henry Franklin Belknap, remarkable American composer; b. Somerville, Mass., Sept. 26, 1868; d. Cambridge, Mass., May 19, 1928. He studied at the New England Cons. and with E. Mollenhauer; 1889-92, pupil of MacDowell (composition) in Boston. Rather than do routine music work to earn his livelihood (he had previously been violinist in theaters, etc.), he took jobs of many descriptions, becoming, in turn, a real-estate agent, a factory foreman, a collector of butterflies in Florida, etc., and composed when opportunity afforded. In 1893, at the Chicago World's Fair, he met a Russian prince who knew Rimsky-Korsakov and gave him many details of contemporary Russian composers whose work, as well as that of Bohemian and Scandinavian composers which was based on folksong, influenced Gilbert greatly in his later composition. In 1895 he made his 1st trip abroad and stayed in Paris, subsequently returning to the U. S.; when he heard of the première of Charpentier's Louise he became intensely interested in the work because of its 'popular' character, and, in order to hear it, earned his passage to Paris, in 1901, by working on a cattle-boat; the opera impressed him so that he decided to devote his entire time thereafter to composition; 1902, associated with Arthur Farwell, whose Wa-Wan Press publ. Gilbert's early compositions. During this time (from 1903) he employed Negro tunes and rhythms extensively in his works. The compositions of his mature period (from 1915) reveal an original style, not founded on any particular native American material, but infused with elements from many sources, and are an attempt at 'un-European' music, expressing the spirit of America and its national characteristics.

— Works: opera, The Fantasy in Delft (1915). For orch.: Two Episodes (Boston, Jan. 13, 1896); Humoresque on Negro Minstrel Tunes (originally entitled Americanesque, 1903; Boston Pops, May 24, 1911); Comedy Overture on Negro Themes (1905; perf. at a N. Y. municipal concert, Aug. 17, 1910; Boston Symph., April 13, 1911; also perf. by Glière, in Feodosia, Crimea, July 22, 1914, and in Odessa, Aug. 1, 1914); symph. poem, The Dance in Place Congo (1906; perf. as ballet at the Metropolitan Opera, N. Y., March 23, 1918); Strife (1910); Negro Rhapsody (Norfolk, Conn., Festival, June 5, 1913, composer conducting); symph. prologue for Sygne's Riders to the Sea (1904; MacDowell Festival, Peterboro, N. H., Aug. 20, 1914; rev. version, N. Y. Philharmonic, Nov. 11, 1917); American Dances (1915); Indian Sketches (Boston Symph., March 4, 1921); suite from Music to Pilgrim Tercentenary Pageant (Boston Symph., March 31, 1922); Symphonic Piece (Boston Symph., Feb. 26, 1926); Nocturne, a 'symphonic mood' after Walt Whitman (Philadelphia, March 16, 1928); Suite for Chamber Orchestra (commissioned by the E. S. Coolidge Foundation; first perf., Chamber Orch. of Boston, Slonimsky conducting, April 28, 1928); To Thee, America, a hymn for chorus and orch. (MacDowell Festival, Peterboro, N. H., Jan. 25, 1915); Salammbo's Invocation to Tānith, aria for soprano and orch. (N. Y., Elise Stevens, with the Russian Symph. Orch., March 10, 1906); an early string quartet. For piano: Negro Episode, Mazurka, Scherzo, Two Verlaine Moods, The Island of the Fay (also for orch.), Indian Scenes, A Rag Bag, Negro Dances. Songs: Pirate Song, after Stevenson; Celtic Studies, a cycle of 4 songs to poems by Irish poets; The Lament of Deirdre; Faery Song; Two South American Gypsy Songs; Fish Wharf Rhapsody; Give me the Splendid Sun; The Owl; Orlamonde; Zephyrus; Homesick; Tell Me Where is Fancy Bred?; Croon of the Dew; Eight Simple Songs; Perdita; The Curl; School Songs; also edited 100 Folksongs (Boston, 1910); contributed articles to the 'Mus. Quarterly' (The American Composer, April, 1915; The Survival of Music, July, 1916; Originality, Jan., 1919), and to other magazines. — Cf. Gilbert (zhël-bär'), Jean (pen-name of Max Winterfeld), German operetta composer; b. Hamburg, Feb. 11, 1879; d. Buenos Aires, Dec. 20, 1942. He studied with Scharwenka; was active as theater conductor in Hamburg and Berlin. In 1933 he left Germany, eventually settling in Buenos Aires. He wrote the operettas Die keusche Susanne (1910), Polnische Wirtschaft (1910), Die Kino-Königin (1911), Puppchen (1912), Die Frau im Hermelin (1918), Die Braut des Lucullus (1920), Katja, die Tänzerin (1922), Das Weib im Purpur (1923), In der Johannisnacht (1926), Hotel Stadt Lemberg (1929), Das Mädel am Steuer (1930). The song Puppchen, du bist mein Augensterne, from the operetta Puppchen, achieved immense popularity in Europe.

Gilbert, Timothy, piano maker in Boston. After 1820 made several innovations of his own invention to improve the action of the piano. Brought out the organ-piano in 1847.

Gilbert, Sir William Schwenck, British playwright, creator with Sir Arthur Sullivan of the famous series of comic operas; b. London, Nov. 18, 1836; d. Harrow Weald, Middlesex, May 29, 1911 (through accidental drowning). He was given an excellent education (at Boulogne and at King's College, London) by his father, who was a novelist. After a routine career as a clerk, Gilbert drifted into journalism, contributing drama criticism and humorous verse to London periodicals. His satirical wit was first revealed in a theater piece, Dulcamara (1886), in which he ridiculed grand opera. He met Sullivan in 1871, and together they initiated the productions of comic operas which suited them so perfectly. Some plots borrow ludicrous situations from actual Italian and French operas; Gilbert's libretti, in rhymed verse, were none the less unmistakably English. This insularity of wit may explain the enormous popularity of the Gilbert & Sullivan operas in English-speaking countries, while they are practically unknown on the Continent. Despite the fact that the targets of Gilbert's ridicule were usually the upper classes of Great Britain, the operas were often performed at court. He was knighted in 1907. After 20 years of fruitful cooperation with Sullivan, a conflict developed, and the two severed their relationship for a time. A reconciliation was effected, but the subsequent productions fell short of their greatest successes. The most popular of the Gilbert & Sullivan operettas are H.M.S. Pinafore (1878); The Pirates of Penzance (1880); Iolanthe (1884); The Mikado (1885), and The Gondoliers (1889). A special theater, the Savoy, was built for the Gilbert & Sullivan productions in London in 1881 by the impresario Richard D'Oyly Carte. For bibl., see entry under Sullivan.

Gilberté, Hallett, American song composer; b. Winthrop, Maine, March 14, 1872; d. New York, Jan. 5, 1946. He studied piano with J. Orth and C. Barmann and composition with E. Nevin in Boston. He wrote about 250 songs, some of which were quite successful (Spanish Serenade, Mother's Cradle Song, In Reverie, Two Roses, Song of the Canoe, Ah, Love but a Day, Spring Serenade, Minuet La Phyllis, Moonlight and Starlight).

Gilchrist, William Wallace, American composer; b. Jersey City, N. J., Jan. 8, 1846; d. Easton, Pa., Dec. 20, 1916. He studied organ with H. A. Clarke at the Univ. of Penna., which conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. in 1896. He was a choirmaster at various Philadelphia churches; from 1882, taught at the Philadelphia Music Academy. He formed the Mendelssohn Club and was its conductor later. He wrote cantatas, a Christmas oratorio, 2 symphonies, chamber music, church music, and songs. — Cf. Sumner Salter, Early Encouragement to American Composers in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1932).

Gilels, Emil, Russian pianist; b. Odessa, Oct. 19, 1916. He studied in Odessa with Yakov Tkatch and Berthe Ringold. He made his public début at the age of 13, in 1929, in Odessa; at 16, won first prize in the Soviet Pianists Contest; second prize in Vienna (1936); first prize in Brussels (1938). He was awarded the Stalin prize in 1946. He made his American début in Oct., 1955 with overwhelming success.

Giles, Nathaniel, English organist and composer of church music; b. Worcester, c. 1558; d. Windsor, Jan. 24, 1633. A son of Thomas Giles, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, he studied at Oxford; was organist at Worcester Cathedral from 1581 to 1585, when he became clerk, organist, and choirmaster at St. George's Chapel, Windsor; in 1596, he took over the same duties at the Chapel Royal; in 1597, became Gentleman and Master of the Children there. He wrote four services for the Church; a great number of anthems; several motets and a 5-part madrigal (incomplete or in MS). Some of his compositions are included in Leighton's Tears or Lamentations of a Sorrowfull Soule (1614); a service and an anthem are in Barnard's 'Church Music' (1641); Hawkins' 'History of Music' contains Giles' Lesson of Descant of thirty-eight Proportions of sundrie Kindes.—Cf. J. Pulver, Nathaniel Giles in 'Monthly Musical Record' (Nov., 1933).

Gilbert (zhē-lē-bār'), Charles, dramatic baritone; b. Paris, Nov., 1866; d. New York, Oct. 11, 1910. He left the Paris Cons. as a prize-graduate, sang one season at the Opéra-Comique, and then went to the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, where he became a great favorite; 1900-3, member of the Metropolitan Opera; at his début on Dec. 18, 1900, and throughout the entire season, he failed to make a decided impression, but on his appearance in the second season took the public by storm; 1906-10, at the Manhattan Opera House, N. Y.; he was then reengaged for the Metropolitan Opera, and was to have created Jack Rance in The Girl of the Golden West, but died just before the opening of the season. He was also a distinguished concert-singer and interpreter of old French songs.

Gillels, Emil. See Gilels.

Gillet, Ernest, French composer; b. Paris, Sept. 13, 1856; d. there, May 6, 1940. He studied cello at the Paris Cons., and was for many years a cellist in the orch. of the Paris

Opéra. He publ. a number of melodious pieces, of which Loin du bal for piano became a perennial drawing-room favorite, available also in numerous arrangements.

Gillette, James Robert, American organist and composer; b. Roseboom, N. Y., May 30, 1886. He studied music at Syracuse Univ.; taught at Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., and at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.; then was organist of the First Presbyterian Church, Lake Forest, Ill. He composed a Pagan Symphony for band; Cabins, an American rhapsody for orch.; 3 cantatas: On Calvary's Cross; The Shepherd and His Lamb; The Resurrection According to Nicodemus; 42 anthems for church use; 7 overtures for symphonic band; 40 organ pieces (Chanson de Matin, Toccata, Pastorale, etc.). He publ. The Organist's Handbook (1928) and The Modern Band in Theory and Practice (1936).

Gillis, Don, American composer; b. Cameron, Missouri, June 17, 1912. He played trumpet and trombone in school bands; graduated from the Christian Univ. at Fort Worth, Texas in 1936. In 1944 he was appointed program arranger by NBC in New York. He acquired a facility for effective orchestral writing; wrote 7 symphonies between 1939 and 1948, adding to these an intermediary work which he called Symphony No. 5½ or Symphony for Fun (it was performed by Toscanini); his other works for orchestra have whimsical titles (The Panhandle; Thoughts Provoked on Becoming a Prospective Papa, etc.), but he has also written in a serious vein, including a cantata Crucifixion, 6 string quartets, and some piano music.

Gilman, Lawrence, American music critic and author; b. Flushing, N. Y., July 5, 1878; d. Franconia, N. H., Sept. 8, 1939. He was self-taught in music; from 1901-13, music critic of 'Harper's Weekly'; 1915-23, musical, dramatic, and literary critic of 'North American Review'; from 1921, author of the program-notes of the N. Y. Philh. and Philadelphia Orch. concerts; from 1923, music critic of 'N. Y. Herald Tribune'; member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Author of Phases of Modern Music (1904); Edward MacDowell (1905, in 'Living Masters of Music'; rev. and enlarged as Edward MacDowell: A Study, 1909); The Music of To-Morrow (1906); Guide to Strauss's 'Salome' (1907); Stories of Symphonic Music (1907); Guide to Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' (1907); As- pects of Modern Opera (1909); Nature in Music (1914); A Christmas Meditation (1916); Taste in Music, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1917); Music and the Cultivated Man (1929); Wagner's Operas (1937); Toscanini and Great Music (1938). He set to music 3 poems of W. B. Yeats (The Heart of the Woman, A Dream of Death, and The Curlew).—Cf. Carl Engel, Lawrence Gilman, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1940).

Gil-Marchex, Henri, French pianist; b. St. Georges d'Espérance (Isère), Dec. 16, 1894; studied at the Paris Cons., then with L. Capet and A. Cortot; toured Europe, Russia, and Japan, and performed modern works at various festivals in Europe. In 1956, he was director of the Cons. at Poitiers. He publ. piano transcriptions of modern orchestral pieces.

Gilmore, Patrick Sarsfield, American bandmaster; b. County Galway, Ireland, Dec. 25, 1829; d. St. Louis, Mo., Sept 24, 1892. He went to Canada with an English band, but soon settled in Salem, Mass., where he conducted a military band. In 1859 in Boston he organized the famous 'Gilmore's Band.' As bandmaster in the Federal army at New Orleans (1864), he gave a grand music festival with several combined bands, introducing the novel reinforcement of strong accents by cannon-shots. He won wide renown by the 'National Peace Jubilee' (1869), and the 'World's Peace Jubilee' (1872), two monster musical festivals held in Boston; in the former, Gilmore led an orch. of 1000 and a chorus of 10,000; in the latter, an orch. of 2000 and a chorus of 20,000; the orch. was reinforced by a powerful organ, cannon fired by electricity, anvils, and chimes of bells. After the second Jubilee, Gilmore went to New York, and, as a popular bandmaster, traveled with his men throughout the U. S. and Canada, and also (1878) to Europe. He also led bands or orchestras in various resorts in and near New York.—Works: Military music, dance music, many arrangements for band. Some of his songs were popular. He claimed to be the composer of When Johnny Comes Marching Home (1863), a song that remained a favorite long after the Civil War. The song bears the name of Louis Lambert as composer; this may have been one of Gilmore's many aliases—at any rate, he introduced the song and started it on its way to popularity.—Cf. M. Darlington, Irish Orpheus: the Life of Patrick Gilmore (Philadelphia, 1950).

Gilse, Jan van, Dutch composer; b. Rotterdam, May 11, 1881; d. Leyden, Sept. 8, 1944. He was a pupil of Wüllner at the Cologne Cons., 1897-1902; then for a year of Humperdinck in Berlin; 1905-8, conductor of the Opera at Bremen; 1908-9, conductor of the Dutch Opera at Amsterdam; 1917-22, music-director of the City of Utrecht, Holland; 1922-33, lived in Berlin; 1933 director of the Utrecht Cons.—Works: 5 symphonies (1900, 1903, 1905-6, 1914, 1922-23; the 1st won the Beethoven-Haus prize in 1902, the 3rd the Michael Beer prize of the Berlin Academy in 1909); an overture; 2 Intermezzi for orch.; Variations on a Dutch song for orch.; 2 oratorios, Lebensmasse (1904) and Der Kreis des Lebens (1928); songs (several with orch., texts by Tagore); Nocturne for strings and woodwinds, etc. He also wrote text and music of an opera, Frau Helga von Stavern, and 2 books: The Problem of a National Dutch Opera; Holland and Correct Performances (both in Dutch).

Gilson (zhil-söhn), Paul, Belgian composer, critic, and educator; b. Brussels, June 15, 1865; d. there, April 3, 1942. He studied with Auguste Cantillon and Charles Duyck, took lessons from Gevaert; in 1889, he won the Belgian Prix de Rome with his cantata, Sinai, performed at Brussels in 1890. His subsequent works, both choral and orchestral, won him a foremost place among modern Flemish composers. In addition to his composing, he wrote numerous books and articles on music, and taught, beginning in 1899 as prof. of harmony at Brussels Cons.; in 1904, also on the faculty of Antwerp Cons.; in 1909, he left both posts to become musical inspector in the Belgian schools. He was also an important music critic: for 'Soir' from 1906 to 1914, for 'Le Diapason' from 1910 to 1914, and later for 'Midi.' He was the founder of the 'Revue musicale belge' (1924). In 1942, he published his memoirs, Notes de musique et souvenirs. He also publ. Les Intervalles, Le Tutti orchestral, Quintes et octaves, Traité d'harmonie, Traité d'orchestre militaire.—Works: choral: Inaugural Cantata (for Brussels Exhibition, 1897); Francesca da Rimini, after Dante (Brussels, 1895); Le Démon, after Lermontov; Que la lumière soit; Hymne à l'Art; Ludus pro Patria; ballets: La Captive (Brussels, 1902), Les Deux Bossus, Légende rhénane; incidental music for E. Hiel's drama, Alva; operas: Prinses Zonneschijn (Antwerp, 1903), Zeevolk (Antwerp, 1904), Rooversliefde (Les Aventuriers); Antwerp, 1906), Mater Dolorosa; orch. works: 3 symph. poems: La Mer

(Brussels, 1892), Italia, La Destinée; 8 suites; Danses écossaises; Rapsodie écossaise; Andante et presto sur un thème brabançon; Rapsodie canadienne; 2 string quartets; a string trio; also pieces for military band; choruses; piano pieces; instrumental pieces; songs.

Giménez (Jiménez) (hē-měh'neth), Jerónimo, Spanish composer of zarzuelas; b. Seville, Oct. 10, 1854; d. Madrid, Feb. 19, 1923. He studied with Alard, Savard, and A. Thomas at the Paris Cons.; was conductor of Sociedad de Conciertos in Madrid. He wrote about 60 (for the most part) 1-act light operas (género chico) with very catchy melodies, some of which are still performed throughout the Spanish-speaking world (El baile de Luis Alonso, La boda de Luis Alonso, La tempranica, etc.); also a number of orchestral pieces.

Gimpel, Bronislaw, Polish violinist; b. Lwow, Jan. 29, 1911. He studied in Vienna with Flesch and Huberman. In 1929, he was concertmaster of the Radio Orch. in Königsberg; from 1931-36, in Göteborg; in 1937, became concertmaster of the Los Angeles Philharmonic; later organized a trio with Leopold Mannes and Luigi Silva; he has toured as soloist in Europe and America.

Ginastera, Alberto, talented Argentinian composer; b. Buenos Aires, April 11, 1916. He studied at the National Cons. of Music with Palma, Gil, and André, graduating in 1938. In 1946-47, he came to the U. S. on a Guggenheim Fellowship; in 1953, prof. at the National Cons. His music is in a national vein, in advanced harmonic texture.—Works: ballets, Panambi (Buenos Aires, July 12, 1940), Estancia (1941). For orch.: Concierto Argentino (Montevideo, July 18, 1941); Sinfonia Porteña (Buenos Aires, May 12, 1942); Obertura para el 'Fausto' Criollo (Santiago, Chile, May 12, 1944); Variaciones Conciertantes (1953). Chamber music: Impresiones de la Puna, for flute and string quartet (1934); Duo for flute and oboe (1945); Pampeana No. 1 for violin and piano (1947); string quartet (1948); Pampeana No. 2 for cello and piano (1950); Pampeana No. 3 (Pastoral Symphony; 1953; Louisville Orch., Oct. 20, 1954). For piano: Argentine Dances (1937); 12 American Preludes (1944); Creole Dance Suite (1946); sonata (1952); also songs.

Gingold, Josef, American violinist; b. Brest-Litovsk, Oct. 28, 1909. He came to the U. S. in 1920. He studied in New York, and later in Brussels with Eugène Ysaÿe. He gave 40 concerts in Belgium (1926-28); then returned to America. He was a member of the NBC Symphony Orch. under Toscanini (1937-44); concertmaster of the Detroit Symphony (1944-47). In 1947 he was appointed concertmaster of the Cleveland Orch.

Ginguéné (zhǎn-g'-nā), Pierre Louis, French historian of literature and writer on music; b. Rennes, April 25, 1748; d. Paris, Nov. 16, 1816. He studied at Rennes College; then went to Paris; was an original member of the Institute of France; served in government posts, then wrote extensively on the history of French and Italian literature. He was an ardent advocate of Piccini in the Gluck-Piccini controversy; his attacks on Gluck are contained in Lettres et articles sur la musique, insérés dans les journaux sous le nom de Mélophile, pendant nos dernières querelles musicales, en 1780, 1781, 1782 et 1783 (Paris, 1783). He also wrote Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Piccini (Paris, 1800); contributed historical articles to the Dictionnaire de musique of the 'Encyclopédie méthodique.'—Cf. D. J. Garat, Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de P. L. Ginguéne (Paris, 1817).

Ginsburg, Semion Lvovitch, Russian musicologist; b. Kilb, May 23, 1901. He studied literature and musicology in Leningrad; publ. Fundamentals of a Theory of the Musical Sciences, in 'De musica' (Leningrad, 1923); Russian Musical Theater, 1700-1835 (Moscow, 1941); Paths of Development of Uzbek Music (Leningrad, 1946).

Ginster, Ria, German soprano; b. Frankfurt, April 15, 1898. She studied there at Hoch's Cons., and later at the High School for Music in Berlin, graduating with distinction and winning the Mendelssohn Stipendium. As a concert singer, she appeared in recitals and with leading orchestras in Europe and the U. S. In 1938, she was appointed voice teacher at the Zürich Cons.

Giordani (jôr-dah'nē), Giuseppe (called Giordanello), Italian composer; b. Naples, c. 1753; d. Fermo, Jan. 4, 1798. He studied with Fenaroli at San Loreto Cons., Naples; Cimarosa and Zingarelli were fellow-students. His first opera, Epponina, was given in Florence in 1779. He continued to write operas for various Italian towns, but they were not outstanding and few of the 30-odd he wrote have survived. He also wrote several oratorios and church music. From 1791 until his death he was maestro di cappella at Fermo Cathedral. He is sometimes credited with Il Bacio and other operas and works produced in London by Tommaso Giordani; Giuseppe was not related to Tommaso, and never left Italy. The famous song, Caro mio ben, popularized in London by Pacchierotti, was probably written by Giuseppe.

Giordani, Tommaso, Italian composer; b. Naples, c. 1730; d. Dublin, late Feb., 1806. His family, which included his father, Giuseppe; his mother, Antonia; his brother, Francesco; and his sisters, Marina and Nicolina (known later as Spiletta from one of her opera roles), together formed a strolling opera company, with the father as impresario and singer and the rest of the family, except Tommaso, as singers. Tommaso was probably a member of the orch. and arranger of music. They left Naples about 1745 and moved northward, appearing in Italian towns, then in Graz (1748), Frankfurt (1750), and Amsterdam (1752). They made their London debut at Covent Garden, Dec. 17, 1753, and returned in 1756, at which time Tommaso first appeared as a composer, with his comic opera, La comediante fatta cantatrice (Covent Garden, Jan. 12, 1756). The Giordani company next went to Dublin, appearing there in 1764; Tommaso continued active both in Dublin and in London; he was conductor and composer at the King's Theatre, London, in 1769 and many following seasons, and in Dublin, where he lived after 1783, was conductor and composer at the Smock Alley and Crow Street theaters; he also taught piano between operas. In 1794, he was elected president of the Irish music fund. He played an important part in Irish music circles, and wrote altogether more than 50 English and Italian operas, including pasticcios and adaptations; among his own works were L'eroe cinese (Dublin, 1766), Il padre e il figlio rivali (London, 1770), Artaserse (London, 1772), Il re pastore (London, 1778); Il bacio (London, 1782). He also wrote several cantatas, including Acì e Galatea (London, 1777); an oratorio, Isaac (Dublin, 1767); songs for the original production of Sheridan's The Critic (Drury Lane, London, Oct. 29, 1779); many Italian and English songs that were popular for a long time; concertos, string quartets, trios, many piano pieces.

Giordano (jôr-dah'-noh), Umberto, Italian opera composer; b. Foggia, Aug. 27, 1867; d. Milan, Nov. 12, 1948. He studied with Gaetano Briganti at Foggia, and then with Paolo Serrao at Naples Cons. (1881-86). His 1st composition performed in public was a symph. poem, Delizia (1886); he then wrote some instrumental music. In 1888 he submitted a short opera, Marina, for the competition established by the publisher Sonzogno; Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana received 1st prize, but Marina was cited for distinction. Giordano then wrote an opera in 3 acts, Mala Vita, which was performed in Rome Feb. 21, 1892; it was only partly successful; was revised and presented under the title Il Voto in Milan (1897). There followed a 2-act opera, Regina Diaz (Rome, Feb. 21, 1894), which obtained a moderate success. Then Giordano set to work on a grand opera, Andrea Chénier, to a libretto by Illica. The production of this opera at La Scala (March 28, 1896) was a spectacular success, which established Giordano as one of the best composers of modern Italian opera. The dramatic subject gave Giordano a fine opportunity to display his theatrical talent; but the opera also revealed his gift for lyric expression. Andrea Chénier was produced at the N. Y. Academy of Music shortly after its Milan première; a performance at the Metropolitan Opera House came considerably later (March 7, 1920). Almost as successful was his next opera, Fedora (Teatro Lirico, Milan, Nov. 17, 1898; Metropolitan Opera, Dec. 5, 1906), but it failed to hold a place in the world repertory after initial acclaim; there followed Siberia, in 3 acts (La Scala, Dec. 19, 1903). Two short operas, Marcella (Milan, Nov. 9, 1907) and Mese Mariano (Palermo, March 17, 1910), were hardly noticed and seemed to mark a decline in Giordano's dramatic gift; however, he recaptured the attention of the public with Madame Sans-Gêne, produced at a gala première at the Metropolitan Opera on Jan. 25, 1915, conducted by Toscanini, with Geraldine Farrar singing the title role. With Franchetti, he wrote Giove a Pompei (Rome, 1921); then he produced La cena delle beffe in 4 acts, which was his last signal accomplishment; it was staged at La Scala, Dec. 20, 1924, and at the Metropolitan, Jan. 2, 1926. He wrote one more opera, Il Re in 1 act (La Scala, Jan. 10, 1929). During his lifetime he received many honors, and was elected a member of the Accademia Luigi Cherubini in Florence and of several other institutions. Although not measuring up to Puccini in musical qualities or to Mascagni in dramatic skill, Giordano was a distinguished figure in the Italian opera field.—Cf. G. C. Parabeni, Madame Sans-Gêne di Umberto Giordano (Milan, 1923);

Giorni (jôr'nē), Aurelio, pianist and composer; b. Perugia, Italy, Sept. 15, 1895; d. Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 23, 1938. He studied piano with Sgambati at the Cons. of Santa Cecilia in Rome (1909-11); composition with Humperdinck in Berlin (1911-13); in 1915 he came to the U. S. where he remained; taught at Smith College, Philadelphia Cons. of Music, Hartford School of Music, and other music schools; in his last years, was a teacher in N. Y. He wrote a symph. poem, Orlando furioso (1926); Sinfonia concertante (1931); symph. in D minor (1937); 3 trios; 2 string quartets; cello sonata; violin sonata; piano quartet; piano quintet; flute sonata; clarinet sonata; 24 concert études for piano; songs.

Giornovicchi (johr-noh-vēk'-kē), Giovanni Mane, Italian violinist, probably of Croatian extraction (his real name was Jarnowick); b. Ragusa or Palermo, c. 1735; d. St. Petersburg, Russia, Nov. 23, 1804. He was a pupil of Antonio Lolli in Palermo; gave successful concerts in Europe; on the strength of his reputation, he was engaged as court musician to Catherine II, succeeding his teacher Lolli in that post. He was in Russia from 1789-91; then appeared in London (1791-94), Paris, Hamburg, and Berlin. He returned to Russia in 1803, and died there the following year. In his old age he abandoned the violin and devoted himself to playing billiards for money. Among his works are 20 violin concertos; 3 string quartets; Fantasia e Rondo for piano. He was probably the first to introduce the 'romance' into the violin concerto as a slow movement.—Cf. R. Aloys Mooser, Annales de la musique et des musiciens en Russie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Geneva, 1950; vol. II, pp. 379-81).

Giorza (jôr'-tsāh), Paolo, Italian composer; b. Milan, Nov. 11, 1832; d. Seattle, May 5, 1914. He was especially known for his ballet music; wrote more than 40 ballets. He lived in New York, in London, and in San Francisco; in 1906 settled in Seattle.

Giovannelli, Ruggiero, Italian composer; b. Velletri, 1560; d. Rome, Jan. 7, 1625. In 1587 he was maestro in the church of San Luigi de' Francesi at Rome, later in the Collegium Germanicum; in 1594 he succeeded Palestrina as maestro at St. Peter's, and in 1599 joined the Pontifical Chapel. One of the most famous masters of the Roman School; of his works there have been printed 3 books of madrigals a 5 (1586, 1587, 1589; completely reprinted 1600); 2 of Madrigali sdruccioli a 4 (1585 [7th ed. 1613], 1589 [5th ed. 1603]); 2 books of motets a 5-8 (1589, 1604); Canzonette and Villanelle a 3 (1592, 1593); also scattered works in collections publ. from 1583-1620 (Scotto, Phalèse, Schadaeus, etc.). K. Proske's 'Musica divina' contains a psalm (vol. III, 1859); L. Torchi's 'L'Arte Musicale in Italia' includes a motet and psalm a 8 and a madrigal a 5 (vol. II). In the Vatican Library are many sacred works in MS.—To Giovannelli was entrusted, by Pope Paul V, the preparation of a new ed. of the Gradual (1614, 1615, 2 vols.).—Cf. C. Winter, Ruggiero Giovannelli (c. 1560-1625), Nachfolger Palestrinas zu St. Peter in Rom (Munich, 1935).

Giovanni da Cascia (Johannes de Florentia) (jöh-vah'-nē dah kah'-shāh), Italian 14th-century composer. According to his younger contemporary, Filippo Villani, in Liber de civitatis Florentiae famosis civibus, he was the initiator of the stylistic reform which spread from Florence shortly after 1300. He was organist and probably chorus-master at Santa Maria del Fiore at Florence; lived at the court of Mastino II della Scala, Verona, from 1329-51. His compositions included madrigals, ballate, etc.; MSS may be found in libraries at Florence, Paris, and in the British Museum. In all, 28 works by Giovanni, in 2-3 parts, are known. The madrigal, Agnel son bianco, was edited and publ. by Johannes Wolf in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1902; Ex. 4); 2 other compositions were also edited and publ. by Wolf in his Geschichte der Mensural-Notation (pp. 61-64; Leipzig, 1904).—Cf. J. Wolf, Florenz in der Musikgeschichte des 14. Jahrhunderts in the 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1902; pp. 609-10); H. Riemann, in Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (1922; p. 41); A. Morini, Un celebre musico dimenticato, Giovanni da Cascia, in 'Bollettino della regia deputazione di storia patria per l'Umbria' (Perugia, 1926; p. 305 ff).

Gipps, Ruth, English pianist and composer; b. Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex, Feb. 20, 1921. She studied at the Royal College of Music in London with Vaughan Williams, piano with Matthay. She began to compose very early in life and at the age of eight won a prize for a piano piece. Her works include 2 symphonies (1942; 1946); clarinet concerto; oboe concerto; violin concerto; trio for oboe, clarinet, and piano; quintet for oboe, clarinet, violin, viola, and cello; also an oratorio, The Cat (1952); numerous solo pieces with picturesque titles; and songs.

Giraldoni, Eugenio, famous Italian baritone; b. Marseilles, France, May 20, 1871; d. Helsinki, Finland, June 23, 1924. Both his parents were professional singers; his father, Leone Giraldoni, was a renowned baritone and his mother, Carolina Ferni-Giraldoni, a famous soprano. He made his debut in Barcelona as Don José in 1891; then sang in Buenos Aires and in Italy (at La Scala and other theaters); eventually settled in Russia, where he taught voice at the St. Petersburg Cons.

Giraudet (zhē-roh-dā'), Alfred-Auguste, dramatic basso and vocal pedagogue; b. Etampes, March 29, 1845; d. New York, Oct. 17, 1911. He studied with Delsarte; made his operatic debut at the Théâtre-Lyrique in Paris as Mephistopheles (1868); then sang at the Théâtre-Italien, Opéra-Comique, and at the Opéra; in 1883 he retired from the stage and devoted himself to teaching; eventually settled in New York as a teacher. He wrote a book, Mimique, Physionomie et Gestes (1895).

Giuliani, Mauro, Italian guitar virtuoso; b. Barletta, 1781; d. Naples, May 8, 1828. He was entirely self-taught; at the age of 19 undertook a highly successful tour in Europe; settled in Vienna in 1807, where he became associated with Hummel, Moschles, and Diabelli; Beethoven became interested in him, and wrote some guitar music expressly for his performances. In 1833 he visited London, where he won extraordinary acclaim; a special publication, named after him 'The Giulianiad' and devoted to reports about his activities, was initiated there, but only a few issues appeared in print. Giuliani publ. a number of guitar solos; he also perfected a new guitar with a shorter fingerboard ('la ghitarra di terza'). — See 'The Guitar Review' (N. Y., 1955, No. 18), containing a biographical sketch of Giuliani by Ph. J. Bone.

Giulini, Giorgio, Italian composer; b. Milan, 1716; d. there, 1780. He was the author of several instrumental works of considerable merit. — Cf. G. Cesari, Giorgio Giulini, musicista, in the 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1917).

Gladstone, Francis Edward, noted English organist; b. Summertown, near Oxford, March 2, 1845; d. Hereford, Sept. 6, 1928. He was a pupil of S. Wesley, 1859-64; filled positions as organist at Weston-super-Mare, Llandaff, Chichester, Brighton, London, and Norwich. After embracing the Catholic faith, he was choir-director at St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater, until 1894. In 1876 he took the degree of Mus. Bac., Cambridge; in 1879, Mus. Doc.; prof. of harmony and counterpoint at Royal College of Music, 1883-1910. — Works: An oratorio, Philippi (1883), much church music, an overture, some chamber music (all in MS); publ. organ pieces, The Organ-Student's Guide and A Treatise on Strict Counterpoint (1906). He also wrote an a cappella chorus, In Paradisium, for his own funeral and trained four monks to sing it.

Glanville-Hicks, Peggy, Australian composer and critic; b. Melbourne, Dec. 29, 1912. She studied in London with Vaughan Williams, later in Vienna with E. Wellesz, and in Paris with Nadia Boulanger. Since 1939, she has been in the U. S.; 1957, awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship. — Works: operas: Caedmon; The Transposed Heads, after Thomas Mann (commissioned by the Louisville Orch.; perf. Louisville, March 27, 1954); 2 sinfoniettas; piano concerto; string quartet; choral suite for women's voices, oboe, and string orch.; Concertino da Camera, for flute, clarinet, bassoon, and piano (Amsterdam Festival, 1948); Etruscan Concerto for piano and chamber orch. (N. Y., Jan. 25, 1956). — Cf. 'Bulletin of American Composers' Alliance' (1954, I).

Glareanus, Henricus (real name, Heinrich Loris; Latinized: Henricus Loritus), Swiss musical theorist and writer; b. Mollis, in the canton of Glarus, June, 1488; d. Freiburg, Baden, March 28, 1563. He studied with Rubellus at Bern, and later with Cochläus at Cologne, where he was crowned poet laureate by Emperor Maximilian I in 1512, as the result of a poem he composed and sang to the emperor. He first taught mathematics at Basel (1515); went to Paris, where he taught philosophy; returned to Basel where he stayed till 1529, when he settled in Freiburg. His first important work, Isagoge in musicen, publ. at Basel in 1516, dealt with solmization, intervals, modes, and tones. A still more important volume, the Dodecachordon, was publ. in 1547; in it, Glareanus advanced the theory that there are 12 church modes, corresponding to the ancient Greek modes, instead of the commonly accepted 8 modes. The 3rd part of the Dodecachordon contains many works by 15th- and 16th-century musicians. A copy of the Dodecachordon, with corrections in Glareanus' own handwriting, is in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C. A German transl., with the musical examples in modern notation, was publ. by P. Bohn in vol. 16 of 'Publikationen der Gesellschaft für Musikforschung' (Leipzig, 1888). A complete index of Glareanus' works is contained in P. Lichtenthal's 'Dizionario e bibliografia della musica' IV, pp. 274-76 (Milan, 1826). J. L. Wonegger publ. Musicae epitome ex Glareani Dodecachordo (1557; 2nd ed., 1559; in German: Uss Glareani Musik ein Usszug, 1557).—Biographies of Glareanus have been written by H. Schreiber (Freiburg, 1837) and O. F. Fritzsche (Frauenfeld, 1890). See also: P. Spitta in 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musik-Wissenschaft' (vol. VII, p. 123 ff.); A. Glazenapp, Carl Friedrich, b. Riga, Oct. 3, 1847; d. there, April 14, 1915. He studied philology at Dorpat; from 1875, headmaster at Riga. An ardent admirer of Wagner's art, he devoted his entire life to the study of the master's works, and was one of the principal contributors to the 'Bayreuther Blätter' from their foundation. His great work is the monumental biography of Wagner, Richard Wagners Leben und Wirken, of which the first two vols. were publ. at Kassel and Leipzig (1876, 1877); after the 2nd enlarged ed. (1882) these were rewritten, and the entire work was issued at Leipzig as Das Leben Richard Wagners (I, 1813-43 [1894]; II, 1843-53 [1896]; III, 1853-62 [1899]; IV, 1862-72 [1904]; V, 1872-77 [1907]; VI, 1877-83 [1911]). Vols. I, II, and III appeared in English transl. (with amplifications) by W. A. Ellis (London, 1900, 1901, 1903), but after that Ellis continued the biography as an independent work. Though Glazenapp's work was considered the definitive biography in its time, its value is diminished by the fact that he published only materials approved by Wagner's family; as a result, it was superseded by later biographies. His other works on Wagner include: Wagner-Lexikon with H. von Stein (1883); Wagner-Encyklopädie

(2 vols., 1891); Siegfried Wagner (1906); Siegfried Wagner und seine Kunst (1911), with sequels, Schwarzschwanenreich (1913) and Sonnenflammen (1919); he also edited Bayreuther Briefe, 1871-73 (1907) and Familienbriefe an Richard Wagner, 1832-74 (1907).

Glass, Louis Christian August, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, March 23, 1864; d. there, Jan. 22, 1936. He was a pupil of his father, Christian Hendrik (1821-93), then at Brussels Cons. of J. de Zarembski and J. Wieniawski (piano) and J. Servais (cello); appeared both as pianist and cellist, but was more important as composer.—Works: 6 symphonies (the fifth: Sinfonia svastica, in C, op. 59); 2 overtures, Der Volksfeind and Dänemark; Sommerliv, suite for orch.; a dance poem, Artemis (Copenhagen, Oct. 27, 1917; also as an orchestral suite); Fantasie for piano and orch.; concerto for oboe and orch.; string sextet; piano quintet; 4 string quartets; piano trio; 2 violin sonatas; numerous works for piano (3 sonatas, etc.).

Glaz, Herta, Austrian contralto; b. Vienna, Sept. 16, 1914. She studied at the Vienna Academy; made her début in Breslau; then sang at Prague; also with the Glyndebourne Opera. She made her début with the Metropolitan Opera Company as Amneris (Dec. 25, 1942); has also appeared in Wagnerian roles.

Glazunov (gläh-zoo-nöhv'), Alexander Konstantinovich, notable Russian composer; b. St. Petersburg, Aug. 10, 1865; d. Paris, March 21, 1936. Of a well-to-do family (his father was a book publisher), he studied at a technical high school in St. Petersburg, and also took lessons in music with a private tutor. As a boy of 15, he was introduced to Rimsky-Korsakov, who gave him weekly lessons in harmony, counterpoint, and orchestration. Glazunov made rapid progress and at the age of 16 completed his first symphony, which was performed by Balakirev on March 29, 1882 in St. Petersburg. So mature was this score that Glazunov was hailed by Stasov, Cui, and others as a rightful heir to the masters of the Russian National School. The music publisher Belaiev arranged for publication of Glazunov's works, and took him to Weimar, where he met Liszt. From that time Glazunov composed assiduously in all genres except opera. He was invited to conduct his symphonies in Paris (1889) and London (1896-7). Returning to St. Petersburg, he conducted many concerts of Russian music; however, he lacked interpretative powers, and his performances were merely correct renditions of the literal materials of the music. In 1899 he was engaged as instructor at the St. Petersburg Cons., and in 1905 he became its director, gradually building up a fine faculty and inspiring the students to higher achievements. He retained this post until 1928; then he left Russia and lived mostly in Paris. In 1929 he made several appearances as conductor in the U. S.; led his 6th symphony with the Detroit Symph. Orch. (Nov. 21, 1929) and also conducted the Boston Symph. He was the recipient of an honorary degree of Mus. D. from Cambridge and Oxford Universities (1907). Although he wrote no textbook on composition, his pedagogical methods left a lasting impression on Russian musicians through his many students who preserved his traditions. His music is often regarded as academic; yet there is a flow of rhapsodic eloquence that places Glazunov in the Romantic school. He was for a time greatly swayed by Wagnerian harmonies, but resisted this influence successfully; Lisztian characteristics are more pronounced in his works. Glazunov was one of the greatest masters of counterpoint among Russian composers, but he avoided extreme polyphonic complexity. The national spirit of his music is unmistakable; in many of his descriptive works, the programmatic design is explicitly Russian (Stenka Razin, The Kremlin, etc.). His most popular score is the ballet Raymonda. The major portion of his music was written before 1906, when he completed his 8th symph.; after that he wrote mostly for special occasions.—Works: incidental music to Grand Duke Konstantin Romanov's mystery play The King of the Jews (1914); ballets, Raymonda (1896; St. Petersburg, Jan. 7, 1898); Ruses d'amour (1898); The Seasons (1899). For orch.: Symph. No. 1 (1881); 2 Overtures on Greek Themes (1881-85); 2 Serenades (1883); Stenka Razin, symph. poem (1884); A la mémoire d'un héros (1885); Suite caractéristique (1885); Idyll and Réverie orientale (1886); Symph. No. 2 (1886); Une pensée à Franz Liszt for string orch. (1886); Mazurka (1887); The Forest, symph. poem (1888); Mélodie and Sérénade espagnole for cello and orch. (1888); Marche des Noces for large orch. (1889); Une Fête slave, symph. sketch (1890; from Quatuor slave); The Sea, symph. fantasy (1890); Oriental Rhapsody (1890); The Kremlin, symph. picture (1890); Symph. No. 3 (1891); Printemps, musical picture (1892); Triumphal March on the occasion of the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago (1893); overture Carnaval (1894); Chopiniana, suite on Chopin's themes (1894); 2 Valses de concert (1894); Symph. No. 4 (St. Petersburg, Feb. 3, 1894, composer conducting); Cor-tège solennel (1894); Scènes de ballet (1894); Fantaisie (1895); Symph. No. 5 (1895); suite from the ballet Raymonda (1897); Symph. No. 6 (1896); Pas de caractère, on Slavic and Hungarian themes (1900); Intermezzo romantico (1901); Chant du Ménestrel for cello and orch. (1901; also for cello and piano); Ouverture solennelle (1901); Marche sur un thème russe (1901); Symph. No. 7 (St. Petersburg, Nov. 15, 1902); Ballade (1902); From the Middle Ages, suite (1903); violin concerto (1904; London, Oct. 17, 1905, Mischa Elman, soloist); Scène dansante (1905); Symph. No. 8 (1906); Le Chant du destin, dramatic overture (1907); 2 Preludes: No. 1, In Memory of V. Stasov (1906); No. 2, In Memory of Rimsky-Korsakov (1908); In Memory of Gogol (1909); Finnish Fantasy (Helsingfors, Nov. 7, 1910, composer conducting); piano concerto No. 1 (1911); Finnish Sketches (1912); Dance of Salomé, after Oscar Wilde (1912); Karelian Legend (1914); 2nd piano concerto (1922); Concerto-Ballata for cello and orch. (Paris, Oct. 14, 1933, composer conducting, Maurice Eisenberg soloist); saxophone concerto (in collaboration with A. Petiot, 1934). Vocal works: Coronation Cantata (1894); Hymn to Pushkin for female chorus (1899); cantata for women's chorus with 2 pianos, 8 hands (1900); Memorial Cantata (1901); 21 songs. Chamber music: 7 string quartets: No. 1 in D (1882); No. 2 in F (1884); No. 3 in G (Quatuor Slave, 1889); No. 4 in A (1899); No. 5 in D (1900); No. 6 in B $\flat$  (piano 1930); No. 7 in C (1931); 5 Novelettes for string quartet (1888); suite for string quartet (1894); string quintet (1895); suite for string quartet (1929); Pensée à Liszt for cello and piano; Réverie for French horn and piano; In modo religioso for 4 brass instruments; Elegy for viola and piano; Oberek for violin and piano. Piano music: 2 sonatas (1898; 1899); Barcarolle; Novelette; Prelude and 2 Mazurkas; 3 Etudes; Petite Valse; Nocturne; Grande Valse de Concert; 3 Miniatures; Valse de Salon; 3 Morceaux; 2 Impromptus; Prelude and Fugue; Theme and Variations; suite for 2 pianos (1920); 4 Preludes and Fugues (1922). Glazunov also completed and orchestrated the overture to Borodin's Prince Igor (from memory, having heard Borodin play it on the piano).—Cf. A. W. Ossovsky, Glazunov: His Life and Work (St. Petersburg, 1907); M. Montagu-Nathan, Contemporary Russian Composers (N. Y., 1917); V. Gleason, Frederick Grant, American composer and critic; b. Middletown, Conn., Dec. 17, 1848; d. Chicago, Dec. 6, 1903. He studied in Hartford with Dudley Buck, later at the Leipzig Cons., in Berlin, and London. He returned to become organist at several churches in Connecticut; in 1884, taught at the Hershey School of Music in Chicago; from 1884-89, he was also music critic of the 'Chicago Tribune.' From 1900 to his death, he was director of the Chicago Auditorium Cons. He wrote 2 operas, Otho Visconti (posthumous production; Chicago, June 4, 1907) and Montezuma; 4 cantatas; symph. poem, Edris; 3 sketches for orch.; a piano concerto; 3 piano trios; organ and piano pieces; songs; 2 Episcopal church services. — Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and its Composers (Philadelphia, 1934; pp. 216-17).

Gleason, Harold, American organist and musicologist; b. Jefferson, Ohio, April 26, 1892; studied organ in California with Lemare, and in Paris with Bonnet; composition with Herbert Inch at the Eastman School, Rochester; occupied positions as church organist in Pasadena (1911-15), N. Y. (1918), Rochester (1919-49); was head of the organ department at the Eastman School from 1921-53; professor of musicology there from 1932-55. He designed organs for the Eastman School; was active in educational organizations. He publ. a Method of Organ Playing (1937); Examples of Music before 1400 (1942; 2nd ed., 1945); Music Literature Outlines (5 issues; 1949-55); contributed papers to music magazines.

Glebov, Igor. Pen-name of Boris Asafiev (q.v.).

Glen, John, Scots collector of native music; b. Edinburgh, June 13, 1833; d. there, Nov. 29, 1904. His father Thomas G. (1804-73), the inventor of the 'Serpentcleide,' had established himself as a manufacturer of musical instruments, and the son succeeded to the business in 1866; he confined himself to the manufacture of bagpipes, of which he was soon recognized as the foremost manufacturer of Great Britain. He was equally noted for his research in Scottish music; compiled The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music, Strathspeys, Reels and Jigs . . . containing an Introduction on Scottish Dance Music (2 vols., 1891, 1895); vol. I contains 144, vol. II 148, tunes. His chief work is Early Scottish Melodies: including examples from MSS. and early printed works, along with a number of comparative tunes, notes on former annotators, English and other claims, and Biographical Notices, etc. (1900).—Cf. 'Musical Times,' Jan., 1905.

Glière, Reinhold Moritzovitch, eminent Russian composer; b. Kiev, Jan. 11, 1875; d. Moscow, June 23, 1956. He studied violin with Hrimaly; entered the Moscow Cons., where he took courses with Arensky, Taneyev, and Ippolitov-Ivanov (1894-1900), graduating with a gold medal. In 1905 he went to Berlin, where he remained for 2 years; returning to Russia, he became active as a teacher; was appointed prof. of composition at the Kiev Cons., and was its director from 1914-20; then was appointed to the faculty of the Moscow Cons., a post he retained to the end of his life. He traveled extensively in European and Asiatic Russia, collecting folk melodies; conducted many concerts of his own works; he made his last tour a month before his death, conducting in Odessa, Kishinev, and other cities. He was an extremely prolific composer, and was particularly distinguished in symphonic works, in which he revealed himself as a successor of the Russian National School. He never transgressed the natural borderline of traditional harmony, but he was able to achieve effective results. His most impressive work is his 3rd Symph., surnamed Ilya Murometz, an epic description of the exploits of a legendary Russian hero. In his numerous songs Glière showed a fine lyrical talent. He wrote relatively few works of chamber music, most of them early in his career. In his single opera, Shah-Senem, he made use of native Caucasian songs. Glière was the teacher of two generations of Russian composers; among his students were Prokofiev and Miaskovsky. — Works: opera, Shah-Senem (Baku, May 4, 1934); ballets: Chrysis (1912); Cleopatra (1925); Comedians (1922-30); Red Poppy (Moscow, June 14, 1927); The Bronze Knight, after Pushkin (1949). Incidental music to: King Oedipus, Sophocles (1921); Lysistrata, Aristophanes (1923); Marriage of Figaro, Beaumarchais (1927). For orch.: Symph. No. 1 (1899-1900); Symph. No. 2 (Berlin, Jan.

Chamber music: 5 string quartets (No. 4 won the Stalin Prize, 1948; No. 5 left unfinished at his death); 3 string sextets; 1 string octet. Other music: 20 pieces for violin and piano; 12 duos for two violins; Ballad for cello and piano; 4 pieces for double bass and piano; 8 pieces for violin and cello; 12 pieces for cello and piano; 10 duos for 2 cellos; miscellaneous pieces for different instruments. He also wrote about 200 songs and 200 piano pieces. A biography of Glière by Igor Boelza was publ. in Moscow, 1955.

Glinka, Mikhail Ivanovitch, Russian composer; b. Novospasskoye, Govt. of Smolensk, June 1, 1804; d. Berlin, Feb. 15, 1857. A scion of a fairly rich family of landowners, he was educated in an exclusive school at St. Petersburg (1818-22); he also took private lessons in music; his piano teacher was a resident German musician, Carl Meyer; he also studied violin; when the famous pianist, John Field, was in St. Petersburg, Glinka had an opportunity to study with him, but he had only three lessons owing to Field's departure. He began to compose even before acquiring adequate training in theory. As a boy he traveled in the Caucasus; then stayed for a while at his father's estate; at 20 entered the Ministry of Communications in St. Petersburg; he remained in government employ until 1828; at the same time, he constantly improved his general education by reading; he had friends among the best Russian writers of the time, including the poets Zhukovsky and Pushkin. He also took singing lessons with an Italian teacher, Belloli. In 1830 he went to Italy, where he continued irregular studies in Milan (where he spent most of his Italian years); he also visited Naples, Rome, and Bologna. He met Donizetti and Bellini. He became enamored of Italian music, and his early vocal and instrumental compositions are thoroughly Italian in melodic and harmonic structure. In 1833 he went to Berlin, where he took a course in counterpoint and general composition with the famous German theorist, Dehn; thus he was nearly 30 when he completed his theoretical education. In 1834, his father died, and Glinka went back to Russia to take care of the family affairs. In 1835 he was married; but the marriage was unhappy, and he soon became separated from his wife, finally divorcing her in 1846. The return to his native land led him to consider the composition of a truly national opera on a subject (suggested to him by Zhukovsky) depicting a historical episode in Russian history, the saving of the first Tsar of the Romanov dynasty by a simple peasant, Ivan Susanin. (The Italian composer, Cavos, wrote an opera on the same subject 20 years previously, and conducted it in St. Petersburg.) Glinka's opera was produced in St. Petersburg on Dec. 9, 1836, under the title, A Life for the Tsar. The event was hailed by the literary and artistic circles of Russia as a milestone of Russian culture, and indeed the entire development of Russian national music received its decisive creative impulse from Glinka's patriotic opera. It remained in the repertory of Russian theaters until the Russian Revolution made it unacceptable, but it was revived, under the original title, Ivan Susanin, on Feb. 27, 1939, in Moscow, without alterations in the music, but with the references to the Tsar eliminated from the libretto, the idea of saving the country being substituted for that of saving the Tsar. Glinka's next opera, Ruslan and Ludmila, after Pushkin's fairy tale, was produced on Dec. 9, 1842; this opera, too, became extremely popular in Russia. Glinka introduced into the score many elements of Oriental music; one episode contains the earliest use of the whole-tone scale in an opera. Both operas retain the traditional Italian form, with arias, choruses, and orchestral episodes clearly separated. In 1844, Glinka was in Paris, where he met Berlioz; he also traveled in Spain, where he collected folksongs; the fruits of his Spanish tour were two orchestral works, Jota Aragonesa and Night in Madrid. On his way back to Russia, he stayed in Warsaw for 3 years; the remaining years of his life he spent in St. Petersburg, Paris, and Berlin, where he died.—Works: operas: A Life for the Tsar; Russian and Ludmila; sketches for 3 unfinished operas; incidental music for Kukolnik's tragedy, Prince Kholm-sky; incidental music for the play, The Mol- davian Gypsy; for orch.: Andante Cantabile and Rondo; a larghetto; 2 overtures; a symphony in B $\flat$  major; Trumpet March (1828); Overture-Symphony on Russian Themes, in D minor (1834; completed in 1938 by V. I. Shebalin); Valse in G major (1839); Polonaise (1839); Valse-Fantaisie (1839); Valse in B $\flat$  major (1840); Capriccio brillante on the Jota Aragonesa (1845; afterwards renamed Spanish Overture No. 1); Summer Night in Madrid: Spanish Overture No. 2 (1848); Kamarinskaya (1848); symph. poem on Gogol's Taras Bulba (unfinished, part of first movement only; 1852); Festival Polonaise on a bolero melody (1855); chamber music: septet in E $\flat$  major (1824); 2 string quartets (1824, 1830); Trio pathétique (1827); 2 serenades (1832); sonata for piano and viola (1825-28); about 40 piano numbers (5 waltzes, 7 mazurkas, nocturnes, etc.); much vocal music, including choral works, quartets, duets, arias, and about 85 songs with piano accompaniment, many set to poems by Pushkin and Zhukovsky.—Cf. Findeisen, were publ. in 1907; other letters in 'Muzikalny Sovremennik' (Petrograd, 1916).

Glinski, Mateusz (Matteo), Polish music scholar, conductor, and composer; b. Warsaw, April 6, 1892. He studied music at the Warsaw Cons. (1909-13) with Barcewicz (violin and conducting) and Statkowski (composition); then took courses in Leipzig with Riemann and Schering; also studied conducting with Nikisch. He went to St. Petersburg in 1914, and studied composition with Glazunov and Steinberg and conducting with Tcherepnin; gave several symphonic concerts there (1916-18). After World War I he returned to Poland, where he edited a monthly review, 'Muzyka' (1924-39). After the outbreak of World War II, he went to Rome and engaged in energetic activities as conductor, editor, historian, and lecturer. In 1946 he founded a music monthly in Italian, 'Musica'; in 1949 he established the 'Istituto Internazionale Federico Chopin,' of which he was elected president in 1954. He discovered documents on the Renaissance composer Asprilio Pacelli, ancestor of Pope Pius XII, and transcribed and edited his works; also transcribed and performed some of G. Francesco Anerio's oratorios (1619), which he demonstrated to be the forerunners of the classical oratorio. In 1956 he visited the U. S.; gave lectures on Chopin at the Univ. of Michigan, at Wayne Univ. and other colleges. Among his works are an opera, L'Aiglon, after Rostand (1918-1927); 2 symph. poems, The Blind

Singer and Wagram; Purcelliana, a suite for orch. (1934); Tre Cantate d'Amore (1940); The Prayer of Polish Exiles (1941); Te decet Hymnus (1944); Couperiniana (1950), and various transcriptions of old masters. He has publ. in Polish: History of Conducting (1917); Fryderyk Chopin (1928); Scriabin (1933); Karol Szymanowski (1937); and in Italian: Asprilio Pacelli (1941); La prima stagione lirica all'estero (1942); La spiritualità dell'ottocento italiano (1947); Lorenzo Perosi (1953).

Glock, William, English music critic; b. London, May 3, 1908. He studied at Caius College, Cambridge; then took piano lessons with Schnabel in Berlin. After a few appearances as pianist, he decided to become a music critic; he was in the Royal Air Force during World War II; in 1948 he founded a summer music school in Bryans-ton; he publishes a music magazine 'The Score'; also gives frequent lectures in England and Canada.

Glover, John William, Irish composer and conductor; b. Dublin, June 19, 1815; d. there, Dec. 18, 1899. He studied in Dublin, and was violinist in an orchestra there; in 1848, he became prof. of vocal music in the Normal Training School of the Irish National Education Board and also director of music in the Roman Catholic pro-cathedral. He established the Choral Institute in 1851, and was noted for his promotion of choral music in Ireland. He edited Moore's 'Irish Melodies' (1859). — Works: opera, The Deserted Village, after Goldsmith (London, 1880); 2 Italian operas to librettos by Metastasio; cantata, St. Patrick at Tara (1870); Erin's Matin Song (1873); ode to Thomas Moore, One hundred years ago (1879); also concertos, piano pieces, songs, church music.

Glover, Sarah Ann, English piano pedagogue; b. Norwich, Nov. 13, 1786; d. Malvern, Oct. 20, 1867. She was the originator of the tonic sol-fa system of notation, a method later modified and developed by John Curwen (q.v.). She wrote: Scheme for rendering Psalmody Congregational (1835), Manual of the Norwich Sol-fa System (1845), and a Manual containing a Development of the Tetrachordal System (1850). She devised a pictorial chart called the 'Norwich Sol-fa Ladder.'

Glover, William Howard, English conductor and composer; b. London, June 6, 1819; d. New York, Oct. 28, 1875. At the age of 15, he became a violinist in the Lyceum Theater orch., studying with the conductor, William Wagstaff, and afterwards on the Continent. With Braham he toured Scotland; he formed an opera company at Manchester and Liverpool which he conducted, and later was a conductor in London, where he was music critic of the 'Morning Post' from about 1850 to 1865. In 1868 he came to New York, where he was conductor at Niblo's Garden until his death.—Works: opera, Ruy Blas, after Victor Hugo (Covent Garden, Oct. 21, 1861); operettas: The Coquette; Aminta (Haymarket, London, Jan. 26, 1852); Once Too Often (Drury Lane, Jan. 20, 1862); Palomita, or The Veiled Songstress (publ. in N. Y., 1875); cantata, Tam o' Shanter, after Burns (London, July 4, 1855, Berlioz conducting); overtures; piano music; songs.

Gluck, Alma (real name, Reba Fiersohn), American soprano; b. Bucharest, Rumania, May 11, 1884; d. New York, Oct. 27, 1938. Her parents brought her to New York as a small child; she was educated in the public schools, the Normal School (now Hunter College), and Union College, Schenectady, N. Y. After her marriage to Bernard Gluck, she studied singing with Buzzi-Peccia; she was engaged for the Metropolitan Opera in 1909, and made her début as Sophie in Massenet's Werther on Nov. 16, 1909. She became a favorite with the public, and sang more than 20 roles during her three years in opera. In 1912, she gave up opera for the concert stage; she also divorced Mr. Gluck; she studied for a year with Marcella Sembrich in Berlin; returned to the U. S. in 1913 for many years of successful concert work; she was noted also as a recording artist. She married the violinist Efrem Zimbalist in 1914. She returned from retirement to give a concert at the Manhattan Opera House in 1925. Glimpses of her career are shown in Of Lena Geyer, a novel publ. by her daughter, Marcia Davenport (q.v.).

Gluck, Christoph Willibald (Ritter von), renowned composer; b. Erasbach, near Weidenwang in the Upper Palatinate, July 2, 1714; d. Vienna, Nov. 15, 1787. His father was a forester at Erasbach until his appointment as forester to Prince Lobkowitz of Eisenberg about 1729. Gluck received his elementary instruction in the village schools at Kamnitz and Albersdorf near Komotau, where he also was taught singing and instrumental playing. Some biographers refer to his study at the Jesuit college at Komotau, but there is no documentary evidence to support this contention. In 1732, Gluck went to Prague to complete his education, but it is doubtful that he took any courses at Prague Univ. He earned his living in Prague by playing violin and cello at rural dances in the area; also sang at various churches; there he had an opportunity to meet Bohuslav Černohorsky, who was chapelmaster at St. James' Church from 1735; it is probable that Gluck learned the methods of church music from him. He went to Vienna in 1736, and was chamber musician to young Prince Lobkowitz, son of the patron of Gluck's father. In 1737 he was taken to Milan by Prince Melzi; this Italian sojourn was of the greatest importance to Gluck's musical development. There he became a student of G. B. Sammartini and acquired a solid technique of composition in the Italian style. After 4 years of study, Gluck brought out his first opera Artaserse, to the text of the celebrated Metastasio; it was produced in Milan (Dec. 26, 1741) with such success that Gluck was immediately commissioned to write more operas. There followed Demetrio or Cleonice (Venice, May 2, 1742); Demofoonte (Milan, Dec. 26, 1742); Il Tigrane (Crema, Sept. 9, 1743); La Sofonisba or Siface (Milan, Jan. 13, 1744); Ipermestra (Venice, Nov. 21, 1744); Poro (Turin, Dec. 26, 1744); Ippolito or Fedra (Milan, Jan. 31, 1745). He also contributed separate numbers to several other operas produced in Italy. In 1745 Gluck received an invitation to go to London; on his way, he visited Paris and met Rameau. He was commissioned by the Italian Opera of London to write 2 operas for the Haymarket Theatre, as a competitive endeavor to Handel's enterprise. The first of these works was La Caduta dei giganti, a tribute to the Duke of Cumberland on the defeat of the Pretender; it was produced on Jan. 18, 1746; the second was a pasticcio, Artamene, in which Gluck used material from his previous operas; it was produced March 15, 1746. Ten days later, Gluck appeared with Handel at a public concert, despite the current report in London society that Handel had declared that Gluck knew no more counterpoint than his cook (it should be added that a professional musician, Gustavus Waltz, was Handel's cook and valet at the time). On April 23, 1746, Gluck gave a demonstration in London, playing on the 'glass harmonica.' He left London late in 1746 when he received an engagement as conductor with Pietro Mingotti's traveling Italian opera company. He conducted in Hamburg, Leipzig, and Dresden; on June 29, 1747, he produced a

GLUCK

'serenata,' Le Nozze d'Ercole e d'Ebe, to celebrate a royal wedding; it was performed at the Saxon court, in Pillnitz. Gluck then went to Vienna, where he staged his opera, Semiramide riconosciuta, after a poem of Metastasio (May 14, 1748). He then traveled to Copenhagen, where he produced a festive opera, La Contesa dei Numi (March 9, 1749), on the occasion of the birth of Prince Christian; his next productions (all to Metastasio's words) were Ezio (Prague, 1750); Issipile (Prague, 1752); La Clemenza di Tito (Naples, Nov. 4, 1752); Le Cinesi (Vienna, Sept. 24, 1754); La Danza (Vienna, May 5, 1755); L'innocenza giustificata (Vienna, Dec. 8, 1755); Antigono (Rome, Feb. 9, 1756); Il re pastore (Vienna, Dec. 8, 1756). In 1750 Gluck married Marianna Pergin, daughter of a Viennese merchant; for several years afterwards he conducted operatic performances in Vienna. As French influence increased there, Gluck wrote several entertainments to French texts, containing spoken dialogue, in the style of opéra-comique; of these, the most successful were Le Cadi dupé (December, 1761) and La Rencontre imprévue (Jan. 7, 1764; performed also under the title Les pèlerins de la Mecque, his most popular production in this genre). His greatest work of the Vienna period was Orfeo ed Euridice to a libretto by Calzabigi (in a version for male contralto; Oct. 5, 1762, with the part of Orfeo sung by the famous castrato, Gaetano Guadagni). Gluck revised it for a Paris performance, produced in French on Aug. 2, 1774, with Orfeo sung by a tenor. There followed another masterpiece, Alceste (Vienna, Dec. 16, 1767), also to Calzabigi's text. In the preface to Alceste, Gluck formulated his esthetic credo, which elevated the dramatic meaning of musical stage plays above the mere striving for vocal effects: "I sought to reduce music to its true function, that of seconding poetry in order to strengthen the emotional expression and the impact of the dramatic situations without interrupting the action and without weakening it by superfluous ornaments." Among other productions of the Viennese period were Il Trionfo di Clelia (Vienna, May 14, 1763); Il Parnaso confuso (Schönbrunn Palace, Jan. 24, 1765); Il Telemacco (Vienna, Jan. 30, 1765), and Paride ed Elena (Vienna, Nov. 30, 1770). The success of his French operas in Vienna led Gluck to the decision to try his fortunes in Paris, yielding to the persuasion of François du Roullet, an attaché at the French embassy in Vienna, who also supplied Gluck with his first libretto for a serious French opera, an adaptation of Racine's Iphigénie en Aulide (Paris, April 19, 1774). Gluck set out for Paris early in 1773, preceded by declarations in the Paris press by du Roulet and Gluck himself explaining in detail Gluck's ideas of dramatic music. These statements set off an intellectual battle in the Paris press and among musicians in general between the adherents of traditional Italian opera and Gluck's novel French opera. It reached an unprecedented degree of acrimony when the Italian composer Nicola Piccinni was engaged by the French court to write operas to French texts, in open competition to Gluck; intrigues multiplied, even though Marie Antoinette never wavered in her admiration for Gluck, who taught her singing and harpsichord playing. However, Gluck and Piccinni themselves never participated in the bitter polemics unleashed by their literary and musical partisans. The sensational successes of the French version of Gluck's Orfeo and of Alceste were followed by the production of Armide (Sept. 23, 1777), which aroused great admiration. Then followed Gluck's masterpiece, Iphigénie en Tauride (May 18, 1779), which established Gluck's superiority to Piccinni, who was commissioned to write an opera on the same subject, but failed to complete it in time. Gluck's last opera, Echo et Narcisse (Paris, Sept. 24, 1779), did not measure up to the excellence of his previous operas. By that time, Gluck's health had failed; he had several attacks of apoplexy, which resulted in a partial paralysis. In the autumn of 1779 he returned to Vienna, where he lived as an invalid for several more years. His last work was a De profundis for chorus and orchestra, written 5 years before his death. Besides his operas, he wrote several ballets, of which Don Juan (Vienna, Oct. 17, 1761) was the most successful; he further wrote a cycle of 7 songs to words by Klopstock, 7 trio-sonatas, several overtures, etc. Breitkopf & Härtel publ. excellent editions of Gluck's most important operas; other operas are included in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' and 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich'; H. Gál edited a Sinfonia in G, identical with the overture to Ipermestra; the trio-sonatas are found in Riemann's 'Collegium musicum'; songs in Delsarte's 'Archives du chant.' Wagner, while in Dresden (1842-49), made a complete revision of the score of Iphigénie en Aulide; this arrangement was so extensively used that a Wagnerized version of Gluck's music became the chief text for performances during the 19th century.—A complete ed. of Gluck's works was begun by the Bärenreiter Verlag in 1951.

Glyn, Margaret Henrietta, English musicologist; b. Ewell, Surrey, Feb. 28, 1865; d. there, June 3, 1946. She studied in London under Henry Frost and Yorke Trotter; became an authority on keyboard music of the Tudor period. She edited organ and virginal music by Byrd, Orlando Gibbons, John Bull, and other composers, and wrote the following books: The Rhythmic Conception of Music (1907); Analysis of the Evolution of Musical Form (1909); About Elizabethan Virginal Music and Its Composers (1924; 2nd ed., 1934); Theory of Musical Evolution (1924). She also composed a number of works for organ.

Gnecchi (něk'-kē), Vittorio, Italian opera composer; b. Milan, July 17, 1876; d. there, Feb. 5, 1954. He studied at the Milan Cons. His opera, Cassandra, was performed at Bologna on Dec. 5, 1905; some years later, after the première of Richard Strauss' Elektra, there was considerable discussion when the Italian critic Giovanni Tebaldini pointed out the identity of some 50 themes in both Cassandra and Elektra (Telepatia Musicale, in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana,' May, 1908).

Gnecchi also wrote the operas Virtù d'Amore (1896) and La Rosiera, after a comedy by Alfred de Musset (given at Gera, Germany, Feb. 12, 1927; in Italian, at Trieste, Jan. 24, 1931).—Cf. F. B. Pratella, Luci ed ombre: per un musicista italiano ignorato in Italia (Rome, 1933).

Gnessin (gnä'-sin), Mikhail Fabianovitch, Russian composer; b. Rostov-on-the-Don, Feb. 2, 1883; d. Moscow, May 6, 1957. He studied at the St. Petersburg Cons. with Rimsky-Korsakov and Liadov from 1901-08; went to Germany in 1911; in 1914, returned to Rostov, where he composed, taught music, and interested himself in various socialist activities. He made a trip to Palestine in 1921 to study Jewish music; some of his subsequent work reflected this visit. After 1923, he composed and taught alternately in Moscow and Leningrad. In addition to his Jewish music, he composed a number of works in the Romantic vein.—Works: dramatic music: Balagan, by Blok (1909); The Rose and the Cross, by Blok (1914); Antigone, by Sophocles (1909-15); Phoenician Women, by Euripides (1912-16); Oedipus Rex, by Sophocles (1914-15); The Story of the Red-haired Motele, by Utkin (1926-29); The Inspector-General, by Gogol (1926); operas: Abraham's Youth (1921-23) and The Maccabees; symph. movement for solo voices, chorus and orch., 1905-1917 (1925); for voice and orch.: Ruth (1909); Vrubel (1912); The Conqueror Worm (1913); for orch.: symph. fragment, After Shelley (1906-08); Songs of Adonis (1919); symph. fantasy, Songs of the Old Country (1919); suite, Jewish Orchestra at the Town Bailiff's Ball (1926); chamber music: Requiem, in memory of Rimsky-Korsakov, for string quartet and piano (1913-14); Variations on a Jewish Theme, for string quartet (1916); Azerbaijan Folk-songs, for string quartet (1930); Adygeya, for violin, viola, cello, clarinet, horn, and piano (1933); Sonata-Fantasia for piano, violin, viola, and cello (1945); Theme with Variations for cello and piano (1955); several song cycles; piano pieces; arrangements of Jewish folksongs. He publ. Reflections and Reminiscences of Rimsky-Korsakov (Moscow, 1956).—Cf. L. Sabaneyev, Modern Russian Composers (N. Y., 1927); A. Drozdov, Gnessin (Moscow, 1927; in Russian and German).

Gobbaerts (göhb'-bahrts), Jean-Louis, Belgian pianist and composer; b. Antwerp, Sept. 28, 1835; d. Saint-Gilles, near Brussels, May 5, 1886. He studied at the Brussels Cons. He wrote more than a thousand light piano pieces, some quite popular, using the pseudonyms 'Streabbog' (Gobbaerts reversed), 'Ludovic,' and 'Lévi.'

Gobbi, Tito, Italian baritone; b. Bassano del Grappa, Oct. 24, 1915. He studied law at Padua Univ., then took vocal lessons in Milan; made his opera début at Rome in 1938; sang at La Scala in 1942; in 1947 began European tours; made his American début in San Francisco in 1948; appeared at the Metropolitan Opera as Scarpio in Tosca in 1956, obtaining a decisive success. His repertory contains some 100 roles; his musicianship was demonstrated by his expert performance of the difficult part of Wozzeck in Alban Berg's opera, at La Scala in 1952.

Godard (gö'h-dahr'), Benjamin (Louis Paul), French composer; b. Paris, Aug. 18, 1849; d. Cannes, Jan. 10, 1895. He studied violin with Richard Hammer and later with Vieuxtemps, composition with Reber of the Paris Cons. He publ. his first work, a violin sonata, at the age of 16 and wrote several other chamber music pieces, obtaining the Prix Chartier. In 1878 he received a municipal prize for an orchestral work; in the same year he produced his first opera, Les Bijoux de Jeannette. His second opera was Pedro de Zalamea (Antwerp, Jan. 31, 1884), but it left little impact; then came his masterpiece, Jocelyn, after Lamartine's poem (Brussels, Feb. 25, 1888). The famous Berceuse from this opera became a perennial favorite, exhibiting Godard's lyric talent at its best. There followed the opera Dante, produced at the Opéra-Comique on Nov. 7, 1890. His opera, La Vivandière, was left unfinished at his death, and the orchestration was completed by Paul Vidal; it was staged posthumously in Paris on April 1, 1895; another posthumous opera, Les Guelphes, was produced in Rouen (Jan. 17, 1902). Godard wrote 3 programmatic symphonies: Symphonie Gothique (1883), Symphonie Orientale (1884), and Symphonie Légendaire (1886); and a Concerto Romantique for violin and orch. (1876); he also wrote 3 string quartets, 4 violin sonatas, a cello sonata, and 2 piano trios; piano pieces, and more than 100 songs. A 2-volume collection of Godard's piano works was publ. by G. Schirmer (N. Y., 1895); another collection of piano pieces was edited by Paolo Gallico (N. Y., 1909). —Cf. M. Clerjot, Benjamin Godard (Paris, 1902).

Goddard, Arabella, English pianist; b. St.-Servan, near Saint-Malo, France, Jan. 12, 1836; d. Boulogne, France, April 6, 1922. She began study with Kalkbrenner in Paris at the age of 6; made her first public appearance at the age of 14, in London at a Grand National Concert. After 3 years of study with the critic, J. W. Davison (whom she married in 1859), she made tours of Germany and Italy (1854-55); later toured the U. S., Australia, and India (1873-76). She wrote some piano pieces and a ballad.

Godebrye. See Jacotin.

Godfrey, Sir Dan (Daniel Eysers), English conductor; b. London, June 20, 1868; d. Bournemouth, July 20, 1939. He was the son of Daniel Godfrey, Sr.; studied at the Royal College of Music; was conductor of the London Military Band in 1890. In 1892, he settled in Bournemouth as conductor of the Winter Gardens orch.; founded the Symphony Concerts there in 1894, directed them until his retirement in 1934; he brought the concerts to a high level, and used all his efforts to promote the works of British composers. He was knighted in 1922 for his services to orchestral music. He wrote his memoirs, Memories and Music (1924).

Godfrey, Daniel, Sr., English bandmaster; b. Westminster, Sept. 4, 1831; d. Beeston, near Nottingham, June 30, 1903. Pupil and Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music, in which he was prof. of military music. Bandmaster of the Grenadier Guards, 1856; traveled with his band in the U. S., 1872; retired in 1896. He wrote popular waltzes (Mabel, Guards, Hilda, etc.), and made many arrangements for military band.

Godowsky (goh-dohf-skē), Leopold, famous pianist; b. Soshly, near Vilna, Feb. 13, 1870; d. New York, Nov. 21, 1938. He played in public as a child in Russia; at 14, was sent to Berlin to study at the Hochschule für Musik, but after a few months there, proceeded to New York; gave his first American concert in Boston, Dec. 7, 1884; in 1885, played engagements at the N. Y. Casino; in 1886, toured Canada with the Belgian violinist Ovide Musin. He then went back to Europe; played in society salons in London and Paris, and became a protégé of Saint-Saëns. In 1890 he joined the faculty of the N. Y. College of Music; on May 1, 1891, married Frieda Saxe, and became an American citizen. He taught at the Broad Street Cons. in Philadelphia (1894-95); was head of the piano dept. of the Chicago Cons. (1895-1900); then embarked on a European tour; gave a highly successful concert in Berlin (Dec. 6, 1900), and remained there as a teacher; from 1909-14, conducted a master class at the Vienna Academy of Music; made tours in the U. S. from 1912-14, and settled permanently in the U. S. at the outbreak of World War I. After the end of the war, he traveled in Europe, South America, and Asia as a concert pianist; his career ended in 1930 when he suffered a stroke.—Godowsky was one of the outstanding masters of the piano; possessing a scientifically inclined mind, he developed a method of 'weight and relaxation'; applying it to his own playing, he became an outstanding technician of his instrument, extending the potentialities of piano technique to the utmost, with particular attention to the left hand. He wrote numerous piano compositions of transcendental difficulty, yet entirely pianistic in style; also arranged works by Weber, Brahms, and Johann Strauss. Particularly remarkable are his 53 studies on Chopin's Études, combining Chopin's themes in ingenious counterpoint; among his original works, the most interesting are Triakontameron (30 pieces; 1920; No. 11 is the well known Alt Wien), and Java Suite (12 pieces). He also wrote simple pedagogical pieces, e.g., a set of 46 Miniatures for piano four-hands, in which the pupil is given a part within the compass of 5 notes only (1918); edited piano studies by Czerny, Heller, Köhler, etc.; composed music for the left hand alone (6 Waltz Poems, Prelude and Fugue, etc.), and publ. an essay, Piano Music for the Left Hand, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1935). Maurice Aronson publ. a musical examination paper, providing an analysis of Godowsky's Miniatures (N. Y., 1935).—Cf. Leonard S. Saxe, The Published Music of Leopold Godowsky, in 'Notes' (March, 1957), containing an annotated list of original works, arrangements, and editions.

Godron, Hugo, Dutch composer; b. Amsterdam, Nov. 22, 1900. He studied with Sem Dresden there. He has written: Divertimento, Musettes, and Cyclus for chamber orch.; music for string orch.; a piano concerto; several string quartets; a piano sonatina and other piano pieces.

Goeb, Roger, American composer; b. Cherokee, Iowa, Oct. 9, 1914. He studied agriculture and chemistry, and also violin, viola, trumpet, and horn. After graduating in agriculture from the Univ. of Wisconsin (1936), played in jazz bands; then went to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. Returning to America in 1939, he obtained his M. A. in Music at N. Y. Univ. and Ph. D. at the State Univ. of Iowa. He subsequently taught music at the Juilliard School of Mus. and at Columbia Univ. He was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship twice (1950 and 1952).—Works: for orch.: 1st symph. (1942-45); 2nd symph. (1946); 3rd symph. (N. Y., April 27, 1952, under Stokowski); 5 American Dances (1952); violin concerto (N. Y., Feb. 12, 1954, WNYC American Music Festival). Chamber music: sonata for solo viola (1942); string quartet No. 1 (1942); string trio (1945); suite for 4 clarinets (1946); suite for woodwind trio (1946); Lyric Piece, for trumpet and piano (1947); Prairie Song, for woodwind quintet (1947); piano quintet (1948); string quartet No. 2 (1948); septet for brass (1949); quintet for trombone and string quartet (1950); 3 concertantes for various instruments (1951-52).

Goedicke (gö'-di-ke), Alexander Fedorovitch, Russian composer; b. Moscow, March 3, 1877. He came of a musical family of German extraction; studied piano and composition at the Moscow Cons.; won the Rubinstein Prize in Vienna in 1900 with his Konzertstück. He was appointed prof. of piano at the Moscow Cons. in 1903.—Works: For orch.: 1st symph. (1903); 2nd symph. (Moscow, Nov. 29, 1908, composer conducting); 3rd symph. (1921); operas: At the Crossing (1933) and Jacquerie (1937); cantatas: Glory to Soviet Pilots (1934) and Fatherland of Joy (1937); also a concerto for French horn and trumpet; a trio for violin, cello, and piano; a quintet for 2 violins, viola, cello, and piano; a string quartet; numerous piano pieces; songs, and arrangements of Russian folksongs; transcriptions from Scarlatti, Bach, and Beethoven. His 80th birthday was celebrated in Moscow at a gala banquet (1957).—Cf. V. Yakovlev, A. F. Goedicke (Moscow, 1927; in Russian and German).

Goehr, Walter, German conductor; b. Berlin, May 28, 1903. He studied theory with Schoenberg; then became conductor of the Berlin Radio (1925-31). In 1933 he went to England; from 1946-49, was conductor of the BBC Theatre Orch.

Goepfart, Karl Eduard, German pianist, conductor, and composer; b. Weimar, March 8, 1859; d. there, Feb. 8, 1942. He studied with his father, Christian Heinrich Goepfart (1835-1890); also had lessons with Liszt. He toured as theater conductor in the U. S. and in Germany; wrote several operas of which only one, Der Müller von Sans Souci was produced (Weimar, 1907). He further wrote 2 symphonies, church music, and many songs.

Goepf, Philip Henry, American organist and writer on music; b. New York, June 23, 1864; d. Philadelphia, Aug. 25, 1936. He studied in Germany (1872-77); graduated from Harvard with honors in music in 1884; while there, he studied composition with J. K. Paine; graduated from the Univ. of Pennsylvania Law School in 1888, and practiced law until 1892. He then devoted himself to music in Philadelphia, as organist, teacher, and writer; from 1900 to 1921, he wrote the program notes for the Philadelphia Orch.; publ. Annals of Music in Philadelphia (1896); Symphonies and Their Meaning (3 vols., 1898, 1902, 1913); and composed pieces for piano and organ, a Christmas Cantata and an opera, The Lost Prince.

Goethe (gö-të), Wolfgang von, the illustrious German poet; b. Frankfurt-on-Main, Aug. 28, 1749; d. Weimar, March 22, 1832. Although he could not comprehend Beethoven, and even snubbed him, he had ideas of his own on music (see Briefwechsel zwischen Goethe und Zelter, Berlin, 1833); Ferd. Hiller also shows this in his Goethes musicalisches Leben (Cologne, 1883). In recent years Goethe's attitude toward music has been made the subject of investigation by several scholars.—Cf. K. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Goethe und Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (Leipzig, 1871; in Engl., with additions, London, 2nd ed., 1874); A. Goldman, Edwin Franko, eminent American bandmaster; b. Louisville, Ky., Jan. 1, 1878; d. New York, Feb. 21, 1956. He was the nephew of Sam Franko and Nahan Franko, well-known conductors; was brought to N. Y. when he was 8; became a student at the National Cons., where he studied composition with A. Dvořák, and cornet with J. Levy and C. Sohst. He became solo cornetist of the Metropolitan Opera orch. when he was 17, remaining there for 10 years. For the next 13 years he taught cornet and trumpet; he formed his first band in 1911. In 1918, the Goldman Band outdoor concerts were inaugurated; the first concert series was on the Columbia Univ. green; later they were held on other campuses or in public parks; after 1934, they were given on the Mall at Central Park and in Prospect Park, Brooklyn. Goldman toured the U. S. with his band; during 1945, conducted concerts for service men in the Philippines and Japan. His band was noted not only for its skill and musicianship but for its unusual repertory, including modern works especially commissioned for the band. Its high standards influenced bands throughout the country. Goldman was a founder and 1st president of the American Bandmasters' Association; received honorary Doc. Mus. degrees from Philips Univ. and Boston Univ., and more than 100 medals and other honors from governments and associations throughout the world. He wrote more than 100 brilliant marches, of which the best known is On the Mall; also other band music; solos for various wind instruments; studies and methods for cornet and other brass instruments; several songs. He appeared as soloist with the Berlin Philharmonic at the age of 13 in 1921; came to America in 1930; director of the Opera Workshop at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood; founder of the New England Opera Co. in 1946. A versatile musician, he has given successful lecture-recitals; translated opera librettos into singable English; presented popular radio talks on music; acted as moderator for Metropolitan opera broadcasts. A collection of his comments was publ. as Accents on Opera (N. Y., 1953).

Goldsand, Robert, Austrian pianist; b. Vienna, March 17, 1911. He studied with A. Manhart, M. Rosenthal, Camillo Horn, and Joseph Marx. He played in public at the age of 10; then toured in Europe and South America; made his U. S. début at Carnegie Hall, March 21, 1927; then was again in Europe, but settled permanently in the U. S. in 1939.

Goldschmidt, Adalbert von, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, May 5, 1848; d. there, Dec. 21, 1906. He studied at the Vienna Cons.; from his earliest efforts in composition, he became an ardent follower of Wagner. At the age of 22, he wrote a cantata, Die sieben Todsünden, to a poem by Hamerling (Berlin, 1875) which gained him considerable notoriety, thanks to a very successful application of Wagnerian principles. This was followed by a music drama, Helianthus (Leipzig, 1884), for which he wrote both words and music. A dramatic trilogy, Gaea (1889), was his most ambitious work along Wagnerian lines. He also brought out a comic opera, Die fromme Helene (Hamburg, 1897); wrote about 100 songs and a number of piano pieces.—Cf. E. Friedegg, Briefe an einen Komponisten: Musikalische Korrespondenz an Adalbert von Goldschmidt (Berlin, 1909).

Gollmick, Karl, German composer and music theorist; b. Dessau, March 19, 1796; d. Frankfurt, Oct. 3, 1866. He was of a musical family; his father, Friedrich Karl Gollmick (1774-1852), was an opera tenor. He studied theology in Strasbourg; in 1817, he settled in Frankfurt, where he taught French and served as chorusmaster. He wrote mostly for piano; publ. potpourris, etc. His writings include Kritische Terminologie für Musiker und Musikfreunde (1833; 2nd ed., 1839); Fétis als Mensch, Kritiker, Theoretiker und Komponist (1852); Handlexikon der Tonkunst (1858), etc. He also wrote an autobiography (1866).

Golovanov, Nikolai Semionovitch, Russian conductor and composer; b. Moscow, Jan. 21, 1891; d. there, Aug. 28, 1953. He was a pupil of Vassilenko at the Moscow Cons.; won the composition prize for his cantata Princess Yurata; toured as conductor of the Moscow synodal choir; from 1915, was choral leader at the Bolshoy Theater, Moscow; from 1925, teacher of opera and orchestral classes at the Moscow Cons. He received the Order of the Red Banner in 1935; 4 times recipient of the First Stalin Prize (1946, 1948, 1950, 1951) for his work at the Bolshoy Theater. He wrote 2 symph. poems (Salome and From Verhaeren), church music, songs (altogether more than 40 works).—Cf. N. Anosov, Nikolai Semionovitch Golovanov in 'Sovetskaya Musica' (May, 1951).

Golschmann, Vladimir, renowned conductor; b. Paris, Dec. 16, 1893. He studied violin and piano at the Schola Cantorum; as early as 1919 he organized the Concerts Golschmann in Paris, in programs featuring many first performances of modern works. In 1923 he conducted ballet in the U. S.; then returned to Paris; was conductor of the Scottish Orch., Glasgow, for 3 seasons (1928-30); in 1931 he was engaged as conductor of the St. Louis Symph. Orch., retaining this post for a quarter of a century; also appeared as guest conductor with other American orchestras. His brother, Boris Golschmann (b. Paris, June 25, 1906), is a pianist.

Goltermann, Georg (Eduard), German cellist and composer; b. Hanover, Aug. 19, 1824; d. Frankfurt, Dec. 29, 1898. He studied cello in Munich, where he was also a pupil of Lachner in composition. After concert tours in 1850-52, he became music director at Würzburg; in 1853, he was made 2nd Kapellmeister of the City Theater of Frankfurt; in 1874, he became 1st Kapellmeister. He composed a number of works for cello, including 6 concertos; sonatas with piano; Morceaux caractéristiques; Danses allemandes; Elégie, etc. He also wrote a symphony, 2 overtures, and songs.

Golther (göhl'-ter), Wolfgang, German writer; b. Stuttgart, May 25, 1863; d. Rostock, Dec. 14, 1945. He was prof. of Germanic philology at Rostock; beside works on this subject, he wrote several important books on the music of Richard Wagner: Die Sage von Tristan und Isolde (1887), Die sagengeschichtlichen Grundlagen der Ringdichtung Richard Wagners (1902), Bayreuth (1904), Richard Wagner als Dichter (1904; English transl. by Haynes, 1907), Tristan und Isolde in den Dichtungen des Mittelalters und der neueren Zeit (1907), Zur deutschen Sage und Dichtung (1911), Parsifal und der Gral in deutscher Sage des Mittelalters und der Neuzeit (1913; new ed., 1925); Richard Wagner (1926); Cosima Wagner (in 'Zeitschrift für Musik,' Nov., 1931; also in 'Die Musik,' 1933); Der Schwanritter und der Gralsritter (in 'Bayreuther Blätter,' 1936); edited 'R. Wagner an Mathilde Wesendonck' (1904; many editions), 'Briefe R. Wagners an Otto Wesendonck' (8th ed. 1905), 'Familienbriefe von R. Wagner' (1907), 'Robert Franz und Arnold Freiherr Senfft von Pilsach' (1907; correspondence), and Richard Wagner, Zehn Lieder aus den Jahren 1838-58 (1921). He wrote an opera, Hassan gewinnt (Rostock, 1929).

Gombert, Nicolas, Flemish composer; b. southern Flanders, possibly between Lille and St. Omer, c. 1490; d. 1556. He was one of the most eminent pupils of Josquin des Prez, on whose death he composed a funeral dirge. The details of his early life are obscure and uncertain. He is first positively accounted for in 1526, when his name appears on the list of singers at the court chapel of Charles V that was issued at Granada in that year; the restless Emperor traveled continually throughout his extensive domain—Spain, Germany, and the Netherlands—and his retinue was obliged to follow him in his round of his courts at Vienna, Madrid, and Brussels; Gombert probably was taken into the service of the Emperor on one of the latter's visits to Brussels. He is first mentioned as 'maistre des enfans de la chapelle de nostre sr empereur' (master of the boys of the royal chapel) in a court document dated Jan. 1, 1529; he remained in the Emperor's employ until 1538-40, during which time he took an active part in the various functions of the court, composing assiduously. After his retirement from his post in the royal chapel, he seems to have returned to his native Netherlands (Tournai) and there continued to compose until his death. He held a canonship at Notre Dame, Courtrai, from June 23, 1537, without having to take up residence there, and was also a canon at the Cathedral of Tournai from June 19, 1534. Despite his many trips abroad and the natural influence of the music of other countries, Gombert remained, stylistically, a Netherlander. The chief feature of his sacred works is his use of imitation, a principle which he developed to a high state of perfection. The parts are always in motion, and pauses appear infrequently and, when they do occur, are very short. In his handling of the dissonance he may be regarded as a forerunner of Palestrina. His secular works, of which the earliest known printed examples (9 4-part chansons) are included in Attaignant's collection of 1529-49, are characterized by a refreshing simplicity and directness. Gombert's greatest contributions to the development of 16th-century music lay in his recognizing the peculiarities of the Netherlandish polyphony and his developing and spreading it abroad. He wrote 11 Masses and about 250 motets and chansons, many of which appeared in contemporary (mostly Spanish) lute and guitar arrangements, a fact which shows the great vogue they had. Reprints have been publ. by F. Commer in Collectio operum musicorum Batavorum (1839 ff.) VIII (1 motet) and XII (2 chansons); A. Reissmann in Allgemeine Geschichte der Musik (1863; 1 chanson); R. J. v. Maldeghem in 'Trésor musical' (1865 ff.) II (1 motet), XI (3 chansons), XII (1 motet), XIV (5 chansons), XVI (1 motet of doubtful authorship), XVII (1 chanson), XX (2 motets); R. Eitner in 'Publikationen älterer praktischer . . . Musikwerke' III (1875; 2 chansons); A. W. Ambros in Geschichte der Musik V (3rd ed. 1911; 1 motet, revised by O. Kade); E. H. Wooldridge in The Oxford History of Music II (1905; 1 motet); Th. Kroyer in Der vollkommene Partiturspieler (1930; 10 Magnificat selections); A. Schering in Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (1931; No. 102, portion of the Mass Media vita); a motet is in Attainant's Treize livres de motets (Book I, pp. 167-75), reprinted by the Lyrebird Press (Paris, 1934). Gombert's Opera omnia, ed. by J. Schmidt-Görg, began publication in 1951 (American Institute of Musicology in Rome; vol. I, 1951; vol. II, 1954.—Cf. D. von Bartha, Probleme der Chansongeschichte im 16. Jahrhundert in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' XIII (Aug.-Sept., 1931); H. Schmidt-Görg, Die acht Magnifikat des Nicolas Gombert in 'Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kulturgeschichte Spaniens' V (1935; contains a Magnificat secundi toni and selections from other Magnificats); J. Schmidt-Görg, Nicolas Gombert, Leben und Werk (Bonn, 1938; contains bibliography of works, musical examples, etc.).

Gombosi, Otto, eminent musicologist; b. Budapest, Oct. 23, 1902; d. Natick, Mass., Feb. 17, 1955. He studied at the Academy of Music in Budapest; then at the Univ. of Berlin, where he received his Ph. D. for a dissertation on Jakob Obrecht. From 1926-28 he edited the progressive Hungarian music periodical, 'Crescendo.' In 1940 he came to the U. S.; was lecturer in music at the Univ. of Washington, Seattle; then taught at Michigan State College and at the Univ. of Chicago; in 1951, appointed prof. at Harvard Univ. He contributed numerous valuable papers to various periodicals, in Hungarian, German, Italian, and English; among his most important writings are Jakob Obrecht (Leipzig, 1925); Tonarten und Stimmungen der antiken Musik (Copenhagen, 1939); a treatise on V. Bakfark in 'Musicologia Hungarica' (Budapest, 1935; contains Bakfark's 10 fantasias); Studien zur Tonartenlehre des frühen Mittelalters, in 'Acta musicologica' (1938-39); several articles in the 'Mus. Quarterly': The Melody of Pindar's Golden Lyre (July, 1940); About Dance and Dance Music in the Late Middle Ages (July, 1941); Stephen Foster and 'Gregory Walker' (April, 1944); Béla Bartók (Jan., 1946); Machaut's Messe Notre-Dame (April, 1950). He contributed the chapter on Hungarian music to G. Reese's Music in the Renaissance (N. Y., 1954).

Gomes, Antonio Carlos, Brazilian composer; b. (of Portuguese parents) Campinas, Brazil, July 11, 1836; d. Pará (Belém), Sept. 16, 1896. He was a pupil of his father, then of the Cons. in Rio de Janeiro, where he prod. 2 operas, Noite do Castelo (1861) and Joanna de Flandres (1863). The success of these works induced the Emperor Don Pedro II to grant him a stipend for further study under Rossi in Milan; there he soon made his mark with a little humorous piece entitled Se sa minga (a song from this work, Del fucile ad ago, became immensely popular), produced in 1867. After another piece in the same vein (Nella Luna, 1868), he made a more serious bid for fame with the opera Il Guarany, produced at La Scala on March 19, 1870, with brilliant success; this work, in which Amazon-Indian themes are used, quickly went the round of Italy, and was given in London (Covent Garden) on July 13, 1872. Returning to Rio de Janeiro, Gomes brought out a very popular operetta, Telegrapho elettrico. With the exception of Fosca (La Scala, Milan, Feb. 16, 1873), his other operas obtained considerable success; they comprise Salvator Rosa (Genoa, March 21, 1874), Maria Tudor (La Scala, Milan, March 27, 1879), Lo Schiavo (Rio de Janeiro, Sept. 27, 1889), and Condor (La Scala, Milan, Feb. 21, 1891). He wrote the hymn Il saluto del Brasile, for the centenary of American independence (1876); also the cantata Columbo for the Columbus Festival in 1892. In 1895 he was appointed director of the newly founded Cons. at Pará; illness delayed his departure for that city, and he died soon after arriving there. Besides his operas, he composed songs (3 books), choruses, and piano pieces.—Cf. S. Bocanera Júnior, Um artista brasileiro: in memoriam (Bahia, 1904); H. P. Vieira, Carlos Gomes: sua arte e sua obra (São Paulo, 1934); I. Gomes Vaz de Carvalho, A vida de Carlos Gomes (Rio de Janeiro, 1935; Italian transl., Milan, 1935); R. Seidl, Carlos Gomes, brasileiro e patriota (Rio de Janeiro, 1935); L. F. Vieira Souto, Antonio Carlos Gomes (Rio de Janeiro, 1936); centenary issue of 'Revista brasileira de musica' (1936); J. Prito, Carlos Gomes (São Paulo, 1936); R. Almeida, Carlos Gomes (Rio de Janeiro, 1937); M. de Andrade, Carlos Gomes (Rio de Janeiro, 1939); P. Cerquera, Carlos Gomes (São Paulo, 1944).

Gomes de Araújo (ah-räh-oo-zoh), João, Brazilian composer; b. Pindamonhangaba, Aug. 5, 1846; d. São Paulo, Sept. 8, 1942. He studied at São Paulo and Milan; in 1905, became a teacher at São Paulo Cons., and remained there almost to the end of his long life. He wrote 4 operas: Edmea; Carminosa (Milan, 1888); Maria Petrowna (1904; São Paulo, 1929); Helena (São Paulo, 1910); also 6 symphonies, 6 Masses, vocal and instrumental works.

Gómez, Julio, Spanish composer and musician; b. Madrid, Dec. 20, 1886. He studied at the Madrid Cons., also at the Univ. there, where he received his Dr. phil. In 1911 he became director of the Archeological Museum in Toledo; later head of the music division of the National Library in Madrid, and librarian of the Cons. there; also editor of the review 'Harmonia.' His study of Don Blas Laserna was publ. in 'Revista de la Biblioteca, Archivo y Museo del Ayuntamiento de Madrid,' 1925-26. He wrote the comic operas El Pelele (1925) and Himno al Amor; also symphonies, piano pieces, songs, etc.

Gomezanda, Antonio, Mexican pianist and composer; b. Lagos, Jalisco, Sept. 3, 1894. He studied piano with Manuel M. Ponce; then went to Germany, where he took lessons in composition and conducting in Berlin. Returning to Mexico, he taught piano at the National Cons. (1921-29) and at the Univ. of Mexico (1929-32). Among his works are an 'Aztec ballet,' Xiuhzitziquilo, which was produced in Berlin on Feb. 19, 1928; Fantasia mexicana, for piano and orch. (1923); piano pieces.

Gomolka, Michal, Polish musician, son of Mikolaj Gomolka; b. Sandomierz, 1564; d. Jazlowiec, March 9, 1609. He was active as a band conductor at various palaces of Polish noblemen; little is known of his life, except that he enjoyed the favor of Polish aristocratic society.

Gomolka, Mikolaj (Nicolas), Polish composer; b. Sandomierz, about 1535; date of death unknown. He was a chorist at Cracow (1545), and then played trumpet and flute in the court orchestra. In 1559 he returned to his native town, where he married and served as a judge. His chief work was Melodiae na psalterz polski (Cracow, 1580), containing 150 melodies to words from the Psalms translated by the poet Jan Kochanowski; new edition was publ. by J. W. Reiss in 1923; several pieces are included in the anthology by Jachimecki and Lissa, Music of the Polish Renaissance (Warsaw, 1954). — Cf. J. W. Reiss, Melodye psalmowe M. Gomolki (Cracow, 1912); A. Chybinski, Słownik Muzyków Dawnej Polski (Cracow, 1949).

Goodman, Benny, American clarinetist and jazz band leader; b. Chicago, May 30, 1909. He acquired a taste for syncopated music as a child by listening to phonographic recordings of ragtime and jazz. He also took lessons in clarinet playing. In 1928, he went to New York as a clarinetist in a jazz band. In 1934, formed his own band, which in 1935 was billed in Chicago as a swing band, the first use of the word 'swing' in relation to public performance. He also played clarinet parts in classical works in concert and for records, appearing as soloist in Mozart's Clarinet Concerto with the N. Y. Philharmonic (Dec. 12, 1940). His autobiography, The Kingdom of Swing, was published in 1939.

Goodrich, Alfred John, American music pedagogue; b. Chilo, Ohio, May 8, 1848; d. Paris, April 25, 1920. A self-taught musician, he became a teacher of theory at the Grand Cons., N. Y.; the Fort Wayne Cons., Ind.; director of the vocal department at the Beethoven Cons., St. Louis; member of music department, Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va.; later lived in Chicago, Paris, and St. Louis as writer and teacher. He wrote: Music as a Language (1880); The Art of Song (1888); Complete Musical Analysis (1889); Analytical Harmony (1894); Theory of Interpretation (1898; publ. by subscription); Guide to Memorizing Music (1904; revised ed., 1906); Synthetic Counterpoint (in MS).

Goodrich, (John) Wallace, American organist, conductor, and writer on music; b. Newton, Mass., May 27, 1871; d. Boston, June 6, 1952. He studied at the New England Cons. in Boston (organ with Dunham, composition with Chadwick); then in Munich with Rheinberger (1894-95) and with Widor in Paris. In 1896-97, he was coach at the Leipzig Municipal Theater. In 1897 he returned to Boston and became an instructor at the New England Cons.; he was appointed dean in 1907, and director in 1931, a post he held until 1942, when he resigned, with the title of director emeritus. He was organist of Trinity Church from 1902-09, and for the Boston Symp. Orch., from 1897-1909. He founded the Choral Art Society in 1902 and was its conductor until 1907; he was also, at various periods, conductor of the Cecilia Society, the Boston Opera Co., and the Worcester County Choral Association. He composed an Ave Maria for chorus and orch. (Munich, 1895) and other choral music; wrote The Organ in France (Boston, 1917) and translated A. Pirro's J. S. Bach and his Works for the Organ (1902) and d'Ortigue's Méthode d'accompagnement du plain-chant (1905).

Goodson, Katharine, English pianist; b. Watford, Hertfordshire, June 18, 1872. From 1886-92 she was a pupil of O. Beringer at the Royal Academy of Music, and from 1892-96 of Leschetizky in Vienna; début in London at a Saturday Pop. Concert, Jan. 16, 1897, with signal success; then followed tours of England, France, Austria, and Germany, which established her reputation; her American début, with the Boston Symph., took place Jan. 18, 1907; since then she made many tours of the U. S., also of Holland, Belgium, and Italy. In 1903 she married the English composer Arthur Hinton.

Goossens, Sir Eugene, outstanding English conductor and composer; b. London, May 26, 1893. A scion of a family of musicians of Belgian extraction, he was educated at the Bruges Cons., returning to England in 1906; he subsequently studied at the Liverpool College of Music (1906); then won a scholarship of the Royal College of Music in London (1907); studied violin with Rivarde, piano with Dykes, and composition with Charles Wood and Stanford; won the silver medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians; then played the violin in the Queen's Hall Orch. He was associated with Sir Thomas Beecham's operatic enterprises (1915-20); conducted a season of concerts with his own orch. in London (1921). In 1923 he was engaged as conductor of the Rochester, N. Y., Philharmonic Orch.; in 1931 he was appointed conductor of the Cincinnati Symph. Orch., remaining at that post until 1946. From 1947 to 1956 he was director of the New South Wales Cons. of Music at Sydney and conductor of the Sydney Symph. Orch.; he was knighted in 1955. Goossens belongs to a group of English composers influenced by French impressionism, who cultivated exotic themes with modernistic harmonies stemming from Debussy. He conducted his first orchestral piece, Variations on a Chinese Theme, at the age of 19 at the Royal College of Music in London (June 20, 1912); continued to write prolifically in all genres (opera, ballet, symphony, chamber music); his mature style became a blend of impressionistic harmonies and neo-classical polyphony; while retaining a clear tonal outline, Goossens often resorts to expressive chromatic melos bordering on atonality. — Works: Variations on a Chinese Theme for orch. (1911); Miniature Fantasy for string orch. (1911); suite for flute, violin, and harp (1914); Five Impressions of a Holiday for flute, cello, and piano (1914); symph. poem Perseus (1914); symph. prelude Ossian (1915); Phantasy Quartet for strings (1915); string quartet No. 1 (1916); 2 sketches for string quartet: By the Tarn and Jack o' Lantern (1916); Kaleidoscope, suite of piano pieces in a humorous vein (1917-18); violin sonata No. 1 (1918); prelude to Verhaeren's Philip II (1918); The Eternal Rhythm for orch. (London, Oct. 19, 1920); 4 Conceits for piano (1918); piano quintet (1919); Lyric Poem for violin and piano (1921; also arranged for violin and orch.); ballet L'École en crinoline (1921); Silence for chorus and piano (1922); incidental music to W. Somerset Maugham's East of Suez (1922); Sinfonietta (London, Feb. 19, 1923); string sextet (1923); Pastoral and Harlequinade for flute, oboe, and piano (1924) Fantasy for wind instruments (1924); opera, Judith (1925; Covent Garden, June 25, 1929); Rhythmic Dance for orch. (Rochester, March 12, 1927); Concertino for double string orch. (1928); oboe concerto (London, Oct. 2, 1930; Leon Goossens, soloist); violin sonata No. 2 (1930); opera Don Juan de Mañara (1934; Covent Garden, June 24, 1937); symph. No. 1 (Cincinnati, April 12, 1940); 2nd string quartet (1942); Phantasy-Concerto for piano and orch. (Cincinnati, Feb. 25, 1944, composer conducting; Iturbi, soloist); 2nd symph. (BBC, Nov. 10, 1946); oratorio Apocalypse (1951; Sydney, Nov. 22, 1954, composer conducting). Goossens is the author of Overture and Beginners; a Musical Autobiography (London, 1951).

Goossens, Leon, English oboist, brother of Eugene Goossens; b. Liverpool, June 12, 1897. He studied at the Royal College of Music; from 1913-24 was 1st oboist of the Queen's Hall Orch.; afterward played with the Royal Philharmonic Orch., the London Philharmonic Orch., and the Covent Garden Opera; held oboe professorships at the Royal College of Music and Royal Academy of Music; appeared in many countries, including the U. S., where he first performed with his brother, Eugene, in N. Y. in 1927.

Goovaerts (goh'-vahrts), Alphonse Jean Marie André, Belgian musicologist; b. Antwerp, May 25, 1847; d. Brussels, Dec. 25, 1922. He was a member of a literary family; as a youth he became greatly interested in Flemish literature and in church music. He arranged and publ. a collection of Flemish songs (1868-74); composed several pieces of church music, and performed them with a chorus which he established in Antwerp; also made transcriptions for chorus of works by Palestrina and Flemish contrapuntists. He publ. several papers propounding a reform in church music, which aroused opposition from conservative circles (La Musique de l'église, 1876; in Flemish as De Kerkmuziek); also publ. a valuable book, Histoire et bibliographie de la typographie musicale dans le Pays-Bas (1880; awarded the gold medal of the Belgian Academy); a monograph on the Belgian music printer, Pierre Phalèse, and other studies relating to Flemish music.

Gorczycki (gor-tchit'-skē), Gregor Gervasius, Polish composer; b. Cracow, c. 1664; d. there, April 30, 1734. He was a student of the theology at Prague Univ.; was ordained priest in Cracow in 1692; became chapel master at the Cracow Cathedral in 1698, retaining this position until his death. He was the composer of many excellent motets, hymns, psalms, and Masses in a polyphonic style, a cappella and with instrumental accompaniment, to Latin texts; several of them were reprinted in the Polish collections edited by Cichocki, Surzynski, Sowinski, and Chybinski.—Cf. A. Chybinski, G. G. Gorczycki (Poznań, 1927); also see Chybinski's Słownik Muzyków Dawnej Polski (Cracow, 1949) for a complete list of editions of Gorczycki's sacred works.

Gordigiani (gor-dē-jah'-nē), Luigi, Italian composer; b. Florence, June 12, 1806; d. there, April 30, 1860. He is chiefly known for his more than 300 songs for voice and piano; these canzonette and canti popolari were based on Italian folk tunes; Gordigiani wrote the words for many himself. He also publ. a collection of songs based on Tuscan folk poems. Ricordi has publ. 67 songs in 2 vols. in the series 'Canti popolari italiani.' Other works by Gordigiani include 10 operas, 3 cantatas, a ballet, and an oratorio.

Gordon, Gavin Muspratt, Scotch singer and composer; b. Ayr, Nov. 24, 1901. He studied at the Royal College of Music with Vaughan Williams; later was active as singer, film actor, and composer. He has written several ballets: A Toothsome Morsel (1930); Regatta (1931); The Scorpions of Ysyt (1932); The Rake's Progress (London, Sadler's Wells, May 20, 1935).

Gordon, Jacques, violinist; b. Odessa, Russia, March 7, 1899; d. Hartford, Conn., Sept. 15, 1948. He graduated from the Imperial Cons. at Odessa in 1912; then studied at the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y., with Kneisel (violin) and Goetschius (theory); made his début as violinist in 1911 in Berlin; from 1918-21, was a member of the Berkshire String Quartet; in 1921 he founded the Gordon String Quartet. From 1921-30, he was concertmaster of the Chicago Symp. Orch., and violin teacher at the American Cons. in Chicago. In 1938, he was awarded the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge medal for services to chamber music. He publ. some violin music and arrangements.

Gordon, James Caryl Gerhard, flute maker; b. Cape Town, May 22, 1791; d. (insane) Lausanne, c. 1845. He was a son of a Dutch captain and a Swiss mother in South Africa. He joined the Swiss Guards of Charles X in Paris in 1814; at the same time, studied flute with Tulou; worked on improvements of its mechanism more or less at the same time as Böhm, so that the priority of the invention became a matter of insoluble controversy. He escaped with his life during the attack on the Swiss Guards in the Revolution of 1830; was pensioned and retired to Switzerland when his mind became deranged.—Cf. C. Welch, History of the Boehm Flute (London, 1896); Percival R. Kirby, Captain Gordon, The Flute Maker, in 'Music & Letters' (July, 1957).

Gorin, Igor, baritone; b. Grodek Jagiell, Ukraine, Oct. 26, 1908. He studied at the Vienna Cons., graduating in 1930; sang at the Vienna Opera and the Czech State Opera; also in recitals in many European cities; came to the U. S. in 1933; became a citizen in 1939; has sung with symph. orchestras and for radio. He is the composer of several songs, including Lament, Caucasian Song, Lullaby, Within My Dreams, Remembered Mornings, The Jumping Jack, etc.

Gorini, Gino, Italian composer and pianist; b. Venice, June 22, 1914. He studied there at the Cons. Benedetto Marcello; received diplomas in piano (1931) and composition (1933); later studied composition with Malipiero; in 1940 was appointed prof. of piano at the Venice Cons.; has made many tours in Italy and abroad, including two-piano team tours in Italy with Sergio Lorenzi. His major works include: Maschere, suite for small orch. (1932); Tre omaggi, for orch. (1933); suite for piano and orch. (1934); violin concerto (1934); a symph. (1935); Introduction and Arioso for orch. (1937); Concertino for 7 instruments (1933); Contrasti for 5 instruments (1933); 2 studies for piano and strings (1934); Divertimento for chamber orch. (1935); piano sonata (1936); string quartet (1936); cello sonata (1939); quintet for piano and strings (1939), etc.

Goritz, Otto, German dramatic baritone; b. Berlin, June 8, 1873; d. Hamburg, April 11, 1929. He received his entire musical education from his mother, Olga Nielitz; début, Oct. 1, 1895, as Matteo (Fra Diavolo) at the Hoftheater in Neustrelitz; his success led to an immediate engagement for 3 years; 1898-1900, at the Stadttheater in Breslau; 1900-3, at Stadttheater in Hamburg. On Dec. 24, 1903, he made his American début at the Metropolitan Opera House as Klingsor in the first production of Parsifal outside Bayreuth. In 1924, returned to Germany, where he sang in opera in Berlin and Hamburg.

Gorno, Albino, pianist and composer; b. Casalmorano (Cremona), March 10, 1859; d. Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 29, 1945. He studied at the Milan Cons., where he took 3 gold medals, and where his opera, Cuore e Patria, was produced. He was accompanist to Adelina Patti on her American tour (1881-82); stayed and became head of the piano department and dean of faculty at the Cincinnati College of Music. He wrote a cantata, many pieces for piano, and songs.

Gorno, Romeo, pianist and teacher; brother of Albino Gorno; b. Cremona, Italy, Jan. 1, 1870; d. Cincinnati, Nov. 28, 1931. He studied in Milan with his father, later a pupil of the Cons. there; made his American début in Cincinnati; was for many years prof. of piano at the Cincinnati College of Music.

Gorodnitzki, Sascha, pianist; b. Kiev, Russia, May 24, 1905; brought to the U. S. as an infant. He studied at the Institute of Musical Art and the Juilliard Graduate School in New York; appeared as a child prodigy at 9; toured the U. S. and Canada in recitals; in 1930, won the Schubert Memorial Prize, appointed prof. of piano at the Juilliard Graduate School in 1932.

Gorrio, Tobia. Pen name (anagram) of Arrigo Boito.

Gorter, Albert, German conductor and composer; b. Nuremberg, Nov. 23, 1862; d. Munich, March 14, 1936. He studied at the Royal Music School in Munich and in Italy; became assistant conductor of the Bayreuth festivals; then conducted in various German cities until 1925, when he settled in Munich. He wrote text and music of an opera, Harold; 3 comic operas, Der Schatz des Rhapsinit (Mannheim, 1894), Das süsse Gift (Cologne, 1906), and Der Paria (Strasbourg, March 31, 1908); 2 symph. poems; piano pieces, and songs.

Goss, Sir John, English organist and composer; b. Fareham, Hants, Dec. 27, 1800; d. London, May 10, 1880. A son of Joseph Goss, the Fareham organist, he became a child chorister of the Royal Chapel; then studied under Attwood. He was successively organist of Stockwell Chapel (1821), St. Luke's, Chelsea (1824), and St. Paul's Cathedral (1838-72). In 1856 he was appointed a composer to the Chapel Royal; he was knighted in 1872, and received the degree of Mus. Doc. from Cambridge Univ. in 1876. His music includes church services, anthems, chants, psalms, etc.; some orchestral pieces; songs and glees. He edited a collection of hymns, Parochial Psalmody (1827); Chants, Ancient and Modern (1841); Church Psalter and Hymnbook (1856; with Rev. W. Mercer). He publ. The Organist's Companion, 4 vols. of voluntaries and interludes, and An Introduction to Harmony and Thorough-bass (1833; many editions).

Goss, John, English baritone; b. London, May 10, 1894; d. Birmingham, Feb. 13, 1953. He began to study music relatively late in life, and was active as a singer and a music editor. He gave a number of successful recitals in England and America, in variegated programs of unusual old and new songs. He edited an Anthology of Song (London, 1928) and a collection, Ballads of Britain (London, 1937); also publ. a novel, Cockroaches and Diamonds (1937).

Gossec, François Joseph, Belgian composer; b. Vergnies, Jan. 17, 1734; d. Paris, Feb. 16, 1829. He showed musical inclinations at an early age, and was engaged as a chorister at the Cathedral of Antwerp; received some instruction in violin and organ playing there. In 1751 he went to Paris, and in 1754 joined a private musical ensemble of the rich amateur, La Pouplinière. There he wrote chamber music and little symphonies, in which he seems to have anticipated Haydn; these were publ.; several works for string quartet followed in 1759. After the death of La Pouplinière in 1762, Gossec became a member of the retinue of the Prince de Conti, and continued to compose for private performances. In 1760 he wrote a Requiem; then turned his attention to stage music; produced a one-act opera, Le faux Lord (Paris, June 27, 1765); obtained a decisive success with another short opera, Les Pêcheurs (June 7, 1766); there followed the operas (performed at the Comédie-Italienne and at the Paris Opéra) Toinon et Toinette (June 20, 1767); Le double Déguisement (Sept. 28, 1767); Sabinus (Feb. 22, 1774); Alexis et Daphné (Sept. 26, 1775); La fête du village (May 26, 1778); Thésée (March 1, 1782); Rosine (July 14, 1786); several other operas (Nitocris, La Fédération, etc.) were not performed. In 1770 he organized a performing society, Concerts des Amateurs; became a director of the Concert Spirituel (1773); was also an associate director of the Paris Opéra (1780-85) and manager of the École Royale de Chant (1784); when this school became the Conservatoire in 1795, Gossec became one of the inspectors, and also taught composition there; he publ. a manual, Exposition des Principes de la Musique for use of the Conservatoire. In 1795 he became a member of the newly founded Institut de France. Gossec welcomed the French Revolution with great enthusiasm, and wrote many festive works to celebrate Revolutionary events, among them L'Offrande à la Liberté (1792); Le Triomphe de la République (1793); Le Cri de Vengeance (1799), and numerous marches and hymns. During his long life, he saw many changes of régime, but retained his position in the musical world and in society throughout the political upheavals. He retired to Passy, then a suburb of Paris, at the age of 80. Gossec's historic role consists in his creation of a French type of symphonic composition, in which he expanded the resources of instrumentation so as to provide for dynamic contrasts; he experimented with new sonorities in instrumental and choral writing; his string quartets attained a coherence of style and symmetry of form that laid the foundation of French chamber music. In his choral works, Gossec was a bold innovator, presaging in some respects the usages of Berlioz; his Te Deum, written for a Revolutionary festival, is scored for 1200 singers and 300 wind instruments; in his oratorio,

La Nativité, he introduced an invisible chorus of angels placed behind the stage; in other works, he separated choral groups in order to produce special antiphonal effects. Among reprints of Gossec's works are: Trio in E $\flat$  in Riemann's 'Collegium musicum' (Leipzig, 1909); string quartet, op. 15, No. 2, in 'Veröffentlichungen der Musiksammlung W. Höckner' (facsimile reprint; Leipzig, 1932); string quartet, op. 14, No. 5, edited by S. Beck (N. Y., 1937); 2 symphonies, in E $\flat$  and G, edited by S. Beck (N. Y., 1937); a symphony in C major is found in Sondheimer's collection Werke aus dem 18. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1922-39); a symphony for 10 instruments, op. 5, No. 2, in G. Cucuël, Études sur un orchestre de XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Paris, 1913).—Cf. P. Hérouin, Gossec, sa vie et ses ouvrages (Paris, 1852); E. G. J. Gregoir, Notice bibliographique sur M. Gossé, dit Gossec (Paris, 1878); F. Hellouin, Gossec et la musique française à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (Paris, 1903); L. Dufrane, Gossec (Paris, 1927); F. Tonnard, F. J. Gossec, musicien hennuyer de la Révolution française (Brussels, 1938); J. G. Prod'homme, F.-J. Gossec (Paris, 1949).

Gotovac, Jakov, Yugoslav composer; b. Split, Oct. 11, 1895. He studied law in Zagreb, and music with Dobronić in Zagreb and Joseph Marx in Vienna. In 1923 he was appointed conductor of the Zagreb Opera. Gotovac is a prolific composer; his Symphonic Kolo (Zagreb, Feb. 6, 1927) is an effective national dance; his symph. poem Guslar (Zagreb, Oct. 7, 1940) is a musical portrait of a Croatian folk player. Gotovac has written several operas, of which the comic opera Ero s onoga svijeta (Zagreb, Nov. 2, 1935) has become very popular; under the title Ero der Schelm it was performed in German, in Karlsruhe (April 3, 1938). His other operas are: Morana (Brno, Nov. 29, 1930); Kamenik (Zagreb, Dec. 17, 1946); and the historic music drama Mila Gojsalica (Zagreb, May 18, 1952). He has also written incidental music for the theater.

Gotthelf, Felix, German composer; b. Gladbach, near Munich, Oct. 3, 1857; d. Dresden, April 21, 1930. He studied music while working for his M. D. degree; became coach at the Stadttheater in Cologne in 1892; in 1893 was conductor in Kolberg; from 1893-98, devoted himself to composition in Bonn; lived in Vienna from 1898 to 1920, when he settled in Dresden. He composed a mystery, Mahadeva (Stuttgart, 1909); orchestral works; chamber music; many songs.

Gottschalg (göt'-shählg), Alexander Wilhelm, German organist and editor; b. Mechelrode, Feb. 14, 1827; d. Weimar, May 31, 1908. He studied with G. Töpfer, and succeeded him as court organist at his death (1870); also publ. a biography of him. Gottschalg's most important publication is the Repertorium für die Orgel (issued serially, from 1860), to which Liszt contributed. His memoirs of Liszt were published posthumously (1910).

Gottschalk, Louis (Moreau), celebrated American pianist and composer; b. New Orleans, May 8, 1829; d. Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 18, 1869. He studied in Paris from 1841-46 (piano under Hallé and Stamaty; harmony under Maleden); began composing at 16. He made a successful tour through France, Switzerland, and Spain in 1852; returned to the U. S. in 1853 for a grand tour throughout the country, playing his own piano works and conducting his orchestral works at huge festivals; his popularity was phenomenal. The impresario Max Strakosch, who later introduced Patti, engaged Gottschalk for an even more extended tour throughout the U. S. Gottschalk died of yellow fever in Rio de Janeiro during his travels. His works, mostly with Spanish characteristics, include: 2 operas, Charles X and Isaura de Salerno (never performed); 2 symph. poems, La Nuit des Tropiques and Montevideo; Grand Marche solenne for orch. (dedicated to the Emperor of Brazil); Escenas campestres cubanas for orch.; about 90 piano pieces, and about 12 songs. His Notes of a Pianist were translated from the French (Philadelphia, 1881).—Cf. O. Hensel, Life and Letters of L. M. Gottschalk (Boston, 1870; unreliable as to facts); L. R. Fors, Gottschalk (Havana, 1880); J. T. Howard, L. M. Gottschalk in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1932); C. F. Lange, Vida y Muerte de Gottschalk, in the 'Revista de Estudios Musicales' (Mendoza, Argentina, Aug., 1950; Dec., 1950; April, 1951; Aug., 1951).

Götz, Hermann. See Goetz.

Götze, Emil, celebrated German tenor; b. Leipzig, July 19, 1856; d. Charlottenburg, Sept. 28, 1901. He studied in Dresden; then was engaged at the Dresden Opera; afterwards sang with extraordinary success at other opera houses in Germany. Owing to an affection of the throat, he was forced to retire in 1885, but later resumed his career in Berlin.

Götze, Johann Nikolaus Konrad, German violinist; b. Weimar, Feb. 11, 1791; d. there, Feb. 5, 1861. He studied with Kreuzer in Paris; returning to Weimar, he became music director to the Grand Duke (1826-48). He played concerts in Germany and Austria; also wrote operas (some of which he produced in Weimar) and chamber music.

Götze, Karl, German composer; b. Weimar, 1836; d. Magdeburg, Jan. 14, 1887. A pupil of Töpfer and Gebhardi, later of Liszt; in 1855, chorusmaster at the Weimar opera; then theater conductor at Magdeburg, Berlin (1869), Breslau (1872), and Chemnitz (1875).—Works: the operas Die Korsen (Weimar, 1866); Gustav Wasa, der Held des Nordens (Weimar, 1868); Judith (Magdeburg, 1887); a symph. poem, Eine Sommernacht; piano pieces; songs.

Goudimel (goo-dē-mel'), Claude (his name was variously spelled in contemporary and later editions as Gaudimel, Gaudiomel, Godimel, Gondimel, Goudmel, Gudmel, etc.), celebrated French composer and theorist; b. Besançon, c. 1505; killed in the St. Bartholomew massacre at Lyons, Aug. 27, 1572. In 1549 Goudimel was in Paris, where he publ. a book of chansons as a joint publisher with Du Chemin. He lived in Metz between 1557 and 1568; there he became a Huguenot; in 1568 he returned to Besançon, and then lived in Lyons, where he perished. It was long supposed that he lived in Rome, where he founded a school of music, but this assertion is totally lacking in foundation. It seems certain that Goudimel never visited Italy, and it is significant that none of his numerous works appeared in Roman publications. Most of his music was publ. by Du Chemin in Paris; other contemporary publishers were Adrien Le Roy and Robert Ballard, who publ. his complete Huguenot psalter in 1564 under the title Les CL pseumes de David, nouvellement mis en musique à quatre parties; it was publ. in Geneva in 1565 as Les Pseumes mis en rime françoise par Clément Marot et Th. de Bèze, mis en musique à quatre parties; it was reprinted in a facsimile edition in Kassel, 1935; a 1580 edition, also issued in Geneva, was republished by H. Expert in vols. 2-4 of 'Les Maîtres Musiciens de la Renaissance' (1895-97). A German transl. of the psalms, with Goudimel's musical settings, first appeared in 1573; many reprints followed. Goudimel also composed 5 Masses, publ. by Du Chemin (1, 1554) and Le Roy and Ballard (4, 1558), together with other sacred music. Two four-part motets were included in T. Susato's Ecclesiasticarum cantionum (Antwerp, 1553-55). Further reprints have been edited by R. J. v. Maldeghem in 'Trésor musical' III (1867; 12-part Salve Regina and 2 4-part motets) and XI (1875; 3 3-part chansons); C. Bordes in 'Anthologie des maîtres religieux primitifs' II (the Mass, Le bien que j'ay) and III (4-part motet); K. von Winterfeld, A. Ebrard, H. Bellermann, etc. (psalms). Three Masses are in H. Expert's 'Monuments de la musique française au temps de la renaissance' IX (1928); 9 psalms in P. Pidoux's 'Collection de musique protestante' (1935). — Cf. G. Becker, Goudimel et son oeuvre (1885); M. Brenet, Claude Goudimel, Essai bio-bibliographique (Besançon, 1898); H. Goudoever, Henri Daniel van, Dutch cellist and composer; b. Utrecht, Nov. 12, 1898; pupil there of J. Wagenaar (theory) and E. Ferrée (cello); completed his studies under G. Hekking in Paris; 1922-24, solo cellist of the Concertgebouw, Amsterdam; 1924-27, conductor in Coburg, Germany; 1938, was conductor of the Utrecht Municipal Orch. He wrote for orch.: Allegro (1916); Sphinx (1919); Impressions (1920); etc.; also composed many cello pieces.

Gould, Glenn, Canadian pianist; b. Toronto, Sept. 25, 1932. He studied at the Royal Cons. of Music in Toronto with Alberto Guerrero (piano) and Leo Smith (composition); graduated at the age of 12, the youngest ever to do so. He made his début at the age of 14 as soloist with the Toronto Symph. Orch.; first U. S. concert in Washington (Jan. 2, 1955); N. Y. début one week later; first continental tour of the U. S. during the season 1956-57. European début in Berlin as soloist with Berlin Philh. under Herbert von Karajan (April 28, 1957). Apart from his highly successful career as a concert pianist, Gould cultivates the jazz style of piano playing; he has given numerous exhibitions in the U. S. as an improviser with jazz groups; also composed jazz pieces.

Gould, Morton, brilliant American composer; b. New York, Dec. 10, 1913. He studied at the Institute of Musical Art; later was a radio pianist and leader of a program of light orch. music. He has appeared as guest conductor with major American orchestras. His music emphasizes American themes; he freely employs advanced harmonic usages. — Works: A musical comedy, Billion Dollar Baby (1945); 3 American Symphonettes (1933, 1935, 1937); Chorale and Fugue in Jazz, for two pianos and orch. (Youth Orch., N. Y., Jan. 2, 1936, Stokowski conducting); piano concerto (1937); violin concerto (1938); Foster Gallery (Pittsburgh, Jan. 12, 1940); Spirituals for orch. (N. Y., Feb. 9, 1941, composer conducting); Latin American Symphonette (Brooklyn, Feb. 22, 1941); Cowboy Rhapsody (1942); American Concertette (broadcast Aug. 23, 1943); 1st symph. (Pittsburgh, March 5, 1943); Symphony on Marching Tunes, No. 2 (N. Y., June 4, 1944); viola concerto (1944); concerto for orch. (Cleveland, Feb. 1, 1945); Harvest, for harp, vibraphone, and strings (St. Louis, Oct. 27, 1945); Minstrel Show (Indianapolis, Dec. 21, 1946); 3rd symph. (Dallas, Feb. 16, 1947; composer conducting); Fall River Legend, ballet (N. Y., April 21, 1948); 4th symph. (for band; West Point, April 13, 1952, composer conducting); concerto for tap dancer and orch. (Rochester, Nov. 16, 1952, composer conducting); Inventions for 4 pianos and orch. (N. Y., Oct. 19, 1953); Dance Variations for 2 pianos and orch. (N. Y., Oct. 24, 1953); Jekyll and Hyde Variations for orch. (N. Y., Feb. 2, 1957); Fiesta, ballet (Cannes, France, March 17, 1957); 3 piano sonatas (1930, 1933, 1936), etc.

Gounod, Charles François, famous French composer; b. Paris, June 17, 1818; d. there, Oct. 18, 1893. His father, Jean François Gounod, was a painter, winner of the 2nd Grand Prix de Rome, who died when Gounod was a small child. His mother, a most accomplished woman, supervised his literary, artistic, and musical education, and taught him piano. He completed his academic studies at the Lycée St. Louis; in 1836, he entered the Paris Cons., studying with Halévy, Lesueur, and Paër. In 1837 he won the 2nd Prix de Rome with his cantata, Marie Stuart et Rizzio; in 1839 he obtained the Grand Prix with his cantata, Fernand. In Rome, he studied church music, particularly the works of Palestrina; composed there a Mass for 3 voices and orch., which was performed at the church of San Luigi dei Francesi. In 1842, during a visit to Vienna, he conducted a Requiem of his own; upon his return to Paris, he became preceptor and organist of the Missions Étrangères; studied theology for two years, but decided against taking holy orders; yet he was often referred to as l'Abbé Gounod; some religious choruses were published in 1846 as composed by Abbé Charles Gounod. Soon Gounod tried his hand at stage music. On April 16, 1851, his first opera, Sapho, was produced at the Grand Opéra, with only moderate success; he revised it much later, extending it to four acts from the original three, and it was performed again on April 2, 1884; but even in this revised form it was unsuccessful. Gounod's second opera, La Nonne sanglante, in five acts, was staged at the Paris Opéra on Oct. 18, 1854; there followed a comic opera, Le Médecin malgré lui, after Molière (Jan. 15, 1858), which also failed to realize Gounod's expectations. In the meantime, he was active in other musical ways in Paris; he conducted the choral society Orphéon (1852-60) and composed for it several choruses. Gounod's great success came with the production of Faust, after Goethe (Théâtre-Lyrique, March 19, 1859; performed with additional recitatives and ballet at the Opéra, March 3, 1869); Faust remained Gounod's greatest masterpiece, and indeed the most successful French opera of the 19th century, triumphant all over the world without any sign of diminishing effect through a century of changes in musical tastes. However, it was widely criticized for the melodramatic treatment of Goethe's poem by the librettists, Barbier and Carré, and for the somewhat sentimental style of Gounod's music; in Germany, it is usually produced under the title Margarete or Gretchen to dissociate it from Goethe's work. The succeeding four operas, Philémon et Baucis (Paris, Feb. 18, 1860), La Colombe (Baden-Baden, Aug. 3, 1860), La Reine de Saba (Paris, Feb. 29, 1862), and Mireille (Paris, March 19, 1864), were only partially successful, but with Roméo et Juliette (Paris, April 27, 1867), Gounod recaptured universal acclaim. In 1870, during the Franco-Prussian War, Gounod went to London, where he organized Gounod's Choir, and presented concerts at the Philharmonic and the Crystal Palace; when Paris fell, he wrote an elegiac cantata, Gallia, to words from the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which he conducted in London on May 1, 1871; it was later performed in Paris. He wrote some incidental music for productions in Paris: Les Deux Reines, to a drama by Legouvé (Nov. 27, 1872) and Jeanne d'Arc, to Barbier's poem (Nov. 8, 1873). In 1875, he returned to Paris; there he produced his operas Cinq-Mars (April 5, 1877), Polyeucte (Oct. 7, 1878), and Le Tribut de Zamora (April 1, 1881) without signal success. The last years of his life were devoted mainly to sacred works, of which the most important was La Rédemption, a trilogy, first performed at the Birmingham Festival in 1882; another sacred trilogy, Mors et Vita, also written for the Birmingham Festival, followed in 1885. Gounod continued to write religious works in close succession, and produced (among many others) the following: Te Deum (1886); La Communion des Saints (1889); Messe dite le Clovis (1890); La Contemplation de Saint François au pied de la croix (1890); Tantum Ergo (1892). A Requiem (1893) was left unfinished, and was arranged by Henri Büsser after Gounod's death. One of Gounod's most popular settings to religious words is Ave Maria, adapted to the first prelude of Bach's Well-tempered Clavichord (1859); another Ave Maria was written to the second prelude of Bach (1892). Other works are: 2 symphonies (1855); Marche funèbre d'une Marionnette for orch. (1873); Petite Symphonie for wind instruments (1888); 3 string quartets; a number of piano pieces, and songs. Among his literary works were Ascanio de Saint-Saëns (1889); Le Don Juan de Mozart (1890; in English, 1895), and an autobiography, Mémoires d'un Artiste (publ. posthumously, Paris, 1896; in English, N. Y., 1895).—Cf. A. Peña y Goñi, Impresiones y recuerdos; Charles Gounod (Madrid, 1879); M. A. de Bovet, Charles Gounod (Paris, 1890; in English, London, 1891); L. Gouvy (goo'-vê), Louis Théodore, prolific composer; b. Goffontaine, near Saarbrücken, July 2, 1819; d. Leipzig, April 21, 1898. The son of French parents, he graduated from the college at Metz; went to Paris to study law, but turned to music; presented a concert of his works in Paris in 1847; also made frequent trips to Germany, where his music was received with great favor. He wrote about 200 works, including an opera, Der Cid; 7 symphonies; a wind nonet; wind octet; sextet for flute and strings; piano quintet; string quintet; 5 string quartets; 5 piano trios; numerous piano pieces in an ingratiating salon manner; songs.—Cf. O. Klauwell, L. T. Gouvy, Sein Leben und Seine Werke (Berlin, 1902).

Gow, George Coleman, American music pedagogue; b. Ayer Junction, Mass., Nov. 27, 1860; d. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1938. He studied music privately; graduated from Brown Univ. in 1884 and Newton Theological Seminary in 1889; then taught harmony and piano at Smith College for 6 years; from 1895 to 1932, he was professor of music at Vassar College. He wrote a textbook on notation and harmony, The Structure of Music (N. Y., 1895); composed organ pieces and songs.

Gow, Nathaniel, Scottish violinist, arranger, and music publisher; b. Inver, near Dunkeld, May 28, 1763; d. Edinburgh, Jan. 19, 1831. He played the trumpet in Scottish bands; then changed to violin. In 1788 he opened a music shop in Edinburgh; publ. numerous arrangements of Scotch tunes by his father and also his own arrangements of Scottish dances. He also led a band for various aristocratic assemblies. Among his original pieces there was an interesting instrumental composition, Caller Herrin', based on a street vendor's cry. — Cf. Henry G.

Farmer, History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947; pp. 343-44).

Gow, Niel, Scottish violinist and composer; father of Nathaniel Gow; b. Strathbrand, Perthshire, March 22, 1727; d. Inver, near Dunkeld, March 1, 1807. He played Scottish reels on the violin, and as a young man earned his living by performing at social gatherings in Edinburgh and London. He publ. a number of 'Strathspey Reels'; however, many of them were not original compositions but arrangements of old dance tunes.—Cf. John Glen, The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music (Edinburgh, 1891).

Graben-Hoffmann, Gustav (properly Gustav Hoffmann), German composer; b. Bnin, near Posen, March 7, 1820; d. Potsdam, May 20, 1900. He studied with his father and with other teachers in Posen; then taught music in various localities in East Germany; in 1843, settled in Berlin; in 1850, he founded a Musikakademie für Damen; then went to Leipzig, where he studied composition with Moritz Hauptmann; in 1869, he returned to Berlin, where he taught singing. In the meantime, he composed industriously; wrote a number of songs, but was compelled to publ. them at his own expense, despite economic hardships; of these, 500,000 Teufel had great vogue. He also publ. singing manuals, Die Pflege der Singstimme (1865); Das Studium des Gesangs (1872); Praktische Methode als Grundlage für den Kunstgesang (1874).

Grabert, Martin, German composer; b. Arnswalde (Neumark), May 15, 1868; d. Berlin, Jan. 23, 1951. He studied with Bellermann and Bargiel. In 1895 he settled in Berlin as church organist. He wrote some 80 op. numbers, mostly for chorus and for organ; a complete list of his works is given in Heinz Becker's article in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Grabner, Hermann, Austrian composer and theorist; b. Graz, May 12, 1886. He took his degree in law at Graz Univ. in 1909; then studied music with Reger and Hans Sitt at the Leipzig Cons.; he became a lecturer in theory at Strasbourg Cons. in 1913; served in the German army in World War I; after the armistice taught at the Mannheim Cons.; in 1924 was appointed prof. of composition at Leipzig Cons.; from 1938-46, taught at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; since 1950 at the Berlin Cons. His publications include: Regers Harmonik in Würz's symposium on Reger (Munich, 1920); Die Funktionstheorie Hugo Riemanns und ihre Bedeutung für die praktische Analyse (Munich, 1923); Allgemeine Musiklehre (Stuttgart, 1924; 5th ed., 1949); Lehrbuch der musikalischen Analyse (Leipzig, 1925); Der lineare Satz; ein Lehrbuch des Kontrapunktes (Stuttgart, 1930; new rev. ed., 1950); Handbuch der Harmonielehre (Berlin, 1944); several short books of exercises for theory students. He also wrote an opera, Die Richterinnen (Barmen, May 7, 1930); Perkeo Suite and Burgmusik for wind orch.; a concerto for 3 violins; organ pieces; songs, etc.

Grace, Harvey, English organist and writer on music; b. Romsey, Jan. 25, 1874; d. Bromley, Kent, Feb. 15, 1944. He studied with M. Richardson at Southwark Cathedral, London; was organist at various churches in London; directed the St. Cecilia Festivals; from 1918 to his death, he was editor of the 'Musical Times' and wrote editorial articles for it under the name 'Feste'; also edited The New Musical Educator (London, 1934). He wrote French Organ Music, Past and Present (N. Y., 1919); The Complete Organist (London, 1920; standard teaching manual; 4th ed., 1956); The Organ Works of Bach (London, 1922); The Organ Works of Rheinberger (London, 1925); Ludwig van Beethoven (London, 1927); A Musician at Large (collection of articles from the 'Mus. Times'; London, 1928); A Handbook for Choralists (London, 1928); also, with Sir Walford Davies, Music and Worship (London, 1935); composed 20 organ pieces; made 30 transcriptions from Bach, mostly for organ; edited Rheinberger's 20 sonatas for organ. — Cf. obituary article, Harvey Grace, in the 'Mus. Times' (March, 1944).

Grad, Gabriel, Lithuanian composer; b. Retovo, near Kovno, July 9, 1890. He studied in Ekaterinoslav and in Berlin; founded a Jewish music school in Kovno (1920-22); went to Palestine in 1924; since 1925, founder and director of the Ben-Hetov Cons. in Tel-Aviv. He has written an opera, Judith and Holofernes, and about 250 other works, including chamber music, piano pieces, choruses, and songs, many of which are based on Jewish folk melodies.

Grädener, Hermann (Theodor Otto), German violinist and composer; son of Karl Grädener; b. Kiel, May 8, 1844; d. Vienna, Sept. 18, 1929. He studied at the Vienna Cons.; was violinist in the court orch. in Vienna; then taught theory at the Vienna

Cons. (from 1874); in 1899 he became Bruckner's successor at Vienna Univ. He wrote 2 operas, Der Richter von Zalamea and Die heilige Zita; 2 symphonies; concertos for violin, for cello, and for piano; string octet; string quintet; piano quintet; 2 string quartets; 5 Impromptus for piano and strings; 5 Intermezzi for violin and piano; sonata for 2 pianos, etc.

Grädener, Karl Georg Peter, German cellist and composer; b. Rostock, Jan. 14, 1812; d. Hamburg, June 10, 1883. He was music director at Kiel Univ. for 10 years; in 1851, established an academy for vocal music in Hamburg; after 3 years at the Vienna Cons. (1862-65) he returned to Hamburg, and became teacher at the Cons. there; was also co-founder and a president of the Hamburger Tonkünstlerverein. He wrote System der Harmonielehre (Hamburg, 1877); his articles in music periodicals were publ. as Gesammelte Aufsätze (Hamburg, 1872).—Works: 2 operas, König Harald and Der Müllerin Hochzeit; an oratorio, Johannes der Täufer; 2 symphonies; Fiesco, an overture; a piano concerto; Romance for violin and orch.; a string octet; 5 piano quintets; 3 string quartets; string trio; 2 piano trios; 3 violin sonatas; a cello sonata; many piano pieces.

Gradenwitz, Peter, German-Israeli musicologist; b. Berlin, Jan. 24, 1910; studied literature and philosophy at Berlin Univ.; composition with Julius Weismann and Josef Rufer. In 1934 he went to Paris; in 1935, to London; in 1936, settled in Tel Aviv, where he became active as writer, lecturer, and organizer of concerts; established Israeli Music Publications; also active on the radio; publ. Johann Stamitz (Vienna, 1936); The Music of Israel (N. Y., 1949); books in Hebrew: Music History (Jerusalem, 1939); The World of the Symphony (Jerusalem, 1945; 7th ed., 1953); wrote a string quartet; Palestinian Landscapes, for oboe and piano; songs.

Gradstein, Alfred, Polish composer; b. Czenstochowa, Oct. 30, 1904; d. Warsaw, Sept. 9, 1954. He studied at the Warsaw Cons. (1922-25) and at the State Academy of Music in Vienna; from 1928-47 lived in Paris; then returned to Poland. He wrote mostly for piano; his piano concerto was publ. in 1932.

Graener, Paul, German composer; b. Berlin, Jan. 11, 1872; d. Salzburg, Nov. 13, 1944. He was a chorister at the Berlin cathedral; then studied piano with Veit and composition with Albert Becker. He then traveled in Germany as theater conductor. In 1896, he went to London where he taught at the Royal Academy of Music (1897-1902). He was then in Vienna as teacher at the Neues Konservatorium; subsequently directed the Mozarteum in Salzburg (1910-13); then lived in Munich; in 1920, he succeeded Max Reger as prof. of composition at the Leipzig Cons. (until 1924); was director of the Stern Cons. in Berlin (1930-34). He wrote music in all genres, and was fairly successful as an opera composer; in his style, he followed the Romantic movement, but also emphasized the folk element.—Works: Operas: Don Juans letztes Abenteuer (Leipzig, June 11, 1914); Theophano (Munich, June 5, 1918); Schirin und Gertraude (Dresden, April 28, 1920); Hanneles Himmelfahrt (Dresden, Feb. 17, 1927); Friedemann Bach (Schwerin, Nov. 13, 1931); Der Prinz von Hornburg (Berlin, March 14, 1935); Schwanhild (Cologne, Jan. 4, 1941). For orch.: a symph.; Romantische Phantasie; Waldmusik; Gothische Suite; piano concerto; cello concerto. Chamber music: 6 string quartets; a piano quintet; 3 violin sonatas. In several of his chamber music works, Graener attempted to carry out a definite programmatic design, while maintaining traditional form, as in his Kammermusik-Dichtung for piano trio. — Cf. G. Graener, Paul Graener (Leipzig, 1922); P. Grümmer, Verzeichnis der Werke Paul Graeners (Berlin, 1937).

Graeser, Wolfgang, talented Swiss composer; b. Zürich, Sept. 7, 1906; d. (suicide) Nikolassee, June 13, 1928. He went to Berlin in 1921; studied violin with Karl Klingler, and quickly acquired erudition in general music theory; also made a serious study of various unrelated arts and sciences (mathematics, Oriental languages, painting). His signal achievement was an orchestration of Bach's Kunst der Fuge (performed at the Leipzig Thomaskirche by Karl Straube, June 26, 1927). He publ. a book, Körpersinn (Munich, 1927). A memorial symposium, Wolfgang Graeser Gedächtnisheft, was publ. in Munich shortly after his tragic death.—Cf. also H. Zurlinden, Wolfgang Graeser (Munich, 1935).

Graf, Herbert, Austrian opera stage director; son of Max Graf; b. Vienna, April 10, 1904. He studied at the Univ. of Vienna with Guido Adler; received his Ph. D. in 1925. He then was stage director at the opera houses in Münster, Breslau, Frankfurt, and Basel. In 1934 he came to the U. S.; was associated with the Philadelphia Opera in 1934-35; in 1936 he was appointed stage director of the Metropolitan Opera; in 1949, became head of the opera dept. at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia. He is the author of two books, The Opera and Its Future in America (N. Y., 1941) and Opera for the People (Univ. of Minnesota, 1951).

Graf, Max, Austrian music critic, b. Vienna, Oct. 1, 1873. He studied at the Univ. of Vienna; taught music history and esthetics at the Staatsakademie für Musik; music critic of 'Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung' (from 1900-20); in 1939 came to the U. S.; after World War II, returned to Vienna. He is the author of: Deutsche Musik im 19. Jahrhundert (1898); Wagner-Probleme und andere Studien (1900); Die Musik im Zeitalter der Renaissance (1905); Die innere Werkstatt des Musikers (1910); Legends of a Musical City (1945); Composer and Critic (1946); Modern Music (1946; also appeared in German as Geschichte und Geist der modernen Musik, Frankfurt, 1954); From Beethoven to Shostakovich (N. Y., 1947).

Graffigna (grahf-fē-ña), Achille, Italian opera composer; b. S. Martino dall' Argine, near Mantua, May 5, 1816; d. Padua, July 19, 1896. He studied with Alessandro Rolla in Milan; wrote church music and theatrical cantatas; then devoted himself to opera; his Ildegonda e Rizzardo (La Scala, Milan, Nov. 3, 1841) was accepted with favor. In 1842 he went to Verona where he produced Eleonora di San Bonifacio (March 11, 1843); there followed Maria di Brabante (Trieste, Oct. 16, 1852); L'assedio di Malta (Padua, July 30, 1853); Gli Studenti (Milan, Feb. 7, 1857); Veronica Cibo (Mantua, Feb. 13, 1858; revised and produced at the Théâtre Italien, Paris, March 22, 1865, as La Duchessa di San Giuliano); Il Barbiere di Siviglia (Padua, May 17, 1879; intended as an homage to Rossini); Il matrimonio segreto (Florence, Sept. 8, 1883); La buona figliuola (Milan, May 6, 1886).

Graffman, Gary, talented American pianist; b. New York, Oct. 19, 1928. He studied with Isabelle Vengerova at the Curtis Institute of Music; made his 1st public appearance at the age of 10; won numerous prizes; was engaged as soloist with major American orchs. He made several European tours, beginning in 1950, and South American tours in 1955-56.

Gräflinger, Franz, Austrian writer on music; b. Linz, Nov. 26, 1876. He served as municipal accountant in Linz, and at the same time studied music; wrote criticism in local newspapers; then devoted his energies chiefly to Bruckner research; publ. two biographies of Bruckner (Munich, 1911; Regensburg, 1921) and Liebes und Heiteres um Anton Bruckner (Vienna, 1948); edited vol. I of Bruckner's Gesammelte Briefe (1924). In 1953 he was living in Ischl.

Grainger, Percy Aldridge, celebrated pianist and composer; b. Melbourne, Australia, July 8, 1882. He received his early musical training from his mother; at the age of 10, appeared as pianist at several public concerts; then had lessons with Louis Pabst; in 1894, went to Germany, where he studied with Kwast in Frankfurt; also took a few lessons with Busoni. In 1900 he began his concert career in England; then toured South Africa and Australia. In 1906 he met Grieg, who became enthusiastic about Grainger's talent; Grainger's performances of Grieg's piano concerto were famous. In 1914, Grainger settled in the U. S., made a sensational debut in N. Y., Feb. 11, 1915; gave summer sessions at the Chicago Musical College from 1919 to 1931; was for one academic year chairman of the music dept. of N. Y. Univ. (1932-33). In 1935 he founded a museum in Melbourne, in which he housed all his manuscripts and his rich collection of musical souvenirs. After 1940 he lived mostly at White Plains, N. Y. He married Ella Viola Ström in 1928 in a spectacular ceremony staged at the Hollywood Bowl, at which he conducted his work, To a Nordic Princess, written for his bride. Grainger's philosophy of life and art calls for the widest communion of peoples and opinions; his profound study of folk music underlies the melodic and rhythmic structure of his own music; he made a determined effort to recreate in art music the free flow of instinctive songs of the people; he experimented with 'gliding' intervals within the traditional scales and polyrhythmic combinations with independent strong beats in the component parts. He has introduced individual forms of notation and orchestral scoring, rejecting the common Italian designations of tempi and dynamics in favor of colloquial English expressions.—Works: For orch.: Mock Morris (1911); Irish Tunes from County Derry (1911); Molly on the Shore; Shepherd's Hey; Colonial Song (1914); In a Nutshell (music to an imaginary ballet; 1916); English Dance, for orch. and organ (1925); Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon (1932); Harvest Hymn (1933); Danish Folk-song Suite (1937). For chamber orch.: The Nightingale and the 2 Sisters (1931). For chorus and orch.: Marching Song of Democracy (1916); The Merry Wedding (1916); Father and Daughter; Sir Eglamore; The Camp; The March of the Men of Harlech; The Hunter in His Career; The Bride's Tragedy; Love Verses from 'The Song of Solomon'; Tribute to Foster (1931). For chorus and brass band: I'm Seventeen come Sunday; We Have Fed our Seas for a Thousand Years (1912); Marching Tune. For a cappella chorus: Brigg Fair; The Inuit; Morning Song in the Jungle; A Song of Vermland; At Twilight; Tiger-Tiger!; The Immovable Do; etc. All these are also issued in various arrangements. Chamber music: Handel in the Strand (1913); octet, My Robin Is to the Greenwood Gone; Walking Tune, for woodwind quintet; Green Bushes (1921); Hill-Song No. 1 (1923); Shallow Brown (1924); Hill-Song No. 2 (1929); Spoon River (1930); Free Music for strings (1935). For military band: Children's March (1918); march, The Lads of Wamphrey; Lincolnshire Posy, 6 folksongs from Lincolnshire, England; settings, in various combinations, of 20 of Kipling's poems (1911-38); 32 settings of British folksongs (1911-38); piano pieces, etc.—Cf. C. Scott, Percy Grainger, the Music and the Man, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1916); D. C. Parker, Percy A. Grainger, a Study (N. Y., 1918); C. W. Hughes, Percy Grainger, a Cosmopolitan Composer, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1937); R. L. Taylor, The Running Pianist (N. Y., 1950).

Gram, Hans, composer; he studied in Stockholm, and some time before 1790, settled in Boston, Mass., where he was organist of the Brattle Street Church. He composed The Death Song of an Indian Chief for voice, 2 clarinets, 2 horns, and strings, published in the 'Massachusetts Magazine' (March, 1791), apparently the first orchestral score publ. in the U. S.; Sacred Lines for Thanksgiving Day (1793), and other vocal works which appeared in the 'Massachusetts Magazine.' He was a co-editor of The Massachusetts Compiler, a progressive work on Psalmody; containing a music dictionary. See F. J. Metcalf, American Writers and Compilers of Sacred Music (1925); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (1939).

Gram, Peder, Danish conductor and composer; b. Copenhagen, Nov. 25, 1881; d. there, Feb. 4, 1956. After graduating from the Univ. there, he studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Sitt (theory) and Nikisch (conducting) from 1904-7; he received the Nikisch Prize at graduation for his string quartet. Returning to Copenhagen in 1908, he applied himself mainly to conducting; was chief conductor of the Danish Concert Society (1918-32); in 1937 became chief conductor of the Danish Radio Orch. His compositions include 2 symphonies; a violin concerto; a cello sonata; a wind quintet and other chamber music; publ. books (in Danish) on modern music (1934) and harmonic analysis (1948).

Grammann, Karl, German composer; b. Lübeck, June 3, 1844; d. Dresden, Jan. 30, 1897. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; spent some years in Vienna; in 1885, settled in Dresden. As a youth, he wrote 2 operas, Die Schatzgräber and Die Eisjungfrau, which were not produced; the following operas were staged with some success: Melusine (Wiesbaden, 1875); Thusnelda und der Triumphzug des Germanicus (Dresden, 1881); Das Andreasfest (Dresden, 1882); 2 short operas, Ingrid and Das Irrlicht (Dresden, 1894). His last opera, Auf neutralem Boden was produced posthumously (Hamburg, 1901). He further wrote several cantatas, symphonies, string quartets, violin sonatas, and other chamber music works.— Cf. F. Pfohl, Karl Grammann. Ein Künstlerleben (Berlin, 1910).

Granados, Eduardo, Spanish composer, son of Enrique Granados; b. Barcelona, July 28, 1894; d. Madrid, Oct. 2, 1928. He studied in Barcelona with his father; then at the Madrid Cons. with Conrado del Campo; taught at the Granados Academy in Barcelona; was also active as conductor; presented many works by his father. He wrote several zarzuelas, of which the first, Bufon y Hostelero, was performed with some success in Barcelona (Dec. 7, 1917); other stage works are: Los Fanfarrones, comic opera; La ciudad eterna, mystery play; Los Cigarrales, operatic sketch; also musical comedies (Cocktails del Nuevo, etc.).

Granados, Enrique, outstanding Spanish composer; b. Lérida, July 27, 1867; d. at sea, March 24, 1916 (victim of the sinking by a German submarine of the S. S. Sussex in the English Channel). He studied piano at the Barcelona Cons. with Pujol, winning first prize (1883); then studied composition at the Madrid Cons., with Pedrell (1884-87). He first supported himself by playing piano in restaurants and giving private concerts. He first attracted attention as a composer with an opera, Maria del Carmen (Madrid, Nov. 12, 1898); in 1900 he conducted a series of concerts in Barcelona; also established a music school, Academia Granados. He then wrote 4 operas which were produced in Barcelona with little success: Picador (Feb. 23, 1901), Follet (April 4, 1903), Gaziel (Oct. 27, 1906), and Liliana (1911). He then undertook the composition of a work that was to be his masterpiece, a series of piano pieces entitled Goyescas, inspired by the paintings and etchings of Goya; his fame rests securely on these imaginative and effective pieces, together with his brilliant Danzas españolas. Later, Fernando Periquet wrote a libretto based on the scenes from Goya's paintings, and Granados used the music of his piano suite for an opera, Goyescas. Its première took place, in the presence of the composer, at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, on Jan. 28, 1916, with excellent success; the score included an orchestral Intermezzo, one of his most popular compositions. It was during his return voyage to Europe that he lost his life. Other works by Granados include an intermezzo to Miel de la Alcarria (1893); symph. poems, La Nü del Mort and Dante; Suite Árabe; Suite Gallega; Marcha de los Vencidos; Serenata; orch. suites, Elisenda and Navidad; a piano trio; a string quartet; Serenata for 2 violins and piano; Oriental for oboe and strings; Trova for cello and piano; Cant de les Estrelles for chorus, organ, and piano. Piano works: Danzas españolas (4 vols.); Goyescas: (Part I) Los Requebro, Coloquio en la Reja, El Fandango del Candil, Quejas o la Maja y el Ruiseñor; (Part II) El Amor y la Muerte (Ballade), Epílogo (Serenade of the Spectre), El Pelele (Escena goyesca); 6 Pieces on Spanish popular songs; Valses poéticos; Cuentos para la Juventud; Marche Militaire and A la Cubana (also arranged for orch.); Deux danses caractéristiques: Danza gitana and Danza aragonesa; songs: Colección de Tonadillas, escritas en estilo antigua; Colección de Canciones amorosas. Granados' music is essentially Romantic, with an admixture of specific Spanish rhythms and rather elaborate ornamentation.— Cf. special Granados number of 'Revista Musical Catalana' (June 15, 1916); G. Grancino (gran-chē'-nōh), a family of violin makers, active in the 17th and early 18th centuries. Andrea Grancino established a workshop in Milan in 1646; his son, Paolo, worked in Milan between 1665 and 1692; he belonged to the Amati school, and several violins attributed to Amati are apparently the work of Paolo Grancino. Paolo's son, Giovanni, began making violins in 1677; he is reputed to be the best of the family. His 2 sons, Giovanni Battista and Francesco, were active between 1715 and 1746; their labels are marked Fratelli Grancini.

Grancino (Grancini), Michel Angelo, Italian composer; b. Milan, 1605; d. there, 1669. He was organist at the Paradiso Church in Milan as a youth of 17; then appointed organist at San Sepolcro (1624) and later at San Ambrogio (1628). In 1630 he became a maestro di cappella of the Milan Cathedral, and retained this post until his death. During his lifetime, he publ. some 20 volumes of his works, which included madrigals, motets, and concerti sacri, only a few of which are extant. For a complete list, see Claudio Sartori's article on Grancino in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Grandi, Alessandro, Italian composer; place and date of birth uncertain; d. Bergamo, 1630. He was maestro di cappella at Ferrara, first at the Accademia della Morte (1597-1610), then at the Accademia dello Spirito (to c. 1616); 1617, was a singer at San Marco, Venice; 1620, 2nd maestro di cappella at San Marco; in 1627, he went to Bergamo as maestro di cappella at Santa Maria Maggiore; he and his family died there in 1630 of the plague. He was greatly admired by fellow-musicians; his works include 3 books of Cantade et arie (Venice, 1620-9); 2 books of Madrigali concertati (Venice, 1615-22); several books of motets (Venice, 1610-29); other music in MS is at the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge; Christ Church, Oxford; in Berlin and Vienna.—Cf. Denis Arnold, Alessandro Grandi, a Disciple of Monteverdi, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1957).

Grandjany (grähn-zhän-ne'), Marcel, French harpist; b. Paris, Sept. 3, 1891. He studied at the Paris Cons., winning 1st prize for harp (1905); made his Paris début on Jan. 24, 1909; his American début, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1924; taught at the Fontainebleau Cons. (1921-35); in 1936 settled in N. Y.; became an American citizen in 1945. In 1938 he joined the staff of the Juilliard School of Music; from 1943, also prof. at Montreal Cons. He has composed a Poème symphonique for harp, French horn, and orch., and several other works for harp; also songs to French texts.

Grandjean (grahn-zhan'), Axel Karl William, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, March 9, 1847; d. there, Feb. 11, 1932. He began his career as an opera singer, but gave up the stage for teaching and composition; also conducted several choral societies in Copenhagen. He wrote the operas Colomba (Copenhagen, Oct. 15, 1882), Oluf (Copenhagen, April 7, 1894), and others; many choral works; also edited (for Holberg's bicentennial in 1884) a collection of incidental music written to Holberg's dramas.

Grandval, Marie Félicie Clémence de Reiset, French composer; b. Saint-Rémy-des-Monts (Sarthe), Jan. 21, 1830; d. Paris, Jan. 15, 1907. She studied composition with Flotow and Saint-Saëns; under various pen-names she wrote the operas Le Sou de Lise (Paris, 1859); Les Francés de Rose (Paris, May 1, 1863); La Comtesse Eva (Paris, Aug. 7, 1864); La Pénitente (Paris, May 13, 1868); Piccolino (Paris, Jan. 5, 1869); Mazeppa (Bordeaux, 1892); the oratorio St. Agnès (Paris, April 13, 1876); La Forêt, lyric poem, for soli, chorus, and orch. (Paris, March 30, 1875); songs.

Granichstaedten, Bruno, Austrian operetta composer; b. Vienna, Sept. 1, 1879. He began his career as a cabaret singer; in 1908 he turned to composing light opera; produced 16 stage works before 1930; of these, Der Orlow (Vienna, April 3, 1925) was the most successful; other operettas are Bub oder Mädel, Auf Befehl der Kaiserin, Evelyne, Walzerliebe, etc. In 1938 Granichstaedten left Austria and settled in the U. S.

Grant-Schaefer, George Alfred, composer and teacher; b. Williamstown, Ont., July 4, 1872; d. Chicago, May 11, 1939. He studied in Montreal, Chicago, and London; was organist and choirmaster in Chicago from 1896-1908; from 1908-20, head of vocal dept. of Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.; he composed operettas for schools; pedagogic and other piano pieces; numerous songs, publ. a collection of French Canadian songs (Boston, 1925).

Grasse, Edwin, American violinist and composer; b. New York, Aug. 13, 1884; d. there, April 8, 1954. Blind from infancy, he dictated his compositions to an accompanist. He studied the violin with Carl Hauser in N. Y.; then went to Brussels for study with César Thomson; in 1899 entered the Brussels Cons., where he won 1st prize in 1900, and Diplôme de Capacité in 1901; toured Europe and America. His works include: an American Fantasia for violin and orch.; a violin sonata and other violin pieces; 3 piano trios; organ pieces.

Grassi, Eugène, composer; b. Bangkok, Siam, July 5, 1887; d. Paris, July, 1941. He was born of French parents in Siam; came to France as a youth and studied with Vincent d'Indy; he revisited Siam in 1910-13 to collect materials on indigenous music; his own works reflect this study, while his harmonic idiom is influenced by Debussy. Among his compositions, all with Oriental flavor, are Le Réveil de Bouddha, symph. poem (Paris, Feb. 20, 1920); Poème de l'Univers for orch. (Paris, April 9, 1922); Les Sanctuaires (Paris, March 25, 1926); also songs in the Impressionist manner.

Grassini, Josephina (Giuseppina), Italian contralto; b. Varese, April 8, 1773; d. Milan, Jan. 3, 1850. She made her début as an opera singer in Milan in 1794; soon attained popularity on all leading Italian stages; in 1800, she sang in Milan before Napoleon, who took her with him to Paris, where she sang at national celebrations. She was in London from 1804-6; then returned to Paris and sang at the French court; she was noted for her beauty and her acting as well as her voice.—Cf. P. Cambiasi, Una famosa cantante varesina in the 'Gazzetta Musicale di Milano' (Feb. 20, 1902); A. Pougin, Une cantatrice 'amie' de Napoléon: Giuseppina Grassini (Paris, 1920); A. Gavoty, La Grassini (Paris, 1947).

Grau, Maurice, operatic impresario; b. Brünn, Moravia, 1849; d. Paris, March 14, 1907. He was taken to the U. S. at the age of 5, and studied law at Columbia Univ. In 1872, he was a co-manager of the American tours of Anton Rubinstein; in 1873, he organized the Kellogg Opera Co.; was instrumental in bringing Offenbach to the U. S. In 1890, he presented a special season of 21 performances at the Metropolitan Opera House, with such famous artists as Adelina Patti, Emma Albani, Nordica, and Tarnagino. From 1891 to 1897 the Metropolitan Opera was leased to the partnership of Abbey, Schoeffel and Grau, and upon Abbey's death, to the Maurice Grau Opera Co. (1898-1903). In 1903, Grau retired and went to Paris. The secret of Grau's success as an impresario was his perfect understanding of public taste in opera; he frankly subordinated the repertory to the favorite roles of the great European stars; he did not produce Wagner's operas until Wagnerian cycles presented by Damrosch had shown that American audiences were ripe for them. In fact, the growing popularity of Wagner contributed greatly towards the financial success of Grau's last seasons.

Graumann, Mathilde. See Marchesi.

Graun, August Friedrich, German composer, brother of Karl Heinrich Graun; b. Wahrenbrück, near Dresden, 1699; d. Merseburg, May 5, 1765. He was active as organist and cantor at Merseburg, where he settled in 1729. Only one of his works is preserved, Kyrie et Gloria for 4 voices with instruments.

Graun, Johann Gottlieb, German composer, brother of Karl Heinrich Graun; b. Wahrenbrück, near Dresden, 1703; d. Berlin, Oct. 27, 1771. He studied violin with Pisendel in Dresden and with Tartini in Padua. In 1726, he was appointed Kapellmeister in Merseburg, where he was the teacher of Wilhelm Friedemann Bach. In 1732 he became Konzertmeister for Crown Prince Frederick (later Frederick the Great) at Rheinsberg, and from 1741, held a similar position in the newly founded Royal Opera in Berlin, where his brother, Karl Heinrich, was Kapellmeister. His works include 100 symphonies, 20 violin concertos, 24 string quartets, and a number of sacred works. Only a few are published: 6 harpsichord concertos; 8 sonatas for 2 flutes and violin. Riemann reprinted 3 trio-sonatas in 'Collegium musicum' (1906). A complete list of works and editions is found in Werner Freytag's article on the Graun brothers in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Graun, Karl Heinrich, German composer; b. Wahrenbrück, near Dresden, May 7, 1704; d. Berlin, Aug. 8, 1759. He received his primary education at the Kreuzschule in Dresden (1713-20), where he studied with Grundig (voice) and Petzold (organ). He sang soprano in the town council choir; then began to study composition with Johann Christoph Schmidt. In 1725 he was engaged as operatic tenor at the Brunswick court; soon he began to compose operas for production at the court theater: Sinilde (Feb. 3, 1727), Iphigenia in Aulis (Aug. 16, 1728), Polidorus (1731), and Scipio Africanus (1732), all to German librettos. On June 14, 1733, he staged his first Italian opera, Lo specchio della fedeltà (also known under the title Timareta). In 1735 Graun was invited by Frederick the Great (then Crown Prince of Prussia) to Rheinsberg, as musical director; Graun gladly accepted, and followed Frederick to Berlin when he became king (1740). In Rheinsberg, Graun wrote a great number of cantatas, in the Italian style; in Berlin, his chief duty was to establish an Italian opera troupe, for which purpose he traveled to Italy in search of good singers. Upon his return to Berlin, Graun produced his first opera for his company, Rodelinda (Dec. 13, 1741); there followed Cleopatra e Cesare (Dec. 7, 1742), staged for the inauguration of the new opera house. He continued to compose operas with unflinching regularity for each season, 28 in all, among them Artaserse (Dec. 2, 1743), Catone in Utica (1744), Alessandro nell'Indie (1744), Adriano in Siria (1746), Mitridate (1750), and Semiramide (1754). Frederick the Great himself wrote the librettos (in French) for Graun's operas Montezuma (Berlin, Jan. 6, 1755) and Merope (March 27, 1756). In those years Graun enjoyed very high renown and royal favor; only Hasse approached him in public esteem. In his operas, Graun adhered to the Italian tradition, and was preoccupied chiefly with the requirements of the singing voice. During the last years of his life he wrote some excellent church music; his Te Deum commemorating Frederick's victory at the battle of Prague (1756) is regarded as one of the finest sacred works in Germany; even more renowned is Graun's Passion oratorio, Der Tod Jesu (1755), which was performed annually for a century. Graun's instrumental music displays a high degree of contrapuntal craftsmanship, as well as a facile melodic gift, but despite these qualities, it failed to sustain interest as well as his sacred works did. He wrote a Concerto Grosso for flute, violin, viola da gamba, cello, and strings; about 30 concertos for harpsichord; 6 flute concertos; 3 quintets for harpsichord and strings; about 35 trio-sonatas; duets for various instruments, etc. — Cf. A. Mayer-Reinach, Karl Heinrich Graun als Opernkomponist (Berlin, 1899); K. Mennicke, Zur Biographie der Brüder Graun, in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik' (1904); K. Graupner, Christoph, German composer; b. Hartmannsdorf, near Kirchberg, Jan. 13, 1683; d. Darmstadt, May 10, 1760. He studied music at the Thomasschule, Leipzig, with Kuhnau and Heinichen; then was in Hamburg as opera accompanist under Keiser (1706-9). In 1710, he became vice-Kapellmeister and in 1712, Kapellmeister, at Darmstadt, where he remained all his life. He was offered the post of cantor at the Thomasschule in 1722, but decided against acceptance, and the position was given to Bach. Graupner was an industrious worker, and was active in Hamburg as composer, conductor, and teacher; he engraved for publication several of his keyboard pieces. He produced 6 operas in Hamburg of which only 3 are extant: Dido (1707); Der angenehme Betrug (1707, with Keiser; publ. in vol. 38 of 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'); L'amore ammalato or Antiochus und Stratonice (1708). He wrote 3 operas in Darmstadt, of which La costanza vince l'inganno is preserved. He publ. for harpsichord 8 Partien (2 vols., 1718 and 1726), the Monatliche Klavier-Früchte (1722), and the Vier Jahreszeiten (1733); also a Hessen-Darmstädtisches Choralbuch (1728). The Darmstadt library contains a great number of MSS by Graupner, among them 50 concertos, 80 overtures, and 116 symphonies; 6 harpsichord sonatas, trio-sonatas, and about 1300 sacred works. Selected examples from his cantatas are publ. in vols. 51-52 of 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst.' — Cf. W. Nagel, Christoph Graupner als Sinfoniker (Langensalza, 1912); F. Noack, Christoph Graupners Kirchenmusiken (Leipzig, 1916).

Graupner, Johann Christian Gottlieb, composer; b. Verden, near Hanover, Oct. 6, 1767; d. Boston, April 16, 1836. He was the son of the oboist, Johann Georg Graupner, and became himself an oboist in military bands. In 1788, he was in London, and played in Haydn's orchestra in 1791. About 1795, he emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, S. C.; played his oboe concerto there on March 21, 1795; early in 1797, he went to Boston; in 1800, he opened a music store; also taught piano, and all orchestral instruments, on which he was fairly proficient; publ. works by himself and other composers; he became an American citizen in 1808. In 1810, he organized the Boston Philharmonic Society, which was the first semi-professional orchestra in Boston; it gave performances of Haydn's symphonies; it presented Messiah in 1818 and Haydn's Creation in 1819; the orchestra continued its activity until Nov., 1824. In 1815, Graupner was a co-founder of a musical organization which became the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, and which greatly influenced the development of choral music in New England. In view of these accomplishments, Graupner is referred to by some writers as the 'father of American orchestral music.' In 1819, he publ. Rudiments of the Art of Playing the Pianoforte, Containing the Elements of Music. He was married to Catherine Hillier, a professional singer (1770-1821); on Dec. 30, 1799, she sang in Boston a Negro ballad; this fact led to erroneous reports that Graupner himself appeared as a blackface minstrel.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Early Concert Life in America (1907); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1946; pp. 130-33); H. E. Johnson, Musical Interludes in Boston (N. Y., 1943), chap. VI. Typescript copies of a memoir on Graupner, compiled by his granddaughter, Catherine Graupner Stone (1906), are available in the Library of Congress, N. Y. Public Library, and Boston Public Library.

Graveure (grah-vürh'), Louis (real name Wilfred Douthitt), concert singer; b. London, March 18, 1888. He studied voice with Clara Novello-Davies; came to the U. S. and under his real name, Douthitt, sang the baritone part in the operetta, The Lilac Domino, in N. Y. on Oct. 28, 1914; in 1915 he reappeared in N. Y. as Louis Graveure (after his mother's maiden name) and became a popular concert artist, singing all types of music. On Feb. 5, 1928, he gave a concert in N. Y. as a tenor; from 1931-38, he was in Germany; 1938-40, in France; 1940-47, in England; in 1947, returned to the U. S.; taught in various music schools.—Cf. The Case of a Beardless Baritone in N. Slonimsky, A Thing or Two About Music (N. Y., 1948; pp. 220-21).

Gray, Alan, English organist and composer; b. York, Dec. 23, 1855; d. Cambridge, Sept. 27, 1935. He took degrees in law and music from Trinity College, Cambridge; was musical director of Wellington College (1883-92); 1892-1912, conductor of the Cambridge Univ. Musical Society; also organist at Trinity College (1892-1930). He wrote 5 cantatas, a Coronation

March; chamber music; many organ works. He was also an editor for the Purcell Society.

Gray, Cecil, British writer on music; b. Edinburgh, May 19, 1895; d. Worthing, Sept. 9, 1951. He studied music with Healey Willan; in 1920, with Philip Heseltine (Peter Warlock), he edited a new magazine of music criticism, 'The Sackbut'; later was music critic for the 'Daily Telegraph' and the 'Manchester Guardian'; wrote 3 operas (to his own texts) and other music. His books include: A Survey of Contemporary Music (1924); Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa; Musician and Murderer (in collaboration with Philip Heseltine; 1926); The History of Music (1928); Sibelius (1931); Peter Warlock (1934); Sibelius: the Symphonies (1935); Predicaments, or Music and the Future (1936); The 48 Preludes and Fugues of Bach (1938); Contingencies (N. Y., 1947); memoirs, Musical Chairs or Between Two Stools (London, 1948).—Cf. R. Gorer, The Music of Cecil Gray in 'Mus. Review' (Aug., 1947).

Greatorex, Thomas, English organist, singer, and conductor; b. North Wingfield, Derby, Oct. 5, 1758; d. Hampton, near London, July 18, 1831. He was the son of an amateur organist; the family moved to Leicester in 1767. He studied with Dr. B. Cooke (1772); was befriended by Lord Sandwich and became musical director of his household for a time. He sang at the Concerts of Ancient Music in London (from 1776) and was organist at Carlisle Cathedral (1781-84). He then traveled in Holland, Italy, and France, and took lessons in Strasbourg with Pleyel. Settling in London, he became a highly popular singing teacher (in one week he gave 84 lessons at a guinea each). In 1793 he was appointed conductor of the Concerts of Ancient Music, a post which he held until his death, never missing a single concert. He assisted in the revival of the Vocal Concerts in 1801; from 1819 he was organist at Westminster Abbey; he conducted festivals throughout England, and was one of the founders of the Royal Academy of Music in London (1822). He published A Selection of Tunes (London, 1829); a collection Parochial Psalmody (1825); 12 Glees (1832); anthems, psalms and chants, but it was as an organist that Greatorex was best known.

Greef, Arthur de, Belgian pianist and composer; b. Louvain, Oct. 10, 1862; d. Brussels, Aug. 29, 1940. He studied at the Brussels Cons. with L. Brassin (piano) and Gevaert (composition); then traveled as pianist in Europe; in 1885 he was appointed prof. of piano at the Brussels Cons., retaining that post until 1930. He wrote an opera in Flemish, De Marketenster (Louvain, 1879); a symphony; a ballad for strings; 2 piano concertos; 2 violin sonatas; Quatre vieilles chansons flamandes for piano, and a number of piano études; also songs.—Cf. F. Rasse, Notice sur Arthur de Greef in the 'Annuaire de l'Académie Royale de Belgique' (1949).

Green, L. Dunton (Louis Grein), Dutch music critic; b. Amsterdam, Dec. 22, 1872; d. Ruysselede, Belgium, Dec. 30, 1933. He studied music in Germany and in Paris; lived for many years in London; contributed numerous articles on modern composers to English, Italian, French, and American magazines.

Green, Ray, American composer; b. Cavendish, Missouri, Sept. 13, 1909. He had his musical training in San Francisco with Albert Elkus; also took courses with Ernest Bloch; received a fellowship for study in Europe (1935-37); was on the staff of the Department of Music at the Univ. of California (1937-38); then was in charge of the Federal Music Project in California. He entered the armed forces in 1943; was chief of music for the Veterans Administration (1946-48); in 1948 became executive secretary of the American Music Center, N. Y.—Works: Symphony No. 1 (1945-53); Sunday Sing Symphony (1946); Rhapsody for harp and orch. (1950); violin concerto (1952); many pieces for band on American subjects (Kentucky Mountain Running Set; Jig Theme and Six Changes, etc.); several scores for ballet; Duo Concertante for violin and piano (1950); Dance Sonata for two pianos (1950); 5 Epigrammatic Portraits for strings (1954); Concertante for viola and piano (1955); incidental music to plays, etc.

Greene, Harry Plunket, Irish singer; b. near Dublin, June 24, 1865; d. London, Aug. 19, 1936. He studied in Florence with Vannuccini, and in London under J. B. Welsh and A. Blume; made his début in Messiah at Stepney (Jan. 21, 1888) and soon became a popular concert artist. He made the first of several tours of the U. S. in 1893; also appeared in Canada. He was noted for his interpretations of Schumann and Brahms; publ. a valuable instruction book for singers, Interpretation in Song (London, 1912), a biography of Stanford (London, 1935), and a volume of musical reminiscences, From Blue Danube to Shannon.

Greene, Maurice, English organist and composer; b. London, 1695; d. there, Dec. 1, 1775. He served as a choirboy in St. Paul's Cathedral; became proficient as an organist; was appointed organist of St. Paul's in 1718. In 1727, he succeeded Croft as composer to the Chapel Royal; in 1730, he was Tudway's successor as prof. of music at the Univ. of Cambridge, receiving the title of Mus. Doc. In 1735, he became master of the King's Band of Music. Beginning in 1750, he accumulated and collated a great number of English sacred works; he willed this material to Boyce, who made use of it in his monumental collection, 'Cathedral Music.' Greene composed 2 oratorios, Jephtha (1737) and The Force of Truth (1744), and 3 dramatic pastorals: Love's Revenge (1734), The Judgment of Hercules (1740), and Phoebe (1748); other works are: The Chaplet, a collection of 12 English songs; Spenser's Amoretti, an album of 25 sonnets for voice with harpsichord and violin; also collected 40 Select Anthems in Score (2 vols.; 1743); composed numerous catches and canons, organ voluntaries, harpsichord pieces, etc.—Cf. E. Walker, The Bodleian MSS of Maurice Greene, in the 'Mus. Antiquarian' (April-July, 1910).

Greff. See Bacfart.

Grehg (gräg), Louis, French composer and music publisher; b. Philippeville, Algeria, March 16, 1843; d. St. Mesme (Seine-et-Oise), Jan. 21, 1915. He began his musical career with the production of a light opera, Un Lycée de jeunes filles (Paris, 1881), which won a decided success; this was followed by several other operettas, Le Présomptif (1884), Le capitaine Roland (1895), and ballets. He then turned to publishing; the firm was continued by his son, Henri Grehg, who established it as Henri Grehg & Fils (1902); Henri Grehg's son, André, succeeded him as director in 1934.

Gregoir (grë-gwahr'), Edouard (Georges Jacques), Belgian composer and writer on music; b. Turnhout, near Antwerp, Nov. 7, 1822; d. Wyneghem, June 28, 1890. He studied piano, and was a professional accompanist; in 1851, he settled in Antwerp. He was a prolific composer; wrote 154 works in all. His Flemish opera, Willem Beukels, was produced in Brussels (July 21, 1856); he wrote incidental music to various patriotic plays: De Belgen in 1848; La Dernière Nuit du Comte d'Egmont, etc.; also composed a symphonic oratorio, Le Déluge (1849), and a historical symphony, Les Croisades (1846). Among his important writings are Essai historique sur la musique et les musiciens dans les Pays-Bas (1861); Histoire de l'orgue (1865, with biographical notes on Belgian and Dutch organists and organ builders); Galerie biographique des artistes-musiciens belges du XVIII<sup>e</sup> et du XIX<sup>e</sup> siècles (1862; 2nd ed., 1885); Notice sur l'origine du célèbre compositeur Louis van Beethoven (1863); Les Artistes-Musiciens néerlandais (1864); Du Chant choral et des festivals en Belgique (1865); Notice historique sur les sociétés de musique d'Anvers (1869); Recherches historiques concernant les journaux de musique depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours (1872); Notice biographique d'Adrian Wil-laert; Réflexions sur la régénération de l'ancienne école de musique flamande et sur le théâtre flamand; Les Artistes-Musiciens belges au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle; réponse à un critique de Paris (1874); Documents historiques relatifs à l'art musical et aux artistes-musiciens (1872-76; 4 vols.); Panthéon musical populaire (1876-77; 6 vols.); Notice biographique sur F.J. Gosse dit Gossec (1878); L'Art musical en Belgique sous les règnes de Léopold I et Léopold II (1879); Les Gloires de l'Opéra et la musique à Paris (4 vols., 1880-3; vol. I embraces the period 1392-1750); A.-E.-M. Grétry (1883); Souvenirs artistiques (3 vols., 1888-9); etc.

Gregoir, Jacques Mathieu, Belgian pianist and composer, brother of Edouard Gregoir; b. Antwerp, Jan. 18, 1817; d. Brussels, Oct. 29, 1876. He studied with Henri Herz in Paris and with Rummel in Biebrich. He gave a number of successful piano recitals in Belgium, Germany, and Switzerland; wrote salon pieces for piano and several practical methods of piano playing; publ. duets for violin and piano in collaboration with Vieuxtemps; he also wrote an opera, Le Gondolier de Venise (1848).

Gregor, Christian Friedrich, composer and hymnologist; b. Dirsdorf, Silesia, Jan. 1, 1723; d. Zeist, Holland, Nov. 6, 1801. As organist, music director, composer, and hymnologist, Gregor was the most important musician of the international Moravian Church (Unitas Fratrum) of the 18th century. Joining the Moravian Brethren in 1742, he soon assumed leading positions in its management: financial agent of Zinzendorf, member of Unity Elders Conference (1764-1801), and bishop (1789-1801). He made numerous business trips to Germany, Holland, England, Russia, and North America (Pennsylvania, 1770-72); while in Pennsylvania, he gave instruction in composition to Johann Friedrich Peter (q.v.). During his stay at Herrnhut, Saxony, as organist, Gregor compiled the first hymnal published by the Moravians (Choral-Buch, enthaltend alle zu dem Gesangbuche der Evangelischen Brüder-Gemeinen vom Jahre 1778 gehörige Melodien; Leipzig, Breitkopf, 1784) and arranged the musical liturgies.—Works: 308 hymns (Gesangbuch zum Gebrauch der evangelischen Brüder-Gemeinen; Barby, 1778, et seq.), about 100 chorale tunes, and approximately 200 anthems and arias. The latter are preserved in MS in the Moravian Church Archives at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Several of his anthems were republished frequently in 19th-century American tunebooks.—Cf. Historische Nachricht vom Brüder-Gesangbuche des Jahres 1778, und von dessen Lieder-Verfassern (Gnadau, 1835).

Gregori, Nininha, Brazilian composer; b. São Paulo, Jan. 20, 1925. She studied with Koellreutter. She writes in the 12-tone technique. Her compositions include 3 pieces for chamber orch.; trio for flute, violin, and viola; 4 Old Greek Poems for soprano, 4 woodwind instruments, and celesta (Frankfurt Festival, 1951).

Gregorovitch, Charles, Russian violinist; b. St. Petersburg, Oct. 25, 1867; d. Gomel, 1920. He studied with Dont in Vienna and Joachim in Berlin. After a series of brilliant appearances in Europe, he made a successful American tour (1896-97); then was in St. Petersburg, where he played in various chamber music organizations; was regarded as one of the most musicianly performers of Classical and Romantic music.

Gregory I, 'the Great'; b. Rome, 540; d. there, March 12, 604. He was pope from 590-604; celebrated in music history as reputed reformer of the musical ritual of the Roman Catholic Church. It is traditionally believed that by his order, and under his supervision, a collection was made in 599 of the music employed in the different churches; that various offertories, antiphons, responses, etc., were revised, and regularly and suitably distributed over the entire year, in an arrangement which came to be known as Gregorian Chant. While for centuries the sole credit for the codification, which certainly took place, had been ascribed to Gregory, investigations by such scholars as Gevaert, Riemann, P. Wagner, Frère, Houdard, Gastoué, Mocquereau, and others have demonstrated that some of Gregory's predecessors had begun this reform, and even definitely fixed the order of certain portions of the liturgy; and that the work of reform was definitely completed under some of his immediate successors. Evidence in favor of Gregory's leading part in the reform is marshaled in E. G. P. Wyatt's Saint Gregory and the Gregorian Music (1904); evidence against his participation is given in Paul Henry Lang's Music in Western Civilization (N. Y., 1941). See also G. Morin, Les véritables origines du Chant grégorien (Maredsous, 1890); W. Brambach, Gregorianisch (Leipzig, 1895); F. H. Duddin, Gregory the Great (2 vols., London, 1905); F. Greissle, Felix, composer and editor; b. Vienna, Nov. 15, 1899. He studied there at the Univ. with Guido Adler, and privately with Schoenberg and Alban Berg; from 1925-37, he conducted the Cantata Association of the Vienna State Opera. In 1938 he came to N. Y.; became associated with various music publishers. He has written numerous articles on music, including the first published explanation of Schoenberg's method of composition with 12 tones ('Anbruch,' 1925). In 1947 Greissle became director of publication for Edward B. Marks Music Corporation.

Greiter, Matthaeus, German poet and composer; b. Aichach, Bavaria, c. 1490; d. Strasbourg, Dec. 20, 1550. He wrote the texts and melodies of Psalm-Lieder for Lutheran services, and settings, for 4 voices, of German songs. He also wrote a tract, Elementale Musicum Inventuti (1544).—Cf. Th. Gérold, Les plus anciennes melodies de l'Eglise protestante de Strasbourg et leurs auteurs (Paris, 1928); E. E. Lowinsky, Matthaeus Greiter's Fortuna; an Experiment in Chromaticism and in Musical Iconography in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1956 and Jan., 1957).

Grell, Eduard August, German organist and composer; b. Berlin, Nov. 6, 1800; d. Steglitz, near Berlin, Aug. 10, 1886. He studied organ with his father and theory with Zelter; at the age of 17, he became a member of the Singakademie, and was connected with it for 59 years, until his death; he was director from 1853-76. Grell held the view that only vocal music was the true art; consequently, he wrote almost exclusively for voice. His works include a Missa Solemnis (in 16 parts a cappella); an oratorio, Die Israeliten in der Wüste, and other church music.—Cf. H. Bellermann, Biographie Grells (Berlin, 1899); Bellermann also edited Grell's essays, Aufsätze und Gutachten (posthumous; Berlin, 1887).

Gresnich, Antoine-Frédéric, Belgian composer; b. Liège, March (baptized March 2), 1755; d. Paris, Oct. 16, 1799. He was a chorister at the St. Lambert Church in Liège, and studied in Naples under Sala. He made several trips to London, where he produced his operas Demetrio, Alessandro nell'Indie, Donna di Cattiva Umor, and Alceste with considerable success. He was in Lyons in 1789-93; his opera L'amour exilé de Cythère was produced there in 1793. He then returned to Paris, where he died in poverty.

Gretchaninov (grětch-ah-ně'-növ), Alexander Tikhonovitch, Russian composer; b. Moscow, Oct. 25, 1864; d. New York, Jan. 3, 1956. He studied at the Moscow Cons. (1881-91) with Safonov (piano) and Arensky (composition); then entered the St. Petersburg Cons. as a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov (1891-1903); prof. of composition at the Moscow Institute until 1922; then lived in Paris; visited the U. S., where he appeared with considerable success as guest conductor of his own works (1929-31); came to the U. S. again in 1939, settling in New York. He became an American citizen on July 25, 1946. He continued to compose until the end of his long life. A concert of his works was presented on his 90th birthday in Town Hall, New York (Oct. 25, 1954) in the presence of the composer. A complete catalogue of his works is appended to his autobiography, My Life. His music is rooted in the Russian national tradition; influences of both Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov are in evidence in his early works; towards 1910 he attempted to inject some Impressionistic elements into his vocal compositions, but without signal success. His masterly sacred works are of historical importance, for he introduced a reform into Russian church singing by using nationally colored melodic patterns; in several of his Masses he employed instrumental accompaniment contrary to the prescriptions of the Russian Orthodox faith, a circumstance that precluded the use of these works in Russian churches. His Missa Oecumenica represents a further expansion towards ecclesiastical universality; in this work he makes use of elements pertaining to other religious music, including non-Christian. His instrumental works are competently written, but show less originality than his vocal music. His early Lullaby (1887) and the song, Over the Steppes still retain their popularity, and have been published in numerous arrangements.—Works: the operas: Dobrynya Nikitich (Moscow, Oct. 17, 1903); Sister Beatrice (Moscow, Oct. 25, 1912; suppressed after 3 performances as being irreverent); The Dream of a Little Christmas Tree, children's opera (1911); The Castle Mouse, children's opera (1921); The Cat, the Fox, and the Rooster, children's opera (1919); Marriage, comic opera after Gogol (1945-6; Berkshire Music Festival, Aug. 1, 1948); Idylle forestière, ballet divertissement for orch. (N. Y., 1925); incidental music to Ostrovsky's Snegurotchka (Moscow, Nov. 6, 1900), A. Tolstoy's Tsar Feodor (Moscow, Oct. 26, 1898), and Death of Ivan the Terrible (1899). For orch.: Concert Overture in D minor (1892; St. Petersburg, March, 1893); Elegy in Memory of Tchaikovsky (1893; St. Petersburg, Dec. 31, 1898, Rimsky-Korsakov conducting); 5 symphonies (No. 1, 1893, St. Petersburg, Jan. 26, 1895; No. 2, 1909, Moscow, March 14, 1909; No. 3, 1920-23, Kiev, May 29, 1924; No. 4, 1923-24, N. Y., April 9, 1942; No. 5, 1936; Philadelphia, April 5, 1939); Poème élégiaque (Boston, March 29, 1946); Festival Overture (Indianapolis, Nov. 15, 1946); Poème lyrique (1948). Vocal works: Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom (Moscow, Oct. 19, 1898); Laudate Deum (Moscow, Nov. 24, 1915); Liturgia Domestica (Moscow, March 30, 1918); Missa Oecumenica, for soli, chorus, and orch. (Boston, Feb. 25, 1944); 84 choruses; 14 vocal quartets; 8 duets; 258 songs (some with orch.). Chamber music: 4 string quartets, 2 trios, violin sonata, cello sonata, 2 clarinet sonatas, 2 Miniatures for saxophone and piano. For piano: 2 sonatas (2nd in 1944); Petits tableaux musicaux (1947), etc. In 1917 Gretchaninov wrote a new Russian national anthem, Hymn of Free Russia (sung in N. Y. at a concert for the benefit of Siberian exiles, N. Y., May 22, 1917). Gretchaninov wrote 201 op. numbers in all; op. 201 is a chorus a cappella, Have Mercy O God. He publ. a book of reminiscences, My Life (Paris, in Russian, 1934; in English, with additions and introduction by N. Slonimsky, N. Y., 1952; contains a complete catalogue of works). See also M. Grétry, André Ernest Modeste, outstanding dramatic composer; b. Liège, Feb. 8, 1741; d. Montmorency, near Paris, Sept. 24, 1813. His father was a violinist at the church of St. Martin in Liège; at the age of 9, Grétry was entered as chorister at the St. Denis Church, but was dismissed 2 years later. At 12, he began to study violin and singing; he learned music under Leclerc and the organist Nicolas Rennekin. At that time, an Italian opera company gave a season in Liège, and young Grétry thus received his first impulse towards dramatic music. Still his early works were instrumental; in 1758, he wrote 6 small symphonies; his next work was a Mass, which interested the ecclesiastical authorities; as a result, he was enabled (through the Canon du Harlez) to go to Rome (1759), where he entered the Collège de Liège, a school founded for the education of natives of Liège. There he studied diligently, and composed several church works, 6 string quartets, a flute concerto, and a light opera, Le Vendémiaire, which was produced in Rome in 1765. In 1766, he was in Geneva as a music teacher. He met Voltaire, who advised him to go to Paris; before his departure, he produced in Geneva a stage work, Isabelle et Gertrude, to a libretto by Favart, after Voltaire. He arrived in Paris in the autumn of 1767; he sought the patronage of aristocrats and diplomats; the Swedish ambassador, Count de Creutz, gave him the first encouragement by obtaining for him Marmontel's comedy, Le Huron; it was performed with Grétry's music at the Comédie-Italienne (Aug. 20, 1768). From then on, Grétry produced operas, one after another, without interruption even during the years of the French Revolution. The list of his operas is long; they include: Lucile (Paris, Jan. 5, 1769); Le Tableau parlant (Paris, Sept. 20, 1769; very popular); Les deux avares (Fontainebleau, Oct. 27, 1770); Sylvain (Paris, Feb. 19, 1770); L'Amitié à l'épreuve (Fontainebleau, Nov. 13, 1770); L'Ami de la maison (Fontainebleau, Oct. 26, 1771); Zémire et Azor (Fontainebleau, Nov. 9, 1771); Le Magnifique (Paris, March 4, 1773); La Rosière de Salency (Fontainebleau, Oct. 23, 1773); Céphale et Procris, ou L'Amour conjugal (Versailles, Dec. 30, 1773); La fausse magie (Paris, Feb. 1, 1775); Les Mariages samnites (3 acts, from the 1-act opera of 1768; Paris, June 12, 1776); Amour pour amour (Versailles, March 10, 1777); Mat- roco (Chantilly, Nov. 12, 1777); Le Jugement de Midas (Paris, March 28, 1778); Les fausses apparences, ou L'Amant jaloux (Versailles, Nov. 20, 1778); Les Événements imprévus (Versailles, Nov. 11, 1779); Aucassin et Nicolette, ou Les Mœurs du bon vieux temps (Versailles, Dec. 30, 1779); Andromaque (Paris, June 6, 1780); Émilie (Paris, Feb. 22, 1781); La double épreuve, ou Colinette à la Cour (Paris, Jan. 1, 1782); Le Sage dans sa retraite (The Hague, Sept. 19, 1782); L'Embarras de richesses (Nov. 26, 1782); La Caravane du Caire (Fontainebleau, Oct. 30, 1783); Théodore et Paulin (Versailles, March 5, 1784); Richard Cœur de Lion (his greatest masterpiece; Paris, Oct. 21, 1784); Panurge dans l'île des lanternes (Paris, Jan. 25, 1785); Amphitryon (Versailles, March 15, 1786); Les Méprises par ressemblance (Fontainebleau, Nov. 7, 1786); Le Comte d'Albert (Fontainebleau, Nov. 13, 1786); Le Prisonnier anglais (Paris, Dec. 26, 1787; with alterations, in 1793 as Clarice et Belton); Le Rival confident (Paris, June 26, 1788); Raoul Barbe-Bleue (Paris, March 2, 1789); Aspasie (Paris, March 17, 1789); Pierre le grand (Paris, Jan. 13, 1790); Guillaume Tell (Paris, April 9, 1791); Cécile et Ermance, ou Les deux couvents (Paris, Jan. 16, 1792); A Trompeur, trompeur et demi (Paris, Sept. 24, 1792); Joseph Barra (Paris, June 5, 1794); Denys le tyran, maître d'école à Corinthe (Paris, Aug. 23, 1794); La Rosière républicaine, ou La Fête de la vertu (Paris, Sept. 3, 1794); Callias, ou Nature et patrie (Paris, Sept. 18, 1794); Lisbeth (Paris, Jan. 10, 1797); Anacréon chez Polycrate (Paris, Jan. 17, 1797); Le Barbier de village, ou Le Revenant (Paris, May 6, 1797); Élisca, ou l'Amour maternel (Paris, Jan. 1, 1799); Le Casque et les colombes (Paris, Nov. 7, 1801); Delphis et Mopsa (Paris, Feb. 15, 1803). The merit of Grétry's operas lies in their melodies and their dramatic expression. He was not deeply versed in the science of music; yet despite this lack of craftsmanship in harmony and counterpoint, he achieved fine effects of vocal and instrumental writing. His operas suffered temporary eclipse when Méhul and Cherubini entered the field, but public interest was revived by the magnificent tenor, Elleviou, in 1801. The changes in operatic music during the next 30 years caused the neglect of Grétry's works. Nevertheless, Grétry—'the Molière of music' as he was called—founded the school of French opéra-comique, of which Boieldieu, Auber, and Adam have been such distinguished alumni. During his lifetime, he was greatly honored: he was elected a member of many artistic and learned institutions in France and abroad; the Prince-Bishop of Liège made him a privy councillor in 1784; a street in Paris was named for him in 1785; he was admitted to the Institut de France in 1795, as one of the first three chosen to represent the department of musical composition; in 1795 he was also appointed Inspector of the Paris Cons., but resigned in a few months; his bust was placed in the Grand Opéra foyer, and a marble statue in the entrance hall of the Opéra-Comique; Napoleon made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1802, and granted him a pension of 4,000 francs in compensation for losses during the Revolution. Grétry bought 'L'Ermitage,' Rousseau's former residence at Montmorency, and lived there in retirement. He was married, and had several children, but survived them all. His daughter, Lucille (real name, Angélique-Dorothée-Lucie; b. Paris, July 15, 1772; d. there, Aug. 25, 1790), was a gifted musician who died young; at the age of 13, with some assistance from her father, she composed an opera, Le Mariage d'Antonio, which was produced at the Opéra-Comique, July 29, 1786; her second opera, Toinette et Louis, was produced on March 23, 1787. Grétry's Mémoires ou Essais sur la musique were publ. in 1789 (reprinted in 1797 with 2 additional vols. edited by his friend, Legrand; in German, in 1800 at Leipzig, with critical and historical annotations by K. Spazier; in 3 vols. by Mass in 1829 and an enlarged edition by P. Magnette, Liège, 1914). In these essays, Grétry set forth his views on the paramount importance of the just declamation of every syllable set to music. He also wrote a Méthode simple pour apprendre à préluder en peu de temps avec toutes les ressources de l'harmonie (1802); De la Vérité, an ardent avowal of Republican tenets, with remarks on the feelings and the best means of exciting and expressing them by music (1803), and Réflexions sur l'art, in 6 vols., were never published. During the last years of his life he wrote Réflexions d'un Solitaire; his friends did not think its publication was advisable; the MS was considered lost until C. Malherbe discovered it in 1908; it was publ. in 4 vols., ed. by L. Solvay and E. Closson, in Brussels and Paris, 1919-22. Besides his dramatic works, Grétry composed a De Profundis, Confiteor, a Requiem, an antiphon, motets, and a good deal of instrumental music. Under the auspices of the Belgian government, a complete ed. of his works was begun in 1883 (edited by Gevaert, Closson, Radoux, E. Fétis, Wotquenne, Wouters, Wilder, Mathieu, Solvay, duBois, Mestdag, S. Dupuis, Wambach, Jongen). — Cf. Grevillius (grĕh-vĕ'-lyus), Nils, Swedish conductor; b. Stockholm, March 7, 1893. He studied there at the Academy of Music (1905-11), receiving 1st prize for the violin and the Prix Marteau; from 1911-14 was leader of the Royal Opera orch.; conducted the Swedish ballet season in Paris in 1922-23; then returned to Stockholm to conduct the Radio Orchestra.

Grey, Madeleine, French soprano; b. Villaines-le-Juhel, Mayenne, June 11, 1897. She made her début in Paris in 1921 with the first performance of Fauré's Mirages; thereafter she was identified with modern French music; was chosen to present French art songs at 3 international festivals (Venice, 1930; Siena, 1932; Florence, 1934); also toured South America.

Grieg, Edvard Hagerup, celebrated Norwegian composer; b. Bergen, June 15, 1843; d. there, Sept. 4, 1907. The original form of the name was Greig. His great-grandfather, Alexander Greig of Scotland, emigrated to Norway about 1765, and changed his name to Grieg (see J. Russell Greig, Grieg and his Scottish Ancestry, in Hinrichsen's 'Music Year Book,' 1952). Grieg received his first instruction in music from his mother, an amateur pianist. At the suggestion of the Norwegian violinist, Ole Bull, young Grieg was sent to the Leipzig Cons. (1858), where he studied piano with Plaidy and Wenzel; later with Moscheles; theory with E. F. Richter, Moritz Hauptmann, and Reinecke. He became immersed in the atmosphere of German Romanticism, with the esthetic legacy of Mendelssohn and Schumann; Grieg's early works are permeated with lyric moods related to these influences. In 1863, he went to Copenhagen, where he took a brief course of study with Niels Gade. In Copenhagen, he also met the young Norwegian composer, Rikard Nordraak, with whom he organized the Euterpe Society for the promotion of national Scandinavian music, in opposition to the German influences dominating Scandinavian music. The premature death of Nordraak at the age of 23 (1866) left Grieg alone to carry on the project. After traveling in Italy, he returned to Norway, where he opened a Norwegian Academy of Music (1867), and gave concerts of Norwegian music; he was also engaged as conductor of the Harmonic Society in Christiania (Oslo). In 1867 he married his cousin, the singer, Nina Hagerup. At that time he had already composed his 2 violin sonatas and the first set of his Lyric Pieces for piano, which used Norwegian motifs. On April 3, 1869, Grieg played the solo part in the world première of his piano concerto, which took place in Copenhagen. Thus at the age of 25, he established himself as a major composer of his time. In 1874 he wrote incidental music to Ibsen's Peer Gynt; the two orchestral suites arranged from this music became extremely popular. The Norwegian government granted him an annuity of 1600 crowns, which enabled him to devote most of his time to composition. Performances of his works were given in Germany with increasing frequency; soon his fame spread all over Europe. On May 3, 1888, he gave a concert of his works in London; he also presented recitals of his songs with his wife. He revisited England frequently; he received the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. from Cambridge (1894) and Oxford (1906). Other honors were membership in the Swedish Academy (1872), the French Academy (1890), etc. Despite his successes, Grieg was of a retiring disposition, and spent most of his later years in his house at Troldhaugen, near Bergen, avoiding visitors and shunning public acclaim. However, he continued to compose at a steady rate. His death, of heart disease, was mourned by all Norway; he was given a state funeral and his remains were cremated, at his own request, and sealed in the side of a cliff projecting at the fjord at Trolldhaugen. Grieg's importance as a composer lies in the strongly pronounced nationalism of his music; without resorting to literal quotation from Norwegian folksongs, he succeeded in recreating their melodic and rhythmic flavor. In his harmony, he remained well within the bounds of tradition; the lyric expressiveness of his best works and the contagious rhythm of his dance-like pieces imparted a charm and individuality which contributed to the lasting success of his art. His unassuming personality made friends for him among his colleagues; he was admired by Brahms and Tchaikovsky. The combination of lyricism and nationalism in Grieg's music led some critics to describe him as 'the Chopin of the North.' He excelled in miniatures, in which the perfection of form and the clarity of musical line are remarkable; the unifying purpose of Grieg's entire creative life is exemplified by his lyric pieces for piano. He composed 10 sets of these pieces in 34 years, between 1867 and 1901. His songs, which he wrote for his wife, are distinguished by the same blend of romantic and characteristically national inflections. In orchestral composition, Grieg limited himself to symphonic suites, and arrangements of his piano pieces; in chamber music, his 3 violin sonatas, a cello sonata, and a string quartet are examples of fine instrumental writing.—Works: For orch.: In Autumn, concert overture (op. 11, 1865); Two Elegiac Melodies for string orch. (op. 34, based on songs from op. 33; The Wounded One and The Last Spring); Concerto in A minor for piano and orch. (op. 16, 1868); Norwegian Dances (op. 35, 1881); Holberg Suite for string orch. (op. 40, 1884-85); Peer Gynt Suite No. 1 (op. 46, 1876; includes Morning, Aase's Death, Anitra's Dance, In the Hall of the Mountain King); Two Melodies for string orch. (op. 53, 1891; based on songs from op. 21 and op. 23; Norwegian and First Meeting); Peer Gynt Suite No. 2 (op. 55, 1876; includes The Abduction and Ingrid's Lament, Arab Dance, Peer Gynt's Homecoming, Solveig's Song); Sigurd Jorsalfar Suite (op. 56, 1872); Two Norwegian Melodies for string orch. (op. 63, 1894-95; based on melodies from op. 17: In the Style of a Folksong and Cowkeeper's Tune and Peasant Dance); Symphonic Dances

GRIEG

(1898); Evening in the Mountains for oboe, horn, and strings (arranged from op. 68, No. 4; 1898); At the Cradle for string orch. (arranged from op. 68, No. 5; 1898); Funeral March in Memory of Rikard Nordraak for military band (arranged from the piano solo written in 1866); Lyric Suite (arranged from piano solos op. 54, 1891; includes Shepherd Boy, Norwegian March, Nocturne, March of the Dwarfs). Chamber music; Sonata in F for piano and violin (op. 8, 1865); Sonata in G minor for piano and violin (op. 13, 1867); string quartet in G minor (op. 27, 1877-78); Sonata in A minor for cello and piano (op. 36, 1883); Sonata in C minor for violin and piano (op. 45, 1886-87); string quartet in F (2 movements only; 1892). Choral works: At a Southern Convent's Gate (op. 20, 1871); 2 songs from Sigurd Jorsalfar (op. 22, 1870); Album for Male Voices (op. 30; 1877); Landsighting (op. 31, 1872); Scenes from 'Olav Trygvason' (op. 50, 1873); Ave Maris Stella (no opus number); Four Psalms (op. 74, 1906); he also wrote The Bewitched One for baritone with strings and 2 horns (op. 32, 1878); and the ballad, Bergliot for declamation and orch. (op. 42, 1870-71). He wrote the incidental music for Björnson's Sigurd Jorsalfar (Christiania, April 10, 1872) and Ibsen's Peer Gynt (Christiania, Feb. 24, 1876), from which the suites so named were taken. For piano: piano solos: 4 pieces (op. 1, 1862); Poetic Tone-Pictures (op. 3, 1863); Humoresker (op. 6, 1865); Sonata in E minor (op. 7, 1865); Funeral March in Memory of Rikard Nordraak (1866); 10 sets of Lyric Pieces (Book 1, op. 12, 1867; Book 2, op. 38, 1883; Book 3, op. 43, 1884; Book 4, op. 47, 1888; Book 5, op. 54, 1891; Book 6, op. 57, 1893; Book 7, op. 62, 1895; Book 8, op. 65, 1896; Book 9, op. 68, 1898; Book 10, op. 71, 1901; among the most famous individual numbers of the Lyric Pieces are: Butterfly, Erotik, and To Spring in Book 3; March of the Dwarfs in Book 5); Norwegian Dances and Songs (op. 17, 1870); Scenes from Peasant Life (op. 19, 1872); Ballad in the Form of Variations on a Norwegian Folksong (op. 24, 1875); Album Leaves (op. 28, 1864, 1874, 1876, 1878); Improvisations on Norwegian Folksongs (op. 29, 1878); Holberg Suite (op. 40, 1884); Norwegian Folk Melodies (op. 66, 1896); Norwegian Peasant Dances (op. 72, 1902); Moods (op. 73, 1906); 6 Norwegian Mountain Tunes (no opus number); 3 piano pieces (no opus number; Nos. 2 and 3 written in 1898 and 1891); arrangements for piano solo of a number of his songs and orchestral works; original piano duets: Norwegian Dances for 4 Hands (op. 35, 1881); Valses-Caprices (op. 37, 1883); 2nd piano parts to 4 piano sonatas by Mozart (1877).—Songs: 25 sets of songs to German and Norwegian words; of these, I Love Thee attained enormous popularity.

Grieg, Nina Hagerup, Norwegian singer, wife of Edvard Grieg; b. near Bergen, Nov. 24, 1845; d. Copenhagen, Dec. 9, 1935. Her father, Herman Hagerup, was a brother of Grieg's mother. She studied singing with Helsted; she met Grieg in Copenhagen, and married him on June 11, 1867. Her interpretations of Grieg's songs elicited much praise from the critics.

Griend, Koos van de, Dutch composer; b. Kampen, near Zwolle, Dec. 11, 1905; d. Amsterdam, Jan. 12, 1950. He studied in Amsterdam and in Berlin. Returning to Amsterdam in 1933, he developed energetic activities as pianist, conductor, and music critic. He wrote 2 symphonies, a violin concerto, and 2 string quartets; also music for films.

Griepenkerl, Friedrich Konrad, German music editor; b. Peine, Dec. 10, 1782; d. Brunswick, April 6, 1849. He taught esthetics at Hofwyl, Switzerland, then settled in Brunswick as professor at the Carolinum there. He published a Lehrbuch der Aesthetik (1827); edited (ably) Bach's instrumental works.

Griepenkerl, Wolfgang Robert, playwright and music theorist, son of preceding; b. Hofwyl, May 4, 1810; d. Brunswick, Oct. 16, 1868. He studied philosophy and literature at Berlin Univ.; taught art history at the Carolinum, Brunswick (1839) and at the Brunswick Cadet School (1840-47). He wrote the tragedies Robespierre (which inspired Litolff's well-known overture) and Girondistes. He also published Das Musikfest, oder die Beethovener (a novel, 1838; 2nd ed., 1841); Ritter Berlioz in Braunschweig (1843); Die Oper der Gegenwart (1847); and papers in 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.'—Cf. O. Sievers, Robert Griepenkerl (Brunswick, 1879); Th. W. Werner, Wolfgang Robert Griepenkerls Schriften über Musik, in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' II (1920).

Griesbach, John Henry, English composer; b. Windsor, June 20, 1798; d. London, Jan. 9, 1875. He was of German descent; he studied cello with his father, and played in the court band. His major work was an oratorio, Belshazzar's Feast (1835; revised and performed as Daniel, London, June 30, 1854); also wrote a number of overtures and cantatas. He was an amateur scientist and wrote several papers dealing with acoustics which remained in manuscript.

Griesbacher, Peter, German theorist and church music composer; b. Eggldham, March 25, 1864; d. Regensburg, Jan. 28, 1933. He studied theology; was ordained priest in 1886; was instructor at the Franciscan church in Regensburg (from 1894); edited various publications for Catholic church music; wrote 40 Masses, secular cantatas, and songs (about 250 op. numbers). He began as a composer in the strict style of contrapuntal writing; his later works, in which he applied modern harmonies to Gregorian melodies, aroused considerable opposition. He published several manuals: Lehrbuch des Kontrapunkts (1910); Kirchenmusikalische Stilistik und Formenlehre (3 vols., 1912-13); Glockenmusik (1926).—Cf. M. Tremmel, Peter Griesbacher (Potsdam, 1935).

Griffes, Charles Tomlinson, outstanding American composer; b. Elmira, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1884; d. New York, April 8, 1920. He studied piano with a local teacher, Mary S. Broughton; also took organ lessons. In 1903, he went to Berlin, where he was a pupil of Gottfried Galston (piano), Rüfer and Humperdinck (composition). To eke out his living, he gave private lessons; also played his own compositions in public recitals. In 1907, he returned to the U. S., and took a music teacher's job at the Hackley School for Boys at Tarrytown, N. Y.; at the same time he continued to study music by himself; he was fascinated by the exotic art of the French Impressionists, and investigated the potentialities of Oriental scales. He also was strongly influenced by the Russian School, particularly Mussorgsky and Scriabin. A combination of natural talent and determination to acquire a high degree of craftsmanship elevated Griffes to the position of a foremost American composer in the Impressionist genre; despite changes of taste, his works retain an enduring place in American music. The best of these is The White Peacock for piano (1917; also for orch., Philadelphia, Stokowski conducting, Dec. 19, 1919) and the tone poem, The Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan, after Coleridge (Boston Symph. Orch., Nov. 28, 1919). His works include further: The Kairn of Koridwen, dance drama for 5 woodwinds, celesta, harp, and piano (N. Y., Feb. 10, 1917); Shojo, Japanese pantomimic drama for 4 woodwinds, 4 muted strings, harp, and percussion (1917); Poem for flute and orch. (N. Y., Nov. 16, 1919); 2 Sketches on Indian Themes for string quartet (1922); for piano: 3 Tone Pictures (The Lake at Evening, The Vale of Dreams, and The Night Winds; 1915); Fantasy Pieces (Barcarolle, Notturmo, and Scherzo; 1915); Roman Sketches (The White Peacock, Nightfall, The Fountain of Acqua Paola, and Clouds; 1917); Sonata in F (1921); vocal works: These Things Shall Be, for unison chorus (1917); songs to German texts (Auf geheimen Waldespfade, Auf dem Teich, etc.); songs to English words: The First Snowfall, The Half-ring Moon, Evening Song; Tone Images (La fuite de la lune, Symphony in Yellow, and We'll to the Woods, and Gather May; 1915); 2 Rondels (Come, love, across the sunlit land and This book of hours; 1915); 3 Poems (In a Myrtle Shade, Waikiki, and Phantoms; 1916); 5 Poems of Ancient China and Japan (Sou-Fei gathering flowers, Landscape, The Old Temple, Tears, and A Feast of Lanterns; 1917); 3 Poems (The Lament of Ian the Proud, Thy Dark Eyes to Mine, and The Rose of the Night; 1918); An Old Song Re-sung (1920).—Cf. W. T. Upton, The Songs of Charles T. Griffes, in the 'Mus.

Quarterly' (July, 1923); M. Bauer, Charles T. Griffes as I Remember Him, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1943); E. M. Maisel, Charles Tomlinson Griffes (N. Y., 1943).

Griller, Sidney, English violinist; b. London, Jan. 10, 1911. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music, London; organized a string quartet in the ensemble class of Lionel Tertis (with Jack O'Brien, 2nd violin; Philip Burton, viola, and Colin Hampton, cello); then gave numerous concerts as Griller Quartet, in Europe and America, specializing in modern music.

Grimaud, Yvette, French composer and pianist; b. Algiers, Jan. 29, 1922. She studied piano there, and gave concerts as a child in Europe. She later entered the Paris Cons., graduating with a premier prix in 1941. She composes in a modern manner, employing the ondes Martenot and experimenting with quarter-tones.—Works: 4 Chants d'Espace for voice, ondes Martenot, and percussion; Chant de Courbes for 2 ondes Martenot and timpani; etc.

Grimm, Carl Hugo, American organist and composer; b. Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 31, 1890; studied with his father; held various positions as organist in Cincinnati, taught composition at the Cincinnati Cons. (1907-31). He composed Erotic Poem for orch. (1927; received a prize of the National Federation of Music Clubs); a trumpet concerto; Byzantine Suite for orch.; Montana, symphonic sketch (Cincinnati, March 26, 1943); An American Overture (Cincinnati, Feb. 15, 1946); also organ music.

Grimm, Friedrich Melchior (Baron von), German writer; b. Regensburg, Dec. 26, 1723; d. Gotha, Dec. 18, 1807. He went to Paris in 1750 and remained there till the Revolution, frequenting literary and musical circles and taking an active part in all controversies; his Lettre sur Omphale in the 'Mercure de France,' 1752, took the side of Italian opera in the 'guerre des bouffons' but some years later he upheld Gluck against the Italian faction supporting Piccini. He edited the Correspondance littéraire, philosophique et critique, which offers important data on French opera (standard ed. in 16 vols., Paris, 1877-82). He befriended the Mozarts on their first visit to Paris (see the many references to him in E. Anderson, Letters of Mozart and His Family, London, 1938). He also wrote a satire on J. Stamitz, Le Petit Prophète de Boeh- misch-Broda; it is reproduced in English in O. Strunk's Source Readings in Music History (N. Y., 1950).—Cf. Carlez, Grimm et la musique de son temps (1872); Jullien, La Musique et les philosophes (1873); E. Schérer, Melchior Grimm (1887); E. Grimm, Heinrich, German composer; b. Holzminden, c. 1593; d. Brunswick, July 10, 1637. He studied theology at the Univ. of Helmstedt; in 1619, became rector of the Magdeburg town school; in 1631, when the town was destroyed, he fled with his family to Brunswick, where he became a cantor at the church of St. Catherine; subsequently at St. Andrea's church (1632-37). He was an exponent of the concerted style, with thorough-bass, at that time still a novel technique in Germany. His extant works include Masses, psalms, Passions, and several pedagogical works; published Unter-richt, wie ein Knabe nach der alten Guidonischen Art zu solmisieren leicht angeführt werden kann (Magdeburg, 1624) and Instrumentum Instrumentorum (1629); prepared a combined edition of Melopoëia seu melodiarum condendae ratio by Calvisius and Pleiades Musicae by Baryphonus (Magdeburg, 1630).—Cf. B. Engelke, Magdeburgische Musikgeschichte (1914); H. Lorenzen, Der Cantor Heinrich Grimm; sein Leben und seine Werke mit Beitrag zur Musikgeschichte Magdeburgs und Braunschweigs (Hamburg, 1940).

Grimm, Julius Otto, composer; b. Pernau, Latvia, March 6, 1827; d. Münster, Dec. 7, 1903. He studied philosophy at the Univ. of Dorpat; then lived in St. Petersburg; in 1851, he went to Leipzig, where he studied with Moscheles and Hauptmann; there he formed a close friendship with Brahms and Joachim. In 1855, he went to Göttingen; in 1860, obtained a position as conductor in Münster. During 40 years of his life there, he presented some 1500 orchestral works, ranging from Bach to the modern Russian school. He wrote a symphony (1874); a suite for string orch. in canon form; several cycles of songs, and albums of piano pieces.—Cf. F. Ludwig, Julius Otto Grimm (Leipzig, 1925); see also Brahms im Briefwechsel mit J. O. Grimm (Berlin, 1912).

Grimm, Karl, German cellist; b. Hildburghausen, April 28, 1819; d. Freiburg, Jan. 9, 1888. He was for half a century the first cellist at the Wiesbaden Opera; composed many cello pieces, some of which attained considerable popularity.

Grimm, Karl Konstantin Ludwig, German harpist; b. Berlin, Feb. 17, 1820; d. there, May 23, 1882. He enjoyed a considerable reputation as a harp soloist; also wrote various pieces for his instrument.

Grisar, Albert, Belgian dramatic composer; b. Antwerp (of German-Belgian parentage), Dec. 26, 1808; d. Asnières, near Paris, June 15, 1869. Although intended for a mercantile career, he ran away from his Liverpool employer, and studied for a short time (1830) with Reicha in Paris. Returning to Antwerp, he brought out Le Mariage impossible (Brussels, March 4, 1833), and obtained a government subsidy for further study in Paris. On April 26, 1836 he produced Sarah at the Opéra-Comique; then L'An mille (June 23, 1837), La Suisse à Trianon (March 8, 1838), Lady Melvil (Nov. 15, 1838, with Flotow), L'Eau merveilleuse (Jan. 31, 1839, with Flotow), Le Naufrage de la Méduse (May 31, 1839, with Flotow and Pilati), Les Travestissements (Nov. 16, 1839), and L'Opéra à la cour (July 16, 1840, with Boieldieu, Jr.). In 1840 he went to Naples for further serious study under Mercadante; returning to Paris in 1848, he brought out Gilles ravisseur (Feb. 21, 1848), Les Porcherons (Jan. 12, 1850), Bonsoir, M. Pantalon (Feb. 19, 1851), Le Carillonneur de Bruges (Feb. 20, 1852), Les Amours du Diable (March 11, 1853), Le Chien du jardinier (Jan. 16, 1855), Voyage autour de ma chambre (Aug. 12, 1855); Le Joaillier de St. James (revision of Lady Melvil; Feb. 17, 1862); La Chatte merveilleuse (March 18, 1862), Bégaiements d'amour (Dec. 8, 1864), and Douze innocentes (Oct. 19, 1865). He left, besides, 12 finished and unfinished operas; also dramatic scenes, over 50 romances, etc. His statue (by Brackeleer) was placed in the vestibule of the Antwerp Theater in 1870.—Cf. A. Pougin, Albert Grisar (Paris, 1870).

Grisart (grë-zahr'), Charles Jean Baptiste, French composer; b. Paris, Sept. 29, 1837; d. Compiègne, March 11, 1904. He is known for his light operas, the most popular of which were: La Quenouille de verre (1873), Les trois Margots (1877), Le Pont d'Avignon (1878), Les Poupées de l'Infante (1881), Le Bossu (1888), Le petit Bois (1893), Voilà le roi! (1894). He also wrote many piano pieces, Masses, mélodies, etc., and a quantity of transcriptions.

Griselle, Thomas, American composer; b. Upper Sandusky, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1891; d. Hollywood, Dec. 27, 1955. He studied at the Cincinnati College of Music; later took courses in Europe with Nadia Boulanger and Arnold Schoenberg; toured as accompanist of Alice Nielsen and other singers; then became associated with radio and motion pictures; in 1928, won the $10,000 prize of the Victor contest for American composers with his Two American Sketches. In 1939, settled in Hollywood. He wrote a number of semi-popular pieces, often with humorous intent, such as A Keyboard Symphony for 6 pianos (Providence, March 27, 1928); Tutti-Frutti and Czerny Pilots a Flying Saucer for piano, etc.

Grisi, Giuditta, Italian mezzo-soprano; b. Milan, July 28, 1805; d. Robecco d'Oglio, near Cremona, May 2, 1840. She was a niece of the famous contralto, Josephina Grassini; a cousin of the dancer, Carlotta Grisi, and the elder sister of the celebrated soprano, Giulia Grisi. She studied at the Milan Cons.; made her 1st appearance in Vienna in 1823; afterward sang with success in Italy and in Paris at the Théâtre-Italien under Rossini's management; retired in 1834 on her marriage to Count Barni. Bellini wrote for her the part of Romeo in I Capuleti ed i Montecchi (Venice, March 11, 1830); her sister sang Juliet.

Grisi, Giulia, celebrated Italian soprano; b. Milan, July 28, 1811; d. Berlin, Nov. 29, 1869. She studied with her sister, Giuditta, and with Filippo Celli and Pietro Guglielmi, son of the composer; made her first appearance at 17 as Emma in Rossini's Zelmira; won the admiration of Bellini, who wrote for her the part of Juliet in I Capuleti ed i Montecchi (Venice, March 11, 1830); she sang in Milan until 1832; dissatisfied with her contract and unable to break it legally, she fled to Paris, where she joined her sister at the Théâtre-Italien; she made her Paris début in the title role of Rossini's Semiramide (Oct. 16, 1832); her success was phenomenal, and for the next 16 years she sang during the winter seasons at the Théâtre-Italien. She made her London début in Rossini's La gazza ladra (April 8, 1834), and continued to visit London annually for 27 years. With Rubini, Tamburini, and Lablache, she appeared in Bellini's I Puritani and other operas; when the tenor Mario replaced Rubini, Grisi sang with him and Tamburini; she married Mario (her second husband) in 1844; toured the U. S. with him in 1854; retired in 1861, and lived mostly in London, making occasional visits to the continent; on one such visit to Berlin, she died of pneumonia.

Griswold, Putnam, American bass; b. Minneapolis, Dec. 23, 1875; d. New York, Feb. 26, 1914. He studied with A. Randegger in London, with Bouhy in Paris, Stockhausen in Frankfurt, and Emerich in Berlin; sang at the Berlin Opera in 1904; in 1904-5 toured the U. S. with Savage's company, appearing in the English version of Parsifal; from 1906-11 was a popular singer at the Berlin Opera; made his Metropolitan Opera début on Nov. 23, 1911, in the role of Hagen in Götterdämmerung. He was identified with the bass parts in Wagner's works until his death; German critics pronounced him the greatest foreign interpreter of these roles, and he was twice decorated by the Kaiser.

Grocheo, Johannes de (active in Paris about 1280), author of the treatise Theoria (circa 1300), important as a source of information on secular music of the Middle Ages. It is printed in the original Latin with German transl. by J. Wolf in 'Sammelbände der internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1899-1900; vol. I, pp. 69-130); emendations were provided by H. Müller (op. cit., vol. IV, pp. 361-8). See Ernst Rohloff, Studien zum Musiktraktat des Johannes de Grocheo (Leipzig, 1930); also J. A. Westrup, Medieval Song, in New Oxford History of Music (London, 1954; vol. II, pp. 223-9).

Grofé, Ferde (Ferdinand Rudolph von), American composer, pianist, and arranger; b. New York, March 27, 1892. He attended N. Y. and California public schools; studied music with Pietro Florida; then was engaged as viola player in the Los Angeles Symphony Orch., at the same time working as popular pianist and conductor in theaters and cafés; joined Paul Whiteman's band in 1920 as pianist and arranger; it was his scoring of Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue (1924) that won him fame. In his own works, Grofé successfully applied jazz rhythms, interwoven with simple ballad-like tunes; his Grand Canyon Suite (Chicago, Nov. 22, 1931, Paul Whiteman conducting) has become very popular. Other light pieces in modern vein include Broadway at Night, Mississippi Suite, Three Shades of Blue, Tabloid Suite (N. Y., Jan. 25, 1933), Symphony in Steel (N. Y., Jan. 19, 1937), Hollywood Suite, Wheels Suite, New England Suite, Metropolis, Aviation Suite, etc.

Nov. 18, 1841. He played viola in the court orch. at Kassel; edited a music magazine 'Euterpe' in 1797-98; wrote biographical articles on composers, and corresponded with Beethoven. He composed 2 operas, Titania (1792) and Das heilige Kleeblatt (1793); also set the Ten Commandments for voices. His autobiography was published by G. Heinrichs (1926).

Grosjean (groh-zhähn'), Ernest, nephew of Jean Romary Grosjean; French organist and composer; b. Vagney, Dec. 18, 1844; d. Versailles, Dec. 28, 1936. He studied in Paris with Boëly and Stamaty; was organist at Verdun Cathedral from 1868-1916; then organist at St. Antoine, Versailles; from 1888-1914 was editor of the 'Journal des Organistes.' He wrote many works for organ and a Théorie et pratique de l'accompagnement du plainchant.

Grosjean, Jean Romary, French organist and composer; b. Epinal, Jan. 12, 1815; d. St. Dié, Feb. 13, 1888. He was organist at the St. Dié Cathedral from 1839; he publ. a 2-vol. collection of organ works, Album d'un organiste catholique, which included some of his own compositions; also edited a complete collection of Noël's and folksongs of Lorraine.

Grosvenor, Ralph L., American organist and teacher; b. Grosvenor's Corners, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1893. He studied organ with Huntington Woodman in N. Y., composition with Ernest Bloch. He served in World War I, and remained in France after service, taking lessons in organ with Poillot and Moisenet. Upon his return to the U. S., he occupied various organ positions in and around New York; also took vocal lessons, and appeared as tenor in local opera companies. He wrote a number of sacred choruses and semi-popular songs (My Desire, Wishing, etc.).

Grosz, Wilhelm (Will), Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Aug. 11, 1894; d. New York, Dec. 9, 1939. He studied composition with Franz Schreker in Vienna; then lived in Berlin (1928-33). In 1933 he went to London; in 1938 came to New York. He wrote an opera, Sganarell, after Molière (Dessau, Nov. 21, 1925); Der arme Reinhold, a 'danced fable' (Berlin, Dec. 22, 1928); a modern musical comedy Achtung, Aufnahme! (Frankfurt, March 23, 1930); Jazzband, for violin and piano (1924); a violin sonata (1925); a song cycle, Liebeslieder. As Will Grosz, he wrote light songs, among them the popular Isle of Capri (1934).

Grout, Donald Jay, American musicologist; b. Rock Rapids, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1902. He studied at Syracuse Univ. (A.B., 1923); then at Harvard (A.M., 1932; Ph.D., 1939); was instructor in music there (1936-42); then taught at the Univ. of Texas (1942-45); in 1945, appointed prof. of music at Cornell Univ. He held a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1951; editor of the 'Journal of the American Musicological Society' from 1948-52. He is the author of A Short History of Opera, an extensive study of the subject from the inception of opera to modern times (2 vols., N. Y., 1947).

Grove, Sir George, eminent English musicographer; b. London, Aug. 13, 1820; d. there, May 28, 1900. He studied civil engineering; graduated in 1839 from the Institution of Civil Engineers, and worked in various shops in Glasgow, and then in Jamaica and Bermuda. He returned to England in 1846, and became interested in music; without abandoning his engineering profession, he entered the Society of Arts, of which he was appointed secretary in 1850; this position placed him in contact with the organizers of the 1851 Exhibition; in 1852 he became secretary of the Crystal Palace. He then turned to literary work; was an editor of the Dictionary of the Bible; traveled to Palestine in 1858 and 1861 in connection with his research; in 1865 he became director of the Palestine Exploration Fund. In the meantime, he accumulated a private music library; began writing analytical programs for Crystal Palace concerts; these analyses, contributed by Grove during the period 1856-96, established a new standard of excellence in musical exegesis. Grove's enthusiasm for music led to many important associations; with Arthur Sullivan he went to Vienna in 1867 in search of unknown music by Schubert, and discovered the score of Schubert's Rosamunde. In 1868, he became editor of Macmillan's Magazine; in 1878, he visited America; he received many honors for his literary and musical achievements, among them the D. C. L., Univ. of Durham (1875); LL.D., Univ. of Glasgow (1885). In 1883 he was knighted by Queen Victoria. When the Royal College of Music was formed in London (1882), Grove was appointed director, and retained this post until 1894. His chief work, which gave him enduring fame, was the monumental 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' which Macmillan began to publ. in 1879. It was first planned in 2 vols., but as the material grew, it was expanded to 4 vols., with an appendix, its publication being completed in 1889. Grove himself contributed voluminous articles on his favorite composers, Beethoven, Schubert, and Mendelssohn; he gathered a distinguished group of specialists to write the assorted entries. The 2nd ed. of Grove's 'Dictionary' (1904-10), in 5 vols., was edited by Fuller Maitland; 3rd ed. (1927-28), by H. C. Colles; an American supplement, first publ. in 1920, edited by W. S. Pratt and C. H. N. Boyd, was expanded and republished in 1928; 4th edition, also edited by H. C. Colles, was publ. in 5 vols., with a supplementary volume, in 1940. Eric Blom was entrusted with the preparation of an entirely revised and greatly enlarged 5th ed., which was publ. in 9 vols. in 1954; it became the largest music reference book in the English language; Grove's original articles on Beethoven, Schubert, and Mendelssohn were publ. separately in 1951, since their bulk was out of proportion even in this 9-vol. ed.; new articles on these composers were included instead. Grove further publ. Beethoven and His Nine Symphonies (1896; new ed., 1948); contributed prefaces to Otto Jahn's Life of Mozart and Novello's Short History of Cheap Music; also contributed numerous articles to the musical press.—Cf. C. L. Graves, The Life and Letters of Sir George Grove (London, 1904); C. L. Graves, George Grove: a Centenary Study in 'Music & Letters' (1920).

Grové, Stefans, South African composer; b. Bethlehem, Orange Free State, July 23, 1922. He studied piano with his mother and his uncle; later with Cameron Taylor at the South African College of Music; then took courses with W. H. Bell in Cape Town and with Piston at Harvard Univ. (1953-54). In 1956, he was appointed instructor at the Peabody Cons., Baltimore. Grové's music is distinguished by clarity of formal presentation and a free flow of melodic line; the contrapuntal structure is often complex, but it is invariably cast within clearly outlined harmonies.—Works: clarinet sonata (1947); string trio (1948); Elegy for string orch. (Cape Town, July 9, 1948); Duo for violin and cello (1950); ballet, Die Dieper Reg (1950); piano trio (1952); trio for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon (1952); quintet for flute, oboe, viola, bass clarinet, and harp (1952); trio for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon (1954); flute sonata (1955); Sinfonia Concertante (Johannesburg, Oct. 23, 1956); quartet for flute, oboe, clarinet, and bassoon (1956).

Groven, Eivind, Norwegian composer; b. Lardal, Telemark, Oct. 8, 1901. He studied at the Oslo Cons. and later in Berlin. He has composed Mot Ballade (1933) and 2 symphonies (1938, 1946). He has also arranged about 500 Norwegian folksongs. He publ. Temperering og Renstemning, dealing with a new system of piano tuning according to natural intervals (1948).

Grovez, Gabriel (Marie), French conductor, writer, and composer; b. Lille, April 4, 1879; d. Paris, Oct. 20, 1944. He studied at the Paris Cons. under Diémer, Lavignac, Gedalge, and Fauré; won 1st prize in piano there (1899); then taught piano at the Schola Cantorum from 1908; after an engagement as conductor at the Opéra-Comique and at the Théâtre des Arts, he was appointed conductor at the Paris Opéra in 1914; also conducted the Chicago Opera Co. (1921-22 and 1925-26). His compositions include the operas La Princesse au Jardin (Monte Carlo, 1920), Psyché, and Cœur de rubis (Nice, 1922); an opéra-bouffe, Le Marquis de Carabas (1925; won the Ville de Paris composition prize in 1936); 2 ballets, Maimouna (Paris Opéra, April 25, 1921) and Le Vrai Arbre de Robinson (Chicago, 1921); symph. poems, Madrigal lyrique, La Vengeance des Fleurs, Le Reposeur des amants; Dans le jardin, for soprano, women's chorus, and orch.; violin sonata; cello sonata; more than 50 songs, and many piano pieces, including Recuerdos, Deux études, A Child's Garden, Nocturne, Le Royaume puéril, Deux Impressions, and the sets, Almanach aux images and London Voluntaries; was an editor of Rameau's works; edited the collection, Les plus beaux airs de l'opéra français (in 8 vols., Paris, 1924); publ. a book, L'Initiation à l'orchestration (Paris, 1944).

Grua, Carlo Luigi Pietro, Italian composer; b. Florence, c. 1665; date of death unknown. He was in Dresden from 1691 to 1694, first as singer in the electoral chapel, then as assistant Kapellmeister; his opera, Camillo generoso, was produced in Dresden in 1693; he next went to the Palatine court at Düsseldorf as assistant Kapellmeister; his opera, Telegono, was given there during the 1697 Carnival; he remained in Düsseldorf for a number of years, then went to Venice, where he produced 2 operas: Il pastor fido (1721) and Romolo e Tazio (1722).

Grua, Carlo Pietro, Italian composer; place and date of birth uncertain; d. Mannheim, June, 1773. He may have been a son or relative of Carlo Luigi Pietro Grua. He was Kapellmeister at Mannheim from about 1734 until his death; during this time, wrote 2 operas, Meride (1742) and La clemenza di Tito (1748); also 5 oratorios and a Miserere.

Grua, Francesco de Paula, or Paolo, Italian composer, son of Carlo Pietro Grua; b. Mannheim, Feb. 2, 1754; d. Munich, July 5, 1833. He studied with Holzbauer at Mannheim, then went to Bologna, where he was a pupil of Padre Martini, and to Parma, where he studied with Traetta. Returning to Mannheim, he became a member of the electoral orch.; in 1778, accompanied the court to Munich; became court conductor there in 1784. He wrote one opera, Telemaco, given at the Munich Carnival in 1780; also much church music, including 31 orchestral Masses.

Gruber, Franz Xaver, Austrian composer and organist; b. Unterweizburg, Nov. 25, 1787; d. Hallein, near Salzburg, June 7, 1863. He acquired fame as the composer of the Christmas carol, Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht. Of a poor family, Gruber had to do manual work as a youth, but managed to study organ; by dint of perseverance he obtained, at the age of 28, his first position as church organist and schoolmaster at Oberndorf. It was there, on Christmas Eve, 1818, that a young curate, Joseph Mohr, brought him a Christmas poem to be set to music, and Gruber wrote the celebrated song. — Cf. K. Weinmann, Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht (Regensburg, 1918).

Gruber, Georg, Austrian conductor; b. Vienna, July 27, 1904. He studied music at the Vienna Univ.; received his Ph.D. in 1928. In 1930, he became conductor of the famous Vienna Choir Boys, and toured with them throughout Europe, South America, and the U. S. He also arranged for his choir folksongs and choral works of the Renaissance period.

Gruenberg, Eugene, Austrian violinist; b. Lwow, Oct. 30, 1854; d. Boston, Nov. 11, 1928. He studied at the Vienna Cons. with Heissler (violin), Hellmesberger (ensemble playing), Bruckner and Dessooff (composition); then went to Leipzig, where he played in the Gewandhaus Orch. In 1891 he emigrated to America and joined the Boston Symph. Orch. (resigned in 1898); subsequently taught at the New England Cons. He wrote a symphony, which he conducted in Leipzig; Suite im antiken Stil; violin sonata; studies for violin, etc.; also wrote a cadenza to Brahms' violin concerto; publ. The Violinist's Manual (N. Y., 1897; rev. ed., 1919 as Violin Teaching and Violin Studies, with a preface by Fritz Kreisler), etc. — Cf. his article, Stagefright, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1919).

Gruenberg, Louis, <sup>June 9, '61</sup> eminent American composer; b. near Brest Litovsk, Poland, Aug. 3, 1884. He was brought to the U. S. as an infant; studied piano with Adele Margulies in N. Y.; then went to Berlin, where he studied with Busoni (piano and composition); in 1912 made his début as pianist with the Berlin Philh.; intermittently took courses at the Vienna Cons., where he also was a tutor. In 1919, he returned to the U. S., and devoted his entire energy to composing. He was one of the organizers and active members of the League of Composers (1923); became a champion of modern music, and one of the earliest American composers to incorporate jazz rhythms in works of symphonic dimensions (Daniel Jazz, Jazzettes, etc.); from 1933-36, he taught composition at the Chicago Mus. College; then settled in Santa Monica, Calif. His opera, The Emperor Jones, to O'Neill's play, produced at the Metropolitan Opera, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1933, attracted a great deal of attention by its dramatic effects and novel devices, particularly in the use of percussion; it received the David Bispham medal. Other stage works: The Witch of Brocken (1912); The Bride of the Gods (1913); Dumb Wife (1921); Jack and the Beanstalk (libretto by John Erskine; N. Y., Nov. 19, 1931); Queen Helena (1936); Green Mansions, radio opera (CBS, Sept. 7, 1937); Volpone, opera (1945); The Miracle of Flanders, mystery play (1950). For orch.: 5 symphonies (No. 1, 1919; rev. in 1929; won the $5,000 RCA Victor prize in 1930; performed by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symph., Feb. 10, 1934); Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 (1942-48); Vagabondia (1920); The Hill of Dreams, symph. poem (won Flagler prize; N. Y., Oct. 23, 1921); Jazz Suite (Cincinnati, March 22, 1929); The Enchanted Isle, symph. poem (Worcester Festival, Oct. 3, 1929); Nine Moods (1929); Music for an Imaginary Ballet, 2 sets (1929; 1944); Serenade to a Beautiful Lady (Chicago, April 4, 1935); 2 piano concertos; violin concerto (Philadelphia Orch., Dec. 1, 1944, Heifetz soloist). Vocal works: Daniel Jazz, for tenor and 8 instruments (N. Y., Feb. 22, 1925); Creation, for baritone and 8 instruments (N. Y., Nov. 27, 1926); Animals and Insects, for voice and piano; Four Contrasting Songs; etc.; also published 4 vols. of Negro spirituals. Chamber music: suite for violin and piano (1914); 2 violin sonatas (1912; 1919); Indiscretions for string quartet (1922); Diversions for string quartet (1930); 2 string quartets (1937; 1938); Jazzettes for violin and piano (1926); 2 piano quintets (1929; 1937); Poem in Form of a Sonatina for cello and piano (1925); 4 Whimsicalities for string quartet (1923). Piano works: Jazzberries, Polychromatics, Jazz Masks, 6 Jazz Epigrams, 3 Jazz Dances, etc.

Gruhn, Nora, English soprano; b. London, March 6, 1908. She studied at the Royal College of Music. She has sung with the Cologne Opera (1930-31), at Covent Garden (1931-34), and at Sadler's Wells (1946-48). She has appeared as Gretel in Hänsel and Gretel some 400 times in England.

Grumiaux, Arthur, Belgian violinist; b. Villers-Perwin, March 21, 1921. He studied at the Brussels Cons. and with Enesco; received the Vieuxtemps Prize in 1939. Since 1945, he has been giving concerts in Europe and teaching at the Brussels Cons.

Grümmer, Paul, German cellist; b. Gera, Feb. 26, 1879. He studied in Leipzig and Berlin; in 1899 went to London as cellist at Covent Garden and a member of the Jan Kubelik string quartet; in 1913, he joined the Adolf Busch quartet; from 1926-33 he taught at the Musikhochschule, Cologne; from 1933-40, prof. at the Musikhochschule in Berlin; from 1940-45, at the Vienna Music Academy; since 1945, living in retirement at Zürich. He has written pedagogic works for the cello and has edited Bach's unaccompanied cello suites.

Grün, Jakob, violinist and teacher; b. Budapest, March 13, 1837; d. Baden, near Vienna, Oct. 1, 1916. He was a pupil of J. Böhm in Vienna and M. Hauptmann in Leipzig; in 1858 he became a member of the Weimar court orch.; he was in Hanover from 1861-5, then traveled for 3 years, settling in Vienna in 1868, as concertmaster at the court opera; from 1877 till his retirement in 1909, he was prof. at the Vienna Cons.

Grund, Friedrich Wilhelm, German composer; b. Hamburg, Oct. 7, 1791; d. there, Nov. 24, 1874. He was brought up in a musical family, his father having been a theater conductor. As a youth he studied the cello, but a nervous affliction forced him to give up a career as performer. He then devoted himself mainly to conducting. In 1819, he founded in Hamburg the 'Gesellschaft der Freunde des religiösen Gesanges,' which later became the Hamburg Singakademie. In 1828, was engaged to lead the newly established Philharmonic Concerts, a post he held until 1862. In 1867 he organized (with Karl Grädener) the Hamburg Tonkünstlerverein. He wrote several operas, which were not performed; a cantata Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Christi; some chamber music for unusual combinations (octet for wind instruments and piano; quintet for oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and piano; Trio de Salon, for piano 4-hands and cello); many piano pieces, which enjoyed considerable success and were praised by Schumann.

Grünenwald, Jean-Jacques, French composer; b. Annecy, Feb. 2, 1911. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Dupré (organ; 1st prize, 1935) and Busser (composition; 1st prize, 1937); won 2nd Grand Prix de Rome (1939).—Works: Bethsabée, symph. poem (1946); Concert d'été, for piano and orch. (1946); Le bateau ivre, for voices and instruments; organ music; piano pieces (Fantasmagorie, Cahier pour Gérard, etc.).—Cf. A. Machabey, Portraits de trente musiciens français (Paris, 1949; pp. 93-96).

Grüner-Hegge, Odd, Norwegian conductor and composer; b. Oslo, Sept. 23, 1899. He studied piano and composition in Oslo; then studied conducting with Weingartner. He made his début in Oslo, 1927; since 1932, conducting at the Oslo Opera; guest conductor in Berlin, Paris, Stockholm, etc. He has written mostly chamber music.

Grünfeld, Alfred, pianist and composer; b. Prague, July 4, 1852; d. Vienna, Jan. 4, 1924. He studied in Prague, and later at Kullak's Academy in Berlin; settled in Vienna in 1873, and established himself there as a popular concert pianist and teacher; he also made tours in other European countries, including Russia. He composed an operetta, Der Lebermann (Vienna, Jan. 16, 1903) and the comic opera, Die Schönen von Fogaras (Dresden, 1907), which were unsuccessful; made brilliant arrangements for piano of waltzes by Johann Strauss; also publ. piano studies and various other pieces (Spanish Serenade, Hungarian Fantasy, Barcarolle, Impromptu, etc.).

Grünfeld, Heinrich, well known cellist, brother of Alfred Grünfeld; b. Prague, April 21, 1855; d. Berlin, Aug. 26, 1931. He studied at the Prague Cons.; went to Berlin in 1876, and taught cello at Kullak's Academy; also played chamber music with X. Scharwenka and G. Hollander. He publ. a book of memoirs, In Dur und Moll (Berlin, 1924).

Grunn, John Homer, American pianist and composer; b. West Salem, Wisconsin, May 5, 1880; d. Los Angeles, June 6, 1944. He studied piano with E. Liebling in Chicago and then at Stern's Cons. in Berlin; taught piano at the Chicago Mus. College (1903-7), then was in Phoenix, Arizona; in 1910, he settled in Los Angeles as piano teacher. He became especially interested in Indian music, and wrote a number of pieces based on Indian motives: ballets Xochitl and The Flower Goddess (both on Aztec subjects); Hopi Indian Dance for orch.; Zuni Indian Suite for orch.; many songs (From Desert and Pueblo, etc.).

Grunsky, Karl, German music critic; b. Schornbach, March 5, 1871; d. Vaihingen, near Stuttgart, Aug. 2, 1943. He studied political science at the Univ. of Stuttgart; obtained his Ph.D. in 1893, and began a career as political journalist; also studied music; wrote music criticisms in Stuttgart and Munich papers. He publ. Musikgeschichte des 19. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1902; 4th ed., in 2 vols., 1923); Musikgeschichte des 17. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1905; 3rd ed., 1925); Musikgeschichte des 18. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1905; 2nd ed., 1914); Musikästhetik (Leipzig, 1907; 4th ed., 1923); Anton Bruckner (Stuttgart, 1922); Franz Liszt (Leipzig, 1925); Hugo Wolf (Leipzig, 1928); Der Kampf um deutsche Musik (Stuttgart, 1933); Richard Wagner (Stuttgart, 1933); Volkstum und Musik (Esslingen, 1934). He publ. transcriptions for 2 piano, 8-hands, of all the Bruckner symphonies; wrote program notes for the Bayreuth Festivals (1924); commentaries to performances of Bruckner's works, etc.; also Die Technik des Klavierauszuges, entwickelt am dritten Akt von Wagners Tristan (Leipzig, 1911; valuable; contains technical discussion of arranging).

Grunwald, Hugo, German-American pianist and teacher; b. Stuttgart, March 17, 1869; d. New York, Oct. 3, 1956. He studied music at the Stuttgart Cons.; emigrated in 1893 to the U. S., where he taught at the N. Y. College of Music and at the Lambert

GRUPPE — GUALDO

School of Music. He was one of the founders of the Bohemian Club of New York (1905).

Gruppe, Paulo Mesdag, American cellist; b. Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 1, 1891. He studied at The Hague Cons., then in Paris with J. Salomon; won a scholarship at the Paris Cons., where he studied with P. Casals; made his début at The Hague in 1907, then toured Europe; in 1909 made his 1st appearance in the U. S.; was a member of the Letz Quartet and the Tollefsen Trio; in 1953 lived in New Haven; then in Mexico City.

Grützmacher, Friedrich (Wilhelm Ludwig), renowned German cellist; b. Dessau, March 1, 1832; d. Dresden, Feb. 23, 1903. He received his musical training from his father, a chamber musician at Dessau; at the age of 16, he went to Leipzig and produced such a fine impression that Ferdinand David secured for him the post of first cellist of the Gewandhaus Orch. (1849). In 1860, he went to Dresden, where he remained for more than 40 years, until his death, acting as teacher and chamber music player. Among his pupils were Hugo Becker and several other well known cellists. He wrote a cello concerto; Hohe Schule des Violoncellspiels (Leipzig, 1891); several books of cello studies, and numerous arrangements for cello of works by classical composers; also edited cello works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Schumann. His brother, Leopold Grützmacher (b. Dessau, Sept. 4, 1835; d. Weimar, Feb. 26, 1900), was also a cellist; he studied in Dessau, and later joined the Gewandhaus Orch. in Leipzig; after occupying various posts in theater orchestras, he settled in Weimar as teacher at the court chapel. He wrote 2 cello concertos and a number of salon pieces for his instrument. Leopold's son, Friedrich (b. Meiningen, July 20, 1866; d. Cologne, July 25, 1919), carried on the family tradition of cello-playing; was a pupil of his father as well as of his uncle; was a member of various theater orchestras in Budapest and elsewhere; finally settled in Cologne as teacher at the Cons. there. He publ. a number of valuable cello collections and transcriptions.

Guadagni (gwäh-däh'-nē), Gaetano, famous male contralto; b. Lodi, c. 1725; d. Padua, Nov., 1792. He began his career in Parma (1747); in 1748, he went to London, where he attracted the attention of Handel, who gave him contralto parts in Messiah and Samson; after many successful appearances in London, he sang in Dublin (1751-52); then went to Paris (1754) and to Lisbon (1755), where he studied with Gizziello. He then returned to Italy; in 1762, Gluck secured an engagement for him in Vienna to sing Orfeo in Gluck's opera. In 1769, Guadagni was again in London. In 1770 he sang in Munich; in 1772, he appeared in Venice; in 1776, he was summoned by Frederick the Great to Potsdam, receiving great acclaim; in 1777, he settled in Padua, where he continued to sing at churches. He was not only a fine singer but an excellent actor; also wrote various arias, one of which, Pensa a serbarmi, is preserved in the Bologna library.

Guadagnini (gwah-dah-nē'-nē), family of famous violin makers of Piacenza, Italy. Lorenzo (1695-1745) used the label 'Laurentius Guadagnini, alumnus Antonius Stradivarius,' and he may have studied with Stradivarius in Cremona shortly before the latter's death in 1737; certainly he followed Stradivarius' models in his violin-making. Lorenzo's son, Giovanni Battista (b. Cremona, 1711; d. Turin, Sept. 18, 1786), received his training presumably from his father, and may have been with him at the shop of Stradivarius; he followed his father from Cremona to Piacenza in 1737; worked in Milan (1749-58); was in Parma (1759-71); then settled in Turin. His violins are regarded as the finest of the Guadagninis. His two sons, Giuseppe (1736-1805) and Gaetano (1745-1817), continued the family tradition and manufactured some good instruments, but failed to approach the excellence of their father's creations. Violin-making remained the family's occupation through four more generations in Turin; the last representative, Paolo Guadagnini, perished in the torpedoing of an Italian ship, on Dec. 28, 1942.—Cf. W. L. von Lütgendorff, Die Geigen- und Lautenmacher vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart (Frankfurt, 1904); E. N. Doring, The Guadagnini Family of Violin Makers (Chicago, 1949).

Gualdo, Giovanni (John), Italian musician and wine merchant. He arrived in Philadelphia from London in 1767 and opened a store there; among other things, he sold instruments, taught violin, flute, guitar, and other instruments; also arranged music; presented concerts; the first of these, given in Philadelphia on Nov. 16, 1769, was devoted largely to Gualdo's own compositions, and may well be regarded as the earliest 'composer's concert' in America. He planned a return to Italy for trade purposes, but never carried out his intention. He died insane at the Pennsylvania hospital, Philadelphia, Dec. 20, 1771. His 6 easy evening entertainments for 2 mandolins or 2 violins with a thorough bass for the harpsichord or violoncello are in MS in the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.; the printed op. 2, 6 Sonates for 2 German flutes with a thorough bass (his name appears here as Giovanni Gualdo da Vandero) is in the British Museum. Copies of both sets are owned by the N. Y. Public Library.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Early Concert-Life in America (Leipzig, 1907; pp. 70-74).

Guami, Francesco, Italian musician, brother of Gioseffe Guami; b. Lucca, circa 1544; d. there, 1601. He was trombonist at the court chapel in Munich (1568-80), and maestro di cappella at Baden-Baden (1580-88), at Venice (1593), and at Lucca (1598-1601). He wrote madrigals on the Venetian model, and some church music.—Cf. L. Nerici, Storia della Musica in Lucca (1879).

Guami, Gioseffe (Giuseppe), Italian organist and composer; brother of Francesco Guami; b. Lucca, circa 1540; d. there, 1611. He was organist at the court in Munich (1568-79), maestro di cappella at the court in Genoa (1585). From 1588-91 he was first organist at San Marco in Venice (while Giovanni Gabrieli was second organist); in 1591 he returned to Lucca as church organist. His surviving compositions include madrigals, motets, and toccatas; in his madrigals, he followed the Venetian school. Some of his Masses are reprinted in F. Commer's Musica Sacra (vols. 17 and 18); a toccata is included in L. Torchi's L'Arte Musicale in Italia (vol. 3).—Cf. L. Nerici, Storia della Musica in Lucca (1879); G. Benvenuti (editor), Istituzioni e Monumenti dell'Arte Musicale Italiana vol. 1 (1931).

Guarneri (gwahr-nā'-rē), famous family of violin makers in Cremona. The Italian form of the name was Guarnieri; Guarneri was derived from the Latin spelling, Guarnerius; the labels invariably used the Latin form. Andrea, head of the family (b. Cremona, c. 1625; d. there, Dec. 7, 1698), was a pupil of Nicolo Amati; he lived in Amati's house from 1641 on; in 1653, after his marriage, he moved to his own house in Cremona, and began making his own violins, labeling them as 'Alumnus' of Amati, and, after 1655, 'ex alumnis,' often with the additional words of 'sub titulo Sanctae Theresiae.' Andrea's son Pietro Giovanni, known as 'Peter of Mantua' (b. Cremona, Feb. 18, 1655; d. Mantua, March 26, 1720), worked first at Cremona; then went to Mantua, where he settled; he also used the device 'sub titulo Sanctae Theresiae.' Another son of Andrea, Giuseppe (b. Cremona, Nov. 25, 1666; d. there, c. 1740), worked in his father's shop, which he eventually inherited; in his own manufactures, he departed from his father's model, and followed the models of Stradivarius. Giuseppe's son, Pietro (b. Cremona, April 14, 1695; d. Venice, April 7, 1762), became known as 'Peter of Venice'; he settled in Venice in 1725, and adopted some features of the Venetian masters, Montagnana and Serafin. Giuseppe Bartolomeo, known as 'Giuseppe del Gesù,' from the initials I H S often appearing on his labels (b. Cremona, Aug. 21, 1698; d. there, Oct. 17, 1744), was a son of Giuseppe. He became the most celebrated member of the family; some of his instruments bear the label 'Joseph Guarnerius Andreae Nepos Cremonae' which establishes his lineage as a grandson of Andrea. His violins are greatly prized; only Stradivarius excelled him in the perfection of instrumental craftsmanship; he experimented with a variety of wood materials, and also made changes in the shapes of his instruments during different periods of his work. Paganini used one of his instruments.—Cf. G. de Piccollellis, Liutai antichi e moderni, genealogia degli Amati et dei Guarneri (Florence, 1886); Lütgendorff, Die Geigen- und Lautenmacher vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart (Frankfurt, 1904; 4th ed., 1922, in dictionary form); H. Guarnieri, Camargo, Brazilian composer and conductor; b. Tiété, State of São Paulo, Feb. 1, 1907. He studied piano in São Paulo with E. Braga and A. de Sá Pereira, composition and conducting with Lamberto Baldi; went to Paris in 1938 and studied composition and orchestration with Ch. Koechlin, conducting with Fr. Rühlmann; also gave concerts of his own works there. In 1940, he was conductor of the Philharmonic Society of São Paulo and director of the Córál Paulistano; also teacher at the São Paulo Cons. In 1942, and 1946-47, he visited the U. S. as conductor of his own works. His compositions include: for orch.: Curuçá (São Paulo, July 28, 1930, Villa-Lobos conducting); 1st piano concerto (São Paulo, Dec. 30, 1936; composer conducting, S. Lima soloist); Dansa Brasileira (São Paulo, March 7, 1941, composer conducting); violin concerto (Rio de Janeiro, Sept. 20, 1942; 1st prize, Free Library of Philadelphia Contest); Overture Concertante (São Paulo, June 2, 1943, composer conducting); 1st symph. (Boston Symph. Orch., Nov. 29, 1946, composer conducting); 2nd symph. (1946); 2nd piano concerto (CBS, April 16, 1947; 1st national prize in Brazil, 1946); Uiapuro, symph. poem (2nd prize of the Reichhold Music Award, 1947); Prologo e Fuga (Boston, Dec. 26, 1947); Brasiliana, orchestral suite (Rio de Janeiro, May 1, 1951, composer conducting); also piano pieces and songs, mostly published in Brazil. His Chôros, for piano and orch., shared first prize at the Caracas Music Festival, 1957.

Guastavino, Carlos, Argentinian composer; b. Santa Fé, April 5, 1914. He studied in Buenos Aires with Athos Palma. He has written mostly in miniature forms, for piano or for voice, on native folk rhythms. Among his larger works are a ballet, Once Upon a Time (1942); piano sonata (1946); violin sonata (1952).

Gudehus, Heinrich, German tenor; b. Altenhagen, near Celle, March 30, 1845; d. Dresden, Oct. 9, 1909. He first studied organ, and also taught school; then took up singing; made his début in Berlin in Spohr's Jessonda (Jan. 7, 1871). After several engagements in various German towns, he sang Parsifal in Bayreuth (July 28, 1882) with excellent success; was with the Dresden Opera from 1880-90; appeared in London (1884) in Wagnerian roles; was with the German Opera in N. Y. (1890-91); then returned to Germany.

Gueden, Hilde, Austrian soprano; b. Vienna, Sept. 15, 1917. Both her parents were musicians. She made her début in operetta at the age of 16; in 1939 the family moved to Switzerland; in 1941 she sang Zerlina in Munich; in 1942, made her début in Rome. In 1947 Gueden became a member of the Vienna State Opera; also appeared at La Scala, Milan; in 1950 received the title of Kammersängerin of the Vienna Opera. In 1948 she appeared at the Edinburgh Festival; was engaged by Rudolf Bing for the Metropolitan Opera, where she made her American début on Nov. 15, 1951 as Gilda;

she sang in the American première of Stravinsky's opera The Rake's Progress (Feb. 14, 1953). She married L. Lacey Herman in 1952.

Guédron, Pierre, French composer; b. Châteaudun, 1565; d. Paris, 1621. He was a choir boy in the chapel of Cardinal de Guise, and later sang in the royal chapel (1590). In 1601, he was appointed composer of the King's Music. He wrote ballets for the court, which included solo songs. Some of his airs are included in Airs de Cour (1615-18), and other contemporary collections. He is regarded as a precursor of Lully in the creation of French ballet music.—Cf. H. Quittard, L'Air de cour: Pierre Guesdrin in the 'Revue Musicale' (1905); H. Prunières, Le Ballet de cour en France avant Benserade et Lully (Paris, 1914); L. de la Laurencie, Un Musicien dramatique du XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle français: Pierre Guédron in 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1922).

Guénin, (Marie) Alexandre, French violinist and composer; b. Maubeuge, Feb. 20, 1744; d. Etampes, Jan. 22, 1835. He showed a precocious talent, and was sent to Paris for study with Gaviniès (violin) and Gossec (composition). In 1771 he joined the orchestra of the Paris Opéra; later was active as conductor in the Paris society called Concert Spirituel; taught at the Ecole Royale de Chant. Several works were publ. in his lifetime: 6 symphonies; 6 violin duos; 6 string trios.—Cf. L. de la Laurencie, L'Ecole française du Violon (Paris, 1922).

Guenther, Felix, pianist and writer on music; b. Trautenau, Austria, Dec. 5, 1886; d. New York, May 6, 1951. He studied at the Vienna Cons.; then at the Univ. of Berlin, obtaining his Ph.D. there in 1913; became accompanist for many outstanding singers and instrumentalists; in 1937, came to the U. S.; was connected with various music publishers in N. Y.; made arrangements and edited classical anthologies. He publ. Weingartner (Berlin, 1918), Schuberts Lied (Stuttgart, 1928), and Mein Freund Schubert (Hamburg, 1928).

Guéranger (gä-rähn-zhā'), Dom Prosper Louis Pascal; French ecclesiastic scholar; b. Sable-sur-Sarthe, April 4, 1805; d. Solesmes, Jan. 30, 1875. As abbot of the Benedictine monastery at Solesmes, his research and writings gave the impetus to and laid the foundations for scholarly investigations leading to the restoration of Gregorian melodies. Dom Guéranger and the Benedictines of Solesmes played a role of prime importance in the accomplishment of this work. He wrote Institutions liturgiques (3 vols., 1840-53; 2nd ed., 4 vols., 1878-85); L'Année liturgique (15 parts, 1840-1901; continued by Fromage); Ste. Cécile et la Société Romaine (1873; 8th ed., 1898).—Cf. G. Guépin, Prosper Guéranger (Le Mans, 1876); Bibliographie des Bénédictins de la Congrégation de France (Solesmes, 1889); Charnard, Guéranger et l'abbé Bernier (Angers, 1901); P. Delatte, Dom Guéranger, abbé de Solesmes (2 vols., Paris, 1909).

Guerra-Peixe, César, Brazilian composer; b. Petropolis, March 18, 1914. He played the guitar as a child; then began to study seriously; played violin in motion picture theaters. In 1934 he settled in Rio de Janeiro and took lessons in composition with H. J. Koellreutter, from whom he learned the theory of 12-tone music; he wrote a string trio (1945), a symphony (1946), wind trio (1948), and a nonet. In 1949 he changed his orientation and adopted a folkloric style based on native rhythms; his overture (1950) is in this folk style. His works have been performed in Germany and Russia as well as in the U.S.A. and by the BBC in London.—Cf. Vasco Mariz, César Guerra-Peixe in the compendium Musica Brasileira Contemporânea (Rosario, Argentina, 1952; in Spanish).

Guerrero (gär-rä'-röh), Francisco, Spanish composer; b. Seville, 1527; d. there, Nov. 8, 1599. He was a pupil of his brother, Pedro, and for a short time of Morales. In 1545, he became maestro di cappella of Jaén cathedral; in 1548, he went to Seville as cantor at the cathedral there. In 1554, he was offered a similar post at the cathedral of Malaga, but declined it. In 1556, he was in Lisbon; in 1567, in Cordova; in 1570, in Santander; in 1574 he went to Rome; in 1588, he was in Venice, whence he undertook a pilgrimage to Palestine. His account of his journey, El viaje de Jerusalem que hizo Francisco Guerrero, was publ. in 1611, and went through numerous editions. As a composer, he was greatly appreciated by his contemporaries; but the comparisons with Morales or Victoria overestimate his importance.—Works: Sacrae cantiones vulgo moteta (1555); Psalmorum, Liber I, accedit Missa defunctorum (1559; 2nd ed., with Italian title, 1584); Canticum beatae Mariae quod Magnificat nuncupatur, per octo musicae modos variatum (1563); Liber I missarum (1566; contains 9 Masses for 4-5 voices and 3 motets for 4-8 voices);

Motteta (1570); Missarum Liber II (1582; contains 7 Masses and a Missa pro defunctis); Liber vesperarum (1584; includes 7 psalms, 24 hymns, 8 Magnificats, Te Deum, etc.); Passio . . . secundum Matthaeum et Joannem more Hispano (1585); Canciones y villanescas espirituales (1589); Motteta (1589); Missa Saeculorum Amen (1597), etc. Reprints have been made by Eslava (2 Passiones) in 'Lira Sacro-Hispana' and by Pedrell in 'Hispaniae Schola musica sacra' (in vol. II: Magnificat, Officium defunctorum, Passions, antiphonals, etc.; in vol. VI: a Falso bordone). The Libro de música para vihuela, intitulado Orphénica Lyra of Miguel de Fuenllana contains some works by Guerrero arranged for vihuela. Publication in Barcelona of Guerrero's Opera omnia was begun in 1955; vol. I contains Canciones y villanescas espirituales, transcribed by Vicente García.—Cf. R. Mitjana, Francisco Guerrero, estudio crítico-biográfico (Madrid, 1922).

Guerrini, Guido, Italian composer; b. Faenza, Sept. 12, 1890. He was a pupil of Consolini (violin), and Torchi and Busoni (composition) at the Liceo musicale at Bologna; prof. of harmony there (1919-23); prof. of composition at Parma Cons. (1924-28); director of Cherubini Cons. in Florence (1928-44); director of Bologna Cons. (1944-50); in 1951 appointed director of the Santa Cecilia Cons. in Rome.—Works: operas: Zalebi (1915), Nemici (Bologna, Jan. 19, 1921), La vigna (Rome, March 7, 1935), Enea, after Virgil (Rome, March 7, 1953); for orch.: La cetra d'Achille; La befana; Visioni dell' antico Egitto (2 pieces); L'ultimo viaggio; Missa pro defunctis, in memory of Marconi, for solo voices, chorus, and orch. (1939); La città perduta, biblical cantata (1942); Tre liriche for voice and orch. (1947); chamber music: La città beata, chamber cantata (1942); Arcadia, for oboe and piano; piano quintet; 2 string quartets; 2 trios; violin and cello pieces; Le Suore, 3 pieces for harp; vocal works: Le fiamme su l'altare, for voice, double string quartet, and 2 harps; songs. He also wrote the books: Trattato di armonia complementare (1922); Origine, evoluzione e caratteri degli strumenti musicali (1926); Prontuario de tempi e colori musicali (1939); F. Busoni, la vita, la figura, l'opera (Florence, 1944); Appunti d'orchestrazione (1945).

Guerrini, Paolo, Italian music historian; b. Bagnolo Mella, near Brescia, Nov. 18, 1880. He specialized in Italian sacred music; founded the periodical 'Brixia Sacra' (1910-25); in 1930, he began publication of the historical studies 'Memorie storiche della Diocesi di Brescia'; served further as archivist and librarian in Brescia. He also founded the 'Società bresciana di storia ecclesiastica' (1946); in 1936, he was appointed canon of the Brescia cathedral. He revived and transl. into Italian the music books of Cardinal Katschthaler (Storia della musica sacra); publ. Storia della Cappella musicale del Duomo di Brescia e del Duomo di Salò and Storia della Musica sacra in Italia nei sec. XIX e XX.

Guglielmi (gööl-yel'-mē), Pietro Alessandro, Italian composer; b. Massa di Carrara, Dec. 9, 1728; d. Rome, Nov. 18, 1804. He studied with his father, Jacob Guglielmi, and with Durante at the Cons. Santa Maria di Loreto at Naples. His 1st comic opera, Lo solachianello 'mbroglione, was performed at Naples in 1757; during the next 10 years, he wrote 24 operas, including Il ratto della sposa (Venice, 1765) and La sposa fedele (Venice, 1767), which were played all over Europe and became highly popular. He went to London in 1767; during his 5 years there, conducted and wrote several operas, among them Ezio (Jan. 13, 1770), in which his wife, Lelia Achiapati, sang. He returned to Italy in 1772; in 1793, was appointed maestro di cappella of San Pietro in Vaticano by Pope Pius VI, and turned to church music; composed several oratorios, of which Debora e Sisara (1794) was regarded as his masterpiece. A detailed list of Guglielmi's operas is found in F. Piovano's articles on him and on his son in the 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1905 and 1910). See also G. Bustico, Pietro Guglielmi (Massa, 1899); A. Della Corte, L'Opera comica italiana nel settecento (Bari, 1923).

Guglielmi (gööl-yel'-mē), Pietro Carlo, Italian composer, son of Pietro Alessandro Guglielmi; b. Naples, c. 1763; d. there, Feb. 28, 1817. After study at the Cons. di Santa Maria di Loreto at Naples, he went to Spain; his first operas were performed at Madrid in 1793 and 1794; then lived in Italy, producing operas in Naples, Florence, and Rome. He went to London in 1809; presented several operas at the King's Theatre; returned to Italy in 1810, and was appointed maestro di cappella to the Duchess Beatrice at Massa di Carrara. A list of his works, including some 40 operas, oratorios, and cantatas, was publ. by Francesco Piovano in the 'Rivista Musicale Italiana' (1909-10).

Gui, Vittorio, Italian composer and conductor; b. Rome, Sept. 14, 1885. He studied with Falchi at the Liceo Musicale di Santa Cecilia in Rome; began his career as conductor there with Ponchielli's Gioconda (Dec. 7, 1907); then conducted in Parma, Naples, and at La Scala in Milan (1923); was in Turin from 1925-28; finally settled in Florence, where he organized a permanent orchestra, which he conducted until 1940; also was a founder of the 'Maggio Musicale Fiorentino' (1933); he then gave concerts in Stockholm (1940) and Vienna (1941); from 1947 appeared in England as opera conductor. He composed an opera, Fata Malerba (Turin, May 15, 1927); the symphonic works Giulietta e Romeo (1902), Il tempo che fu (1910), Fantasia bianca (1919; an orchestral experiment making use of films), Giornata di Festa (1921). He has written a volume of critical essays, Battute d'aspetto (Florence, 1944), and a monograph on Boito's Nerone (Milan, 1924).

Guidetti (gwē-det'-tē), Giovanni Domenico, Italian ecclesiastic scholar; b. Bologna, 1530 (baptized Jan. 1, 1531); d. Rome, Nov. 30, 1592. After taking holy orders, he went to Rome, where he became Palestrina's pupil, and in 1575 was appointed 'cappellano' (a clerical beneficiary) and chorister in the papal choir. From 1576 to 1581, he worked with Palestrina on a revised edition of the Gradual and Antiphony; but this work being forestalled by the publication of Leichtenstein's edition (Venice, 1580), he obtained permission to publish the services for everyday use: Directorium chori ad usum sacro-sanctae basilicae Vaticanae (Rome, 1582, and several reprints); Cantus ecclesiasticus passionis Domini Nostri Jesu Christi (Rome, 1586); Cantus ecclesiasticus officii majoris (Rome, 1587; new ed., 1619); also publ. Praefationes in cantu firmo (Rome, 1588).

Guido d'Arezzo (gwē'-dōh dah-ret'-sōh), known also as Guido Aretinus; famous reformer of musical notation and vocal instruction; b. c. 990; d. Pomposa, May 17, 1050. He received his education at the Benedictine abbey at Pomposa, near Ferrara. He left the monastery in 1025, as a result of disagreements with his fellow-monks, who were envious of his superiority in vocal teaching; he was then summoned by Bishop Theobald of Arezzo to the cathedral school there; it was because of this association that he became known as Guido d'Arezzo. The assertions that he traveled in France and spent several years at the monastery of Saint-Maur des Fossés, near Paris (see, e. g., Dom G. Morin in 'Revue de l'art chrétien,' 1888) are not borne out by documentary evidence. Still more uncertain are the claims of his travels in Germany, and even in England. However this may be, his fame spread and reached the ears of Pope John XIX, who called him to Rome to demonstrate his system of teaching (1028). In his last years, he was a prior of the Camaldolite fraternity at Avellano. Guido's fame rests on his system of solmization, by which he established the nomenclature of the major hexachord Ut, Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La, from syllables in the initial lines of the Hymn of St. John:

Ut queant laxis Resonare fibris
Mira gestorum Famuli tuorum, Solve polluti Labii reatum, Sancte Joannes.

No less epoch-making was Guido's introduction of the music staff of 4 lines, retaining the red f-line and the yellow c-line of his predecessors, and drawing between them a black a-line, above them a black e-line, and writing the plainsong notes (which he did not invent) in regular order on these lines and in the spaces:

New black line e _____
Old yellow line c _____
New black line a _____
Old red line f _____

He also added new lines above or below these, as occasion required; thus, Guido's system did away with all uncertainty of pitch. Another invention credited to Guido is the so-called Guidonian hand, relating the degrees of the overlapping hexachords to various places on the palm of the left hand, a device helpful in directing a chorus by indicating manually the corresponding positions of the notes. Opinions differ widely as to the attribution to Guido of all these innovations; some scholars maintain that he merely popularized the already-established ideas, and that solmization, in particular, was introduced by a German abbot, Poncius Teutonicus, at the abbey of Saint-Maur des Fossés. Guido's treatises are Micrologus de disciplina artis musicae (publ. by A. Amelli, Rome, 1904; ed. by J. Smits van Waesberghe, 1955); Regulae de ignoto cantu; Epistola de ignoto cantu (publ. in English in Strunk's Source Readings in Music History, N. Y., 1950).—Bibliography: L. Guignon, Jean-Pierre (Giovanni Pietro Ghignone), violinist and composer; b. Turin, Feb. 10, 1702; d. Versailles, Jan. 30, 1774. He came to Paris from Italy in his youth; was engaged as music tutor to the dauphin, and persuaded the king to revive and bestow on him the title of Roi des Violons et Ménétriers, which had last been used in 1695; every professional musician in France was required to join a guild and to pay a fee to Guignon as holder of the title; so much opposition was aroused by this requirement that parliament considered the case and deprived Guignon of this prerogative. He wrote several books of concertos, sonatas, and duos for violin.

Guilbert, Yvette, famous French diseuse and folksong singer; b. Paris, Jan. 20, 1867; d. Aix-en-Provence, Feb. 2, 1944. She made her début in Paris as an actress in 1885; in 1890 she began her career as a café singer; at first she sang popular songs in Paris; later, as she toured Europe and the U. S., where she first appeared in 1896, she became noted for her interpretations of French folksongs; she regarded herself as primarily an actress rather than a singer. She wrote her memoirs, La chanson de ma vie (Paris, 1927) and Autres Temps, autres chants (Paris, 1946).

Guillemain, Gabriel, French violinist and composer; b. Paris, Nov. 7, 1705; d. there (suicide), Oct. 1, 1770. He was a member of the king's orch. and gave concerts as a virtuoso. He was one of the first French composers to write violin sonatas with a developed clavicord accompaniment. He also wrote several ballets and instrumental music for various combinations.—Cf. L. de la Laurencie, L'École française de violon, vol. II.

Guilmant (gël-mähn'), Alexandre (Félix), eminent French organist and composer; b. Boulogne, March 12, 1837; d. Meudon, near Paris, March 29, 1911. He studied organ with his father, Jean-Baptiste Guilmant (1793-1890); took harmony lessons with Gustave Carulli in Boulogne. In 1860, he took an advanced course in organ playing with Lemmens in Brussels. Still as a child, he substituted for his father at the church of St.-Nicolas in Boulogne; at 20, he taught at Boulogne Cons. and conducted choral concerts. He then played organ in various churches in Paris, including St.-Sulpice (1863) and Notre Dame (1868); in 1871, he was appointed organist of Ste. Trinité, remaining at this post for 30 years. He was one of the founders of the Schola Cantorum (1894); in 1896, he was appointed prof. of organ at the Paris Cons.; also appeared as organ soloist with Paris orchestras and subsequently all over Europe and in the U. S. (1893-97). He was not only a virtuoso of the first rank, but a master in the art of improvisation; he formed a great school of students, among whom were René Vierné, Joseph Bonnet, Nadia Boulanger, Marcel Dupré, and the American organist, William Carl. He was a prolific composer of works for organ, which include 8 sonatas, 2 symphonies for organ and orch., 25 books of organ pieces, 10 books of L'Organiste liturgiste; there are also 3 Masses, psalms, vespers, motets, etc. Of greater importance than these are Guilmant's monumental editions of old masters: 'Archives des Maîtres de l'Orgue' (Paris, 1898-1914; 10 vols.) and 'École classique de l'orgue' (1898-1903); he also edited selected works of French composers performed at his historical concerts (1902-6); made numerous arrangements for organ of various classical works.—Cf. À la mémoire de Alexandre Guilmant, by his friends of the Schola (Paris, 1911); A. Eaglefield-Hull, The Organ Works of Guilmant in the 'Monthly Mus. Record' (Oct.-Nov., 1914); N. Du-fourcq, La musique d'orgue française (Paris, 1949).

Guion (gī-on), David (Wendell Fentress), American composer; b. Ballinger, Texas, Dec. 15, 1895. He studied piano with Leopold Godowsky in Vienna; returning to the U. S. in 1915, he occupied various teaching posts in Texas colleges; then lived in New York; finally settled in Pennsylvania. Guion devoted many years to collecting and arranging American folksongs; of these, Turkey in the Straw, Arkansas Traveler, and Home on the Range, in various transcriptions, have become extremely popular. His works for orch. include an African ballet suite, Shingandi; Southern Nights Suite; Sheep and Goat Walking to the Pasture; Alley Tunes; Mother Goose Suite; Suite for Orch. He also made many choral arrangements of American folksongs.

Guiraud (gē-roh'), Ernest, composer; b. New Orleans, June 23, 1837; d. Paris, May 6, 1892. He studied with his father, Jean Baptiste Guiraud; produced his 1st opera Le roi David, in New Orleans at the age of 15. He then went to Paris, which was his home for the rest of his life; studied at the Paris Cons., with Marmontel (piano) and Halévy (composition); won the Grand Prix de Rome in 1859 with his cantata, Bajazet et le joueur de flûte. He stayed in Rome for 4 years; then returned to Paris, where his 1-act opera, Sylvie, was produced at the Opéra-Comique (May 11, 1864). He was appointed prof. at the Cons. in 1876; among his students were Debussy, Gedalge, Loeffler, and others. He wrote the recitatives to Bizet's Carmen and completed the orchestration of Offenbach's Contes d'Hoffmann. His operas (all first performed in Paris) include En prison (March 5, 1869); Le Kobold (July 2, 1870); Madame Turlupin (1872); Piccolino (April 11, 1876, his most popular stage work); Galante aventure (March 23, 1882); Frédégonde (completed by Saint-Saëns; Dec. 18, 1895). He also wrote a ballet, Gretna Green (1873); 2 suites for orch.; Arteveld, an overture; a Caprice for violin and orch.; and a treatise on instrumentation.

Gulak-Artemovsky, Semyon Stepanovitch, Ukrainian singer and composer; b. in the Ukraine, Feb. 16, 1813; d. Moscow, April 17, 1873. He studied voice in Italy; sang at the Imperial Opera of St. Petersburg (1842-64); then lived in Moscow. His opera Zaporozhets za Dunayem (A Cossack Beyond the Danube) was produced in St. Petersburg on April 26, 1863, and subsequently acquired great popularity.

Gulbins, Max, German organist and composer; b. Kammetschen, East Prussia, July 18, 1862; d. Breslau, Feb. 19, 1932. He studied at the Hochschule in Berlin; was organist at Elbing from 1900-8, then went to St. Elizabeth's in Breslau. He wrote, for men's chorus and orch., Sturmlied, An das Vaterland, and Burggraf Friedrich von Nürnberg; also organ pieces.

Gulbranson, Ellen (née Norgren), Swedish soprano; b. Stockholm, March 4, 1863; d. Oslo, Jan. 2, 1947. She studied at the Stockholm Cons., then with Mathilde Marchesi in Paris for two years; returning to Stockholm, she made her concert début in 1886, her opera début in 1889; thereafter she continued in opera; in 1896 she sang the part of Brünnhilde at Bayreuth, with great success; she appeared repeatedly in this role for many Festival seasons. She also sang in Berlin, Paris, Moscow, Amsterdam, and London.

Gulda, Friedrich, Austrian pianist; b. Vienna, May 16, 1930. He studied with Bruno Seidlhofer; won first prize at the International Pianists' Contest in Geneva (1946); then toured in Europe (1947-48), South America (1949); made his American debut in Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Oct. 11, 1950; other concerts in the U. S. and Canada in the following seasons.—Cf. Erich Jantsch, Friedrich Gulda. Die Verantwortung des Interpreten (Vienna, 1953).

Gumbert, Ferdinand, German composer; b. Berlin, April 22, 1818; d. there, April 6, 1896. He was first trained by his father for book-selling, but he pursued his musical studies, developing a particular interest in opera. After a short study of singing, he appeared at the Cologne Opera (1840-42); in 1842 he settled in Berlin as a voice teacher and also began to compose. His songs, written in a facile, eclectic style, enjoyed a considerable vogue. He produced several operettas in Berlin: Der kleine Ziegenhirt (Jan. 21, 1854), Bis der Rechte kommt (Nov. 20, 1856), etc., which were not successful. He was also a translator of opera librettos from French and Italian; publ. Musik, Gelesenes und Gesammeltes (Berlin, 1860).—Cf. W. Neumann, Ferdinand Gumbert (Kassel, 1856).

Gumpeltzhaimer, Adam, German composer; b. Trostberg, c. 1559; d. Augsburg, Nov. 3, 1625. He studied music with Father Jodocus Enzmüller at the monastery of St. Ulrich in Augsburg; then became musician to the Duke of Württemberg; from 1581 to 1621 he was cantor at St. Anna, Augsburg. Works: Erster (zweiter) Teil des Lustgärtleins teutsch und lateinischer Lieder mit drei Stimmen (1591 and 1611); Erster (zweiter) Teil des Wirtzgärtleins 4 stimmiger geistlicher Lieder (1594 and 1619); Psalmus LI octo vocum (1604); Sacri concentus octonis vocibus modulandi cum duplici basso in organorum usum (1601 and 1614; 2 parts); 10 geistliche Lieder mit 4 Stimmen (1617); 2 geistliche Lieder mit 4 Stimmen; 5 geistliche Lieder mit 4 Stimmen von der Himmelfahrt Jesu Christi; Neue teutsche geistliche Lieder mit 3 und 4 Stimmen (1591 and 1594); many other works in MS. A number of Gumpeltzhaimer's motets have been reprinted in Bodenschatz' Florilegium Portense, Schadaeus' Promptuarium and Vintzius' Missae. O. Mayr edited a selection of his works in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (X, 2).—Cf. O. Mayr, Adam Gumpeltzhaimer (Munich, 1908).

Gumpert, Friedrich Adolf, German horn player; b. Lichtenau, April 27, 1841; d. Leipzig, Dec. 31, 1906. He studied with Hammann in Jena; from 1864, played 1st horn in the Gewandhaus Orch., Leipzig.—Works: Praktische Hornschule; a Solobuch for horn (difficult passages from operas, symphonies, etc.); Hornquartette (2 books); Hornstudien; and orchestral studies for clarinet, oboe, bassoon, trumpet, and cello.

Gumprecht, Armand J., American organist and composer; b. Boston, Mass., June 26, 1861; d. Washington, D. C., March 13, 1943. He studied violin with C. Eichler, organ with J. Singenberger and S. B. Whitney; from 1890 he was organist in various churches in Washington. From 1891 to 1918, was prof. of music and organist at Georgetown Univ.; from 1912-26, conductor of the Washington 'Sängerbund.' He wrote 4 Masses (with orch.), piano pieces, songs.

Gumprecht, Otto, German music critic; b. Erfurt, April 4, 1823; d. Meran, Feb. 6, 1900. He studied law in Halle and Berlin, but developed an interest in music, and began writing music criticism in 1849, continuing until 1889, when he suffered a stroke of paralysis. He publ. Musikalische Charakterbilder (1869); Neue Charakterbilder (1876); Richard Wagner und der Ring des Nibelungen (1873); Unsere klassischen Meister (2 vols., 1883-85) and Neuere Meister (2 vols., 1883); the last two are continuations of the Charakterbilder; he also edited 5 vols. of Erlesene musikalische Meisterwerke.

Gundry, Inglis, English composer; b. London, May 8, 1905. He studied at Oxford Univ.; then at the Royal College of Music in London with Vaughan Williams. — Works: operas: Naaman (1938), The Return of Odysseus (1941), The Partisans (1946), Avon (1949); a ballet, Sleep (1943); for orch.: Comedy Overture (1939), Symphonic Fantasy (1948); string quartet; duo for clarinet and viola, etc.

Gungl, Joseph, famous Hungarian bandmaster and popular composer; b. Zsámbék, Dec. 1, 1810; d. Weimar, Jan. 31, 1889. He played the oboe in an artillery regiment in the Austrian army, and later became that band's conductor; he wrote a number of marches and dances, which became extremely popular; traveled with his band all over Germany. In 1843, he established his own band in Berlin; made an American tour in 1849; then returned to Europe and lived mostly in Munich and Frankfurt.

Gunn, Glenn Dillard, American pianist and music critic; b. Topeka, Kans., Oct. 2, 1874. He studied at Leipzig Cons. with Carl Reinecke (piano); appeared as pianist in German cities; returning to the U. S. in 1900, he taught at the Chicago Mus. College (1901-5); was piano soloist with the Chicago Symph. Orch. In 1915 he founded 'The American Symph. Orch. of Chicago,' the object of which was the performance of American works and the engagement of American soloists. He was music critic for the Chicago 'Tribune' (1910-14) and the Chicago 'Herald and Examiner' (1922-36); in 1940, was appointed music critic of the Washington 'Times-Herald.' He publ. A Course of Lessons on the History and Esthetics of Music (1912) and Music, Its History and Enjoyment (1930).

Gunn, John, Scottish cellist and writer on music; b. Edinburgh, c. 1765; d. there, c. 1824. He went to London in 1790, where he taught cello and flute; returned to Edinburgh in 1795. He publ. Forty Scotch Airs arranged as trios for flute, violin and violoncello; The Art of Playing the German Flute on New Principles; The Theory and Practice of Fingering the Violoncello (London, 1793); An Essay, Theoretical and Practical, on the Application of Harmony, Thorough-Bass, and Modulation to the Violoncello (Edinburgh, 1801), and a valuable work, commissioned by the National Society of Scotland, An Historical Inquiry respecting the Performance on the Harp in the Highlands of Scotland from the earliest Times until it was discontinued about the year 1734 (Edinburgh, 1807).

Gunsbourg, Raoul, Rumanian-French impresario; b. Bucharest, Dec. 25, 1859; d. Monte Carlo, May 31, 1955. After directing opera companies in Russia, he became the director of the Monte Carlo Opera; his first important production there was the stage version of Damnation of Faust by Berlioz (Feb. 18, 1893). Throughout the half-century of his active management in Monte Carlo, Gunsbourg produced a great number of new operas by important composers, among them Massenet (7), Saint-Saëns (3), Fauré (2), and one of each by Puccini, Ravel, and others. He produced at Monte Carlo and elsewhere several of his own operas (he wrote the piano scores, and the orchestration was done by L. Jehin); of these Le vieil aigle, after Maxim Gorky's fable (Monte Carlo, Feb. 13, 1909), had a modicum of success.

Gura, Eugen, operatic baritone; b. Pressern, near Saatz, Bohemia, Nov. 8, 1842; d. Aufkirchen, Bavaria, Aug. 26, 1906. He studied in Vienna and in Munich; he sang in Munich (1865-67), Breslau (1867-70), Leipzig (1870-6), obtaining extraordinary success; then was in Hamburg (1876-83) and Munich (1883-95). He was particularly impressive in Wagnerian roles; his performance of Hans Sachs was greatly praised. He publ. Erinnerungen aus meinem Leben (Leipzig, 1905). His son, Hermann Gura (b. Breslau, April 5, 1870), was also a baritone; like his father, he specialized in Wagnerian roles; after a successful career as an opera singer in Germany, he settled in Berlin as voice teacher.

Guridi, Jesús, Spanish composer; b. Victoria, Basque province of Alava, Sept. 25, 1886. He studied in Madrid, at the Schola Cantorum in Paris, in Brussels (with Jongen), and in Cologne. He returned to Spain in 1909; became organist at Bilbao, where he remained until 1939; then moved to Madrid; appointed prof. of organ at the Madrid Cons. in 1944. During his 30 years in Bilbao, he promoted the cause of Basque folk music; publ. an album of 22 Basque songs. His zarzuelas make frequent use of Basque folk music; of these, El caserio (Madrid, 1926) attained enormous success in Spain; other stage works are Amaya, lyric drama in 3 acts (Bilbao, 1920), La meiga (Madrid, 1928), and Mirentxu, an idyll in 2 acts; he further wrote a symph. poem, An Adventure of Don Quixote; a Sinfonia pirenaica; Basque Sketches for chorus and orch.; an orch. suite, 10 Basque Melodies (very popular in Spain); a number of choral works a cappella on Basque themes; 4 string quartets; pieces for piano; various songs.

Gurlitt, Cornelius, German composer; b. Altona, Feb. 10, 1820; d. there, June 17, 1901. He was a member of an artistic family; his brother, Louis Gurlitt, was a well-known landscape painter. He studied piano with Johann Peter Reinecke in Altona, and with Weyse in Copenhagen, where he went in 1840. In 1845, he made a journey through Europe; he met Schumann, Lortzing, Franz, and other eminent composers.

In 1864 he was appointed organist of the Altona cathedral, retaining this post until 1898; also taught at the Hamburg Cons. (1879-87). He wrote an opera, Die römische Mauer (Altona, 1860); another opera, Scheik Hassan, was not performed. He further composed 3 violin sonatas, 3 cello sonatas, several cycles of songs, etc. He is chiefly remembered, however, by his numerous piano miniatures, in Schumann's style; a collection of these was publ. by W. Rehberg, under the title, Der neue Gurlitt (2 vols.; Mainz, 1931).—Cf. Paul T. Hoffman, Neues Altona (Jena, 1929; vol. II).

Gurlitt, Manfred, German conductor and composer; b. Berlin, Sept. 6, 1890. He was of an artistic family; his grandfather was the well-known landscape painter Louis Gurlitt, whose brother was the composer Cornelius Gurlitt. He studied in Berlin with Humperdinck (composition) and Karl Muck (conducting); rapidly progressed as a professional conductor; was a coach at the Berlin Opera (1908) and at the Bayreuth Festival (1911); theater conductor in Essen and Augsburg; conductor and music director at the Bremen Opera (1914-27); then at the Berlin Opera and on the German radio. After 1933, he was deprived of his position by the Nazi régime; in 1939 he settled in Japan, as teacher and conductor; organized the Gurlitt Opera Company in Tokyo. Among his works are the operas Die Heilige (Bremen, Jan. 27, 1920), Wozzeck (Bremen, April 22, 1926; written almost at the same time as Alban Berg's Wozzeck), Soldaten (1929), Nana (1933), Seguidilla Bolero (1937), Nordische Ballade, and Wir schreiten aus; Drei politische Reden for baritone, men's chorus, and orch.; Goya Symphony (1950); Shakespeare Symphony (1954) for 5 solo voices and orch.; songs with orch.; concertos for piano, for violin, for cello; piano quartet, songs.

Gurlitt, Wilibald, German musicologist; b. Dresden, March 1, 1889. He is a grand-nephew of the composer Cornelius Gurlitt, and a cousin of Manfred Gurlitt. He studied musicology at Heidelberg with P. Wolf- rum and at the Leipzig Cons. with Hugo Riemann; received his Ph.D. in 1914 with a dissertation on Michael Praetorius; subsequently was assistant to Riemann. He served in World War I; was a war prisoner in France. After the Armistice he became a lecturer at the Univ. of Freiburg; was prof. of musicology there until 1937, when he was prevented by the Nazi régime from continuing his teaching; resumed his post in 1945. His investigations of the organ music of Praetorius led him to construct (in collaboration with Oscar Walcker) a 'Praetorius organ' which was to reproduce the tonal quality of the period. This created the impetus for a new movement in Germany, the aim of which was to give performances of historic works played on contemporaneous instruments. — Publications: Burgundische Chanson und deutsche Liedkunst des 15. Jahrhunderts (Basel, 1924); François-Joseph Fétis (Brussels, 1930); Johannes Walter und die Musik der Reformationzeit in 'Luther-Jahrbuch' (Munich, 1933); Johann Sebastian Bach, der Meister und sein Werk (Berlin, 1936; 3rd ed., Basel, 1949; English transl., St. Louis, 1954). Among his many editions are organ works of Michael Praetorius; vol. 17 of the collected works of Praetorius; facsimile reprint of Praetorius' De Organographia (Kassel, 1929); a reprint of Johann Walter's Lob und Preis der löblichen Kunst Musica (Kassel, 1938); also new editions of 16 chansons by Gilles Binchois and 12 Liebesgesänge by Paul Fleming (Kassel, 1948). In 1952 he became editor of the 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft.' For a complete list of his writings, see his autobiographical article in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Gurney, Ivor, English song composer; b. Gloucester, Aug. 28, 1890; d. Dartford, Kent, Dec. 26, 1937. He was a chorister at Gloucester Cathedral; studied at the Royal College of Music in London with Stanford and Vaughan Williams; served in World War I, was wounded and gassed, and could never recover his physical and mental health; the 2 vols. of his war poems illustrate the turmoil of his inner life. After the Armistice, Gurney began to compose songs; 27 were publ. before his death, and several more were included in a 2-vol. edition of his melodies publ. posthumously. Gurney's gift was not for larger forms; he was at his best in his songs; he also wrote 5 Western Watercolors and 5 Preludes for piano and some violin pieces. A memorial Gurney issue of 'Music & Letters' with articles by Vaughan Williams, Walter de la Mare, and others, was publ. in 1938.

Gusikoff, Michel, American violinist and composer; b. New York, May 15, 1895. He studied violin with Franz Kneisel and composition with Percy Goetschius; made his début in 1920; was concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orch., N. Y. Symphony Orch., and NBC Orch.; also associate conductor of the Pittsburgh Symph. Orch. He made violin arrangements of songs by Gershwin; also wrote an American Concerto for violin and orch.

Gutheil-Schoder, Marie, German dramatic mezzo-soprano; b. Weimar, Feb. 10, 1874; d. there, Oct. 4, 1935. She studied in Weimar, made her début there in 1891; sang with the court opera until 1900, when she went to the Vienna Opera, becoming an outstanding singer-actress in such roles as Carmen, Elektra, Salome; in 1926 she was appointed stage director of the opera. She married the composer and conductor Gustav Gutheil. See L. Andro, Marie Gutheil-Schoder (1923).

Gutmann, Adolph, German pianist; b. Heidelberg, Jan. 12, 1819; d. Spezia, Oct. 27, 1882. He lived mostly in Paris, where he studied with Chopin, and became a close friend of his. He publ. an album of Etudes caractéristiques which were quite popular in the 19th century, and much salon music for piano. He was also a successful performer whose virtuoso technique made him popular with audiences.

Guyot, Jean, Flemish musician, also known under the names of Jean de Chatelet and Johannes Castileti; b. Chatelet (Hainaut) in 1512; d. Liège, March 11, 1588. He studied at the Univ. of Louvain, and received the degree of licencié-es-arts on March 22, 1537; in 1545 he was chaplain at St. Paul's in Liège; published his first motets in Antwerp in 1546; was later maître de chapelle at the Cathedral of St. Lambert in Liège; on Nov. 1, 1563, appointed music master at the Imperial Court in Vienna; he returned to Liège in Aug., 1564, and remained maître de chapelle at the Cathedral of St. Lambert to his death—Cf. C. Lyon, Jean Guyot (Charleroi, 1876).

Guy-Ropartz. See Ropartz, Guy.

Guzikov, Michal Jozef, famous performer on the xylophone; b. Szklów, Poland, Sept. 2, 1806; d. Aachen, Oct. 21, 1837. Of a Jewish musical family, he showed precocious talent; with four relatives he traveled all over Europe; his virtuosity on the xylophone was extraordinary, and elicited praise from the public as well as from celebrated musicians, among them Mendelssohn. Guzikov's programs consisted of arrangements of well-known works and also his own pieces; his most successful number was a transcription of Paganini's La Campanella.—Cf. S. Schlesinger, Josef Guzikov (Vienna, 1936).

Gyrowetz (gē'-roh-vets), Adalbert, prolific composer; b. Budweis, Bohemia, Feb. 19, 1763; d. Vienna, March 19, 1850. He studied organ with his father, a local choir-master; then went to Prague, where he studied law; at the same time, began to compose band pieces and waltzes; he was befriended by Count Franz von Fünfkirchen, who was a music lover, and whose secretary he became. For the private orch. of Count von Fünfkirchen, Gyrowetz wrote 6 symphonies in Haydn's style; later, when he was in Vienna, he showed these works to Mozart, who encouraged him, and arranged for a performance of one of Gyrowetz's symphonies. From Vienna, he traveled through Italy; in Naples, he studied with Sala and Paisiello. In 1789, he went to Milan, Genoa, and finally to Paris, where several of his works were accepted by publishers. He then moved to London, where one of his pieces was performed at a Haydn concert (March 23, 1792). He was commissioned to write an opera, Semiramide, for the Pantheon Theatre, but before the announced performance, the opera building burned down, and with it perished the manuscript of Semiramide. After 3 years in London, he returned to the continent, eventually settling in Vienna (1793), where he became Kapellmeister at the Vienna Opera (1804-31). In Vienna, he enjoyed a great reputation as composer, and his name was often coupled with Beethoven's in public prints. He composed a number of operas, which were performed, one after another, at the Vienna Opera: Selico (Oct. 15, 1804); Agnes Sorel (Dec. 4, 1806); Die Junggesellen-Wirtschaft (June 18, 1807); Die Pagen des Hertzogs von Vendome (Aug. 5, 1808); Der betrogene Betrüger (Feb. 17, 1810); Der Augenarzt (his most successful opera; Oct. 1, 1811); Das Winterquartier in Amerika (Oct. 30, 1812); Robert (July 15, 1813); Helene (Feb. 16, 1816); Aladin (Feb. 7, 1819); Der blinde Harfner (Dec. 19, 1827); Der Geburtstag (Feb. 11, 1828); Felix und Adele (Aug. 10, 1831); also several operettas and Singspiele. In 1834, he produced in Dresden an opera, Hans Sachs, using essentially the same literary material as Wagner's Meistersinger. He further wrote a number of ballets; much church music; some 60 symphonies; about 60 string quartets; 30 trios; about 40 violin sonatas, as well as piano pieces and songs. The historical reasons for the rapid decline of Gyrowetz's repute as a composer after his death are not easy to explain; attempted revivals of his music proved futile. Gyrowetz publ. his autobiography (Vienna, 1848); it was brought out in an annotated edition by Alfred Einstein (Leipzig, 1915); numerous references to Gyrowetz are found in the Haydn literature; see also K. Mey, A. Gyrowetz und seine neu aufgefundene Hans Sachs-Oper in 'Die Musik' (Jan., 1903).

Gysi (gē'sē), Fritz, Swiss musicologist; b. Zofingen, Feb. 18, 1888. He studied at the Basel Cons., at Zürich Univ., and at Berlin Univ.; in 1921 became lecturer in music at the Univ. of Zürich; in 1930, was made prof.; also music critic of the 'Tages-Anzeiger' in Zürich. — Books: Mozart in seinen Briefen (1921); Max Bruch (1922); Claude Debussy (1926); Richard Wagner und die Schweiz (1929); Richard Strauss (1934); Hans Georg Nägeli (1936).

H

Haapanen, Toivo, Finnish musicologist; b. Karvia, May 15, 1889; d. Asikkala, July 22, 1950. He studied music and philosophy at the Univ. of Helsinki; in 1925, appointed to its faculty. He specialized in bibliographical work and research in Finnish music of the Middle Ages.—Writings: Catalogue of manuscripts of the Middle Ages in the library of the Univ. of Helsinki (I. Missalia, 1922; II. Gradualia, Lectionaria missae, 1925; III. Breviaria, 1932; also The Neume Fragments in the Univ. Library at Helsinki 1924); Die Finnen, in Adler's 'Handbuch.'

Haarklou (hahr'-kloo), Johannes, Norwegian composer; b. Söndfjord, near Bergen, May 13, 1847; d. Oslo, Nov. 26, 1925. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; then in Berlin with Haupt, Kiel, and Bungert; for 40 years (1880-1920) he was organist at the old Akers Church in Oslo; also conducted symphonic concerts there for 3 seasons. His 5 operas have not made their way beyond Norway, but among the works more generally known is an oratorio, Skapelsen (The Creation, 1891; Oslo, 1924). He further wrote 4 symphonies and Olafs-Legende for orch.; a violin sonata; piano pieces, choruses, and organ works.

Haas, Joseph, eminent German composer; b. Mähingen, March 19, 1879. He studied with Max Reger in Munich and with Karl Straube in Leipzig (organ). In 1911 he was appointed composition teacher at the Stuttgart Cons.; in 1921 became prof. at the Institute of Church Music in Munich; also taught at the Hochschule für Musik in Munich (retired in 1950). Through the long years of his pedagogical activities, Haas established himself as one of the most reputable teachers in Germany. At the time of his retirement, a Joseph Haas Society was organized in Munich, with the aim of issuing bulletins regarding his works. As a composer, Haas is equally estimable, but his music has failed to gain popularity outside his circle. He wrote more than 100 opus numbers. His principal works are: operas: Tobias Wunderlich (Kassel, Nov. 24, 1937) and Die Hochzeit des Jobs (Dresden, July 2, 1944); oratorios, Die heilige Elisabeth (1931), Christnacht (1932), Das Lebensbuch Gottes (1934), Das Lied von der Mutter (1939), Das Jahr in Lied (1952), Die Seligen (Kassel, April 12, 1957); Variations on a Rococo Theme for orch.; Ouverture zu einem frohen Spiel (1943); 2 string quartets (1908, 1919); trio for 2 violins and piano (1912); many song cycles. He publ. a biography of Max Reger (Bonn, 1949); contributed articles to various publications.—Cf. Festgabe J. Haas (a collection of articles by his students and colleagues on his 60th birthday, Mainz, 1939); a catalogue of works compiled by K. G. Fellerer (issued by the Haas Society, 1950; 2nd ed., 1953); K. Laux, J. Haas (Mainz, 1931; 2nd ed., 1954); special issue of the 'Zeitschrift für Musik' (on his 75th birthday, March, 1954).

Haas, Monique, French pianist; b. Paris, Oct. 20, 1906. She studied at the Paris Cons. with Lazare Lévy; became greatly interested in modern music, and gave numerous concerts all over Europe in programs of 20th-century composers; also appeared with orchestras in modern concertos. She is married to the composer Marcel Mihalovici.

Haas, Pavel, Czech composer; b. Brno, June 21, 1899; d. in the concentration camp at Auschwitz (Oswiecim), Oct. 17, 1944. He studied piano and composition in Brno; was a soldier in the Austrian army in World War I; after the Armistice, continued his study with Petřelka and later with Janáček. He settled as a private teacher in Brno; tried to leave the country when Czechoslovakia was occupied by the Germans, but did not succeed; in 1941 he was placed in a concentration camp in Terezin; in Oct. 1944 he was sent to Auschwitz, and put to death there. Despite the tragic circumstances of the last years of his life, he continued to compose even in the concentration camp.—Works: opera, Charlatan, to his own libretto (Brno, April 2, 1938); incidental music to various plays produced in Czechoslovakia; symphony (1941; unfinished); 4 string quartets; wind quintet; several piano suites and other pieces; songs. His extant manuscripts are preserved in the Moravian Museum in Brno.

Haas, Robert Maria, distinguished musicologist; b. Prague, Aug. 15, 1886. He received his primary education in Prague; then studied music history in the universities of Prague, Berlin, and Vienna; received his Ph.D. at the Univ. of Prague for his dissertation Das Wiener Singspiel (1908). He then was assistant prof. at the Institute for Music History in Vienna (1908-09); from 1910-14 was engaged as theater conductor in various German cities; during World War I was in the Austrian army; in 1920 was appointed chief of the music division of the National State Library in Vienna; in 1923 became instructor at the Vienna Univ.; in 1929, appointed prof. there. Throughout this period he was active in various musical societies; contributed to many publications; was engaged in editorial work.—Writings: Gluck und Durazzo im Burgtheater (Vienna, 1925); Die Wiener Oper (Vienna, 1926); Wiener Musiker vor und um Beethoven (Vienna, 1927); Die estensischen Musikalien (Regensburg, 1927); Die Musik des Barocks, in Bücken's 'Handbuch der Musikwissenschaft' series (1928); Aufführungspraxis der Musik (ibid., 1931); Mozart (Potsdam, 1933; 2nd ed., 1950); Bruckner (Potsdam, 1934); Bach und Mozart in Wien (Vienna, 1951). He edited the symphonies of Bruckner, publ. by the International Bruckner Society (1935-45); for the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' edited the works of Umlauf, Gassmann, Eberlin, Monteverdi, Gluck, and Schenk.

Haase, Hans, German musicologist; b. Neumünster (Schleswig-Holstein), May 12, 1929. He studied musicology at Kiel Univ. (1950-55) with Hans Albrecht, Friedrich Blume, Anna A. Abert, and Kurt Gudewill; also took courses at the Univ. of Innsbruck with Wilhelm Fischer and Karl Koch. In 1954 he joined the editorial staff of 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart'; in 1957 became its editor; contributed a number of articles to it; also various papers to musical journals (mainly on German music of the Renaissance, but also on contemporary music).

Hába, Alois, notable composer of quarter-tone music; b. Vizovice, Moravia, June 21, 1893. He studied at the Prague Cons. with V. Novák and with Franz Schreker in Vienna and Berlin (1917-23). He became interested in the folk music of the Orient, which led him to consider writing in smaller intervals than the semitone; he was also influenced in this direction by Busoni's ideas. His first work in the quarter-tone system was a string quartet (1919); in another string quartet (No. 5, Op. 15, 1923) he applied an even smaller division, the sixth-tone. He notated these fractional intervals by modified or inverted sharps and flats. The piano manufacturing firm A. Förster constructed for him a quarter-tone piano. In 1923 Hába established a class of composition in fractional tones at the State Cons. in Prague, forming a large group of students from all parts of the world, among them his brother Karel Hába, Slavko Osterc of Yugoslavia, Necil Kazim Akse of Turkey, and others. He publ. an important manual of modern harmony, Neue Harmonielehre des diatonischen, chromatischen, Viertel-, Drittel-, Sechstel-, und Zwölfteltonsystems (Leipzig, 1927), accounting for new usages introduced by him in his classes; he further publ. Die Harmonischen Grundlagen des Vierteltonsystems (Prague, 1922) and Von der Psychologie der musikalischen Gestaltung (Prague, 1925). As a composer he has developed a 'non-thematic' method of writing (i.e., without repetition of patterns, or development). His most important work is the opera Die Mutter, in quarter-tones, produced in Munich on May 17, 1931; other operas with the application of quarter-tones are Nová Země (1935) and Thy Kingdom Come (1940); works in fractional tones include ten string quartets (1919-53); duo for 2 violins; fantasy for violin solo; fantasy for viola and piano; fantasy for cello and piano; symph. fantasy The Path of Life (Prague Festival, Sept. 6, 1935); 3 nonets for winds and strings (1931-53); violin concerto (1954); 10 fantasies for a quarter-tone piano; 2 suites for a quarter-tone guitar, etc. He has also written a considerable amount of music for ordinary instruments, in a diatonic style, and in the twelve-tone system. During the period of 1945-52, he wrote several choruses on social themes, in a traditional style; also a cantata For The Peace (1949).—See the article on Hába in Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music.

Hába, Karel, Czech composer, brother of Alois Hába; b. Vizovice, Moravia, May 21, 1898. He studied with Křička and Foerster at the Prague Cons.; was in his brother's class of quarter-tone music. For a time, he was a school teacher; then played viola in the Czech Philharmonic Orch. (1929-36). He publ. a manual on violin playing in quarter tones (Prague, 1927).—Works: opera: Janošik (Prague, Feb. 23, 1934); 2 symphonies (1949, 1954); violin concerto (Vienna Festival, June 16, 1932); cello concerto (Prague Festival, Sept. 1, 1935); septet for violin, clarinet, viola, horn, cello, bassoon, and piano (Liège Festival, Sept. 2, 1930); nonet (1948); 3 string quartets, etc. He does not employ quarter-tones as systematically as his brother, and frequently writes music in the traditional vein.

Habeneck, François-Antoine, French conductor and composer; b. Mézières, Jan. 22, 1781; d. Paris, Feb. 8, 1849. His father, a native of Mannheim and a member of a regimental band, taught him the violin. In 1800 Habeneck entered the Paris Cons., studying violin with Baillot. In 1806 Habeneck was appointed conductor of the student orchestra; in 1825, prof. of violin at the Cons., holding this post almost until his death. He was musical director of the Paris Opéra (1821-24); then its conductor (1824-46). In 1828 he founded the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris, comprising an orchestra of 80 musicians and a chorus of 80 singers. At his opening concert (March 9, 1828) he presented Beethoven's Eroica; subsequently gave concerts exclusively of Beethoven's works, culminating in the first Paris performance of the Ninth Symphony (March 27, 1831). Although Habeneck retained many characteristics of an amateur in conducting (for instance, he used the violin part, with other instruments cued in, instead of a full score), he became a major influence in French musical life because of the excellence of his programs; his championing of Beethoven exercised a profound influence on French composers, among them Berlioz. As a composer he was not significant. With Isouard and Benincori, he wrote an opera Aladin ou la Lampe merveilleuse (Paris Opéra, Feb. 6, 1822); composed 2 violin concertos and other violin music; publ. Méthode théorique et pratique de violon (Paris, 1835).

Haberl, Ernst, German pianist; b. Königsberg, Oct. 5, 1813; d. Bergen, Norway, March 12, 1869. He studied with his father, an organist; left home in 1832; went to Russia and became a court pianist in St. Petersburg in 1847; gave concerts in London in 1850; in 1852 appeared in Paris, where he scored a sensational success; in 1866 he settled in Bergen. He perfected what he considered a novel system of piano technique, dividing difficult passages between the two hands (however, this had been done by Scarlatti and Bach long before). He wrote a number of effective piano pieces, of which Études-Poésies (op. 53) are the best known.

Haberl, Franz Xaver, eminent German theorist, music editor, and historiographer; b. Oberellenbach, Lower Bavaria, April 12, 1840; d. Regensburg, Sept. 5, 1910. He studied in the Boys' Seminary at Passau, and took holy orders in 1862; 1862-7, cathedral Kapellmeister and musical director at the Seminary; 1867-70, organist at Santa Maria dell' Anima, Rome; 1871-82, cathedral Kapellmeister at Regensburg, where he founded, in 1875, a world-renowned school for church music. He was an authority on Catholic church music, past and present. In 1872 he assumed the editorship (vacated by Schrems' death) of the collection 'Musica divina'; and edited the periodical 'Musica sacra' after Witt's death in 1888. In 1876 he began to publish the 'Cäcilienkalender,' the scope of which was greatly widened, until, after 1885, it was issued under the more appropriate name of 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch'; as such it has become one of the most important publications for historical studies concerning the church music of the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries; Haberl continued as editor until 1907, when he resigned and was succeeded by Karl Weinmann. He founded a Palestrina Society in 1879, and (beginning with vol. X) was editor-in-chief of Breitkopf & Härtel's complete edition of Palestrina's works (33 vols., finished on the tercentenary of the master's death, 1894), which he aided not only by his experience and learning, but also by rare MSS from his private collection. In 1899 he was elected President of the 'Allgemeiner Cäcilienverein,' and became editor of its official organ, 'Fliegende Blätter für catholische Kirchenmusik.' In 1889 he was made Dr. theol. (hon. c.) by the University of Würzburg; in 1908 'Monsignore.' Under his general supervision a new edition of the 'Editio Medicea' (1614) of the plainchant melodies was issued, with papal sanction, at Regensburg (1871-81). When modern scholarship had proved that the original edition had not been published with papal sanction and had not been revised by Palestrina, that, in fact, it contained the old melodies in badly distorted and mutilated form, the papal sanction was withdrawn, the edition suppressed and replaced by a new 'Editio Vaticana' in 1904. The result of this was that Haberl's books dealing with plainchant (which had been held in the highest esteem, and had passed through many editions) became practically worthless. The books thus affected are: Praktische Anweisung zum harmonischen Kirchengesang (1864), Magister Choralis (1865; 12th ed., 1899; transl. into English, French, Italian, Spanish, Polish, and Hungarian), Officium hebdomadae sanctae (1887, in German), Psalterium vespertinum (1888). His other writings, the value of which remains unimpaired, are Bertalotti's Solfeggien (1880), Wilhelm Dufay (1885), Die römische 'Schola Cantorum' und die päpstlichen Kapellsänger bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts (1887), Bibliographischer und thematischer Musik-katalog des päpstlichen Kapellarchivs im Vatikan zu Rom (1888).

Habert, Johannes Evangelista, organist, composer, and writer; b. Oberplan, Bohemia, Oct. 18, 1833; d. Gmunden, Sept. 1, 1896. He was organist at Gmunden from 1861; wrote sacred music and organ pieces; a complete edition of his works was published by Breitkopf & Härtel. He was founder and editor of the 'Zeitschrift für katholische Kirchenmusik' (1868-83); publ. also Beiträge zur Lehre von der musikalischen Komposition (4 vols.; 1889 et seq.).—Cf.: A. Hartl, Johannes Evangelista Habert, Organist in Gmunden (Vienna, 1900).

Hackett, Charles, American tenor; b. Worcester, Mass., Nov. 4, 1889; d. New York, Jan. 1, 1942. He studied voice first in Boston, and then in Florence; made his opera début in Genoa; then sang at La Scala, Milan; subsequently appeared in South America, London, Paris, etc. On Jan. 31, 1919, he made his American début as the Count in Il Barbiere di Siviglia with the Metropolitan Opera Company; was a member of the Chicago Civic Opera (1923-33); in 1934 rejoined the Metropolitan Opera, and remained on its staff until his death.

Hackh, Otto (Christoph), music teacher and composer; b. Stuttgart, Sept. 30, 1852; d. Brooklyn, Sept. 21, 1917. He studied at the Stuttgart Cons.; traveled as a concert pianist in Europe; in 1880 settled in New York; was head of the Grand Cons. there (1880-89); then taught piano privately. He publ. some 200 pieces for piano, in a modern salon style, and also many songs, some of which became extremely popular.

Hadden, James Cuthbert, Scottish writer on music; b. Banchory-Ternan, near Aberdeen, Sept. 9, 1861; d. Edinburgh, May 1, 1914. He studied organ in London; was organist in Aberdeen and Edinburgh; edited the 'Scottish Musical Monthly' (1893-96); publ. several biographies: Handel (1888; new ed., 1905); Mendelssohn (1888; new ed., 1904); George Thomson, the Friend of Burns (1898); Haydn (1902); Chopin (1903); also The Operas of Wagner; Their Plots, Music and History (1908); Master Musicians (1909); Favorite Operas (1910); Composers in Love and Marriage (1912); Modern Musicians (1913); edited The Lays of Caledonia, a collection of Scottish airs (Glasgow, 1883).

Hadley, Henry (Kimball), eminent American composer and conductor; b. Somerville, Mass., Dec. 20, 1871; d. New York, Sept. 6, 1937. He studied piano and violin with his father and then with S. Emery and G. W. Chadwick at the New England Cons. in Boston; in 1894, studied theory with Mandyczewski in Vienna. Returning to America, he became director of music at St. Paul's School, Garden City (1895-1902); toured various cities in Germany conducting his own works (1905-09); conducted at the Stadttheater in Mainz (1908-09) and brought out there his one-act opera Safie. In 1909 he was engaged as conductor of the Seattle Symph. Orch.; from 1911-15 he was conductor of the San Francisco Symph. Orch., and from 1915-22, associate conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic Orch. In 1924 he again toured Europe; conducted symphonic concerts in Buenos Aires in 1927; was conductor of the Manhattan Symph. Orch. (1929-32) producing many American works. He was conductor at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., in 1933. He traveled extensively; conducted his own works in Japan and Argentina; spent his last years mostly in New York. He received a Mus. D. from Tufts College (1925); was a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the American Academy of Arts and Letters; and received the Order of Merit from the French government. Hadley occupied a position of prominence among American composers. In his style, he frankly adhered to programmatic writing. Although he shunned the unresolved dissonances of the ultra-modern school, he was not averse to using fairly advanced harmonies in an impressionist vein; he often applied exotic colors when the subject matter demands it. He was an excellent craftsman, both as composer and conductor, and contributed much to the growth of American music culture.—Works: A comic opera Nancy Brown; the grand operas Safie (Mainz, April 4, 1909), Azora, Daughter of Montezuma (Chicago, Dec. 26, 1917), Bianca (N. Y., Oct. 18, 1918; composer conducting; won the $1000 William Hinshaw prize 1917), Cleopatra's Night (N. Y., Jan. 31, 1920), A Night in Old Paris (1925); a festival play, The Atonement of Pan (San Francisco, Aug. 10, 1912); 5 symphonies: No. 1, Youth and Life (N. Y. Philharmonic, Dec. 2, 1897), No. 2, The Four Seasons (N. Y. Philharmonic, Dec. 20, 1901; won the Paderewski prize and one offered by the New England Cons.), No. 3 (Berlin Philharmonic, Dec. 27, 1907; composer conducting), No. 4, North, East, South, West (Norfolk, Conn., Festival, Jan. 6, 1911; composer conducting), No. 5, Connecticut (Norfolk, Conn., Festival, 1934); the overtures Hector and Andromache, In Bohemia (Boston Symph., Dec. 16, 1901), Herod, Othello (Philadelphia Orch., Dec. 26, 1919), Youth Triumphant, Aurora Borealis (1931), Academic Overture, and Alma Mater (1932); the tone poems Salomé (composed in 1905, before the production of Salome by Richard Strauss; publ. in 1906; performed by Muck and the Boston Symph., April 12, 1907); Lucifer (Norfolk, Conn., Festival, June 2, 1914; composer conducting), The Ocean (N. Y. Philh., Nov. 17, 1921; composer conducting); an orchestral rhapsody, The Culprit Fay (Chicago Symph. at Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 30, 1909; composer conducting; won a $1000 prize of the National Federation of Music Clubs); the orchestral suites Oriental (1903), Silhouettes, San Francisco in 3 movements (Robin Hood Dell, July 17, 1932; composer conducting); Streets of Pekin (Tokyo, Sept. 24, 1930; composer conducting); Scherzo Diabolique for orch. 'to recall a harrowing personal experience during a terrifying automobile ride at night, exceeding all speed limits' (Century of Progress Exposition, Chicago, Aug. 1934; composer conducting); incidental music to The Daughter of Hamilcar and Audrey; a Konzertstück for cello and orch. (1937); a piano quintet (1920); 2 string quartets; 2 piano trios; a violin sonata; Elegy for cello and piano; choral works with orch.: In Music's Praise (1899; won the Oliver Ditson Prize), Merlin and Vivien, The Fate of Princess Kiyō, The Nightingale and the Rose, The Golden Prince, The Fairy Thorn, Ode to Music (1917), The New Earth (1919), Resurgam (Cincinnati Music Festival, May 1923), Mürit in Arcadia (Harrisburg, Pa., Festival, May 17, 1928), Belshazzar (1932); 6 ballads (The Fairies; In Arcady; Jabberwocky; Lelawala, a Legend of Niagara; The Princess of Ys; A Legend of Granada); many anthems; piano pieces and over 150 songs to German and English words. A Henry Hadley Foundation for the Advancement of American Music was organized in 1938.—Cf. H. R. Boardman, Henry Hadley, Am- bassador of Harmony (Emory Univ., Georgia, 1932); P. Berthoud, The Musical Works of Dr. Henry Hadley (N. Y., 1942).

Hadley, Patrick Arthur Sheldon, British composer; b. Cambridge, March 5, 1899. He studied with Rootham at Cambridge (M. A., 1925; D. Mus., 1938); also at the Royal College of Music in London with Vaughan Williams (1922-25); in 1938 became lecturer in music at Cambridge; in 1946, prof. of music. His works include The Trees So High for baritone, chorus, and orch. (1931); La Belle Dame sans merci, for tenor, chorus, and orch. (1935); Travelers, for soprano, chorus, and orch. (1940); The Hills, for soloists, chorus, and orch. (1946); Fen and Flood, cantata for soprano, baritone, chorus, and orch. (1956); a string quartet (1933), Fantasy for 2 violins and piano (1938); One Morning in Spring, rhapsody for string orch. (1942); The Orphan's Song for mezzo-soprano with orch. (1947); Scene from The Cenci, after Shelley, for soprano and orch. (1951); incidental music for the stage, etc.

Hadow, Sir William Henry, English music educator; b. Ebrington, Gloucestershire, Dec. 27, 1859; d. London, April 8, 1937. He studied at Malvern College (1871-78) and Worcester College, Oxford (1878-82); M. A., 1888; Mus. B., 1890. He studied piano in Darmstadt (1882); composition with C. H. Lloyd in Oxford (1884). He held various positions in English universities from 1885 till 1919; received numerous honorary degrees; was knighted in 1918. He wrote a cantata, The Soul's Pilgrimage, a string quartet, 2 violin sonatas, a viola sonata, and a number of anthems. These however are of little significance; Hadow's importance lies in his books, written in a lively journalistic style. His book on Haydn, A Croatian Composer (London, 1897), claiming that Haydn was of Slavonic origin, aroused considerable controversy; modern research proves the claim incorrect. Of more solid substance are his other writings: Studies in Modern Music (2 vols., 1892-95; 10th ed., 1921); Sonata Form (1896); The Viennese Period (vol. 5 of the 'Oxford History of Music,' 1904); Beethoven (1917); William Byrd (1923); Music (in the 'Home Univ. Library,' 1924; 3rd revised ed. by Sir George Dyson, 1949); Church Music (1926); A Comparison of Poetry and Music (1926); Collected Essays (1928); English Music (1931); The Place of Music Among the Arts (1933); Richard Wagner (1934). He edited songs of the British Islands (1903); was editor-in-chief of the 'Oxford History of Music' from 1901-5 and in 1929; contributed articles to various British magazines and to the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1915).

Hadrianus. See Adriaensen.

Haefner, Johann Christian Friedrich, composer; b. Oberschöna, near Suhl, March 2, 1759; d. Upsala, Sweden, May 28, 1833. He was a pupil of Dierling at Schmalkalden; then studied at the Univ. of Leipzig, and served as proof-reader for Breitkopf; then became conductor of a traveling opera troupe; in 1780 he arrived in Stockholm, where he became an organist at a German church. He produced at Stockholm several operas in the style of Gluck: Electra (1787), Alkides (1795), Renaud (1801), which had a favorable reception; in 1793 he was appointed court conductor; in 1808 he went to Upsala, where he remained for the rest of his life, acting as organist of the cathedral and music director of the Univ. He took great interest in Swedish national music; publ. Swedish folk-songs with accompaniment, and revised the melodies of the Geijer-Afzelius collection; edited a Svenska Choralbok (2 parts, 1819-21), in which he restored the choral melodies of the 17th century, and added preludes (1822); also arranged a collection of old Swedish songs in 4 parts (1832-33; he finished only 2 books).

Haesche, William Edwin, American music educator; b. New Haven, Conn., April 11, 1867; d. Roanoke, Va., Jan. 26, 1929. He studied violin with Bernhard Listemann and piano with Perabo; composition with Horatio Parker at Yale Univ. (Mus. Bac., 1897); taught orchestration at Yale Univ. (1903-22); in 1923 appointed violin teacher at Hollins College, Va., a post he held until his death. He was one of the organizers of the New Haven Symph. Orch., and was its concertmaster for 20 years. He wrote a symph. poem Fridthjof and Ingeborg (1897), The Haunted Oak of Nannau, for chorus and orch. (1902), a violin sonata, and other violin pieces.

Hagel, Richard, German conductor; b. Erfurt, July 7, 1872; d. Berlin, May 1, 1941. He studied with his father; was an orch. violinist in Abo, Finland (1889), Koburg (1890), Meiningen (1892), and Sondershausen (1893); later undertook serious study at the Leipzig Cons. (1898-1900); conducted at the Leipzig Stadttheater (1900-09) and at Brunswick (1911-14). From 1919 till 1925 he conducted the Berlin Philharmonic; subsequently taught at various schools. He publ. Die Lehre vom Partiturspiel (Berlin, 1937).

Hageman, Maurits Leonard, Dutch violinist and composer; b. Zutphen, Sept. 25, 1829; d. Nijmegen, April 16, 1906. He studied with Bériot and Fétis at the Brussels Cons., graduating in 1852. After playing violin in the Italian Opera orch. at Brussels, he became a conductor at Groningen; then was director of the Cons. of Batavia, Java (1865-75) and conductor of the orch. there. Returning to Holland, he founded a music school in Leeuwarden. He wrote an oratorio Daniel; several other choral works; piano pieces; songs.

Hageman, Richard, American composer; b. Leeuwarden, Holland, July 9, 1882. He studied piano with his father Maurice Hageman, who was director of the Amsterdam Cons.; then at the Brussels Cons. with Gevaert and Arthur de Greef; conductor at the Royal Opera in Amsterdam (1899-1903); accompanist for Mathilde Marchesi in Paris (1904-5); came to the U. S. as accompanist for Yvette Guilbert in 1906; appointed conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in 1908; was on the staff until 1926; conducted the summer opera at Ravinia Park, Chicago for 6 seasons; taught voice at Chicago Musical College; appeared as guest conductor with several American orchestras. In 1938 he settled in Hollywood; wrote several motion picture scores.—Works: the opera Caponsacchi (1931; produced in Freiburg, Germany, as Tragedie in Arezzo, Feb. 18, 1932; at the Metropolitan, Feb. 4, 1937; received the David Bispham Memorial Medal); The Crucible, concert drama for solo voices, chorus, and orch. (Los Angeles, Feb. 4, 1943); numerous songs, some of which attained great popularity (Do not go my love, At the well, Charity, etc.).

Hagen, Francis Florentine, 'Moravian' minister and composer; b. Salem, N. C., Oct. 30, 1815; d. Lititz, Pa., July 7, 1907. Served as teacher and minister in various 'Moravian' congregations. He edited and compiled 'Church and Home Organist's Companion' (several vols.). Wrote a number of anthems, in which a definite sense for distinguished popular melody is noticeable; also a cantata and an overture. His Morning Star, a Christmas carol, which, in 'Moravian' communities, stood in continuous favor for almost a century, was reprinted in 1939. Another anthem is included in the series 'Music of the Moravians in America,' publ. by the N. Y. Public Library.—Cf. A. G. Rau and H. T. David, 'A Catalogue of Music by American Moravians' (Bethlehem, 1938).

Hagen, Friedrich Heinrich von der, German scholar; b. in the Ukraine, Feb. 19, 1780; d. Berlin, June 11, 1856, as prof. of German literature at the Univ. He publ. the valuable collection, Minnesinger (1838-56, in 5 vols.; in vol. III are 'Minnegesänge' in notation according to the Jena Codex and other sources, with a treatise on the music of the Minnesinger); Melodien zu der Sammlung deutscher, vlämischer und französischer Volkslieder (1807; with Büsching).

Hagen, Theodor, writer on music; b. Hamburg, April 15, 1823; d. New York, Dec. 21, 1871. He lived in New York from 1854 as a teacher and critic; edited the 'New York Weekly Review.' Publ. Civilisation und Musik (1845, under the pen-name 'Joachim Fels'); Musikalische Novellen (1848); also piano music and songs.

Hägg, Gustaf Wilhelm, eminent Swedish organist and composer; b. Wisby, Nov. 28, 1867; d. Stockholm, Feb. 7, 1925. After graduation from the Stockholm Cons., he studied in Germany (1897-1900) and France; returning to Stockholm, he was appointed teacher of theory and organ at the Cons. He enjoyed a distinguished reputation in Stockholm as organist, and gave numerous performances of works by Franck and Widor. He composed a symph., string sextet, string quartet, piano trio, etc.; also edited 87 Swedish folksongs.

Hägg, Jakob Adolf, Swedish composer; b. Oestergarn, June 29, 1850; d. Stockholm, March 1, 1928. He studied at the Stockholm Cons.; then went to Leipzig for additional study with Gade, whose influence proved decisive in Hägg's own works. He wrote a Nordische Symphonie (1870; revised 1890) and several other symphonies; a number of overtures; choral works; 3 string quartets; a piano trio, violin sonata, cello sonata; piano pieces.—Cf. G. Hetsch, Ein schwedischer Komponist und sein Verhältnis zu N. W. Gade (Leipzig, 1903).

Haggin, Bernard H., American music critic; b. New York, Dec. 29, 1900. He was music critic of the 'Brooklyn Daily Eagle' (1934-37); in 1936 became music critic of the 'Nation'; also lectured at various colleges. He publ. A Book on the Symphony (N. Y., 1937); Music on Records (N. Y., 1941; 4th revised ed., 1946); Music for the Man Who Enjoys Hamlet (N. Y., 1944); Music in the Nation (N. Y., 1949; collection of articles and reviews originally publ. in the 'Nation'). A 'critical' critic, Haggin devised in his writings an aggressive and personal manner of old-style journalism expressing his views candidly and without regard to conventional amenities. He resigned from the 'Nation' in 1957.

Hahn, Carl, American conductor; b. Indianapolis, Oct. 23, 1874; d. Cincinnati, May 13, 1929. A member of a musical family (his father was a flutist; his brother, a violinist), he studied several instruments (piano with Albino Gorno, cello with Lino Mattioli); played cello in the Theodore Thomas Orch., then was active as conductor in San Antonio (1900-11); then lived in New York and Cincinnati. He wrote a number of choruses and songs, publ. in America and Germany.

Hahn, Reynaldo, notable composer; b. Caracas, Venezuela, Aug. 9, 1875; d. Paris, Jan. 28, 1947. At the age of 3 he was brought to Paris and remained there during his whole life. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Dubois and Lavignac; also with Massenet, whose influence was considerable in Hahn's own development as composer. In 1934 he became music critic of 'Le Figaro'; in 1945, appointed musical director of the Paris Opéra. His music is distinguished by its facile melodic flow; some of his songs have become very popular in recitals. He publ. a book of essays, Thèmes Variés (Paris, 1946).—Works: operas: L'île du Rêve, a 'Polynesian idyll' (Opéra-Comique, Paris, March 23, 1898); La Carmélite (Opéra-Comique, Dec. 16, 1902); Nausicaa (Monte Carlo, April 10, 1919); Fête triomphale (Paris Opéra, July 14, 1919); La Colombe de Buddha (Cannes, 1921); Ciboulette, light opera (Paris, Théâtre des Variétés, April 7, 1923); Le Marchand de Venise, after Shakespeare (Paris Opéra, March 29, 1935); Malvina, light opera (Gaité Lyrique, 1935); incidental music to Daudet's L'Obstacle (1890), Croisset's Deux Courtisanes (1902), Racine's Esther (1905), Hugo's Angelo (1905), Hugo's Lucrèce Borgia (1911), Sascha Guitry's Mozart (1925), Wolff's and Duvernois' Le Temps d'aimer (1926); the pantomimes Fin d'amour (1892), Le Bois sacré (1912); the ballets Béatrice d'Este (1909), La Fête chez Thérèse

(1901), Le Dieu bleu (1912); 2 symph. poems, Nuit d'amour bergamasque (1897), Prométhée triomphant (1911); a Christmas mystery, La Pastorale de Noël (1908); violin concerto; violin sonata; Concerto provençal (1930; Paris, 1946); choruses; numerous songs; piano pieces.

Hahn, Ulrich. See Han.

Hähnel. See Gallus, Jacobus.

Haibel, Petrus Jakob, Austrian composer; b. Graz, July 20, 1762; d. Djakovar, March 24, 1826. He was engaged in Vienna as a tenor; in 1806 he settled in Djakovar; there he married Sophie Weber, sister of Mozart's widow. He produced several stage works in Vienna, among them the ballet Le nozze disturbate (May 18, 1795), and a singspiel Der Tyroler Wasil (May 14, 1796), which became very popular. Other productions were Der Papagei und die Gans (May 25, 1799); Tsching, Tsching, Tsching (Feb. 6, 1802); Der kleine Cesar (July 25, 1804), etc. Mozart's librettist, Schikaneder, wrote the texts for many of Haibel's operas.

Haiden. See Heyden.

Haieff, Alexei, Russian-American composer; b. Blagovestchensk, Siberia, Aug. 25, 1914. He received his primary education at Harbin, Manchuria; in 1931 came to the U. S.; studied with Rubin Goldmark and Frederick Jacobi at the Juilliard School of Music; also took private lessons with Alexander Siloti (piano); studied composition with Nadia Boulanger in Paris (1938-39). He held a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1946 and again in 1949. He also received a Fulbright Scholarship for study in Italy; was a Fellow at the American Academy in Rome 1947-48, composer in residence there 1952-53. His piano concerto received the N. Y. Music Critics' Award for 1952. In his music, Haieff follows Stravinsky's type of neo-Classicism, with broad melodies and rich tonal harmonies; in contrapuntal procedures, Haieff adheres to the principle of economy of means, achieving modernistic effects by a display of rhythmic agitation, often with jazz connotations.—Works: ballets, Divertimento (1944), The Princess Zondilda and Her Entourage (1946), Beauty and the Beast (1947); for orch.: symphony (1942); violin concerto (1948); piano concerto (N. Y., April 27, 1952); chamber music: sonatina for string quartet (1937); 3 bagatelles for oboe and bassoon (1939-55); serenade for oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and piano (1942); Eclogue for cello and piano (1947); La Nouvelle Héloïse for harp and string quartet (1953); sonata for 2 pianos (1945); sonata for piano solo (1955); songs.

Haigh, Morris, American composer; b. San Diego, Calif., Jan. 26, 1932. He studied at Pomona College and at the Eastman School of Music with Bernard Rogers. He has composed Serenade for flute and piano (1954), violin concerto (1956), etc.

Haile, Eugen, composer; b. Ulm, Württemberg, Feb. 21, 1873; d. Woodstock, N. Y., Aug. 14, 1933. He was a pupil at the Stuttgart Cons. (1887-94); settled in New York in 1903; publ. about 200 songs, some of excellent quality (Herbst, Der Todesengel singt, Teufelslied, Soldaten kommen, etc.). His music to a spoken drama ('gesprochene Oper'), The Happy Ending (N. Y., Aug. 21, 1916), attempts to combine spoken word in the play with pitch inflections in the vocal parts; other operas, Viola d'Amore (1910) and Harald's Dream (1913), remained unperformed. His wife, Elise Haile, was a singer; together, they presented several concerts of his German songs in N. Y. When he suffered a paralytic stroke and became impoverished, a Eugen Haile Society was formed in N. Y. (1914) to provide funds for him and also to organize performances of his music.

Haines Bros., well known firm of piano makers founded in N. Y. by Napolcon J. (1824-1900) and Francis W. (1822-87) Haines. The brothers came to N. Y. from England as boys, worked in the piano workshops of A. H. Gale from 1839, and in 1851 established their own factory under the name of N. J. Haines & Co. They were the first to give up manufacturing 'square' pianos and were among the earliest makers of the modern 'overstrung' grand pianos. The business was taken over by the Aeolian American Corp., with factories at East Rochester, N. Y.

Hainl, François, French cellist and conductor; b. Issoire, Nov. 16, 1807; d. Paris, June 2, 1873. After graduating as a cellist from the Paris Cons. with a first prize (1830), he went to Lyons, where he conducted theater music (1841-63); then conducted at the Paris Opéra (1863-72). He wrote an orch. fantasy on Rossini's William Tell; publ. a valuable account De la musique à Lyon depuis 1713 jusqu'à 1852.

Haitzinger, Anton, tenor; b. Wilfersdorf, Liechtenstein, March 14, 1796; d. Vienna, Dec. 31, 1869. He studied in Vienna; made his opera début in 1821; then sang in Prague, Frankfurt, Paris, and London; retired in 1850, and returned to Vienna. In his prime he enjoyed an excellent reputation, and was equally successful in the Italian and German repertory. He publ. a song, Vergiss mein nicht, and a manual of singing.

Hakansson, Knut Algot, Swedish composer; b. Kinna, Nov. 4, 1887; d. Helsingborg, Dec. 13, 1929. He studied philosophy in Upsala; music in Stockholm; was then active as music critic and conductor in Göteborg and Helsingborg. He wrote a ballet Myllitta (Copenhagen, 1918); several suites for orch. on Swedish themes; a string quartet and a string trio; also songs.

Halász, László, Hungarian-American conductor; b. Debrecen, June 6, 1905. He studied at the Budapest Cons.; graduated in piano and conducting in 1929; was active as concert pianist in Europe (1928-31); conducted the Budapest Opera (1929-30), the Prague Opera (1930-32), the Vienna Opera and Volksoper (1933-36). In 1936, came to America; naturalized in 1943. He was conductor of the St. Louis Grand Opera (1939-42) and the New York City Opera Co. (1943-51), where he established a bold policy of producing operas of the modern repertory; personal differences with the management compelled him to resign; after 1951 he conducted opera performances in the U. S. and Europe.

Hale, Philip, eminent American music critic; b. Norwich, Vt., March 5, 1854; d. Boston, Nov. 30, 1934. He took music lessons from early youth and as a boy played the organ in the Unitarian Church, Northampton, Mass. Graduate of Yale Univ., 1876; admitted to the Albany bar, 1880. First studied music in Europe, 1882-87 (organ with Haupt, Faiszt, Rheinberger, and Guilmant; composition with Urban, Bargiel, Rheinberger, and Guilmant; piano with Raif and Scholz). Was organist (1879-82) at St. Peter's, Albany; 1887-89, at St. John's, Troy; 1889-1905, of First Religious Society, Roxbury, Mass. From 1887-89, also conductor of the Schubert Club, a men's chorus, at Albany. Critic for the 'Boston Home Journal' (1889-91), 'Boston Post' (1890-91), 'Boston Journal' (1891-1903); then for 'Boston Herald'; 1897-1901, editor of the Boston 'Mus. Record'; and 1892-98, Boston correspondent of the 'Musical Courier,' N. Y. He also was drama editor of the 'Boston Herald.' From 1901 he edited the program books of the Boston Symph. Orch. Hale was one of the most forceful and brilliant writers for the American music press; his articles are valuable contributions to music literature, and often tinged with humor. He edited 2 vols. of Modern French Songs in 'The Musician's Library' (1904, Ditson); joint author with L. C. Elson of Great Composers and Their Works (1900). — Cf. Philip Hale's Boston Symph. Programme Notes, ed. by John N. Burk (N. Y., 1935; revised ed., 1939).

Hales, Hubert (James), English composer; b. Bradford, April 29, 1902. He studied at Eton College and at King's College in Cambridge; received a B. A. there and subsequently devoted himself to teaching; occupied various posts as director of music at schools and colleges. He has written music for dramatic productions, several works for orch., a string quartet, and a number of piano pieces.

Halévy, Jacques-François-Fromental-Élie, famous French opera composer; b. Paris, May 27, 1799; d. Nice, March 17, 1862. He was a child prodigy. At ten he entered the Paris Cons. as an elementary pupil of Cazot. In 1810 he studied piano with Lambert; in 1811, harmony with Berton; and counterpoint for five years with Cherubini. At seventeen he competed for the Prix de Rome, winning the 2nd prize with his cantata Les derniers Moments du Tasse; in 1817 he again won the 2nd prize with La Mort d'Adonis; in 1819 he gained the Grand Prix de Rome with his Herminie. He had previously composed an opera, Les Bohémiennes (never performed), published a piano-sonata for 4 hands, and set to music the 130th Psalm in Hebrew, the De Profundis. During his three years' stay in Italy he made great progress, writing another opera, etc. In 1822, on his return to Paris, he made vain attempts to produce his grand opera Pygmalion and Les deux Pavillons (comedy-opera). It was not until 1827 that he brought out a one-act comedy-opera, L'Artisan, at the Théâtre Feydeau; though with little success. The same year he succeeded Daussoigne as prof. of harmony and accompaniment at the Cons.; following Fétis as prof. of counterpoint and fugue in 1833, and taking a class of advanced composition in 1840. In 1827 he was engaged as cembalist at the Italian Opera. In 1828, with Rifaut, he composed Le Roi et le Bâtelier in honor of Charles X. On Dec. 9 of the same year Clari (with Malibran as prima donna) was a success at the Théâtre Italien; Le Dilettante d'Avignon was produced on Nov. 7, 1829; and on May 3, 1830 the grand ballet Manon Lescaut. Halévy was now appointed 'chef du chant' at the Opéra, a post retained during 16 years. In 1831 La Langue musicale was produced at the Opéra-Comique; La Tentation (Paris, June 20, 1832; ballet-opera, with Gide), at the Opéra; Les Souvenirs de Lafleur (Opéra-Comique, March 4, 1833); and on May 16 of the same year a completion of Hérold's unfinished Ludovic, which proved very successful. On Feb. 23, 1835, the Paris Opéra produced Halévy's masterpiece, La Juive, which soon became one of the most spectacular successes of opera theaters throughout Europe and America. A few months later appeared L'Éclair (Dec. 16, 1835), a sparkling comedy-opera. To add to his growing reputation, Halévy was created Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. On the death of Reicha (1836) Halévy succeeded him as one of the three musical members of the Académie; and in 1854 was appointed Secretary for life. With La Juive Halévy attained not only the zenith of his powers, but also of his triumphs. In 1836 the blazing apparition of Les Huguenots paled the milder fires of the French composer, and Meyerbeer became the idol of the hour. La Juive was followed by Guido et Ginevra (March 5, 1838); Les Treize (April 15, 1839); Le Shérif (Sept. 2, 1839); Le Drapier (Jan. 6, 1840); Le Guittarrero (Jan. 21, 1841); La Reine de Chypre (Dec. 22, 1841); Charles VI (Feb. 3, 1843); Le Lazzarone (March 23, 1844); Les Mousquetaires de la reine (March 15, 1846). He collaborated with Adam, Auber, and Carafa in Les premiers Pas for the inauguration of the National Opera (1847). His next productions were: Le Val d'Andorre (Nov. 11, 1848); La Fée aux roses (Oct. 1, 1849); La Dame de Pique (Dec. 28, 1850). On June 8, 1850, Halévy conducted in London an Italian opera, La Tempesta. He then produced in Paris Le Juif errant (April 23, 1852); Le Nabab (Sept. 1, 1853); Jaguarita (May 14, 1855); L'Inconsolable (under the nom-de-plume 'Albert'; 1855); Valentine d'Aubigny (1856); La Magicienne (March 17, 1858).—Halévy was more inclined to aim at a high ideal than to please the popular taste. His music possesses true emotional and dramatic power, and is 'melodious, but combined with so many details and refinements of harmony and instrumentation' that it could not be appreciated by the general public; though he held a high rank among artists.—

Besides his operas, Halévy wrote a piano sonata for 4 hands, romances, nocturnes, part-songs for men's voices; scenes from Prometheus Unbound (Paris, March 18, 1849); the cantatas Italie (1849) and Les Plagues du Nil (1859) and left the almost finished scores of two operas, Vanina d'Ornano (completed by Bizet) and Le Déluge (originally Noé, completed by Bizet; performed on April 5, 1885). In the Paris schools his Leçons de lecture musicale (Paris, 1857) was adopted as the textbook for singing. Souvenirs et portraits (1861) and Derniers souvenirs et portraits (1863) were collections of the funeral orations that, as Secretary of the Académie, he had delivered at the obsequies of deceased members. At the Paris Cons. he had many distinguished pupils, among them Gounod and Bizet (who married Halévy's daughter). — Short biographies of Halévy were published by his brother Léon (1862), E. Monnaïs (1863), A. Catelin (1863), and A. Pougin (1865); see also Mina Curtiss, F. Halévy, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1953).

Halffter, Ernesto, talented Spanish composer; b. Madrid, Jan. 16, 1905. He studied composition with Manuel de Falla and Adolfo Salazar; as a young man he started a chamber orch. in Seville, with which he presented works by contemporary Spanish composers. He first attracted attention when his Sinfonietta, in a neo-Classical style, was presented at the Oxford Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music (July 23, 1931). From 1934-36 he was director of the Seville Cons.; at the outbreak of the Spanish Civil War in 1936 he went to Lisbon, where he settled. His Fantaisie portugaise, for orch., was performed in Paris on March 23, 1941; his other works are an opera La muerte de Carmen; Automne malade, for voice and orch.; Suite ancienne, for wind instruments; chamber music, and a ballet, Sonatina (performed by La Argentina, Paris, 1928).—Cf. A. Salazar, La música contemporánea en España (Madrid, 1930).

Halffter, Rodolfo, Spanish composer, brother of Ernesto Halffter; b. Madrid, Oct. 30, 1900. He acquired a considerable technique of composition mainly by the study of classical works; received some instruction and advice from Manuel de Falla. As a young man, he was a member of a group of young Spanish composers promoting national music in a modern idiom. From 1934-36, he was music critic of 'La Voz.' During the Spanish Civil War he collaborated with the cultural sections of the Loyalist government; after its defeat, he fled to France, and then to Mexico, where he settled in 1939, as composer, teacher, and writer. He edited a journal 'Nuestra Musica' (1946-51). Among his works are the ballets Don Lindo de Almería (Mexico, Jan. 9, 1940); La Madrugada del Panadero (Mexico, Sept. 20, 1940); Elena la Traicionera (Mexico, Nov. 23, 1945); Suite for orch. (Madrid, Nov. 5, 1930); Obertura Concertante for piano and orch. (Valencia, May 23, 1937); violin concerto (Mexico, June 26, 1942); Divertimento for 9 instruments (Mexico, Nov. 18, 1943); Obertura Festiva (Mexico, May 25, 1953); Pastorale for violin and piano (1940); 2 piano sonatas; 11 bagatelles for piano; songs.

Halir (hah'-lir), Karl, distinguished violinist; b. Hohenelbe, Bohemia, Feb. 1, 1859; d. Berlin, Dec. 21, 1909. He was a pupil of Bennewitz at the Prague Cons., and of Joachim in Berlin. In 1884 he was appointed concertmaster of the court orch. at Weimar; in 1893 he obtained a similar post in Berlin; also appointed prof. at the Hochschule there; for a time he was a member of the Joachim Quartet, but later formed his own quartet (with Exner, Müller, and Dechert), which became famous. His tour of the United States (1896-97) was very successful. His pedagogic exercises for the violin, Tonleiterstudien, are still in use. In 1888 he married Theresa Zerbst, a fine soprano.

Hall, Charles King, English composer and writer; b. London, 1845; d. there Sept. 1, 1895. He was organist at various London churches; publ. A School for Harmonium, and produced a number of operettas, some of which were successful in their day (Foster Brothers, Doubleday's Will, A Tremendous Mystery, The Artful Automaton, A Strange House, A Christmas Stocking, etc.).

Hall, John, English song-writer; b. c. 1529; d. c. 1565. He was a surgeon by profession and a musician by avocation. A collection of 30 melodies and one song in 4 parts entitled The Court of Vertu, composed by him, is preserved.

Hall, Marie (Mary Paulina), English violinist; b. Newcastle-on-Tyne, April 8, 1884; d. Cheltenham, Nov. 11, 1956. As a small child, she gave performances with her father, an amateur harp player, her uncle (violin), her brother (violin), and her sister (harp), in the homes of music lovers in Newcastle, Malvern, and Bristol. Elgar heard her, and was impressed by her talent; he sent her to Wilhelmj in London for regular study; she also studied with Johann Kruse. At the age of 15 she won the first Wessely Exhibition at the Royal Academy of Music. She was recommended by Jan Kubelik to Ševčík in Prague (1901), from whom she received rigorous training; made her professional début in Prague (1902); then played in Vienna. After a highly successful London concert (Feb. 16, 1903), she made her American début as soloist with the New York Symphony, Walter Damrosch conducting (Nov. 8, 1905); toured Australia (1907) and India (1913). On Jan. 27, 1911 she married her manager Edward Baring, and settled in Cheltenham; continued to appear in concerts in England until 1955, with her daughter, Pauline Baring, as her accompanist. —Cf. J. Cuthbert Hadden, Marie Hall, in Modern Musicians (Edinburgh, 1913; pp. 176-83).

Hall, Pauline, Norwegian composer; b. Hamar, Aug. 2, 1890. She studied composition with Catharinus Elling in Oslo; later studied in Paris and in Dresden. She made her first appearance as composer in Oslo in 1915, playing her own piano concerto. In 1934 she became music critic of 'Dagbladet.' In her music, she follows the modern French tradition of classical clarity, enlivened by a constantly driving rhythm. Among her works are 3 orchestral suites: Verlaine Suite (1929), Circus Sketches (1933), Julius Caesar (1947); chamber music; piano pieces.

Hall, Reginald, American composer; b. Laurel, Md., Jan. 23, 1926; studied at the Peabody Cons. and at the Univ. of Michigan (with Ross Lee Finney); also with Halsey Stevens in California. He is a civil engineer by profession and music is only an avocation for him; yet he has developed a competent style in orchestral and chamber music. His Elegy for orch. won the George Gershwin Memorial Award in 1955, and was perf. by the N. Y. Philh., April 21, 1956.

Hall, Walter Henry, organist and choral conductor; b. London, April 25, 1862; d. New York, Dec. 11, 1935. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music; settled in America in 1883, was organist at various churches in Pennsylvania, before settling in New York; organist at St. James' (1896-1913). In 1893 he founded the Brooklyn Oratorio Society, which he led until his death; also conducted the Musurgia Society (1889-1906); in 1909 appointed lecturer of music at Columbia Univ.; prof. emeritus in 1930. He was a noted trainer of choirs; member of the committee of the Episcopal 'Hymnal' (1919); wrote services, anthems, etc.; publ. Essentials of Choir Training.

Hallé, Sir Charles (real name Karl Hallé), renowned pianist and conductor; b. Hagen, Westphalia, April 11, 1819; d. Manchester, Oct. 25, 1895. Son of a local church organist, he revealed a musical talent as a child, and performed in public at the age of 4; at 15 he was sent to study music seriously with Rinck at Darmstadt; in 1836 he went to Paris, where he entered the friendly circle of Chopin, Liszt, and others. In 1846 he gave concerts of his own as a pianist in chamber music. After the Revolution of 1848, he went to England, settling in Manchester, where he conducted an orchestra, choruses, and opera. In 1857 he established subscription concerts with an orchestral ensemble of his own, which became famous as Charles Hallé's Orchestra, endured for a century, and eventually became an honored institution known as the Hallé Orchestra. Although his chief activities were connected with Manchester, he also conducted the London Popular Concerts; gave piano recitals; in 1861 he presented all of Beethoven's sonatas in 8 concerts, repeating this cycle in 2 successive seasons. From 1873 till 1893 he conducted the Bristol Festivals; in 1883 he became conductor of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, as successor to Max Bruch. He was a champion of Berlioz in England, and gave several complete performances of Berlioz's Damnation de Faust. His first wife was Désirée Smith de Rilieu, his second wife the violinist Wilma Neruda. With her he made 2 Australian tours (1890 and 1891). He was knighted in 1888. He established a standard of excellence in orchestral performance which greatly influenced musical life in England. He publ. a Pianoforte School (1873) and edited a Musical Library (1876).—Cf: L. Engel, From Handel to Hallé (London, 1890); C. E. and M. Hallé, Life and Letters of Sir Charles Hallé (London, 1896); C. Rigby, Sir Charles Hallé (Manchester, 1952); C. B. Rees, 100 Years of the Hallé (Manchester, 1957).

Hallén, Andreas, notable Swedish composer; b. Göteborg, Dec. 22, 1846; d. Stockholm, March 11, 1925. He studied with Reinecke in Leipzig, Rheinberger in Munich, and Rietz in Dresden; upon his return to Sweden, conducted in Göteborg (1872-78 and 1883-84); then was conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts in Stockholm (1884-92) and of the Royal Opera (1892-97). From 1908 till 1919 he was prof. of composition at the Stockholm Cons. His works include the operas Harald Viking (Leipzig, Oct. 16, 1881), Häxfällan (Stockholm, March 16, 1896), The Treasure of Waldemar (Stockholm, April 8, 1899), Walpurgis Night (Stockholm, 1902); choral works with orch. (The Page and the King's Daughter, Dream-King and His Love, Goblin's Fate, Christmas Eve, Peace); a Missa solemn (Stockholm, 1923), which was very successful; symph. poems (En Sommarsaga, Die Toteninsel, Sphärenklänge); overtures, etc.—Cf. P. Vretblad, Andreas Hallén (Stockholm, 1918).

Haller, Michael, German church composer; b. Neusaar, Jan. 13, 1840; d. Regensburg, Jan. 4, 1915. He was educated at Matten monastery; took holy orders in 1864; appointed prefect of the Regensburg Cathedral Choristers' Institution.—Works: 14 Masses; psalms; litanies; a Te Deum; melodramas; string quartets, etc. He completed the third-choir parts of 6 compositions a 12 of Palestrina, which had been lost (vol. XXVI of the complete edition). Pedagogic writings: Vademecum für den Gesangsunterricht (1876; 12th ed., 1910); Kompositionslehre für den polyphonen Kirchengesang (1891); Modulation in den Kirchen-tonarten; Exempla polyphoniae ecclesiasticae (in modern notation, with explanatory notes); also contributed historical articles to Haber's Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch.

Hallnäs, Hilding, Swedish composer, b. Halmstad, May 24, 1903. He studied at the Stockholm Cons. and later in Paris. He has composed Symphony No. 1 (1935); No. 2 (1942); Sinfonia pastorale (1944); Sinfonia notturna (1946); violin concerto (1945); Ballata Concertante for harp and small orch. (1939); chamber music, songs, etc.

Hallström, Ivar, Swedish composer; b. Stockholm, June 5, 1826; d. there, April 11, 1901. He studied law at the Univ. of Upsala; there he became a friend of Prince Gustaf, a music amateur; on April 9, 1847, jointly with Gustaf, he produced his first opera, The White Lady of Drottningholm; later he became librarian to Prince Oscar; in 1861 he became a member of the Academy of Music in Stockholm. His opera Hertig Magnus (Stockholm, 1867) contained 20 arias in minor keys, and this fact was held against him by some critics, so that the opera was not maintained in the repertory. He then produced another opera, The En- chanted Cat (Stockholm, 1869), which had better success. With his next opera Den bergtagna (The Bewitched One), staged in Stockholm on May 24, 1874, he achieved the greatest success of his career; it had further performances in Germany and Denmark. In this work Hallström made use of Swedish popular motifs, a pioneer attempt in Scandinavian operatic art. His next opera, Vikingarna (Stockholm, June 6, 1877), was but moderately successful; there followed Neaga (Stockholm, Feb. 24, 1885) to a libretto by Carmen Sylva (Queen Elisabeth of Rumania). He also wrote several ballets, cantatas, and arrangements of Swedish folk-songs for piano.

Halm, August, German composer and writer; b. Gross-Altdorf, Württemberg, Oct. 26, 1869; d. Saalfeld, Feb. 1, 1929. A member of a family of scholars, he received an excellent general education; then studied theology at Tübingen. In 1892 he went to Munich, where he took courses with Rheinberger. Subsequently he devoted himself mainly to musical pedagogy; taught in various schools in Thuringia; conducted choral societies and also wrote music criticism. An August Halm Society was organized after his death. He was a prolific composer, but his music failed to take hold. He wrote 2 symphonies, which were performed in Ulm and Stuttgart; a piano concerto; 2 string quartets; 2 suites for piano trio, and a number of piano studies. He publ. Harmonielehre (Berlin, 1905); Von zwei Kulturen der Musik (Munich, 1913; 3rd ed., 1947); Die Symphonien A. Bruckners (Munich, 1913; 2nd ed., 1923); Von Grenzen und Ländern der Musik (Munich, 1916); Einführung in die Musik (Berlin, 1926); Beethoven (Berlin, 1927).—Cf. H. Höckner, Die Musik in der deutschen Jugendbewegung (Wolfenbüttel, 1927).

Halvorsen, Johan, Norwegian violinist and composer; b. Drammen, March 15, 1864; d. Oslo, Dec. 4, 1935. He studied violin with Lindberg at the Stockholm Cons.; was concertmaster of the Bergen Orch.; then went to Leipzig to study with Brodsky; subsequently studied with César Thomson in Belgium; returning to Norway in 1892, he became conductor of a theater orch. in Bergen; in 1899 was appointed conductor at the National Theater in Oslo. He was married to a niece of Grieg; this association was symbolic of his devotion to Grieg's art; his music reflects Grieg's influence very strongly. He wrote incidental music to Björnson's Vasantasena and The King, to Drachmann's Gurre, Eldegard's Fossegrimen, Dronning Tamara, and others. He further wrote 3 symphonies, a violin concerto, 2 Norwegian rhapsodies, several orchestral suites on Norwegian themes. His most popular works are the march, Triumphant Entry of the Boyars, and an arrangement of Handel's Pasacaglia for violin and viola (or cello).

Halvorsen, Leif, Norwegian composer and violinist; b. Oslo, July 26, 1887. He studied in Oslo, then in Paris and in St. Petersburg (with Leopold Auer); upon his return to Oslo, he was concertmaster in the National Theater Orch. (1915-17); then opera conductor (1918-21); leader of the Cecilia Society (1921-28); conductor of Fredrikstad Singing Society from 1925 till 1947. He has written music for theatrical plays and an orchestral suite, Peasant's Legend; also piano pieces and songs.

Ham, Albert, English organist; b. Bath, June 7, 1858; d. Brighton, Feb. 4, 1940. He studied at Dublin Univ.; in 1897 he went to Toronto, and became a cathedral organist there; also taught choral music at the Toronto Cons. He wrote a number of anthems and secular choruses. One of his choral songs, Little Jack Horner, became very popular.

Hamal, Henri-Guillaume, Belgian organist and composer; b. Liège, Dec. 3, 1865; d. there, Dec. 3, 1952. As a youth he excelled in the various capacities of harpsichord player, singer, and cellist; was also a versatile composer of songs to texts in many languages. However, none of his works is preserved, and his reputation was transmitted mainly by members of his family. His son, Jean-Noël Hamal (b. Liège, Dec. 23, 1909; d. there, Nov. 26, 1978), studied with his father and later served as chorus master at the Liège Cathedral; also traveled in Italy, where he acquired additional knowledge of composition. He wrote a great number of church works: 56 Masses, 32 cantatas, 5 oratorios, 179 motets, also operas, overtures, and numerous pieces for the harpsichord. Henri Hamal (b. Liège, July 20, 1744; d. there, Sept. 17, 1820), a nephew of Jean-Noël Hamal, studied with him, and later in Italy. He was a chorusmaster at the Liège Cathedral for some time. He wrote much church music, of which 3 volumes are preserved in the Royal Library of Brussels.—Cf. Louis de Lavalleye, Les Hamal de Liège (Liège, 1860).

Hambourg, a family of musicians of Russian extraction. Michael Hambourg (b. Yaroslav, 1856; d. Toronto, Canada, June 18, 1916), was a piano pedagogue; appointed prof. of piano at the Moscow Cons. in 1880. After the successful London début of his son and pupil, Mark Hambourg (1890), he settled in England as a teacher; in 1911 he went to Toronto where he established, with his sons Boris and Jan, the Hambourg Cons. Boris Hambourg (b. Voronezh, Jan. 8, 1884; d. Toronto, Nov. 24, 1954), son of Michael, was a cellist. He was taken to London in 1890; studied cello with Walenn; then with Hugo Becker in Frankfurt (1898-1903); made an Australian tour, and then gave a series of 5 historical recitals in London (May-June, 1906). He made his American début at Pittsburgh (Oct. 28, 1910); in 1911 he settled in Toronto where, with his father and brother Jan, he established the Hambourg Cons. He was an original member of the Hart House String Quartet (from 1924). Jan Hambourg (b. Voronezh, Aug. 27, 1882; d. Tours, France, Sept. 29, 1947), a violinist, studied with Sauret and Wilhelmj in London, with Heermann in Frankfurt, Ševčík in Prague, and Eugène Ysaÿe in Brussels. With his brothers Boris and Mark he made a successful tour of England in 1909; he was in New York from 1916-22; in Paris from 1922-36; in Sorrento, Italy, from 1936-39; then returned to London. He died during a concert tour in France. Mark Hambourg (b. Bogutchar, May 31, 1879), a pianist, studied with his father; made his début as a child prodigy in Moscow (1888); then went to Vienna to study with Leschetizky. He subsequently traveled all over the world as pianist; played his thousandth concert on June 16, 1906. After a tour in the U. S. with his brothers, in 1935, he returned to London. He publ. How to Play the Piano (Philadelphia, 1922); From Piano to Forte; a Thousand and One Notes (London, 1931); memoirs, The Eighth Octave (London, 1951). A daughter of Mark Hambourg, Michal Hambourg (b. London, June 9, 1919), is also a pianist; made her début in London in 1936.

Hamboys, John. See Hanboys.

Hamel, Fred, musicologist; b. Paris, Feb. 19, 1903. He studied chemistry and music in German univs.; graduated from the Univ. of Bonn (1926); Ph.D., 1930. He wrote music criticism; after 1945, taught church music in Hanover; became editor (1947) of the magazine 'Musica.' He publ. J. S. Bach: Geistige Welt (Göttingen, 1951).

Hamel (ah-mel'), Marie-Pierre, French organ builder; b. Auneuil, Oise, Feb. 24, 1786; d. Beauvais, July 25, 1879. He was from a family of jurists, and himself pursued a legal career; in 1817 he became a judge at Beauvais. Apart from his professional activities, he was from his childhood interested in music; he manufactured a small organ of 3 octaves at the age of 13, and successfully repaired an old organ in a neighboring village to the satisfaction of the church wardens. He later rebuilt the grand organ of the Cathedral of Beauvais (1826). He publ. several manuals and descriptions of organs in various French cities. Principal writings: Rapport sur les travaux du grand orgue de l'Eglise de la Madeleine à Paris (Paris, 1846); Nouveau Manuel complet du facteur d'orgues (Paris, 1849; 3 vols.; new ed. by Guédon, 1903; contains a history of organ building).

Hamelle (ah-mel'), Jacques, French music publisher; in 1877 he acquired the publishing firm established by J. Maho in 1855. After Hamelle's death in 1917, the business was taken over by his sons. Among the principal composers represented in the catalogue are Franck, Saint-Saëns, Fauré, and Vincent d'Indy.

Hamerik (real name Hammerich), Asger, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, April 8, 1843; d. Frederiksborg, July 13, 1923. He was a son of a prof. of divinity, who discouraged his musical interests; despite this opposition, he studied with Gade in Copenhagen and with Hans von Bülow in Berlin. He met Berlioz at Paris in 1864, and accompanied him to Vienna in 1866, studying orchestration. Hamerik was probably the only pupil that Berlioz had. He received a gold medal for his work Hymne de la Paix, at the contest for the Paris Exposition. His opera Tourelille was performed in Paris in concert form (May 6, 1865); another opera, Hjalmar and Ingeborg, was not performed in its entirety. In 1870 he visited Italy and produced his opera in Italian La Vendetta (Milan, Dec. 23, 1870). He then received an invitation to become director of the newly organized Peabody Cons. in Baltimore. He accepted, and remained in Baltimore for 26 years, until 1898, when he returned to Copenhagen. In Baltimore he wrote a number of symphonic works, which he conducted with the cons. orch.: 5 Nordic Suites (1872-78); Symphonie poétique (1879); Symphonie tragique (1881); Symphonie lyrique (1885); Symphonie majestueuse (1888); Symphonie sérieuse (1892); Symphonie spirituelle, for string orch. (1895); and a choral symph. (No. 7).

Hamerik, Ebbe, Danish composer, son of Asger Hamerik; b. Copenhagen, Sept. 5, 1898. He studied with his father; conducted opera in Copenhagen (1919-22) and symphony concerts (1927-31), also conducted in Germany. —Works: the operas Stepan (Mainz, Nov. 30, 1924), Leonardo da Vinci (Antwerp, 1939), Marie Grubbe (Copenhagen, May 17, 1940), and Rejseskammeraten, after Andersen (Copenhagen, Jan. 5, 1946); also 5 symphonies; 2 string quartets; piano pieces; songs.

Hamilton, Clarence Grant, American organist and music educator; b. Providence, June 9, 1865; d. Wellesley, Mass., Feb. 14, 1935. He studied piano with Arthur Foote in Boston and Matthay in London; composition with Chadwick. He occupied various positions as organist in and around Boston; taught at Wellesley College for many years (1904-34); wrote piano pieces and songs. He publ. Outlines of Music History (1908; new ed., 1924); Piano Teaching (1910); Sound and Its Relation to Music (1911); Music Appreciation, based upon Methods of Literary Criticism (1920); Piano Music, Its Composers and Characteristics (1925); Epochs in Musical Progress (1926); Touch and Expression in Piano Playing (1927); What Every Piano Pupil Should Know (1928); Ornaments in Classical and Modern Music (1929).

Hamilton, Iain, British composer; b. Glasgow, June 6, 1922. He studied engineering and turned to music at the age of 24, when he entered the Royal College of Music in London as a student of William Alwyn (composition) and Harold Craxton (piano). He made rapid progress and within 3 years wrote a clarinet quintet (1949); string quartet (1950); Nocturnes for clarinet and piano (1951); ballet, Clerk Saunders (1951); viola sonata (1951); clarinet concerto (1951); and 2 symphonies (No. 1, 1949; No. 2, 1951, first perf. at the Cheltenham Festival, June 9, 1953). His music is distinguished by an incisive rhythmic manner and terse melodic expression within a framework of broadly tonal harmony with strident dissonant contrapuntal lines adding to the impression of advanced modernity.

Hamilton, James Alexander, English musician; b. London, 1785; d. there, Aug. 2, 1845. He was a son of a bookseller; his voluminous reading gave him a fine literary education. He developed a knack of transmitting knowledge acquired from music books to the public in an easy and attractive form; his numerous manuals went through several editions, but because of his temperate habits, he was always in penury. He publ. Modern Instructions for the Piano; Catechism of Singing; Catechism of the Rudiments of Harmony and Thoroughbass; Catechism of Counterpoint, Melody and Composition; A New Theoretical and Practical Musical Grammar; a dictionary of musical terms; transl. Cherubini's Counterpoint and Fugue.

Hamlin, George, American tenor; b. Elgin, Ill., Sept. 20, 1868; d. New York, Jan. 20, 1923. He studied irregularly with various teachers; sang in oratorio; made his operatic debut in Victor Herbert's Natoma (Philadelphia, Dec. 15, 1911); among his chief parts were Cavaradossi in Tosca and Don José in Carmen.

Hamm, Adolf, church organist and choral conductor; b. Strasbourg, March 9, 1882; d. Basel, Oct. 15, 1938. He studied with Straube in Leipzig; in 1906, settled in Basel, where he became chief organist at the cathedral; also organized the Bach Choir there; taught at the Basel Cons. Paul Sacher edited a memorial volume, Adolf Hamm: Erinnerungsschrift (Basel, 1942).

Hammer, Heinrich Albert Eduard, violinist, conductor, and composer; b. Erfurt, Germany, Oct. 27, 1862; d. Phoenix, Arizona, Oct. 28, 1954. He studied violin with A. Pott, theory with H. Ritter; also took singing lessons with Mme. Viardot-Garcia in Paris. He then lived in Holland (1893-96) and Bochum (1897-1901); conducted the Lausanne Symph. Orch. (1901-05); in 1905 he organized a symph. orch. in Göteborg, Sweden. In 1908 he settled in America; conducted his own orch. in Washington, until 1921, when he went to California; lived mostly in Pasadena; continued to compose until the end of his long life; at the age of 90, married his pupil Arlene Hammer, who helped him to edit his autobiography (MS). Among his works are a symphony; 3 American Indian Rhapsodies for orch.; symph. poem, Sunset at Sea; an orchestral ode, Columbia Triumphant in Peace (1915), and much church music.

Hammerich, Angul, Danish writer on music; brother of Asger Hamerik (whose real name was Hammerich); b. Copenhagen, Nov. 25, 1848; d. there, April 26, 1931. He studied cello; at the same time, occupied a post in the Dept. of Finance; wrote music criticism; taught musicology at the Univ. of Copenhagen. In 1898 he founded the Collection of Ancient Musical Instruments; was a founder of the Danish Musicological Society (1921).—Writings: Studies in Old Icelandic Music (1890; Danish and German); The Conservatory of Music at Copenhagen (1892; in Danish); Essay on the Music at the Court of Christian IV (1892; in German, 1893); On the Old Norse Lurs (1893; in German, 1894); Descriptive Illustrated Catalogue of the Historical Musical Museum of Copenhagen (1909; in Danish; German transl. by E. Bobé, 1911); Medieval Musical Relics of Denmark (1912; in Danish; English transl. by Margaret Williams-Hamerik, 1912); J. P. E. Hartmann, Biographical Essays (1916); a history of Danish music to c. 1700 (1921).

Hammerschlag, János, music critic and composer; b. Prague, Dec. 10, 1885; d. Budapest, May 21, 1954. He was taken to Budapest as a child and studied music and literature; as a young man, became a newspaper critic; also taught music history and conducted choral concerts at the Budapest Cons. (1919-47); led the Madrigal Society; publ. a book on Bach (Budapest, 1926); numerous other writings and musical compositions (in Hungarian and German) are listed in J. S. Weissmann's article on Hammerschlag in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Hammerschmidt, Andreas, important composer of sacred music; b. Brüx, Bohemia, 1612; d. Zittau, Nov. 8, 1675. In 1626, his father took him to Freiberg, Saxony, and it was there that he received his education; studied music with Stephen Otto; in 1634, appointed organist at Freiberg, and in 1639, at Zittau, retaining this post until his death. A statue was erected to his memory there. His works for the Lutheran services are of great significance. He was one of the earliest composers to adopt the new Italian style of writing elaborate instrumental accompaniments to polyphonic vocal works. His works comprise Musikalische Andachten (subtitled Geistliche Concerten) in 5 parts (1638; 1641; 1642; 1646; 1652); Dialogi oder Gespräche zwischen Gott und einer gläubigen Seele, in 2 parts (Dresden, 1645; first part reprinted in vol. VIII of the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich'); Weltliche Oden oder Liebesgesänge, in 2 parts (1642-43); Musikalische Gespräche über die Sonntags- und Fest-

Evangelia (Dresden, 1655-56). Reprints by H. J. Moser in 'Alte Meister des deutschen Liedes' and A. Schering in 'Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen' (No. 194). Hugo Leichtentritt publ. a selection in vol. 40 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'; other reprints by Commer in 'Musica sacra' (Nos. 25/26); Oppenheimer, Sulzbach, and others.—Cf. E. Steinhard, Zum 300. Geburtstage Andreas Hammerschmidts (Prague, 1914); G. Schünemann, Beiträge zur Biographie Hammerschmidts, in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (XII); F. Blume, Das monodische Prinzip in der protestantischen Kirchenmusik (Leipzig, 1925).

Hammerstein, Oscar, celebrated impresario; b. Stettin, Germany, May 8, 1846; d. New York, Aug. 1, 1919. At the age of 16 he ran away from home; spent some time in England; then went to America, where he worked in a New York cigar factory. Possessing an inventive mind, he patented a machine for shaping the tobacco leaves by suction; later edited a tobacco trade journal. At the same time, he practiced the violin; learned to write music, and dabbled in playwriting; in 1868 he produced in New York a comedy in German; he also wrote the libretto and music of an operetta, The Kohinoor (N. Y., Oct. 24, 1893). His main activity, however, was in management. He built the Harlem Opera House (1888), Olympia Music Hall (1899), and the Republic Theater (1900), and presented brief seasons of plays and operas there. In 1906 he announced plans for the Manhattan Opera House in New York, his crowning achievement. The enterprise was originally planned as a theater for opera in English, but it opened with an Italian company in Bellini's Puritani (Dec. 3, 1906). Hammerstein entered into bold competition with the Metropolitan Opera, and engaged celebrated singers, among them Melba, Nordica, Tetrazzini, and Mary Garden; among spectacular events presented by him were the first American performances of 5 operas by Massenet, Charpentier's Louise, and Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande. The new venture held its own for 4 seasons, but in the end Hammerstein was compelled to yield; in April, 1910, he sold the Manhattan Opera House to the management of the Metropolitan for $1,200,000, and agreed not to produce grand opera in New York for 10 years. He also sold to the Metropolitan (for $100,000) his interests in the Philadelphia Opera House built by him in 1908. (The texts of these agreements were published in full in the 'Musical Courier' of March 29, 1911.) Defeated in his main ambition in America, Hammerstein transferred his activities to England. There he built the London Opera House, which opened with a lavish production of Quo Vadis by Nougès (Nov. 17, 1911). However, he failed to establish himself in London, and after a season there, returned to New York. In contravention of his agreement with the Metropolitan Opera, he announced a season at the newly organized America Opera House in New York, but the Metropolitan secured an injunction against him, and he was forced to give up his operatic venture. The building then opened as the Lexington Theater, and its productions were limited to mixed theatrical entertainment.—See Vincent Sheean, Oscar Hammerstein, I: The Life and Exploits of an Impresario (with a preface by Oscar Hammerstein II; N. Y., 1956).

Hammerstein, Oscar, II, American lyricist; grandson of the preceding; b. New York, July 12, 1895. He studied law at Columbia Univ., graduating in 1917; then became interested in the theater. He collaborated in the librettos for Friml's Rose Marie (1924) and Romberg's The Desert Song (1926); his greatest success as a lyricist came with the production of Jerome Kern's Show Boat (1926), including the celebrated song Ol' Man River. In 1943 he joined hands with the composer Richard Rodgers, and together they produced several brilliant musical comedies, with spectacular success: Oklahoma! (1943; Pulitzer Prize); Carousel (1945); Allegro (1947); South Pacific (1949; Pulitzer Prize, 1950) The King and I (1951); Me and Juliet (1953); Pipe Dream (1955), etc. His lyrics are characterized by a combination of appealing sentiment and sophisticated nostalgia, making them particularly well suited to the modern theater. — See Deems Taylor, Some Enchanted Evenings: The Story of Rodgers and Hammerstein (N. Y., 1953); also David Ewen, Richard Rodgers (N. Y., 1957).

Hammond, John Hays, Jr., American inventor; b. San Francisco, April 13, 1888; studied at Sheffield Scientific School, Yale Univ. (B.S., 1910); received his Sc.D. at George Washington Univ. Besides inventions relating to radio, he made various improvements in pipe organ mechanisms, and invented a new type of reflecting modulator for pianos, a dynamic multiplier for electric recording reproductions in phonographs, and the 'Pirafon,' a combination of radio, phonograph, and piano.

Hammond, Laurens, American inventor; b. Evanston, Ill., Jan. 11, 1895; studied at Cornell Univ. (1916). While employed as an engineer with a Detroit automobile concern, he experimented privately, developing a synchronous motor which he later used in his Hammond Organ, an instrument resembling a spinet piano in appearance, which reproduces through electrical impulses the sound of the pipe organ. He later developed the Novachord, an electrical device that can simulate the sound of nearly any instrument. It was first demonstrated in the Commerce Department auditorium, Washington, D. C., on Feb. 2, 1939. In 1940 he introduced Solovox, an attachment for piano which enables an amateur to project the melody in organ-like tones. In 1950 he brought out a 'chord organ' supplying basic harmonies by pressing a special button for each.

Hammond, Richard, composer; b. Kent, England, Aug. 26, 1896. He received his education in America; graduated from Yale; then took lessons with Nadia Boulanger; took active part in various modern music societies in New York City. In his own compositions he exploits exotic subjects; they include Six Chinese Fairy Tales, for orch. (1921); Voyage to the East, for voice and orch. (1926); West Indian Dances, for orch. (1930); 2 piano suites, Gitanesques et Scènes Espagnoles and Valses Exotiques et Valses Conventionnelles; an oboe sonata; vocal works.

Han or Hahn, Ulrich (Udalricus Gallus), German music printer; b. Ingolstadt; d. Rome, 1478. He is believed to be the first to print music with movable type, in his Missale secundum consuetudinem curie romane (Rome, 1476). In this work the double-process method was employed, i.e., 2 impressions were made; first, the lines of the staff were printed, following which the note forms (mostly square black heads with a stem at the right side) were superimposed over them.—Cf. O. Kinkeldey, Music and Music Printing in Incunabula, in 'Papers' of Bibliographic Society of America (1932).

Hanboys (or Hamboys), John, English music theorist of the 15th century. He was one of the first Englishmen on whom the degree of Mus. D. was conferred. He also held an ecclesiastic rank. His Latin treatise, 'Summa super musicam continuam et discretam,' which describes the musical notation of his time, is printed by Coussemaker in his 'Scriptores' (vol. 1, p. 416).—Cf. J. Bale, Illustrium Maioris Britanniae Scriptorum.

Hanchett, Henry Granger, American music pedagogue and inventor; b. Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1853; d. Siasconset, Mass., Aug. 19, 1918. He studied at the N. Y. Homoeopathic Medical College (M. D., 1884); at the same time he pursued pianistic studies with various teachers; from 1890, held teaching positions in music schools in N. Y. and elsewhere; also was organist at many churches (1884-1898). In 1874, he obtained a patent for the sustaining piano pedal, now in use on all grand pianofortes. He publ. Teaching as a Science (1882), The Art of the Musician (1905), and An Introduction to the Theory of Music (1918); also wrote several church services, anthems, etc.

Handel (written Händel in Germany, Haendel in France; also the forms Hendel, Hendeler, Händler, or Hendtler were used by various branches of the family), Georg Friedrich (at first spelled Hendel, in England; in his later period, he himself adopted the quasi-anglicized form of George Frideric Handel); b. Halle, Feb. 23, 1685; d. London, April 14, 1759. His father, a barber, afterwards surgeon and valet to the Prince of Saxe-Magdeburg, at the age of 63 married a second wife, Dorothea Taust, daughter of the pastor at Giebichenstein, near Halle. Handel was the second son of this marriage. At the age of 7, Handel was taken by his father on a visit to an elder step-brother, valet at the court of Saxe-Weissenfels; here the boy gained access to the chapel and its organ. The Duke of Saxe-Weissenfels noticed the boy's eagerness in learning music and persuaded his father to give him a musical education. Although the father intended Handel to pursue a legal career, he made arrangements for music lessons with the organist of the cathedral of Halle, Friedrich Wilhelm Zachau. Under Zachau's efficient guidance, Handel practiced the oboe, harpsichord, and organ; also studied counterpoint and fugue. He was only 12 years old when he became assistant organist there; he composed 6 sonatas for 2 oboes and bass, and wrote a motet for every Sunday. That year (1697) his father died; in pious fulfillment of the parent's wishes, Handel entered the Univ. of Halle (1702) as a law student, but left school after a year and went to Hamburg. There he was engaged as

'violino di ripieno' by Reinhard Keiser, the director of the German Opera. In Hamburg he met Mattheson, and in his company made a journey to Lübeck (1703), seeking the position of organist, as successor to the aging Buxtehude. It was a custom for an incoming organist to marry the old organist's daughter, and this condition neither Mattheson nor Handel was willing to fulfill. Accordingly, they returned to Hamburg. Mattheson was apparently jealous of Handel's growing success, and annoyed by Handel's haughty manner. A violent quarrel occurred between the two in the course of a production of Mattheson's opera Cleopatra. Mattheson, who not only sang on the stage, but also directed from the harpsichord at the conclusion of his acting, asked Handel to take his place while he was on the stage. Handel refused to be a mere substitute, and would not give up his seat at the harpsichord. The story goes that a duel ensued, and shots exchanged; it was asserted even that Handel had a narrow escape, when a bullet hit his waistcoat button and was deflected. However, the conflict could not have been so vehement, since Mattheson remained Handel's friend and became his biographer. In the meantime, Handel made great progress as composer. He produced 2 operas at Hamburg, Almira (Jan. 8, 1705) and Nero (Feb. 25, 1705); he was also commissioned by Keiser's successor, Saurbrey, to write Florindo und Daphne (1708), an opera filling 2 evenings. In 1706, with 200 ducats saved from music teaching, Handel went to Italy, visiting Florence, Venice, Rome, and Naples. In Florence he brought out his first Italian opera, Rodrigo (1708); his next Italian opera, Agrippina, was produced in Venice (Dec. 26, 1709) with extraordinary success. In Rome he produced 2 oratorios, La Resurrezione (April 8, 1708) and Il Trionfo del tempo e del disinganno (1708), with the famous violin virtuoso Corelli as leader; and in Naples the serenata Aci, Galatea e Polifemo (July 19, 1708), remarkable for its bass solo for a voice of 2 octaves and a fifth in compass. He made the acquaintance of Domenico Scarlatti, with whom he vied at the harpsichord and organ; and he also met Alessandro Scarlatti. In 1710 Handel returned to Germany, and became Kapellmeister to the Elector of Hanover, replacing Steffani, who had especially recommended him as successor. Late in that year Handel visited England; he produced his opera Rinaldo at the Haymarket Theatre on Feb. 24, 1711, with excellent success, even though the score was compounded of arias and other material composed at an earlier date. He then returned to Hanover, but in 1712 obtained a leave of absence, and went again to London. The operas that he produced there, Il Pastor fido (Nov. 22, 1712) and Teseo (Jan. 10, 1713), were much superior to Rinaldo, but failed to win comparable acclaim; but an ode for Queen Anne's birthday, performed at Windsor on Feb. 6, 1713, and a Te Deum and Jubilate in celebration of the Peace of Utrecht (1713) won him royal favor, with an annuity of £ 200. Encouraged, Handel tarried in London for a longer time than the leave of absence from Hanover entitled him to. On Queen Anne's death, however, the Elector of Hanover became King George I of England. Handel, with his old patron on the English throne, decided to remain in England permanently; in 1727 he became a British subject. The story that George I was angry at Handel for his neglect of duty in Hanover, and that he was consequently cold to Handel in the first year of his reign, is to be regarded as a legend. All evidence points to continued favors bestowed on Handel by the King, who added another £ 200 to Handel's annuity. In 1716 Handel accompanied him on a visit to Hanover. On July 17, 1717, an aquatic fête on the Thames River was arranged by royal order. The King's boat was followed by a barge in which an orchestra of some fifty players was arrayed. It was Handel who was given the task of writing the music, and the King liked it so well that he ordered the playing to be repeated twice. Whether Handel's music played then was completely or even partly identical with the score later published as Water Musick is a moot question. In 1717 Handel succeeded Pepusch as chapel master to the Duke of Chandos, for whom he wrote his first English oratorio, Esther, the secular cantata Acis and Galatea, and the so-called Chandos Anthems. Handel also served as music master to the daughters of the Prince of Wales, and wrote for Princess Anne his first collection of Suite de pièces (1720) for harpsichord (The Lessons), which includes the air with variations later known (even though the nickname is gratuitous) as The Harmonious Blacksmith. He was then appointed director of the new Royal Academy of Music, established chiefly for the production of Italian opera, and on April 27, 1720, successfully brought out his opera Radamisto. It was about then that the strife arose between Handel and the Italian composer Bononcini, who had been invited to England by a rival enterprise and enjoyed the support of a powerful group of the English aristocracy. The feud was immortalized by the poet John Byrom in verse ('Some say, compar'd to Bononcini, that Mynheer Handel's but a ninny,' etc.). Handel won a Pyrrhic victory when Bononcini was caught in an act of plagiarism and was compelled to leave England in disgrace; Handel's own operas failed to gain public honor even with the elimination of his chief rival. During this period Handel staged, with varying success, the following operas at the King's Theatre: Floridante (Dec. 9, 1721), Ottone (Jan. 12, 1723), Flavio (May 14, 1723), Giulio Cesare (Feb. 20, 1724), Tamerlano (Oct. 31, 1724), Rodelinda (Feb. 13, 1725), Scipione (March 12, 1726), Alessandro (May 5, 1726), Admeto (Jan. 31, 1727), Riccardo Primo (Nov. 11, 1727), Siroe (Feb. 17, 1728), and Tolomeo (April 30, 1728). In 1727 he wrote 4 grand anthems for the coronation of George II and Queen Caroline. In 1729, after a visit to Germany and Italy, Handel associated himself with Heidegger, the owner of the King's Theatre, and inaugurated the season with his opera Lotario (Dec. 2, 1729), followed by Partenope (Feb. 24, 1730), Porro (Feb. 2, 1731), Ezio (Jan. 15, 1732), Sosarme (Feb. 15, 1732), and Orlando (Jan. 27, 1733), when the partnership ended. In 1732, Handel gave a special and successful production of his revised oratorio Esther, followed by Acis and Galatea. In 1733 he brought out the oratorios Deborah (March 17) and Athalie (July 10) at Oxford, where he publicly played the organ, and excited as much admiration by his performance as by his works; he was offered the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.). The same year, Handel undertook the sole management of opera, but his manners and methods, a quarrel with his principal singer, Senesino, and a raising of prices, caused many of his chief subscribers to suspend their support and start a rival troupe, 'The Opera of the Nobility,' with Porpora and later Hasse as composer and conductor. They took possession of the King's Theatre, and Handel first went to Lincoln's Inn Fields, and then to Covent Garden, but in 1737 failed; the rival house also had to close. The operas of this period were a revision of Il Pastor Fido (preceded by a ballet, Terpsicore, 1734), Ariodante (Jan. 8, 1735), Alcina (April 16, 1735), Atalanta (May 12, 1736), Arminio (Jan. 12, 1737), Giustino (Feb. 16, 1737), and Berenice (May 18, 1737); the ode Alexander's Feast was also produced at Covent Garden (Feb. 19, 1736), and Il Trionfo del tempo e della verità (a revision of Il Trionfo del tempo e del disinganno of 1708) in 1737.

Handel's superhuman efforts to hold his own caused a failing of his strength; a stroke of paralysis incapacitated one of his hands, his brain was overtaxed, and, by the urgent advice of his friends, he went to Aix-la-Chapelle; he returned to London in November, 1737, with improved health. Heidegger had meantime formed a new company from the ruins of the two, and for this venture Handel wrote several operas: Faramondo (Jan. 3, 1738), Serse (April 15, 1738), Jupiter in Argos (May 1, 1739), Imeneo (Nov. 22, 1740), and Deidamia (Jan. 10, 1741). This last date marks a decisive turning point: he now abandoned stage composition for the work to which he owes enduring fame—oratorio. In close succession, Handel produced the oratorios Saul (Jan. 16, 1739) and Israel in Egypt (April 4, 1739). There followed the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day (Nov. 22, 1739), and L'allegro, il penseroso, ed il moderato, after Milton (Feb. 27, 1740). In 1741, at the invitation of the viceroy of Ireland, Handel visited Dublin, and produced his immortal Messiah on April 13, 1742. His cordial reception in Ireland greatly compensated for previous disasters. On his return to London, he again became the popular favorite. Messiah was followed by Samson (Feb. 18, 1743), the Dettingen Te Deum, Semele (Feb. 10, 1744), Joseph and his Brethren (March 2, 1744), and Belshazzar (March 27, 1745). Once more, he became entangled in monetary troubles; however, his creative strength was not impaired thereby. Soon his two works, Occasional Oratorio (Feb. 14, 1746) and Judas Maccabaeus (April 1, 1747) were brought out; then appeared Joshua (March 9, 1748), Susanna (Feb. 10, 1749), Solomon (March 17, 1749), Theodora (March 16, 1750), The Choice of Hercules (March 1, 1751), and Jephtha (Feb. 26, 1752). In 1750, for the third time, Handel had retrieved his fortunes, and revisited his native country. In 1751, during the composition of Jephtha, he was afflicted with failing eyesight, and underwent three unsuccessful operations for cataract, total blindness being the result. He continued his musical performances under the direction of his pupil John Christopher Smith, and accompanied his oratorios, on the organ, up to his death. On April 6, 1759, Messiah was given as the final performance of the season, Handel presiding at the organ; on the 14th, the Saturday between Good Friday and Easter, he died. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, where a magnificent monument by Roubiliac marks his grave.

Handel had a commanding presence, and his features were animated and dignified. His health was robust. Of fearless independence, he was of a choleric temperament, and prone to forcible outbreaks, but he was easily restored to good humor, and possessed a fund of ready wit. His liberality and charitableness were renowned. He remained unmarried, and was never known to have associated romantically with a woman.

The grandeur and sustained power of Handel's oratorio style, the expressive simplicity of his melody, and the breadth and clarity of the harmonic structure form a wonderful artistic whole. He is unquestionably one of the 'great masters.' His Messiah took England, and after her the rest of the musical world, by storm. At the first London performance, when the grand 'Hallelujah Chorus' rang out, the entire audience rose like one man, carried away by lofty enthusiasm—thus originated the custom of standing during this chorus. Mozart, Mendelssohn, Brahms, and others have provided additional accompaniments to several of his works. Handel was peculiarly fortunate in coming to England just as the ebb of English national stage music after the death of Purcell (from whom Handel learned much) was turning toward the flood of Italian opera. His own dramatic works, strongly influenced by Keiser in Hamburg and the two Scarlattis in Italy, are of the finest of the period, and the best of them bear comparison with his oratorios. Precisely contemporary with J. S. Bach, he was quite outside the latter's sphere of influence and no communication existed between them. Of purely instrumental compositions Handel wrote a considerable number: For harpsichord: 3 sets of Lessons; 6 fugues; many minuets; a march; the Forest Musick (Dublin, 1742); short pieces. For orch.: Water Musick (1717); the Fireworks Musick (1749); 3 sets of 6 organ concertos each (1738, 1740, 1761); Concertone in 9 parts, for 2 violins, cello, oboe, and string orch. (1741); concerto for trumpets and horns; concerto for horns and sidedrums (MS). Chamber music: several trio sonatas for various instruments, a sonata for flute with bass, etc. — Many original MSS of his works he bequeathed to his amanuensis, John Christopher Smith; the latter's son, Handel's pupil, presented them to George III. They are now in the British Museum as a part of the King's Music Library, and comprise 32 vols. of operas, 21 of oratorios, 7 of odes and serenatas, 12 of sacred music, 11 of cantatas and sketches, and 5 of instrumental music. In the Fitzwilliam Collection at Cambridge are 7 vols. containing rough drafts, notes and sketches for various works; also a complete Chandos anthem, O praise the Lord with one consent.

An edition of Handel's works in 36 vols., by Arnold, was publ. by command of George III (1787-97), but it is incomplete and inaccurate. A monumental edition in 100 vols. was issued (1856-94) by the German Handel Society, under the editorship of Fr. Chrysander. J. M. Coopersmith has collected and edited 10 vols. of unpublished material to complete this edition, brought out an authentic version of Messiah in vocal score, and also completed a thematic index of the whole. In 1955 a new complete ed. was begun by Max Schneider and Rudolf Steglich for the Georg-Friedrich-Händel Gesellschaft in Halle. A series of yearbooks, 6 of which had been publ. from 1928-1933, was continued by the Halle group with vol. 7 in 1955.

Handrock, Julius, German piano pedagogue and composer; b. Naumburg, June 22, 1830; d. Halle, Jan. 5, 1894. He publ. several collections of piano studies which have retained their popularity among teachers and students for many years (Moderne Schule der Geläufigkeit; 50 Melodisch-technische Klavier-Etuden, etc.).

Handschin, Jacques, eminent musicologist; b. Moscow, April 4, 1886; d. Basel, Nov. 25, 1955. He studied organ in Munich (with Max Reger and Straube) and in Paris (with Widor); in 1909 he was appointed organ teacher at the St. Petersburg Cons.; in 1920, together with Prof. Kovalenkov, he founded a laboratory for the study of acoustics; went to Basel in 1921; became a teacher at the Univ. of Basel in 1924, then professor in 1930; also served as organist at St. Peter's Church in Zürich. From 1936 he was vice-president of the International Society for Musical Research. He publ.: Mussorgsky (1924), Die Grundlagen des a cappella Stils (Zürich, 1929), Saint-Saëns (1930), Stravinsky (1933); Das Zeremonienwerk Kaiser Konstantins und die sangbare Dichtung (Basel, 1942); Der Toncharakter; eine Einführung in die Tonpsychologie (Zürich, 1948); Musikgeschichte im Überblick (Lucerne, 1948); also many valuable articles.—A memorial volume, Jacques Handschin, Aufsätze und Bibliographie, containing reprints of some 50 articles by Handschin, was publ. in Basel in 1957, ed. by Dr. Hans Oesch.

Handy, William Christopher, American Negro composer, 'father of the blues'; b. Florence, Ala., Nov. 16, 1873. His father and grandfather were ministers. In 1892 he was graduated from the Teachers' Agricultural and Mechanical College, Huntsville, Alabama; became a school teacher and also worked in iron mills; learned to play the cornet and was soloist at Chicago World's Fair (1893); became bandmaster of Mahara's Minstrels. From 1900-02 he taught at Agricultural and Mechanical College; then from 1903-21, conducted his own orchestra and toured the South. He received the award of the National Association for Negro Music, St. Louis (1937). On Jan. 1, 1954, he married his secretary, Irma Louise Logan. His famous song, Memphis Blues, was originally written as a campaign song for the Mayor of Memphis, E. H. Crump (1911); even more celebrated was his St. Louis Blues (1914), which opened an era in popular music, turning the theretofore prevalent spirit of ragtime gayety to ballad-like nostalgia, with the 'blue' lowered seventh as a distinctive melodic peculiarity. He followed this with 3 more 'blues': Yellow Dog, Beale Street, Joe Turner; the march Hail to the Spirit of Freedom (1915); Ole Miss, for piano (1916); the songs, Aunt Hagar's Children (1920); Loveless Love (1921); Aframerican Hymn; etc. He publ. the anthologies Negro Spirituals and Songs: a Treasury of the Blues (N. Y., 1926; 2nd ed., 1949); Book of Negro Spirituals (N. Y., 1938); Negro Music and Musicians (N. Y., 1944); also Negro Authors and Composers of the U. S. (N. Y., 1936); wrote an autobiography, Father of the Blues (N. Y., 1941).

Hanff, Johann Nikolaus, German organist and composer; b. Wechmar, near Mühlhausen, 1630; d. Schleswig, 1711. He was organist in Eupin; later in Hamburg (1706-11). A few months before his death, he was appointed organist at the cathedral of Schleswig. He was a master of the chorale-prelude, and his works considerably influenced J. S. Bach's style in this form. Only six of his chorale-preludes are extant (publ. in 1907 by K. Straube in his 45 Choralvorspiele alter Meister; reprinted by E. White in Masterpieces of Organ Music, N. Y., 1949).—Cf. Hanfstängel, Marie, dramatic soprano; b. Breslau, April 30, 1846; d. Munich, Sept. 5, 1917. She studied at Baden-Baden with Mme. Viardot-Garcia; made her début as Agathe in Der Freischütz at the Théâtre Lyrique, Paris (Feb. 27, 1867). On the declaration of the Franco-Prussian war, she returned to Germany, and was engaged at the Stuttgart Opera. She sang at the Metropolitan Opera House in N. Y. (1884-86); then retired and lived mostly in Munich. She publ. Meine Lehrweise der Gesangkunst (1902).

Hanisch, Joseph, German organist and composer; b. Regensburg, March 24, 1812; d. there, Oct. 9, 1892. He studied with his father, and with Proske, with whom he went to Italy as an assistant (1834). In 1839 he became organist at the Regensburg cathedral. He wrote Missa auxilium Christianorum; Quatuor hymni pro festo corporis Christi; contributed organ accompaniments to the Graduale and Vesperale Romanum (with Haberl); also composed pieces for organ solo. He was a master of improvisation, and was regarded as one of the greatest in this field in his time.

Hanke, Karl, German composer; b. Rossvalde, Silesia, c. 1750; d. Flensburg, June 10, 1803. As a young man, he was sent to Vienna to pursue his music studies; there he briefly associated himself with Gluck, and profited by the master's advice. He then held the post of musical director in Brno (1778-81), Warsaw (1781-83), and Hamburg (1784-86). In 1791 he settled in Flensburg, where he remained until the end of his life. He composed several pieces for the stage; his Singspiel Der Wunsch mancher Mädchen (1781), dedicated to Gluck, was performed on various occasions with some success; 2 albums of his songs were publ. in 1796-97. — Cf. Alfred Einstein, Ein Schüler Glucks, in 'Acta Musicologica' (1938).

Hannikainen, Tauno, Finnish cellist and conductor; b. Jyväskylä, Feb. 26, 1896. He studied at the Helsinki Cons. (1914-17); then with Casals in Paris (1921); also took courses in Berlin, Vienna, and Milan. He was first cellist in the Helsinki Orch. (1916-19); was a member of the Hannikainen Trio with his brothers Arvo (violin) and Ilmari (piano). He was appointed conductor of the Symph. Orch. of Turku in 1927; came to the U. S. in 1939; made his début with the Boston Symph. Orch., Feb. 2, 1940. He was conductor of the Duluth Orch. (1942-46); assistant conductor of the Chicago Orch. (1947-50); then returned to Finland, and was appointed conductor of the Helsinki Symph. Orch. (1951). He married the Finnish soprano Anne Niskanen on June 21, 1933.

Hanon (ah-nohn'), Charles-Louis, French pianist and pedagogue; b. Rem-sur-l'Aire, 1820; d. Boulogne-sur-Mer, March 19, 1900. He wrote valuable studies for piano, Méthode élémentaire de piano, Extraits de chefs-d'œuvre des grands maîtres, and especially Le Pianiste-Virtuose (60 progressive studies), which became a standard piano method all over the world. Among musical curiosities must be counted his Système nouveau pour apprendre à accompagner tout plainchant... sans savoir la musique.

Hansen, (Emil) Robert, Danish cellist; b. Copenhagen, Feb. 25, 1860; d. Aarhus, July 18, 1926. He received his first instruction from his father, then studied with F. Neruda at the Copenhagen Cons., and with Fr. Grützmacher in Dresden; from 1877-89, member of the court orch. in Copenhagen. After a stay in London, he settled in 1891 in Leipzig, where he joined the Gewandhaus orch. and became prof. at the Cons. From 1918 he was conductor of the Symph. Orch. of Aarhus, Denmark. Hansen composed an opera, Frauenlist (Sondershausen, 1911), and an operetta, Die wilde Komtesse (Eisenach, 1913); a symphony; a symph. suite for strings and 2 horns; a piano concerto; a cello concerto; a piano quintet; a string quartet.

Hansen, Wilhelm, Danish music publishing firm founded in Copenhagen by Jens Wilhelm Hansen (1821-1904). His sons, Jonas W. Hansen (1850-1919) and Alfred W. Hansen (1854-1922), also played an active part in the business, which was eventually entrusted to the sons of Alfred, Asger (b. 1889) and Svend (b. 1890). A large proportion of published Scandinavian (Danish, Swedish, Norwegian) music is brought out by this firm; it has also bought other smaller firms, and publ. some of the works of Arnold Schoenberg. Branches have been established in Oslo, Stockholm, and Leipzig.

Hanslick, Eduard, influential music critic; b. Prague, Sept. 11, 1825; d. Baden, near Vienna, Aug. 6, 1904. He studied law at Prague and Vienna; took degree of Dr. jur. in 1849, qualifying himself for an official position. But he had already studied music under Tomaschek at Prague; from 1848-49 was music critic for the 'Wiener Zeitung,' and soon adopted a literary career. His first work, Vom Musikalisch-Schönen: ein Beitrag zur Revision der Aesthetik der Tonkunst (Leipzig, 1854; in French, 1877; Spanish, 1879; Italian, 1883; English, 1891; Russian, 1895), brought him world-wide fame. Its leading idea is that the beauty of a musical composition lies wholly and specifically in the music itself; i.e., it is immanent in the relations of the tones, without any reference whatever to extraneous (non-musical) ideas, and can express no others. Such being his point of view through life, it follows logically that he could not entertain sympathy for Wagner's art; his violent opposition to the music-drama was a matter of profound conviction, not personal spite. On the other hand, he was one of the very first and most influential champions of Brahms. From 1855-64, Hanslick was music editor of the 'Presse'; thereafter of the 'Neue freie Presse'; he became lecturer on music history and aesthetics at Vienna Univ., prof. extraordinary in 1861, and, in 1870, full professor, retiring in 1895 (succeeded by Guido Adler). At the Paris Expositions of 1867 and 1878, and the Vienna Exposition of 1873, Hanslick was a juror in the department of music. What gives his writings permanent value is the sound musicianship underlying their brilliant, masterly style. Yet, in music history, he is chiefly known as a captious and intemperate reviler of genius; Wagner caricatured him in the part of Beckmesser (originally, the name was to be Hans Lick). —Works: Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien (1869); Aus dem Concertsaal (1870); a series begun with Die moderne Oper (1875) and followed by 8 more vols., giving a fairly comprehensive view of the development of opera from Gluck to 1900: II. Musikalische Stationen (1880); III. Aus dem Opernleben der Gegenwart (1884); IV. Musikalisches Skizzenbuch (1888); V. Musikalisches und Litterarisches (1889); VI. Aus dem Tagebuch eines Musikers (1892); VII. Fünf Jahre Musik (1896); VIII. Am Ende des Jahrhunderts (1899); IX. Aus neuer und neuester Zeit (1900); Suite, Aufsätze über Musik und Musiker (1885), Konzerte, Komponisten und Virtuosen der letzten fünfzehn Jahre (1886); Aus meinem Leben (2 vols., 1894). All these books passed through several editions. He also edited Th. Billroth's posthumous essay, Wer ist musikalisch? (1895; 4th ed., 1912); and wrote the commentary for the illustrated Galerie deutscher Tondichter (1873) and Galerie französischer und italienischer Tondichter (1874). A collection of Hanslick's articles in the 'Neue freie Presse' was published in English transl. under the title, Vienna's Golden Years of Music, 1850-1900 (N. Y., 1950). —Cf. R. Schafke, Eduard Hanslick und die Musikästhetik (1922); S. Deas, In Defense of Hanslick (London, 1940).

Hanson, Howard, distinguished American composer; b. Wahoo, Nebraska, Oct. 28, 1896. His parents emigrated from Sweden to America in their youth; his Scandinavian ancestry played an important part in Hanson's spiritual outlook. He studied at the Luther College in Wahoo; then went to New York, where he studied with Percy Goetschius at the Institute of Musical Art; also at Northwestern Univ. in Evanston, Ill., with P. C. Lutkin and Arne Oldberg; after graduation in 1916, he became instructor at the College of the Pacific in San José, Calif.; was its dean in 1919-21. In 1921, he won the American Prix de Rome; spent 3 years at the American Academy in Rome and composed several important works there. In 1924, he was appointed by George Eastman as director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.; in 1925, began there a series of orchestral concerts featuring works by American composers. During the more than 3 decades of his leadership of the Eastman School of Music and his conductorship of the American Music Festivals, Hanson has contributed greatly to the cause of American musical education, as well as to that of American music. In 1932, he conducted programs of American music in Europe; also was guest conductor with major American orchestras in programs of American music, including his own works. In 1935, he was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters; in 1938, a fellow of the Royal Academy of Music in Sweden. He has furthermore been, at various times, president of the National Association of Schools of Music; president of the Music Teachers' National Association; president of the National Music Council; also active in various capacities for numerous music organizations. He holds honorary D. Mus. degrees from Syracuse Univ., Univ. of Nebraska, Northwestern Univ.; awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his 4th Symph. (1944); Ditson Award (1945); George Foster Peabody Award (1946), etc. His music is permeated with outspoken Romanticism; he pointedly entitled one of his symphonies Romantic Symphony; his profound kinship for Scandinavia is expressed in his Nordic Symphony and other works. An influence of Sibelius is notable in Hanson's broad lyrical passages, and in the sombre coloring of his instrumentation. In his strong and often asymmetrical rhythms, Hanson follows the advanced modern schools of composition; in his harmonies, he reaches the border of polytonality; but he does not employ extreme effects of musical modernism. As a teacher, he has influenced a generation of American composers.—Works: For the stage: California Forest Play of 1920, for ballet and orch. (1920); Merry Mount, opera in 3 acts (1933; commissioned by the Metropolitan Opera; produced there, Feb. 10, 1934). For orch.: Symph. Prelude (1916); Symph. Legend (San Francisco, 1917); Symph. Rhapsody (Los Angeles, 1919); Before the Dawn, symph. poem (Los Angeles, 1920); Exaltation, a symph. poem for orch. with piano obbligato (San Francisco, 1920); Concerto for organ, strings, harp, and orch. (1921); Symph. No. 1 (Nordic Symph.); Rome, composer conducting, May 30, 1923; 1st American performance, Rochester, N. Y., March 19, 1924); North and West, symph. poem with choral obbligato (N. Y., 1923); Lux Aeterna, symph. poem with viola obbligato (Rome, 1923); Pan and the Priest, symph. poem with piano obbligato (London, 1926); Concerto for organ and orch. (Rochester, 1926); Symph. No. 2 (Romantic Symph.); commissioned for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symph. Orch., Koussevitzky conducting, Nov. 28, 1930; very successful); Symph. No. 3 (NBC Symph.), March 26, 1938, composer conducting); Symph. No. 4, subtitled The Requiem (Boston Symph., Dec. 3, 1943, composer conducting; won a Pulitzer Award, 1944); Serenade, for flute, strings, harp, and orch. (1945); piano concerto (Boston, Dec. 31, 1948); Symph. No. 5 (Sinfonia Sacra); Philadelphia, Feb. 18, 1955); Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky (Boston, 1956). Choral works: The Lament of Beowulf (Ann Arbor Festival, 1926); Heroic Elegy, for chorus and orch., without words (for the Beethoven centenary, 1927); 3 Songs from 'Drum Taps' (Whitman), for voices and orch. (1935); Hymn for the Pioneers, for men's voices (1938); The Cherubic Hymn (1949); How Excellent Thy Name (1952); The Song of Democracy, for soli, chorus, and orch. (Philadelphia, April 9, 1957). Chamber music: piano quintet (1916); Concerto da camera, for piano and string quartet (1917); string quartet (1923; commissioned for the Coolidge Festival, Washington, D. C.); Fantasia on a Theme of Youth, for piano and strings (Northwestern Univ., Feb. 18, 1951). For piano: Prelude and Double Fugue, for 2 pianos (1915); 4 Poems (1917-18); Sonata (1918); 3 Miniatures (1918-19); Scandinavian Suite (1918-19); 3 Etudes (1920); 2 Yuletide Pieces (1920); etc.; songs; also an arrangement for mixed chorus and orch. of Kyrie, Gloria and Credo from Palestrina's Missa Papae Marcelli (1936). — Cf. E. Royce, Howard Hanson, in Cowell's symposium, American Composers on American Music (Stanford Univ., 1933); B. C. Tutthill, Howard Hanson, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1936); M. Alter, Howard Hanson, in 'Modern Music' (Jan.-Feb., 1941).

Hanssens, Charles-Louis, Belgian cellist, conductor, and composer; b. Ghent, July 12, 1802; d. Brussels, April 8, 1871. As a child of 10, he played in the orch. of the National Theater, Amsterdam, and at 20 was appointed assistant conductor. In 1824, he became cellist and later assistant conductor of the orchestra in the Brussels Theater. In 1827, he was appointed professor of harmony at the Brussels Cons.; the political events of 1830 caused his retreat to Holland. He became solo cellist at the Théâtre Ventadour, Paris (1834), then composer and also conductor. He subsequently directed French opera at The Hague, again in Paris, then at Ghent. From 1848-69, he was conductor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels. He wrote 8 operas, ballets, symphonies, overtures, orchestral fantasies; violin concerto, cello concerto, clarinet concerto, several piano concertos; string quartets; Symphonie concertante for clarinet and violin; Masses, cantatas, a cappella choruses. —Cf. L. de Burbure, Notice sur Charles-Louis Hanssens (Antwerp, 1872) and L. Bäwolf, Charles-Louis Hanssens (Brussels, 1895).

Harasiewicz (häh-räh-sye'-vich), Adam, Polish pianist; b. Chodzież, Western Poland, July 1, 1932. He studied with Kazimierz Mirski until 1950; then at the State School of Music in Cracow. He entered the Chopin Contest in 1949, but failed to win a prize. In March, 1955, he competed again, at the 5th International Chopin Contest in Warsaw, in which pianists of 27 countries took part, and won the first prize of 30,000 zlotys.

Haraszti, Emile, eminent musicologist; b. Nagyvarad, Hungary (now Oradea Mare, Rumania), Nov. 1, 1885. He studied composition with E. Farkas and musicology in Vienna, Munich, Leipzig, Berlin, and Paris. He was awarded a Ph.D. in 1907 and then became music critic of the 'Budapesti Hírlap' (1908-30). He taught at the National Cons. in Budapest (1914); in 1917, appointed lecturer at the Univ. of Budapest; director of the National Cons. (1920-32). From 1940-45 was lecturer at the Budapest Univ.; in 1945, settled in Paris. His principal writings are: Wagner et la Hongrie (Budapest, 1916); La Musique hongroise (Paris, 1933); Béla Bartók, His Life and Works (Paris-Oxford, 1938, Lyre-Bird Press); Un centenaire romantique: Berlioz et la Marche Hongroise d'après des documents inédits (Paris, 1946); many valuable studies in various music magazines. For a complete list of his writings, see his autobiographical notice in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

d'Harcourt (dahr-koor'), Eugène, French conductor and composer; b. Paris, May 2, 1859; d. Locarno, Switzerland, March 4, 1918. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Savard, Durand, and Massenet (1882-86), then in Berlin with A. Schulze and W. Bargiel (until 1890). In 1892 he built the 'Salle d'Harcourt' in Paris, and inaugurated the 'Concerts éclectiques populaires,' which, however, ended after the 3rd season; was commissioned by the French Government to study musical conditions in Italy, Germany, Austria, and Scandinavia (1906-09), and publ. reports on his findings. He wrote an opera, Le Tasse (Monte Carlo, 1903), 3 symphonies, chamber music, etc.

d'Harcourt, Marguerite, French composer, folksong collector and authority on Indian music; b. Paris, Feb. 24, 1884. She studied with Vincent d'Indy and Maurice Emmanuel; wrote 2 symphonies (2nd, Les Saisons, composed in 1952); Concerto Grosso for strings (1956); Rapsodie péruvienne, for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon (1945); other chamber music; many songs. With her husband, Raoul d'Harcourt (b. Oran, Algeria, March 30, 1879), prominent ethnologist, she publ. an important treatise, Musique des Incas et ses survivances (Paris, 1925; 2 vols.), based on materials gathered during journeys in Peru (1912-14 and 1919); also Chansons populaires françaises du Canada (240 songs, Paris, 1956); contributed (with her husband) the section on Indian music to Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la Musique' (vol. V).

d'Hardelot (dahr-d'loh'), Guy (Mrs. W. I. Rhodes, née Helen Guy), French song composer; b. 1858 at the Chateau d'Hardelot, Boulogne-sur-Mer; d. London, Jan. 7, 1936. She studied at the Paris Cons.; traveled with Emma Calvé in the U. S. in 1896; then married, and settled in London. She wrote many melodious songs: Sans toi, Because (very popular), Tristesse, etc., which were sung by Melba and Calvé.

Harker, F. Flaxington, organist and composer; b. Aberdeen, Scotland, Sept. 4, 1876; d. Richmond, Va., Oct. 23, 1936. While acting as assistant organist at the York Minster, he studied with T. Tertius Noble, who was organist there. In 1901 he came to the United States and served as organist in churches in Biltmore, N. C. and Richmond, Va. He wrote 2 cantatas, The Star of Bethlehem and The Cross; publ. Harker's Organ Collection (2 vols.; 27 works by modern masters of the organ).

Harline, Leigh, American composer; b. Salt Lake City, March 26, 1907. He studied music at the Univ. of Utah; went to Los Angeles in 1928, where he became arranger for Walt Disney (1931-42); then was engaged as composer of film music by various studios in Hollywood.

Harling, William Franke, American composer; b. London, Jan. 18, 1887. He was brought to the United States in his infancy; studied in Boston, London, and Brussels (with Théophile Ysaÿe). He was organist at the Church of the Resurrection, Brussels (1907-08) and at the U. S. Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., the following year; later settled in Hollywood. His works include a one-act opera, A Light from St. Agnes (Chicago, Dec. 26, 1925); a "native opera with jazz," Deep River (N. Y., Oct. 4, 1926); a symph. poem with narrator, Monte Cassino (1944); 3 Elegiac Poems for cello and orch. (1946); more than 100 songs. He wrote the official march West Point Forever.—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and Its Composers (Philadelphia, 1927; pp. 250-56).

Harman, Carter, American composer and music critic; b. Brooklyn, June 14, 1918. He studied with Sessions at Princeton Univ. (1936-40); was a pilot in the U. S. Army Air Corps in the Burma-Indo-China theater (1942-45); then returned for further study at Columbia Univ. (1945-48). From 1947-52, he was a music critic of the 'N. Y. Times'; in 1952 became music editor of 'Time' magazine. He is the author of an opera, Charms for the Savage. He publ. A Popular History of Music from Gregorian Chant to Jazz (N. Y., 1956).

Harmat, Artur, Hungarian composer; b. Nyitra Bajna (now Bojna, Czechoslovakia), June 27, 1885. He studied at the Budapest Academy of Music, and later took courses in Prague and Berlin. From 1920 till 1946 he was inspector of music in the Budapest schools; from 1924 till 1950 he was professor of religious music at the Budapest Academy. He has written several valuable manuals on counterpoint and has composed a great quantity of church music, based on the lines of Palestrina's polyphony.

Harmati, Sandor, violinist, conductor, and composer; b. Budapest, July 9, 1892; d. Flemington, N. J., April 4, 1936. He graduated from the Budapest Academy of Music (1909); was concertmaster of the State Orch. (1910-12) and People's Orch. (1912-14) there; came to the United States in 1914 and became a member of the Letz Quartet (1917-21), then of the Lenox Quartet (1922-25); conductor of the Omaha Symph. Orch. (1925-30) and of the Musicians' Symph. (1932-34); head of the music department of Bard College (1934-36). He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize (1923) for a symphonic poem, the Philadelphia Chamber Music Award (1925) for a string quartet, and the Juilliard Award for his Prelude to a Melodrama. He also composed incidental music to Jeweled Tree (1926); violin works; piano pieces; songs.

Harraden, Samuel, English music scholar; b. Cambridge, 1821; d. Hampstead, July 17, 1897. He studied with Walmisley; in 1841, became organist of St. Luke's, Manchester. In 1846, he went to India and settled in Calcutta, where he became organist at the Old Mission Church. He greatly influenced the musical life of Calcutta; founded the first glee club there; became an enthusiastic student of Hindu music; was on the staff of the Hindu College of Music. In appreciation of his contribution to native art, he was made Mus. D. by the Bengal Royal Academy of Music.

Harrell, Mack, American baritone; b. Celeste, Texas, Oct. 8, 1909; studied at Oklahoma City Univ. (1927-29); at the Settlement Music School in Philadelphia (1930-33), and at the Juilliard School of Music (1933-35); sang in recitals and with orchestras in the U. S. (1935-36); undertook European tours (1937, 1939, 1949, 1951, etc.); made his operatic debut with the Metropolitan Opera Co., N. Y., in 1939; in 1945, became a member of the vocal faculty of the Juilliard School of Music; publ. The Sacred Hour of Song (N. Y., 1938).

Harris, Augustus, celebrated English impresario; b. Paris, 1852; d. Folkestone, England, June 22, 1896. An actor by profession, he was engaged at Manchester (1873) as stage manager. In 1879 he leased Drury Lane Theatre, where he won brilliant success with spectacular plays and pantomimes; in 1887, he took up Italian opera and secured control successively of Her Majesty's Theatre, Covent Garden, the Olympia, and various provincial stages. He also cultivated French, German, and English opera with almost uninterrupted success. He introduced to the English public many of the most famous singers of the day (Melba, Nordica, Hauk, Maurel, the de Reszkes). He was knighted in 1891.

Harris, Charles Kassell, American song composer; b. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., May 1, 1865; d. New York, Dec. 22, 1930. He was a director (1914-24) and then secretary (1924-30) of A.S.C.A.P.; established his own publishing firm in Milwaukee and New York. He wrote many popular songs, the most famous of which was After the Ball (1892); also the plays A Limb of the Tree, The Luckiest Man in the World, The Barker, The Heart of a Man. He publ. an autobiography, After the Ball, 40 Years of Melody (N. Y., 1926).

Harris, Roy (properly Leroy), outstanding American composer; b. Lincoln County, Okla., Feb. 12, 1898. His parents (of Irish and Scotch descent) were early settlers in Oklahoma; in 1903, the family moved to California. Roy Harris attended high school in Covina; entered the Univ. of California in 1919 as a special student in philosophy and economics; simultaneously studied music with the organist Charles Demarest and with Fannie Charles Dillon; his first serious study was with Henry Schoenfeld and Arthur Farwell; also took lessons in orchestration with Modest Altschuler and Arthur Bliss. His first performed work was a suite of pieces for string quartet, Impressions of a Rainy Day (1926). In 1926 he went to

New York, and received a private stipend which enabled him to go to Paris, where he studied with Nadia Boulanger. He received a Guggenheim Fellowship for 1927 and 1928; in 1929 he returned to the U. S. and lived in California; awarded the Creative Fellowship of the Pasadena Music and Arts Association in 1930 and 1931; returning again to the east, he held numerous teaching positions; head of the composition department of Westminster Choir School, Princeton, N. J. (1934-38); teacher at the Juilliard Summer School (1939); composer-in-residence at Cornell Univ. (1941-43), Colorado College, Colorado Springs (1943-48), Utah State Agricultural College at Logan (1948-49), Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn. (1949-51); also at Sewanee, Tenn., where he established the Cumberland Summer Festivals (1951); Pennsylvania College for Women, Pittsburgh (1951-56), and the Univ. of Southern Illinois (1956-57); from 1957, at Indiana Univ., Bloomington. He received honorary Mus. Doc., Rutgers Univ., also from Univ. of Rochester; Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Medal "For Eminent Services to Chamber Music" (1942). He was the organizer of the Pittsburgh International Contemporary Music Festival in 1952; has also conducted his works with major symphony orchestras in the U. S. His wife, Johana Harris (née Beula Duffey, b. Jan. 1, 1913 at Ottawa, Canada), is an accomplished pianist. Harris started on his composing career rather late in life; he has written prolifically in all genres except opera. He has developed a strikingly individual type of composing technique, broadly diatonic in essence, often derived from modal progressions; his harmony is polytonal; he has elaborated a special theory of kinship of major and minor chords. While not striving for orchestral opulence, Harris is not averse to using special effects (vibraphone, amplified piano, etc.).—Works: ballets: Western Landscape (1940); From This Earth (Colorado Springs, Aug. 7, 1941); What So Proudly We Hail (Colorado Springs, Aug. 7, 1942); for orch.: Andante (from an unfinished symph., Our Heritage; Rochester, N. Y., April 23, 1926); American Portraits, in 4 movements: Initiative, Expectation, Speed, Collective Force (1929); Toccata (1931); Symph. No. 1 (Boston Symph. Orch., Koussevitzky conducting, Jan. 26, 1934); When Johnny Comes Marching Home, symph. overture (Minneapolis, Jan. 13, 1935); Prelude and Fugue for string orch. (Philadelphia, Feb. 28, 1936); Farewell to Pioneers, symph. elegy (Philadelphia, March 27, 1936);

Symph. No. 2 (Boston, Feb. 28, 1936); Time Suite, in 6 movements: Broadway, Religion, Youth, Communication and Transportation, Philosophy, Labor (Columbia radio network, Aug. 8, 1937); Symph. No. 3 (Boston Symph. Orch., Koussevitzky conducting, Feb. 24, 1939; his most successful work; many performances); Symph. No. 4 (Folksong Symph., for chorus and orch.; Cleveland, Dec. 26, 1940); Evening Piece (N. Y., March 9, 1941); Ode to Truth (San Francisco Symph. Orch., March 9, 1941); Cimarron, symph. overture for band (Tri-State Festival, Enid, Okla., April 18, 1941, composer conducting); Acceleration (Washington, Nov. 2, 1941); Symph. No. 5 (Boston, Feb. 26, 1943); Take the Sun and Keep the Stars, for band (NBC broadcast from Denver, Jan. 30, 1944, composer conducting; originally scored for chorus and orch. under the title Sammy's Fighting Sons); Symph. No. 6 (Gettysburg Address Symph.; Boston, April 14, 1944); Ode to Friendship (Madison Square Garden, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1944); Concerto for accordion and orch. (N. Y., June 2, 1946); Concerto for 2 pianos (Denver, Jan. 21, 1947); Quest (Indianapolis, composer conducting, Jan. 29, 1948); Elegy and Pagan for viola and orch. (Houston, Dec. 13, 1948); Kentucky Spring (Louisville, April 5, 1949); Fruit of Gold (Univ. of California Band, composer conducting; May 10, 1949); Dark Devotion, for band (Louisville, April 12, 1950); Cumberland Concerto (Cincinnati, Oct. 19, 1951); Symph. No. 7 (Chicago Symph. Orch., Nov. 20, 1952); piano concerto (Louisville, Dec. 9, 1953); Ode to Consonance; 1957). Chamber music: Impressions of a Rainy Day, for string quartet (Los Angeles, March 15, 1926); concerto for clarinet, piano, and string quartet (Paris, May 8, 1927); string quartet (N. Y., April 14, 1930); Fantasy for piano, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn (Pasadena, April 10, 1932); Chorale, for strings (Los Angeles, Feb. 22, 1933; a movement from the string sextet composed in 1932); Three Variations on a Theme (2nd string quartet; Chicago, Oct. 22, 1933); Four Minutes and Twenty Seconds, for flute and string quartet (N. Harris, Victor, American song composer; b. New York, April 27, 1869; d. there, Feb. 15, 1943. He studied piano with Charles Blum, voice with William Courtney, theory with Fred K. Schilling, and conducting with Anton Seidl. He then served as organist at various churches in New York; was coach at the Metropolitan Opera, N. Y. (1892-95); conductor of St. Cecilia Club, N. Y., 1902-1936. He publ. about 150 songs, many of which enjoyed a considerable vogue; also a number of choruses.

Harrison, Beatrice, English cellist; b. Roorke, India, Dec. 9, 1892. She was brought to England in her infancy; studied with W. E. Whitehouse at the Royal College of Music, where at the age of 10 she won the first prize (gold medal) in competition with 4,000 aspirants (mostly adults). She made a most successful appearance with the Queen's Hall Orch. (May 29, 1907); then went to Berlin, where she studied with Hugo Becker, graduating as the winner of the coveted Mendelssohn Prize (for the first time awarded to a cellist). She made many European tours, mostly in company with her sister May, the violinist; she toured the United States in 1913 and 1932.

Harrison, Guy Fraser, conductor; b. Guildford, Surrey, England, Nov. 6, 1894. He studied at Oxford and at the Royal College of Music, where he won an organ scholarship; 1914-20, organist of Episcopal Cathedral, Manila, P. I.; then of St. Paul's Cathedral, Rochester, N. Y. (1920-24); 1924-29, conductor of Eastman Theater Orch., Rochester; 1929-51, of the Civic Orch.; 1930-51 associate conductor of Rochester Philh.; guest conductor with the Minneapolis Symph. Orch., Philadelphia Orch. (1936), etc. In 1951, he was appointed conductor of the Oklahoma City Symph. Orch.—Cf. Hope Stoddard, Symphony Conductors of the U.S.A. (N. Y., 1957).

Harrison, Julius Allen Greenway, English conductor and composer; b. Stourport, Worcestershire, March 26, 1885. He studied with Granville Bantock; was conductor of the Beecham Opera Co. and of the Scottish Symph. Orch.; in 1925, succeeded Goossens as leader of the Handel Society, London; since 1930, conductor of the Hastings Corp., Hastings. In his music, he makes skillful use of English folk material.—Works: opera, The Canterbury Pilgrims; Down Among the Dead Men (variations), for orch.; Rapunzel and Worcestershire Pieces, for orch. (1919, very successful); the cantatas Cleopatra and Rosalys; Requiem of Archangels; Mass in C (1947); 2 string quartets; a quintet for harp and strings; organ pieces; sacred music and numerous songs.

Harrison, Lou, American composer; b. Portland, Ore., May 14, 1917. He studied with Cowell and Schoenberg. From the first he adopted a completely free modern style of composition, particularly strong in rhythmic variety, polytonal harmonies, and atonal melodic lines. However, he has also written several works in a relatively conservative style. He lived in California from 1926-43; taught at Mills College (1937-40) and at the Univ. of California, Los Angeles (1942); in 1943 went to N. Y.; wrote music criticism for the 'N. Y. Herald Tribune' (1945-48); taught at Black Mt. College, N. C. (1951-52); in 1952 received a Guggenheim Foundation Award; also active as conductor and instrument maker; introduced two new principles for clavichord construction; built a Phrygian aulos; developed a process for direct composition for phonograph; invented theories of Interval Controls (1938) and Rhythm Controls (1942); also wrote plays and verse; constructed mobiles; engaged in various trades, including, for a time, that of a florist.—Works: opera Rapunzel; incidental music to Peter Pan, Winter's Tale, The Only Jealousy of Emer, The Beautiful People, etc.; ballets, Perilous Chapel, Solstice, Johnny Appleseed, Almanac of the Seasons, Praises for Hummingbirds and Hawks; many dances for orch.; a symph. in G; suite for violin, piano, and small orch. (N. Y., Oct. 28, 1952); 14 sinfonias for percussion orch.; songs for 8 baritones with orch.; piano pieces; etc.

Harrison, May, English violinist; b. Roorke, India, March, 1891. She studied at the Royal College of Music with E. Arbos and A. Rivarde; like her sister Beatrice, she won at the age of 10 the gold medal of the Associate Board of the Royal College of Music and Royal Academy of Music over 3,000 competitors; she then studied for some time under L. Auer in St. Petersburg; made her début in 1904 in London with marked success, and toured Europe, mostly in company with her sister.

Harriss, Charles Albert Edwin, composer and organist; b. London, Dec. 15, 1862; d. Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 1, 1929. At 8 he was chorister at St. Mark's, Wrexham, where his father was organist; assistant organist at St. Giles', Reading (1880); from 1883 he lived with his father in Montreal, Canada; organist at Christ Church Cathedral, then at the Church of St. James the Apostle, famous for its outstanding organ music. Harriss founded a glee and madrigal society.—Works: opera Torquil (Montreal, 1896); cantata Daniel before the King (1890); anthems; piano and organ music; songs.

Harsányi (hăhr'-shăh-nē), Tibor, composer; b. Magyarkanizsa, Hungary, June 27, 1898; d. Paris, Sept. 19, 1954. He studied at the Budapest Academy of Music, with Kodály; in 1923 he settled in Paris, where he devoted himself to composition. The melodic material of his music stems from Hungarian folk melos; his harmonic idiom is largely polytonal; the rhythms are sharp, often with jazz-like syncopation; the form remains classical.—Works: chamber opera Les Invités (Gera, Germany, 1930); radio opera Illusion (Paris, June 28, 1949); 4 ballets: Le dernier songe (Budapest, Jan. 27, 1920), Pantins (Paris, 1938), Chota Roustaveli (in collaboration with Honegger and A. Tcherepnin; Monte Carlo, 1945), and L'Amour et la Vie (1951); a puppet show, L'Histoire du Petit Tailleur for 7 instruments and percussion (1939). For orch.: La Joie de vivre (Paris, March 11, 1934, composer conducting); 2 divertissements (1940-41, 1943); violin concerto (Paris Radio, Jan. 16, 1947); Figures et Rythmes (Geneva, Nov. 19, 1947, composer conducting); Dances variées (Basel, Feb. 14, 1950, composer conducting); a symphony (Salzburg Festival, June 26, 1952). Chamber music: sonatina for violin and piano (1918); 3 pieces for flute and piano (1924); 2 string quartets (1918, 1935); cello sonata (1928); nonet for string and wind instruments (Vienna Festival, June 21, 1932); Rhapsody for cello and piano (1939); Picnic for 2 violins, cello, double-bass, and percussion (1951); several pieces for gypsy instruments (1953); many piano pieces, among which the most effective are: 5 études rythmiques (1934), 3 pièces lyriques, and albums for children. He also wrote several choral works, including Cantate de Noël for voices, flute, and strings (Paris, Dec. 24, 1945).—Cf. J. S. Weissmann, Tibor Harsányi, in the 'Chest-crian' (1952).

Harshaw, Margaret, American opera singer; b. Narbeth, Pa., May 12, 1912. She won an audition with the Metropolitan Opera as contralto in 1942, and appeared in the roles of Amneris, Azucena, etc.; in 1950, changed to soprano, and specialized in Wagnerian roles; her interpretations (both as soprano and contralto) soon placed her among the most celebrated singers of Wagner's operas; she sang Isolde, Elisabeth, and all three Brünnhildes. She married Oskar Leopold Eichna (Sept. 7, 1935).

Hart & Sons, a firm of London violin makers, founded in 1825 by John Hart. His son, John Thomas Hart (b. Dec. 17, 1805; d. London, Jan. 1, 1874), a pupil of Gilkes, made a complete study of Cremonese and other violins of Italian make, establishing a reputation as an expert in his field. John Thomas' son, George Hart (b. London, March 23, 1839; d. near Newhaven, April 25, 1891), succeeded him. He was a good violinist himself; publ. valuable books, The Violin: Its Famous Makers and Their Imitators (London, 1875; French ed., Paris, 1886) and The Violin and its Music (London, 1881). His sons, George and Herbert Hart, inherited the business.

Hart, Frederic Patton, American composer; b. Aberdeen, Wash., Sept. 5, 1898. He studied at the American Cons. in Chicago (where he won the gold medal) and at the Art Institute there; later studied with Rubin Goldmark, Ernest Hutcheson, Nadia Boulanger, and at the Diller-Quaile School in N. Y. — Works: opera, The Wheel of Fortune (1934); ballet-opera, The Romance of Robot (N. Y., 1937); a trio (1926); Adagio and Scherzo for string quartet (1931); string quartet (1937); piano pieces and songs.

Hart, Fritz, English composer and conductor; b. Brockley, Kent, Feb. 11, 1874; d. Honolulu, July 9, 1949. He went to Australia in 1909 and settled there; director of the Melbourne Cons.; joint artistic director of the Melbourne Symph. Orch.; conducted both the Manila Symph. and the Honolulu Orch. (1931-36); settled in Honolulu in 1936 when appointed professor of music at the Univ. of Hawaii; retired in 1942. — Compositions: 16 operas, 2 operettas, a symph. and other orchestral works, chamber music; choral works, songs; etc.

Hart, James, English bass singer and composer; b. York, 1647; d. London, May 8, 1718. He was a singer in York Minster until 1670; then appointed Gentleman of the Chapel Royal and lay-vicar of Westminster Abbey; settled in London and composed songs publ. in 'Choice Ayres, Songs and Dialogues' (1676-84), 'The Theater of Musick' (1685-87), 'Banquet of Musick' (1688-92), and other collections. He wrote Adieu to the pleasures and follies of love for Shadwell's operatic adaptation of 'The Tempest' (1674), publ. as one of the 6 'Ariel's Songs.'

Hart, Lorenz, American lyricist; b. New York City, May 2, 1895; d. there, Nov. 22, 1943. He began as a student of journalism at Columbia Univ. (1914-17); then turned to highly successful theatrical writing. During his 18-year collaboration with Richard Rodgers, he wrote the lyrics for Connecticut Yankee (1927); On Your Toes (1936); Babes in Arms (1937); The Boys from Syracuse (1938); I Married an Angel (1938); Too Many Girls (1939); Pal Joey (1940); By Jupiter (1942). Some of their best songs (Manhattan, Here in My Arms, My Heart Stood Still, Small Hotel, Blue Moon, Where or When, I Married an Angel) are published in the album, Rodgers & Hart Songs (N. Y., 1951).

Hart, Philip, organist of various London churches; date and place of birth unknown; d. London, July 17, 1749; composed anthems, organ fugues, music for Hughes' Ode in Praise of Musick (1703), and for The Morning Hymn from Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' Book V (1729).

Hart, Weldon, American composer; b. Place-Bear Spring, Tenn., Sept. 19, 1911; d. East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 20, 1957. He studied music in Nashville, Univ. of Michigan, and Eastman School in Rochester with Howard Hanson and Bernard Rogers (Ph. D., 1946); head of the music dept. of Western Kentucky State College (1946-49); director of the School of Music of West Virginia Univ. (1949-57). In 1957 he was appointed head of the music dept. of Michigan State Univ., East Lansing, but died shortly after assuming his post. — Works: Sinfonietta (1934); symph. poem The Dark Hills (1939); a symphony (1945); Penny-rile Overture (1947); a violin concerto (1951); 3 West Virginia Folk Songs, for chorus and orch. (1954); violin pieces; etc. He writes in a bold contemporary idiom, characterized by a strong rhythmic sense.

Härtel (music publisher). See Breitkopf & Härtel.

Hartmann, Arthur, violinist; b. Maté Szalka, Hungary, July 23, 1881; d. New York, March 30, 1956. He was brought to Philadelphia as a child and first studied with his father; then was a pupil of M. van Gelder, and later of C. M. Loeffler (violin) and Homer Norris (composition). He made his début in Philadelphia (1887) as a child prodigy; by the time he was 12, had played practically the entire modern violin repertory. He toured the United States, Canada, Scandinavia; played in Paris in recitals with Debussy, and became his intimate friend. In 1939 he settled in New York; retired in 1954. He made numerous transcriptions and arrangements; discovered and edited 6 sonatas of Felice de' Giardini; wrote an essay on Bach's Chaconne which has been translated into 14 languages.

Hartmann, August Wilhelm, Danish organist and composer, son of J. E. Hartmann; b. Copenhagen, Nov. 6, 1775; d. there, Nov. 15, 1850. He studied with his father; he was first violinist in the Royal Chapel (1796-1817); then was appointed organist at the Garrison Church in Copenhagen. His organ works and other compositions are found in the Royal Library.

Hartmann, Carl, German tenor; b. Solingen, May 2, 1895. He studied at the Cologne Musikhochschule and with Senff in Düsseldorf; made his début (1928) as Tannhäuser in Elberfeld, followed by engagements in Cologne, Berlin, and Munich; then appeared in Dresden, Leipzig, Vienna, Paris, Barcelona, Prague, Stockholm; toured the United States (1930) with Gadske's German Opera Co., appearing in leading Wagnerian tenor roles; in 1937, appeared as Siegfried at the Metropolitan Opera (of which he is a member); sang Tristan at the Bayreuth Festival (1938); became member of the Chicago Opera the same year. He is also a lieder and oratorio singer.

Hartmann, Eduard von, German writer; b. Berlin, Feb. 23, 1842; d. Grosslichterfelde, near Berlin, June 5, 1906. He studied philosophy; at the same time he acquired, self taught, considerable knowledge of composition, wrote numerous songs, and began to compose an opera, Der Stern von Sevilla (unfinished). In his philosophical writings, he established some basic laws of musical esthetics; of chief importance are Deutsche Ästhetik seit Kant (Berlin, 1886) and Philosophie des Schönen (Berlin, 1887), which contains a chapter on Idealismus und Formalismus in der Musikästhetik.

Hartmann, Emil, Danish composer, son of Johann Peder Emilius Hartmann; b. Copenhagen, Feb. 21, 1836; d. there, July 18, 1898. He received his early education from his father and from Gade (who was his brother-in-law); was from 1861 till his death organist in various churches in Denmark. After Gade's death, he conducted a season of the Musical Society at Copenhagen (1891-92). He wrote the operas Elverpigen (Copenhagen, Nov. 5, 1867), Korsikaneren (Copenhagen, April 7, 1873), Ragnhild (1896), Det store Lod (1897); the ballet Fjeldstuen (Copenhagen, May 13, 1859); also some instrumental works.

Hartmann, Johan Peder Emilius, celebrated Danish dramatic composer; b. Copenhagen, May 14, 1805; d. there, March 10, 1900. He was the most famous of the Hartmann family in Denmark; grandson of Johann Ernst Hartmann, and son of August Wilhelm Hartmann. He studied law at the Univ. of Copenhagen, and for many years occupied a public position as a jurist (1828-70), but he was also profoundly interested in music; studied with his father, and became his assistant as organist at the Copenhagen Cathedral (1843), remaining in that capacity until his death. He also taught at the Cons. of Copenhagen (from 1827). In 1836 he was one of the organizers of the Danish Music Society; in 1868 was appointed its director. He was also co-director (with Gade) of the new Copenhagen Cons., established in 1867. He spent almost his entire life in Denmark; the only extensive traveling he undertook was in 1836, when he visited Germany and France. He was greatly esteemed in Denmark. A Hartmann Scholarship was founded on the occasion of his 50th jubilee, and he received the 'Daneborg' order. Gade was his son-in-law. He was a prolific composer; wrote the operas The Raven (Copenhagen, Oct. 29, 1832), The Corsairs (Copenhagen, April 23, 1835), Little Christina (Copenhagen, May 12, 1846); he also wrote the ballets, Valkyrien (Copenhagen, Sept. 13, 1861) and Thrymskvinden (Copenhagen, Feb. 21, 1868); a melodrama, The Golden Horns (1834); overtures; a violin concerto; a flute sonata; a violin sonata; pieces for piano; songs. With Gade, he was a foremost representative of the Danish Romantic school of composition. — Cf. W. Behrend, J. P. E. Hartmann (Copenhagen, 1895); A. Hammerich, J. P. E. Hartmann (Copenhagen, 1916); R. Hove, J. P. E. Hartmann (Copenhagen, 1934).

Hartmann, Johann Ernst, composer and violinist, founder of the 'Hartmann dynasty' of musicians active in Denmark; b. Glogau, Silesia, Dec. 24, 1726; d. Copenhagen, Oct. 21, 1793. He studied violin in Silesia, and held various posts as band violinist. In 1766 he settled in Copenhagen; became conductor of the Royal Orch. in 1768. Most of his manuscripts were lost in a fire (1794), but his violin method and a few instrumental works are extant. His chief claim to fame is the fact that the melody of the present national anthem of Denmark, Kong Christian stod ved højen Mast, was used in the score he wrote for the melodrama Fiskerne (Copenhagen, Jan. 31, 1780), and was for a long time regarded as his own composition, although it may have been borrowed from some unknown source of folk origin. A study of this melody is included in Angul Hammerich's book, J. P. E. Hartmann, Biographical Essays (1916).

Hartmann, Karl Amadeus, outstanding German composer; b. Munich, Aug. 2, 1905. He studied with Josef Haas at the Music Academy in Munich (1923-27) and later with Scherchen. He began to compose rather late in life. His first important work was a trumpet concerto, which was performed at a Scherchen concert in Strasbourg (1933); his symphonic work Miserere was given at the Prague festival (Sept. 1, 1935), and his first string quartet at the London festival (June 18, 1938). However, he was dissatisfied with these early works, and destroyed the manuscripts. In 1941 he began to study advanced musical composition and analysis with Anton von Webern, and turned definitely towards the 12-tone method. After the end of World War II, he organized in Munich the society 'Musica viva.' He received a prize from the city of Munich in 1949; in 1952 was elected member of the German Academy of Fine Arts; in 1953 became president of the German section of the International Society for Contemporary Music. Despite his acceptance of the atonal idiom and his experimentation in the domain of rhythm, Hartmann retains the orthodox form and structural cohesion of basic Classicism. — Works: chamber opera, Des Simplicius Simplicissimus Jugend (Cologne, 1949); 6 symphonies (1940-51); concerto for piano, wind instruments, and percussion (Donaueschingen, Oct. 10, 1953); numerous works for various instrumental combinations; choruses; piano pieces; songs.

Hartmann, Pater (real name Paul Eugen Josef von An der Lan-Hochbrunn), German conductor and composer; b. Salurn, near Bozen, Dec. 21, 1863; d. Munich, Dec. 5, 1914. He entered the Franciscan order at the age of 16; studied theology and music in various monasteries; then completed his musical studies with Josef Pembaur in Innsbruck; ordained priest in 1886; appointed organist at the Church of the Redeemer in Jerusalem (1893) and at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre (1894); in 1895 he was transferred to Rome as organist of the monastery 'Ara Coeli' and director of the 'Scuola Musicale Cooperativa.' From 1906 till his death he lived in the Franciscan monastery of St. Anna at Munich. During the season of 1906-07 he visited the United States, conducting some of his oratorios. His sacred music retains its importance in Germany. He wrote the oratorios Petrus (1900), Franziskus (1902), Das letzte Abendmahl (1904), Der Tod des Herrn (1905), Septem ultima verba Christi in Cruce (1908); also a Te Deum (1913); Masses; organ works.

Hartmann, Thomas de, Russian composer; b. Khoruzhevka, Ukraine, Sept. 21, 1885; d. Princeton, N. J., March 26, 1956. He studied piano with Anna Essipova at the St. Petersburg Cons.; composition with Taneyev and Arensky. His first important work, the ballet The Purple Flower, was produced at the Imperial Theater in St. Petersburg in 1907 with Pavlova, Karsavina, Nijinsky, and Fokine. After the Revolution he went to the Caucasus; taught at the Tiflis Cons. (1919); then went to Paris, where he remained until 1951, when he settled in New York. His early music is in the Russian national style, influenced particularly by Mussorgsky; from about 1925, he made a radical change in his style of composition, adopting many devices of outspoken modernism (polytonality, etc.). — Works: The Purple Flower, ballet (St. Petersburg, Dec. 16, 1907); Babette, ballet (Nice, March 10, 1935); also an opera Esther (not performed); 3 symphonies (1915, 1944, 1953); 4th Symphony, unfinished (1955); cello concerto (1935; Boston, April 14, 1938); piano concerto (1940; Paris, Nov. 8, 1942); violin concerto (1943; Paris, March 6, 1947); double-bass concerto (1943; Paris, Jan. 26, 1945); harp concerto (1944); violin concerto (Paris, March 16, 1947); flute concerto (Paris, Sept. 27, 1950); 12 Russian Fairy Tales, for orch. (Houston, April 4, 1955, Stokowski conducting); also violin sonata (1937); cello sonata (1942); trio for flute, violin, and piano (1946); 3 song cycles to words by Verlaine, Proust, and James Joyce; other songs; piano pieces.

Hartog, Edouard de, Dutch composer; b. Amsterdam, Aug. 15, 1829; d. The Hague, Nov. 8, 1909. He studied in Germany with Hoch and Mme. Dulcken, and in Paris with Elwart. He lived many years in Paris, where he produced the opera Le Mariage de Don Lope (1865); another opera by him, L'Amour et son Hôte, was produced in Brussels (1873). He also wrote several symph. works, chamber music, and piano pieces.

Hartog, Jacques, Dutch composer and writer; b. Zalt-Bommel, Oct. 24, 1837; d. Amsterdam, Oct. 3, 1917. He studied with Ferdinand Hiller at Cologne; upon his return to Holland, he was appointed prof. at the Amsterdam School of Music, and held this post for many years (1886-1913). He publ. monographs (in Dutch) on Beethoven (1904), Mozart (1904), Haydn (1905), Mendelssohn (1909), Schumann (1910), Bach (1911), and Wagner (1913); translated into Dutch several German theory books, also wrote some orchestral and chamber music.

Harty, Sir Hamilton, eminent conductor; b. Hillsborough, County Down, Ireland, Dec. 4, 1879; d. Brighton, Feb. 19, 1941. He received his entire musical education from his father, an organist, and substituted for him as a child. At the age of 12, he was able to fill a position as organist at Magheracoll Church, County Antrim; then was church organist in Belfast and Dublin. In 1900 he went to London, where he was active as an accompanist; on July 15, 1904 he married the singer Agnes Nicholls; also began to compose seriously; his piano quintet won a prize in 1904. It was much later in life that he devoted himself to conducting; he was appointed conductor of the Hallé Orch. in Manchester in 1920, remaining at this post for 13 seasons; his programs showed fine discrimination in balancing Classic and Romantic works; he gave many performances of Berlioz; also conducted several works by British composers. In appreciation of his work, he was knighted (1925). In 1931 he made his American debut; in subsequent seasons he conducted in Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, and also at the Hollywood Bowl. In 1934 he conducted in Australia. Among his works, the most interesting is Irish Symphony (revised version, Manchester, Nov. 13, 1924); other works are Comedy Overture (1907); Ode to a Nightingale, after Keats, for soprano and orch. (1907); With the Wild Geese, a symph. poem (1910); violin concerto (1909); The Mystic Trumpeter, for baritone, chorus, and orch. (1913); The Children of Lir, poem for orch. (London, March 1, 1939); he made excellent arrangements of Handel's Water Music and Fireworks Music for modern orch.; also arranged A John Field Suite, from piano works by Field.

Harwood, Basil, English organist and composer; b. Woodhouse, Gloucestershire, April 11, 1859; d. London, April 3, 1949. He studied piano with J. L. Roeckel, organ with George Riseley; also with Reinecke and Jadassohn at the Leipzig Cons. Returning to England, he occupied various posts as organist: at St. Barnabas Church, Pimlico (1883-87), Ely Cathedral (1887-92), Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford (1892-1909); in 1900 he became choral director at Oxford Univ. (until 1909). He edited the 'Oxford Hymn Book' (1908), and wrote a number of sacred works for chorus, and organ pieces (2 sonatas, organ concerto, Christmaside, Dithyramb, etc.); a cantata, Ode on May Morning, after Milton (Leeds Festival, 1913).

Hase, Oskar von. See Breitkopf & Härtel.

Häser, August Ferdinand, German composer; b. Leipzig, Oct. 15, 1779; d. Weimar, Nov. 1, 1844. He was a member of a musical family; his 3 brothers and a sister were musicians. He was educated at the Thomaschule in Leipzig, and studied theology at the Leipzig Univ. In 1797 he went to Lemgo, Westphalia, where he taught mathematics in high school. He traveled in Italy, from 1806-13; then returned to Lemgo. In 1817 he was engaged in Weimar as music teacher to Princess Augusta (the future German empress); also conducted the chorus at the Court Opera there; was church organist and teacher of Italian. He wrote 3 operas, which were performed in Weimar; an oratorio, Die Kraft des Glaubens (perf. in Birmingham, 1837, as The Triumph of Faith, or The First Crusade), many sacred choruses, 4 overtures, several instrumental works in salon style. He publ. Versuch einer systematischen Übersicht der Gesanglehre (Leipzig, 1822); Chorgesangsschule für Schul- und Theaterchöre (Mainz, 1831; in French as Méthode pour apprendre à chanter en chœur à l'usage des écoles, des théâtres, etc.).

Haskil, Clara, Rumanian pianist; b. Bucharest, Jan. 7, 1895. She made her debut in Vienna at the age of 7; then entered the Paris Cons., where she studied with Cortot and Gabriel Fauré and won a first prize at the age of 14. Busoni heard her in Basel and invited her to study with him in Berlin. She played programs of Beethoven sonatas with Enesco, Ysaÿe, and Casals; appeared in recitals in leading European cities, played in England (with Beecham) and in the U. S. (with Stokowski, and, in 1956, with the Boston Symph. Orch., Munch conducting). She has maintained her technical ability to an extraordinary degree throughout her career; in America she was praised for exceptionally sympathetic interpretation of Mozart and Beethoven.

Hasler, Hans Leo. See Hassler.

Haslinger, Tobias, Austrian music publisher; b. Zell, March 1, 1787; d. Vienna, June 18, 1842. He went to Vienna in 1810 after studying music in Linz; was book-keeper in Steiner's music establishment; later became partner, and after Steiner's retirement in 1826, sole proprietor. A gregarious and affable person, he made friends with many musicians, and was on excellent terms with Beethoven, who seemed to enjoy Haslinger's company; many letters to him from Beethoven are extant, among them the humorous canon O Tobias Dominus Haslinger. He was succeeded by his son Karl Haslinger (b. Vienna, June 11, 1816; d. there, Dec. 26, 1868). The latter studied with Czerny and became a brilliant pianist as well as an industrious composer; he publ. more than 100 works of various kinds. Continuing the tradition of his father, he publ. several symphonies, piano concertos, overtures, and other works by Beethoven, and later Liszt's piano concerto in E-flat; he was also the publisher of the Strauss waltzes. In 1875 the firm was bought from his widow by Schlesinger of Berlin (subsequently, R. & W. Lienau).

Hassard, John Rose Green, American journalist and music critic; b. New York, Sept. 4, 1836; d. there, April 18, 1888. He studied at St. John's College, Fordham; was a writer on the Chicago 'Republican' (1865); in 1866, joined the staff of the New York 'Tribune' as editorial writer and literary and music critic. In the latter capacity he was succeeded in 1884 by H. E. Krehbiel. His account of the Festival at Bayreuth in 1876 (later publ. as a pamphlet) was the fullest that appeared in any American newspaper.

Hasse, Faustina (née Bordoni), wife of Johann Adolf Hasse; famous mezzo soprano of noble birth; b. Venice, c. 1700; d. there, Nov. 4, 1781. She studied with Gasparini and Benedetto Marcello. She made her début in 1716 in Pollaro's opera Ariodante, and obtained such success that soon she was called the 'New Siren.' When she sang in Florence a few years later (1722), a special medal was issued in her honor;

she was equally successful in Naples. She became a member of the court theater in Vienna in 1724, at a high salary. Handel heard her there, and engaged her for his opera enterprise in London, where she made her début on May 5, 1726, winning high praise. She remained in London for 2 seasons; her quarrel with Francesca Cuzzoni in a competition for public attention resulted in her departure from England. She went back to Venice; in 1730, she married Hasse, and devoted her life thenceforth to his success, without abandoning her own career. From 1731 till 1763 they lived in Dresden; then in Vienna (until 1775), finally settling in Venice. According to Burney, she could sustain a note longer than any other singer; her trills were strong and rapid; her intonation perfect. Burney also praised her physical qualities.—Cf. A. Niggli, Faustina Bordoni-Hasse, in Waldersee's 'Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge' (1880); G. M. Urbani de Gheltof, 'La Nuova Sirena' ed il 'Caro Sassone' (Venice, 1890); Margarete Högg, Die Gesangskunst der Faustina Hasse und das Sängeriinnenwesen ihrer Zeit in Deutschland (Berlin, 1931). An interesting novel rather than a biography is Elise Polko's Faustina Hasse (Leipzig, 1860; new ed., 1895).

Hasse, Johann Adolph, German dramatic composer; b. Bergedorf, near Hamburg, March 25, 1699; d. Venice, Dec. 16, 1783. He received his first instruction in music from his father, a schoolmaster and organist. At the age of 18, he went to Hamburg and, at the recommendation of Ulrich König, the poet, was engaged by Keiser, director of the Hamburg Opera, as tenor; he sang there 4 seasons, and later was tenor at the Brunswick theater; it was there that Hasse first appeared as composer, with his opera Antioch (Aug. 11, 1721). He then went to Naples to study the craft of composition more thoroughly; there he was a pupil of Porpora and later of Alessandro Scarlatti, and brought out his 2nd opera Tigrane (Nov. 4, 1723). In 1725 he wrote a serenade for 2 voices which was performed by Farinelli and Vittoria Tesi, and this further promoted Hasse's career in Italy; there followed a successful production of his new opera Sesostrate (Naples, May 13, 1726). In 1727 he was appointed to the staff of the Scuola degl' Incurabili in Venice; there he wrote his Miserere, which enjoyed excellent success throughout Italy for many years afterwards. His ability to ingratiate himself with society, his affable manners and handsome appearance, contributed to his artistic success; he was often referred to as 'il caro Sassone' (even though he was not a Saxon). In 1729 he met the famous singer Faustina Bordoni, and married her in Venice the following year. She sang the leading roles in many of his operas, and together they attained the highest positions in the operatic world. He wrote two operas for her: Artaserse and Dalisa, produced in Venice shortly after their marriage. In 1731 Hasse received an appointment as musical director of the Dresden Opera, with Faustina Hasse as prima donna; his first operatic production in Dresden was Cleofide, on Sept. 13, 1731, in which his wife scored a brilliant success. During frequent leaves of absence, they traveled in Italy, where Hasse produced the following operas: Catone in Utica (Turin, Dec. 26, 1731); Caio Fabrizio (Rome, Jan. 12, 1732); Siroe, re di Persia (Bologna, May 2, 1733); and Tito Vespasiano (Pesaro, Sept. 24, 1735). In Dresden, he produced Senocrita (Feb. 27, 1737), Atalanta (July 26, 1737), Asteria (Aug. 3, 1737), Alfonso (May 11, 1738), Numa (Oct. 7, 1741), Arminio (Oct. 7, 1745), La Spartana generosa (June 14, 1747), Demofonte (Feb. 9, 1748); Attilio Regolo (Jan. 12, 1750), Ciro riconosciuto (Jan. 20, 1751), Adriano in Siria (Jan. 17, 1752), Solimano (Feb. 5, 1753), Artemisia (Feb. 6, 1754), L' Olimpiade (Feb. 16, 1756), etc. In 1734 Hasse visited London, where he was offered the management of the opera company established in opposition to Handel; although his opera Artaserse, which he presented there (Nov. 10, 1734), was very successful, he decided not to challenge Handel's superiority, and returned to Dresden. Among other capital cities he visited during this period was Warsaw, where he produced Il sogno di Scipione (Oct. 7, 1758) and Zenobia (Oct. 7, 1761). His productions in Vienna were Ipermestra (Jan. 8, 1744), Alcide al Bivio (Oct. 8, 1760), Il trionfo di Clelia (April 27, 1762), Egeria (April 24, 1764), Partenope (Sept. 9, 1767), and Piramo e Tisbe (Nov., 1768). His last opera was Ruggerio, produced in Milan on Oct. 16, 1771.—Although Hasse was fortunate in his artistic life and never lacked the support of the public, he had to face strong rivalry on the part of the famous Italian composer Porpora, who was engaged by the Dresden court in 1747. Furthermore, Porpora's pupil, a young singer named Regina Mingotti, became a formidable competitor to Faustina Hasse, no longer in her prime. Hasse succeeded in maintaining his firm position in Dresden, and Porpora departed for Vienna in 1752. In 1760, during the siege of Dresden in the course of the Seven Years' War, Hasse's house was set afire by bombing, and nearly all of his manuscripts perished. Hasse's vitality and determination overcame these challenges, and he never ceased to produce new works with astounding facility. His music did not break new paths in operatic art, but he was a master of singing melody in the Italian style, and a fine craftsman in harmony and instrumentation. Pallido è il sole and Per questo dolce amplesso from his opera Artaserse were the two airs that Farinelli sang every evening for 10 years to soothe the melancholy of the ailing Spanish King Philip. In addition to his operas, Hasse wrote 9 oratorios, 10 Masses, 3 Requiems, 10 psalms, 5 litanies, 22 motets, a Te Deum, and a Salve Regina (publ. in London in 1740, under the title The Famous Salve Regina Composed by Signor Hasse); also wrote instrumental concertos, string trios, sonatas, etc. An important collection of Hasse's MSS is in the Dresden Library. A selection of his works was publ. by A. Schering in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst' (vols. 20, 29, 30) and by Otto Schmid in 'Musik am sächsischen Hofe' (vols. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8); G. Göhler edited 10 ausgewählte Orchesterstücke (1904). Other reprints are by Christian I. Latrobe in his Selection of Sacred Music (6 vols., 1806-26), by B. Engländer (keyboard sonatas; Leipzig, 1930), etc. R. Gerber prepared Hasse's opera Arminio for publication in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'.—Cf. W. H. Hasse, Karl, German composer and musicologist; b. Dohna, near Dresden, March 20, 1883. He studied with Kretzschmar and Riemann at the Univ. of Leipzig and with Straube and Nikisch at the Leipzig Cons.; later took courses at the Munich Academy with Reger and Mottl. He then held posts as choral conductor and organist in Heidelberg, Chemnitz, and Osnabrück. In 1919 he became prof. at the Univ. of Tübingen; founded a musicological seminar there; Ph.D., 1923. In 1935 he became director of the Hochschule für Musik in Cologne; after the end of World War II, he was pensioned and lived in Schluchtern; in 1955, returned to Cologne. He has written a number of works for orch., chamber groups, organ, and voice, aggregating 120 opus numbers; but he is mostly known for his writings; he publ. several books on Max Reger (Leipzig, 1921; Berlin, 1936; Leipzig, 1948; Dortmund, 1951); 3 books on Bach (Leipzig, 1925; Cologne, 1938; Leipzig, 1949); contributed numerous articles to various German music magazines.

Hasse, Max, German musicologist; b. Buttelstedt, near Weimar, Nov. 24, 1859; d. Magdeburg, Oct. 20, 1935. He was music critic of the 'Magdeburger Zeitung' from 1894 till 1927; publ. the basic works on Cornelius, Peter Cornelius und sein Barbier von Bagdad (1904) and Der Dichter-Musiker Peter Cornelius (2 vols., 1922-23); was also editor of the complete works of Cornelius, in 5 vols.

Hasselmans, Louis, French conductor; b. Paris, July 25, 1878. He was the son of a harpist-composer and grandson of a conductor. He studied the cello with Jules Delsart at the Paris Cons., winning first prize at the age of 15, and theory with Lavignac and B. Godard; member of the Capet Quartet, with which he toured (1893-1909); he made his début as conductor at the Lamoureux Concerts in Paris (1905); in 1907, founded and conducted the Hasselmans orchestral concerts in Paris; conductor at the Opéra-Comique, Paris (1909-11); conductor of the Montreal Opera in Canada (1911-13); conductor of the Marseilles Concerts Classiques (1911-13); conductor of the Chicago Opera (1918-20); then returned to France (1920) and again conducted at the Opéra-Comique; conductor of French works at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York from 1921 until 1936; from 1936, member of the music department at Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge; retired in 1948, then traveled widely in Europe and America; eventually settled in Aix-en-Provence.

Hassler, Hans Leo, celebrated German composer; b. Nuremberg, Oct. 25, 1564; d. Frankfurt, June 8, 1612. He studied with his father, Isaak Hassler (1530-91), and from his earliest years became extremely proficient on the organ. In 1584, he went to Venice to study with Andrea Gabrieli. Hassler was the first notable German composer who went to Italy for musical study; however, he did not remain long in Venice; after a year there, he was recalled to Germany, where he obtained the post of chamber musician to Count Octavianus Fugger in Augsburg; following the latter's death in 1600, he became a leader of the town band in Nuremberg and also organist at the Frauenkirche there. On Jan. 1, 1602, he received the post of chamber organist to the Court of Rudolf II at Prague; this was an honorary position rather than an actual occupation, and Hassler appeared but infrequently, if at all, at the imperial court in Prague. At the time he was busily engaged in the manufacture and installation of musical clocks; his commercial pursuits led to numerous litigations with business rivals. In 1604, he took a leave of absence from Nuremberg and went to Ulm; in 1609, he became organist to the Elector of Saxony in Dresden, and in 1612, accompanied him to Frankfurt; but he was weakened by tuberculosis and died shortly after arrival there. The style of Hassler's music is greatly influenced by his teacher Andrea Gabrieli, and the latter's nephew, Giovanni Gabrieli, with whom Hassler became friendly in Venice. Having absorbed the Italian techniques, Hassler applied his knowledge to the composition of strongly national German songs, and became one of the founders of national musical art in Germany.—Works: Canzonette a 4 (Nuremberg, 1590); Cantiones sacrae a 4-12 (Augsburg, 1591); Neue deutsche Gesäng nach Art der welschen Madrigalien und Canzonetten a 4-8 (Augsburg, 1596); Madrigali a 5-8 (Augsburg, 1596); 8 Masses a 4-8 (Nuremberg, 1599); Sacri concentus a 4-12 (Augsburg, 1601; 2nd ed., 1612); Lustgarten neuer deutscher Gesäng, Balletti, Gailliarden und Intraden a 4-8 (Nuremberg, 1601; later editions, 1605, 1610; reprints in Eitner's 'Publikationen älterer praktischer und theoretischer Musikwerke' vol. 15); Psalmen und christliche Gesäng mit vier Stimmen auf die Melodien fugweis componirt (Nuremberg, 1607); Kirchengesänge, Psalmen und geistliche Lieder, auf die gemeinen Melodien mit vier Stimmen simpliciter gesetzt (Nuremberg, 1608; 2nd enlarged ed., 1637); Venusgarten oder neue lustige liebliche Tänz a 4-6 (with V. Haussmann; Nuremberg, 1615); numerous motets, litanies, and organ works in various contemporary collections; 20 motets in Gruber's collection, Reliquiae sacrarum concentuum G. Gabriellis, J.-H. Hasleri, etc. (Nuremberg, 1615). Reprints are in the 'Denk-mäler deutscher Tonkunst' (vols. 2, 7, 24, 25); 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (vols. 4, 5, 11); in Riemann's Illustrationen zur Musikgeschichte und Musikgeschichte in Beispielen; Schering's Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen; Leichtentritt's Meisterwerke deutscher Tonkunst, etc. R. von Saalfeld edited the psalms and sacred songs (1925); H. Bäuerle edited 2 Masses. A chronological list of Hassler's printed works was publ. by Eitner in the 'Monatshefte für Musik-Geschichte' (1874).—Cf. R. Schwartz, Hans Leo Hassler unter dem Einfluss der italienischen Madrigalisten, in the 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (1893); A. Hassler, Jakob, German organist and composer; brother of Hans Leo Hassler; b. Nuremberg, Dec., 1569 (baptized Dec. 18); d. Eger, between April and Sept., 1622. Like his famous brother, he enjoyed the patronage of the Fugger family; was enabled to go to Italy in 1590 to improve his musical education; upon his return to Germany, on his brother's recommendation he received the honorary post of organist to Emperor Rudolf II in Prague. In 1611 he settled in Eger. He publ. a collection of Italian madrigals (Nuremberg, 1600) and a book of sacred works (Nuremberg, 1601). E von Werra publ. several keyboard pieces by Jakob Hassler in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (1904).

Hässler, Johann Wilhelm, German composer and pianist; b. Erfurt, March 29, 1747; d. Moscow, March 29, 1822. His father was a maker of men's headwear; he followed his father's trade, while studying piano and organ with his uncle, Johann Christian Kittel. At the age of 14, he was able to earn his living as organist at an Erfurt church. After his father's death in 1769, he maintained for some years a manufacture of fur muffs. A meeting in Hamburg with Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach gave him a fresh impetus toward continuing his musical activities. He gave concerts as pianist, and publ. several piano sonatas. On Feb. 8, 1779, he married his pupil, Sophie Kiel. In 1780, he opened public winter concerts in Erfurt; his wife appeared there as a singer and choral director. In 1789, he played in Berlin and Potsdam; in Dresden he took part in a contest with Mozart, as organist and pianist, without producing much impression either on Mozart himself or on the listeners. In 1790, he went to London, where he performed piano concertos under the direction of Haydn. In 1792, he went to Russia, where he remained for 30 years, until his death. In Moscow, he became greatly renowned as pianist, composer, and particularly as teacher. Most of his works were published in Russia; these included sonatas, preludes, variations, fantasies, etc., and also pieces for piano, 4-hands. His style represents a transition between Bach and Beethoven, without attaining a degree of the imagination or craftsmanship of either. However, his piano pieces in the lighter vein have undeniable charm. His gigue in D minor was well known. His autobiography is included in Willi Kahl, Selbstbiographien deutscher Musiker (Cologne, 1948). See also W. Georgii, Klavier-Musik (Zürich, 1950).

Hassler, Kaspar, German composer; brother of Hans Leo Hassler; b. Nuremberg, Aug. (baptized, Aug. 17) 1562; d. there, Aug. 19, 1618. In 1586 he was appointed organist at the Lorenz-Kirche; also supervised the building of the organ in the Würzburg Cathedral. He wrote a number of organ pieces; edited several collections of sacred works by various authors.

Hastings, Thomas, American composer and hymn writer; b. Washington, Litchfield County, Conn., Oct. 15, 1784; d. New York, May 15, 1872. The family moved to Clinton, N. Y., when Hastings was 12; he became interested in practical music, and was a leader of a village chorus. He also collected hymns, which were later published in a collection, Musica Sacra (with S. Wariner, 1816). He moved to Utica in 1828 and was a member of a Handel and Haydn society there; he also edited a religious weekly publication, 'The Western Recorder.' In 1832 he settled in New York, where he was connected with the Normal Institute, in association with Lowell Mason. He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from N. Y. Univ. (1858). Among his many publications were Musical Reader (1817); Dissertation on Musical Taste (1822; 2nd enlarged ed., 1853); The Union Minstrel (1830); Spiritual Songs for Social Worship (with Lowell Mason, 1831); Devo- tional Hymns and Religious Poems (1850); History of Forty Choirs (1854), and Sacred Praise (1856). His own hymn tunes have been estimated to number more than 1000, and, next to those of Lowell Mason, are regarded as the finest of his time in America. These include the celebrated tune, Rock of Ages (words by Augustus Toplady); other well-known hymn tunes are Retreat, Zion, and Ortonville. He publ. many of his melodies under foreign-looking names, and it is not always possible to ascertain their authorship.—Cf. F. J. Metcalf, American Writers and Compilers of Sacred Music (N. Y., 1925); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939, and subsequent eds.); M. B. Scanlon, Thomas Hastings, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1946). See also the article on Hastings in the 'Dictionary of American Biography.'

Hastreiter, Helene, American dramatic contralto; b. Louisville, Ky., Nov. 14, 1858; d. Varese, Italy, Aug. 6, 1922. She sang as a child in a Chicago church; at the age of 22, went to Italy where she studied with the Lampertis (father and son) in Milan. She made her operatic debut there, and after several successful appearances in Italy, was engaged by Col. Mapleson for his London season (1885). She then sang mostly in Italy; married Dr. Burgunzio there, and lived in Genoa. Some of her leading operatic parts were Orfeo, Euridice, Dalila, Senta, and Ortrud.

Hatton, John Liptrot, British composer of light music; b. Liverpool, Oct. 12, 1809; d. Margate, Sept. 20, 1886. He acquired facility as pianist and singer, and appeared on the vaudeville stage as a musical comedian. He publ. a great number of songs, among which Anthea and Good-bye, sweet-heart, good-bye became extremely popular. In 1832 he went to London; produced his operetta, The Queen of the Thames, there (Feb. 25, 1843). He then went to Vienna, where he staged his opera Pascal Bruno (March 2, 1844). For some of his numbers he used the punning pseudonym Czapek (genitive plural of the Hungarian word for hat). In 1848-50 he made an extensive American tour. Returning to England, he was musical director at the Princess's Theatre (1853-59); wrote music for several Shakespeare plays there; wrote a cantata Robin Hood (Bradford Festival, Aug. 26, 1856); a grand opera Rose, or Love's Ransom (London, Nov. 26, 1864), and a sacred drama Hezekiah (Dec. 15, 1877); edited collections of old English songs.

Hattstaedt, John James, American pianist and pedagogue; b. Monroe, Mich., Dec. 29, 1851; d. Chicago, Nov. 30, 1931. He studied in Germany; then taught piano in Detroit (1870-72), St. Louis (1872-73), and Chicago (1875-86). In 1886 he founded the American Cons. of Music in Chicago. He publ. a Manual of Musical History.

Haubiel, Charles, American composer; b. Delta, Ohio, Jan. 30, 1892. He studied piano with Rudolph Ganz and Josef and Rosina Lhévinne; composition with Rosario Scalero; occupied various teaching posts, at Kingfisher College in Oklahoma, at the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y. (1921-29); at N. Y. Univ. (1922-47), etc.; was founder and president (1935) of the Composers' Press, Inc. He was the winner of the first prize in America at the Schubert Centennial contest (1928) for his set of symph. variations Karma. — Works: Brigands Preferred, musical satire (1925); Karma, symph. variations on a theme by Handel (1928; recorded by the Columbia Phonograph Co., 1929); Mars Ascending, for orch. (1923; honorable mention in the Paderewski symph. contest); Ritratti (Portraits, for orch.; Chicago, Dec. 12, 1935); Pastoral (for orch., 1935); Suite Passacaglia (Los Angeles, Jan. 31, 1936); Symphony in Variation Form (1937); Vox Cathedralis, for orch. (N. Y., May 6, 1938); Miniatures, for string orch. (N. Y., April 23, 1939); Amphycromes, for piano trio (1932); Cryptics, for bassoon and piano (1932); Gay Dances, for piano trio (1932); Lodando la Danza, for oboe, violin, cello, and piano (1932); Pastorale, for oboe and cello (1933); Duoforms, for trio (1934); Echi Classici, for string quartet (1936); trio for flute, cello, and piano (1942); Gothic Variations, for violin and piano (1943); string trio (1943); cello sonata (1944); Nuances, for flute and piano (1947); Shadows, for violin and piano (1947), etc.; many choral works: Sea Songs (1931), L'Amore Spirituale (1932), Yeoman's Song (1932), Vision of Saint Joan (1941), Jungle Tale (1943), Father Abraham (1944), Both Grave and Gay (1944), etc.

Haudebert, Lucien, French composer; b. Fougères, April 18, 1877. He studied organ; then went to Paris, where he took lessons in composition with Fauré. He followed in his music the traditions of César Franck, preferring large sonorities and clear tonal harmonies. He stood aloof from modern developments in France and had little recognition even among traditional musicians, despite praise from Romain Rolland. His most effective work is the oratorio, Dieu Vainqueur (1916-22); other significant works are: the oratorio Moïse (1928); Symphonie bretonne (1936); Symphonie française (1941); Voyage en Bretagne, for orch. (1953); Chants de la Mer, for voices and orch. (1950); also chamber music, including a quartet for saxophones.

Hauer, Josef Matthias, Austrian composer; b. Wiener-Neustadt, near Vienna, March 19, 1883. After attending a teachers' college, he became a public school instructor; at the same time he studied music. An experimenter by nature, with strong leanings towards mathematical constructions, he developed a system of composition according to 'tropes' or patterns, without repeated notes, and aggregating to thematic formations of 12 notes. As early as 1912 he publ. a piano piece entitled Nomos (Law), which embodies the germ of 12-tone music. The promulgation of his theory of tropes followed in 1921; other theoretical publications are Vom Wesen des Musikalischen (Berlin 1922); Deutung des Melos (Vienna, 1923); Vom Melos zur Pauke (Vienna, 1925); Zwölftontechnik (Vienna, 1926). Hauer asserted his priority in the establishment of the 12-tone method of composition with great vehemence; but while chronologically he may have anticipated Schoenberg in the bare statement that such a technique is esthetically self-consistent, the true development of the method, with full use of contrapuntal and canonic devices, did not appear until Schoenberg laid its foundations about 1924. From 1914, Hauer remained in Vienna, working as conductor, teacher, and composer. Despite the forbidding character of many of his works, most of them have been performed and published. He wrote an opera, Salammbô (1930); a musical play, Die schwarze Spinne (1931); 2 cantatas, Wandlungen (1928) and Der Menschen Weg (1953); 8 suites for orch.; some 30 instrumental pieces entitled Zwölftonspiel; a symph. for strings, harmonium, and piano; violin concerto (1928); piano concerto (1928); 6 string quartets; quintet for clarinet, violin, viola, cello, and piano; several sets of piano pieces entitled Nomoi; songs and choruses.—Cf. Willi Reich, J. M. Hauer, in 'Die Musik' (May, 1931); H. Picht, J. M. Hauer, ein Vorkämpfer geistiger Musikauf-fassung (Stuttgart, 1934).

Haufrecht, Herbert, American composer; b. New York City, Nov. 3, 1909. He studied with Roger Sessions, Quincy Porter, and Herbert Elwell at the Cleveland Institute of Music; later with Rubin Goldmark in New York. In 1936 he went to West Virginia, where he collected folk music; upon his return to N. Y. he became active as editor and arranger. Among his compositions are: The Story of Ferdinand for narrator and orch.; Overture for an American Mural (N. Y., Aug. 2, 1939); a pantomime-opera Boney Quillan (1951); a symphony for brass and timpani (1955); Woodland Serenade for woodwind quintet (1955); many pieces for school bands.

Haug, Hans, Swiss composer; b. Basel, July 27, 1900. He was a pupil of Ernst Lévy and Egon Petri at the Basel Cons. and later of Walter Courvoisier and Joseph Pembaur at the Academy of Music in Munich. He then was choral director in Solothurn (1926-28) and assistant conductor at the Municipal Theater of Basel (1928-34). From 1935 he was primarily active on the Swiss radio; also taught at the Lausanne Cons. (from 1947); conducted orchestral concerts on the Monte Carlo radio. As a composer, Haug is mainly interested in theatrical and choral music.—Works: operas: Don Juan in der Fremde (Basel, Dec. 5, 1930); Madrisa (Basel, Jan. 15, 1934); Tartuffe (Basel, May 24, 1937); Le Malade imaginaire, after Molière (Zürich, Feb. 8, 1947); Der Spiegel der Agrippina (1954); oratorio, Michelangelo (Solothurn, Feb. 28, 1943); a symphony (1948); violin concerto (1926); Kurze Musik for cello and orch. (1927); piano concerto (1938); flute concerto (1943); guitar concerto (1952); double concerto for oboe and viola (1953); 3 string quartets (1927-31); wind quartet (1925); wind quintet (1955).

Hauk, Minnie (real name Mignon Hauke), celebrated American soprano; b. New York, Nov. 16, 1851; d. Tribschen, near Lucerne, Switzerland, Feb. 6, 1929. Her father was a German carpenter who became involved in the political events of 1848, emigrated to America and married an American woman; he named his daughter Mignon after the character in Goethe's Wilhelm Meister. The family moved to Atchison, Kansas, when Minnie was very young; her mother maintained a boarding house at a steamboat landing on the Missouri. In 1860 they moved to New Orleans; there Minnie Hauk began to sing popular ballads for entertainment. She made her operatic début at the age of 14 in Brooklyn, in La Sonnambula (Oct. 13, 1866); then took lessons with Achille Errani of New York. On Nov. 15, 1867, she sang Juliette at the American première of Gounod's opera in N. Y. She attracted the attention of the rich industrialist, Leonard Jerome, and Gustave Schirmer, the music publisher, who financed her trip to Europe. She sang in opera in Paris during the summer of 1868; made her London début at Covent Garden on Oct. 26, 1868; in 1870 she sang in Vienna. She sang the title roles in the first American performances of Carmen (N. Y. Academy of Music, Oct. 23, 1878) and Massenet's Manon (Dec. 23, 1885); appeared at the Metropolitan Opera during the season of 1890-91, but following a disagreement with the management, decided to organize her own opera group; with it, she gave the first Chicago performance of Cavalleria Rusticana (Sept. 28, 1891). She then settled in Switzerland with her husband Baron Ernst von Hesse-Wartegg, whom she had married in 1881; after his death, she lived mostly in Berlin; lost her fortune in the depreciation of her holdings in Germany. In 1919, Geraldine Farrar launched an appeal to raise funds for her in America. Her autobiography, collated by E. B. Hitchcock, was publ. as Memoirs of a Singer (London, 1925).—Cf. Oscar Thompson, The American Singer (N. Y., 1937; pp. 93-118).

Haupt, Karl August, German organist; b. Kuhnau, Silesia, Aug. 25, 1810; d. Berlin, July 4, 1891. He studied with Dehn and others in Berlin; played in various Berlin churches, and became famous for his masterly improvisations in the style of Bach. He was one of the experts consulted for the specifications in building the grand organ at the Crystal Palace in London. He had many distinguished pupils, including about 40 American organists. He publ. a valuable Choralbuch (1869); many other compositions for organ remain in manuscript.

Hauptmann, Moritz, eminent German theorist and composer; b. Dresden, Oct. 13, 1792; d. Leipzig, Jan. 3, 1868. His father was an architect, and hoped to bring up his son in that profession; however, there was no parental opposition to music studies; he took lessons with Scholz (violin) and Morlacchi (composition) in Dresden; in 1811 he went to Gotha to study violin and composition with Spohr and became his lifelong friend. In 1812, he joined the Dresden Court orch. as violinist; in 1815, he became music teacher in the family of the Russian military governor of Dresden, Prince Repnin, and went with them to Russia, where he remained for 5 years. In 1820, he returned to Dresden; in 1822, Spohr engaged him as violinist in the court orch. at Kassel. In 1842, at Mendelssohn's recommendation, he was appointed cantor at the Thomasschule and prof. of composition at the Leipzig Cons., retaining these posts until his death. He became greatly renowned as a teacher of violin and composition. Among his pupils were Ferdinand David, Joachim, Hans von Bülow, Jadassohn, and Arthur Sullivan. A master of classical form, he was a polished composer, in the tradition of Spohr and Mendelssohn; the architectonic symmetry of his instrumental works and the purity of part-writing in his vocal music aroused admiration among his contemporaries; yet his music failed to endure, and rapidly went into decline after his death. He publ. about 60 works, among them 3 violin sonatas, 4 violin sonatinas, 2 string quartets, piano pieces, sacred works, and a number of lieder, a genre in which he excelled. His theoretical work, Die Natur der Harmonik und Metrik (Leipzig, 1853; 2nd ed., 1873; English transl., London, 1888), is an attempt to apply Hegel's dialectical philosophy to the realm of music. It exercised considerable influence on the later development of German theory of harmony; among other German scholars, Riemann was influenced by it. Hauptmann's other writings are: Erläuterungen zu J. S. Bachs Kunst der Fuge (Leipzig, 1841; 2nd ed., 1861); Die Lehre von der Harmonik (ed. by Oscar Paul; Leipzig, 1868); Opuscula (miscellaneous writings, edited by E. Hauptmann; Leipzig, 1874). His letters to Spohr and others were edited by F. Hiller (Leipzig, 1876). A. D. Coleridge publ. a selection, in English, of Hauptmann's correspondence as Letters of a Leipzig Cantor (1892).—Cf. O. Paul, Moritz Hauptmann, Eine Denkschrift zur Feier seines Siebzigjährigen Geburtstages am 13. October 1862 (Leipzig, 1862); Stephan Krehl, Moritz Hauptmann; ein Dank- und Gedenkwort (Leipzig, 1918).

Hauschka, Vincenz, gifted cellist and composer; b. Mies, Bohemia, Jan. 21, 1766; d. Vienna, Sept. 13, 1840. He was a pupil of his father, a school teacher; became chorister in Prague cathedral; studied composition with Zöger, cello with Christ. He was appointed cellist to Count Joseph von Thun in Prague (1782); made successful concert tours through Germany performing not only on the cello, but also on the baryton (a popular instrument at the time; Haydn wrote numerous works for it). He publ. 9 sonatas for cello; a book of vocal canons; in MS are several pieces for the baryton.

Hausegger, Friedrich von, Austrian musician; b. St. Andrä, Carinthia, April 26, 1837; d. Graz, Feb. 23, 1899. He was a pupil of Salzman and Otto Desoff; also studied law and became a barrister at Graz. In 1872 he became a teacher of history and theory of music at the Univ. of Graz. He contributed to music periodicals. His Musik als Ausdruck (Vienna, 1885) is a valuable addition to musical esthetics. He also wrote Richard Wagner und Schopenhauer (1890); Vom Jenseits des Künstlers (1893); Die künstlerische Persönlichkeit (1897). After his death, his book, Unsere deutschen Meister, was ed. by R. Louis (1901); his Gesammelte Schriften were brought out by his son in 1939.

Hausegger, Siegmund von, conductor and composer, son of the preceding; b. Graz, Aug. 16, 1872; d. Munich, Oct. 10, 1948. He was trained musically by his father; conducted at the Graz Theater (1895-96) and at Bayreuth (1897). From 1899 to 1902, he was conductor of the Kaim Orch. in Munich; then of the Museum Concerts at Frankfurt (1903-06), the Hamburg Philh. Concerts, and the Blüthner Orch. in Berlin; in 1922 he became president of the Academy of Musical Art in Munich, where he conducted concerts regularly; Mus. D. (1925), Kiel Univ. He married the daughter of Alexander Ritter, Hertha (d. Hamburg, Jan. 15, 1913). At the age of 16, he composed a grand Mass for soli, chorus, orch., and organ, which he himself conducted; in 1890 he brought out his first opera, Helfrid, in Graz; Richard Strauss produced his 3-act comic opera, Zinnober, at the Munich Court Theater (June 19, 1898); in 1899 he conducted his Dionysische Fantasie in Munich, and in 1900, his symphonic poem Barbarossa with the Berlin Philharmonic. He also wrote 2 songs for tenor with orch., 3 songs for baritone with orch., 7 Lieder der Liebe (Lenau), Hymnen an die Nacht; the symph. poem Wieland der Schmied; the men's choruses with orch. Schmied Schmerz, Neuweinlied, Schlachtgesang, Totenmarsch; the mixed choruses with orch. Stimme des Abends, Vor Sonnenaufgang, Schnitterlied, Weihe der Nacht; a Natursymphonie (1911); symph. variations on a children's song, Aufklänge (1919). He also publ. Alexander Ritter, ein Bild seines Charakters und Schaffens (1907); edited R. Wagners Briefe an Frau Julie Ritter (1920) and letters of his father to Peter K. Rosegger (1924). Hausegger's collected essays have appeared under the title Betrachtungen zur Kunst (1921).

Hauser, Miska, violinist; b. Pressburg (Bratislava), 1822; d. Vienna, Dec. 8, 1887. He studied with Kreutzer and others in Vienna, and traveled as a child prodigy in Europe; he played in America and Australia (1853-58), achieving sensational success. However, he abandoned the public stage rather early in life; made his last appearance in Cologne in 1874. He wrote an operetta Der blinde Leiermann; numerous violin pieces, of which Rapsodie hongroise and Lieder ohne Worte enjoyed considerable popularity. He sent correspondence to the 'Ostdeutsche Post' during his American tour; these reports were collected and publ. in 2 vols., Aus dem Wanderbuche eines österreichischen Virtuosen (Leipzig, 1858-59). Vol. 3 of 'History of Music in San Francisco' (San Francisco, 1939; WPA publication) contains his letters of 1853.

Hausmann, Robert, cellist; b. Rottleberode, Harz, Aug. 13, 1852; d. Vienna, Jan. 18, 1909. He studied cello with Theodore Müller in Berlin and with Tiatti in London and Italy. He was the cellist of the Hochberg quartet in Dresden (1872-76); then joined the Joachim quartet (1879), with which he remained until its dissolution after Joachim's death (1907).

Hausmann, Valentin. Four musicians in direct lineal descent bore this name: Valentin I, the eldest, b. Nuremberg, 1484, composed chorales, and was a friend of Luther and of Kapellmeister Joh. Walter. His son, II, was organist and councillor at Gerbstädt, and an industrious composer of motets, canzonets, and dances (intrade, paduane, etc.). A selection of his secular songs and instrumental works was publ. by F. Bölsche in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst' (vol. 16). III, son of the preceding, was organist at Löbejün, and an expert in organ construction. His son, IV, occupied the posts of chapel musician to the Köthen court and organist of Alsleben Chapel; author of a treatise on solmisation. The fifth musician in the Hausmann line, Bartholomäus, son of the preceding, b. Löbejün, 1678, became cathedral organist at Merseburg and Halle, and died as organist and burgomaster at Lauchstädt after 1740. He left in MS several theoretical works.

Haussermann, John, American composer; b. Manila, Philippines, Aug. 21, 1909. He studied in the U. S. at the Cincinnati Cons. and in Paris with Dupré (organ) and Le Flem (composition). — Works: Symphony No. 1 (Cincinnati, Feb. 21, 1941); Symphony No. 2 (Cincinnati, March 31, 1944);

Symphony No. 3 (Cincinnati, April 1, 1949); quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and harpsichord; 2 string quartets; Suite Rustique for cello, flute, and piano; piano works; organ solos; songs. A unique work is a Concerto for voice and orch. (Cincinnati, April 24, 1942), with the vocal part wordless.

Hausswald, Günter, German musicologist; b. Rochlitz, March 11, 1908. He studied piano with Max Pauer in Leipzig and composition with Karg-Elert; musicology with Theodor Kroyer and Grabner. He taught music in Leipzig and Dresden (1933-45); in 1950-53 was on the faculty of the Univ. of Jena. He publ. several valuable monographs: Johann David Heinichens Instr.-Werke (Dresden, 1937), Heinrich Marschner (Dresden, 1938), Die deutsche Oper (Cologne, 1941), Mozarts Serenaden (Leipzig, 1951), Das neue Opernbuch (Dresden, 1951; annual editions in 1953-56), Richard Strauss (Dresden, 1953); edited works by Gluck, Heinichen, Telemann, Weber, etc.

Havingha, Gerhardus, Dutch organist and theorist; b. Groningen, Nov. 15, 1696; d. Alkmaar, March 6, 1753. He studied with his father, a church organist at Groningen; then became an organist at various churches in Holland; publ. Oorspronk en Voortgang der orgelen (Alkmaar, 1727), an important source of organ history and practice in Holland. His suite for harpsichord (Amsterdam, 1725) was republ. by J. Watelet in 1951.

Hawes, William, English composer and conductor; b. London, June 21, 1785; d. there, Feb. 18, 1846. As a boy, he was a chorister at the Chapel Royal (1793-1801); then violinist at Covent Garden (1802); became Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1805; vicar-choral and master of choristers at St. Paul's Cathedral (1812); master of the children of the Chapel Royal (1817); and lay-vicar of Westminster Abbey (1817-20). He was director of English opera at the Lyceum; it was at his suggestion that Weber's Der Freischütz was given for the first time in England (July 22, 1824); he contributed some airs of his own composition to this production. Subsequently, he adapted and produced many Italian, French, and German operas for the English stage; he wrote and staged several light operas, among them, Broken Promises (1825), The Quartette, or Interrupted Harmony (1828), The Sister of Charity (1829), etc. Some of his glees were popular. He edited the publication (in score) of the Triumphes of Oriana (1818), various collections of glees, etc.

Hawkins, Sir John, English music historian; b. London, March 30, 1719; d. there, May 21, 1789. He studied law while serving as a clerk, and soon was able to act as an attorney. An ardent devotee of music, he entered the musical society of the time and was on friendly terms with Handel; he also participated in literary clubs, and knew Samuel Johnson, Goldsmith, and others. A wealthy marriage (1753) enabled him to devote his leisure to literature and music. In the meantime, he progressed on the ladder of success in the legal profession. In 1761, he became a magistrate; in 1763, chairman of the Quarter Sessions; he was knighted in 1772. His first publication dealing with music was brought out anonymously: An Account of the Institution and Progress of the Academy of Ancient Music (1770). The culmination of 16 years of labor was his monumental General History of the Science and Practice of Music, publ. in 1776 in 5 vols., 4to, containing 58 portraits of musicians; it was republ. in 1853 and 1875, by Novello, in 3 vols., 8vo. The first volume of Burney's General History of Music appeared at the same time as the 5 vols. of Hawkins; thus, Hawkins undoubtedly held priority for the first general history of music publ. in England; however, its reception was rather hostile; Burney himself derided Hawkins in an unpublished poem. Yet the Hawkins work contained reliable information, particularly dealing with musical life in London in the 18th century. Hawkins died of a paralytic stroke, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Percy A. Scholes wrote a definitive biography, The Life and Activities of Sir John Hawkins (London, 1953). See also R. Stevenson, 'The Rivals'—Hawkins, Burney, and Boswell, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1950).

Hawley, Charles Beach, American organist; b. Brookfield, Mass., Feb. 14, 1858; d. Red Bank, N. J., Dec. 29, 1915. He studied organ at the Cheshire Military Academy; then took composition lessons in New York with Dudley Buck; then served as organist in various churches; publ. some songs, showing a facile melodic invention.

Hawthorne, Alice. See Winner, Septimus.

Hay, Edward Norman, Irish composer and organist; b. Faversham, April 19, 1889;

d. Belfast, Sept. 10, 1943. He studied organ with Koeller and Eaglefield-Hull; received Mus. Bac. (1911) and Mus. Doc. (1919), Oxford. He was organist of various churches in Ireland. He won the Feis Ceoil Prize in 1916 with his cello sonata on Irish folk tunes, the Cobbett Prize (1917) with his Folksong Phantasy for string quartet, and the Carnegie Award (1918) with his string quartet in A. He also wrote the orchestral compositions The Gilly of Christ, Dunluce (1921), etc.; organ works and songs.

Hay, Frederick Charles, Swiss composer; b. Basel, Sept. 18, 1888; d. Langau, July 18, 1945. He was a medical student; then studied with Huber in Basel, and Widor in Paris and F. Schalk in Vienna; conducted the Univ. of Bern orch. (1912) and oratorio concerts in Geneva (1920-25); taught musicology at the Univ. of Geneva. He wrote the orchestral works Heaven and Earth, Der Dom; concertos for oboe, violin, piano, and viola; Notturmo, Intermezzo e Capriccio, for piano and woodwind orch.; choral works; hymns, and piano pieces.

Hayasaka, Fumio, Japanese composer; b. Sendai-City, Aug. 19, 1914. He studied in Tokyo with Alexander Tcherepnin; won the Weingartner Prize (1938). He has been particularly successful in writing for Japanese motion pictures; wrote the score for the film Rashomon, the recipient of first prize at the International Festival in Venice (1952). Among his works are Overture in D major (Tokyo, March 17, 1940); Piano Concerto No. 1 (Tokyo, June 22, 1948); The Ancient Dance (Tokyo, May 15, 1939); Yukara, suite (Tokyo, June 9, 1955); etc.

Haydn, (Franz) Joseph, renowned Austrian composer; b. Rohrau-on-the-Leitha, Lower Austria, March 31 (baptized April 1), 1732; d. Vienna, May 31, 1809. He was the second son of Matthias Haydn, a wheelwright, the sexton and organist of the village church and a fine tenor singer. His mother, Maria Koller, was a daughter of the market inspector, sang in the village choir, and had been cook in the household of Count Harrach, the lord of the village. Of their 12 children, 3 became musicians. On Sundays and holidays there was music at home, the father accompanying the voices on the harp, which he played by ear. At 5 years of age, Haydn's musical aptitude was noticed by a paternal cousin, Johann Matthias Frankh, a good musician and choral director at Hainburg. He took the boy home with him and gave him elementary instruction, taught him Latin, singing, the violin, and other instruments. Georg Reutter, musical director at St. Stephen's, Vienna, had his attention drawn to the boy's talent, and engaged him as chorister for St. Stephen's, undertaking his further education. Haydn was 8 years of age when he went to Vienna. Besides the daily service, and 2 hours' choir-practice, he studied religion, Latin, writing, and arithmetic. He also received instruction in singing, and on the violin and harpsichord, from Finsterbusch and Gegenbauer. Harmony and composition were supposed to be taught by Reutter, who did not trouble himself about the matter. Still, unaided, Haydn applied himself assiduously to composition; though ridiculed, instead of encouraged, by Reutter, he persisted, and spent a little money, begged from his father for the renewal of his clothing, in the purchase of Fux's Gradus ad Parnassum and Mattheson's Vollkommener Kapellmeister, the principles of which he labored to master. In 1748 his voice began to break, and he was supplanted by his brother Michael, who had joined him in 1745. Reutter made a practical joke which Haydn played on a fellow-student a pretext for punishment and dismissal. Some poor but kindhearted friends gave him shelter; he also obtained a few pupils, and a sympathetic Viennese tradesman lent him 150 florins; he was thus enabled to rent an attic room for himself, together with a rickety harpsichord. Here he could practice uninterruptedly; his chief sources of study were keyboard sonatas by K. P. E. Bach. He also diligently practiced the violin, but was (in his own words) 'no conjuror on any instrument, though able to play a concerto.' In the same house lived Metastasio, the poet, who taught him Italian, and recommended him as musical instructor to a Spanish family, the de Martinez, for their daughter Marianne. Through playing her accompaniments at the house of Porpora, her singing-teacher, he became acquainted with that surly old master, and in the performance of various menial services gained his good will sufficiently to receive valuable instruction in composition from him, and a recommendation to the Venetian ambassador for a stipend, which was granted, of 50 francs a month. Haydn went with Porpora to the baths of Mannersdorf, and made the acquaintance of Bonno, Wagenseil, Dittersdorf, and Gluck. Thus far he had composed sonatas, trios, and other instrumental music, a Mass and the Singspiel Der krumme Teufel, produced in 1752 at the Stadttheater (a satire on the lame Baron Affligio, official director of the court opera, and suppressed after the 3d representation but afterwards given in Prague, Berlin, and other cities). He received 25 ducats for this work, of which the libretto alone has been preserved. One of his sonatas earned the good graces of Countess Thun, who engaged him as harpsichordist and singing master. Haydn also met Baron Karl Josef Fürnberg, for whom he wrote his first string quartets. These two wealthy friends introduced him to Count Ferdinand Maximilian Morzin, who, in 1758, appointed Haydn 'Musik-director' and 'Kammercompositeur' at Luka-več, near Pilsen. In 1759 Prince Paul Anton Esterházy heard one of his symphonies, and asked the Count to release Haydn to him. In 1761 Haydn entered his service as 2nd Kapellmeister at the Prince's estate in Eisenstadt, becoming 1st Kapellmeister in 1766. On Nov. 26, 1760, Haydn married Maria Anna, the eldest daughter of an early benefactor, Keller, a wig-maker. He was in love with the second daughter, but she entered a convent, and Haydn was induced to marry the sister. Of an extravagant, vixenish, incompatible temperament, she made their married life miserable. In 1762 the 'great' Esterházy, Prince Nikolaus, succeeded his deceased brother, and under his régime the status of music and musicians was much improved. For the Prince's new palace at Esterház, besides the daily music, Haydn had to provide two weekly operatic performances and two formal concerts; while in his service, Haydn wrote some 80 symphonies, 43 quartets, numerous divertimenti, clavier works of all descriptions, and nearly all his operas, besides other instrumental and vocal comps. His music became known throughout Europe; in 1766 the official gazette alluded to him as 'our national favorite.' In 1780 he was elected member of the Modena Philharmonic Society; in 1784 Prince Henry of Prussia sent him a gold medal and his portrait; in 1785 he was commissioned to write a 'passione instrumentale,' The Seven Last Words, for the Cathedral of Cadiz; in 1787 King Friedrich Wilhelm II gave him a diamond ring; many other distinctions were conferred upon him. During his visits to Vienna, his friendship for Mozart developed. In 1790 Prince Nikolaus died, and his son Anton curtailed the chapel music, retaining Haydn, however, as Kapellmeister, and increasing his stipend of 1,000 florins by an additional 400. He was virtually independent; his time was his own, and he added to his income by the sale of his works. For some time he had received pressing invitations to visit London. He had settled in Vienna, when Salomon appeared with a tempting offer, and induced him to accompany him, although his friends, especially Mozart, tried to dissuade him. In 1791, he arrived in England, and remained there 18 months, fêted by royalty and the nobility. In July, Oxford Univ. conferred on him the honorary degree of Mus. D.; and his best orchestral works, the 'Salomon symphonies,' were written during this and the following visit. In 1792, Haydn returned via Bonn to Frankfurt, for the coronation of Emperor Franz II; went then to Vienna, also visiting his native place to witness the unveiling of a monument created in his honor by Count Harrach, his mother's former employer. In that year, he gave Beethoven the lessons with which the latter was so dissatisfied. In 1794, he revisited London; his former triumphs were repeated, and though pressed by the King to make England his home, he returned to his native land in affluence, at the invitation of a new Prince, to reorganize the Esterházy chapel. But his fame, though great, was not yet at its zenith. In 1797 he composed Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser, which became the Austrian National Anthem; in 1798, he wrote his immortal oratorio Die Schöpfung (The Creation), and in 1801, Die Jahreszeiten (The Seasons). But his health began to fail, and thenceforward he lived in retirement. Only once did he again appear in public, on March 27, 1808, at a special performance of The Creation; but he had to be carried out before the finish, friends and pupils, among whom was Beethoven, surrounding him to take leave. He lingered until 1809, when his end was hastened by the shock of the bombardment of Vienna by the French. He was buried in the Hundsturm churchyard. As a result of some fantastic events, his skull became separated from his body before his reinterment at Eisenstadt in 1820, and after many peregrinations, was exhibited in the hall of the Society of Friends of Music in Vienna. It was finally reburied in Eisenstadt with the body on June 5, 1954, attended by official ceremony.

Although of unprepossessing personal appearance, stern, dignified in aspect, and laconic in speech, Haydn was of a humorous, agreeable, and amiable temperament. The religious side of his character is shown in the inscriptions of all his scores, with the motto 'In Nomine Domini' and all ending with 'Laus Deo' or 'Soli Deo Gloria.'

Haydn was the first great master of the new instrumental style which reached its highest development in the works of Beethoven. Since the publication of instrumental works by his Viennese predecessors, by the composers of the 'Mannheim school,' and by other early symphonists, Haydn can no longer be regarded as the 'Father of the symphony' or the 'Father of the modern orchestra.' But he availed himself of the forms and achievements of his predecessors, and his greater genius soon caused the earlier efforts to fall into undeserved oblivion. That his music accomplished this is the most eloquent tribute to its inherent power and greatness; it is not the mere creation of a new form that counts, but the artistic content. Haydn's position as the first 'great master' of the new instrumental style remains unshaken. His melodic vein is inexhaustible; the gayety of 'Papa Haydn's' lighter music went straight to the hearts of the impressionable Viennese, and lent new vivacity to European concert halls; in his moods of tenderness or of passion, he is a worthy forerunner of Beethoven. And to all this must be added the marvelous fertility of his creative resources. The precise extent of Haydn's productivity will probably never be known. Many works are irretrievably lost; others, listed in various catalogues, may have never existed, or were duplications of extant works; some are of doubtful authenticity; several are definitely spurious. Thus, the celebrated Toy Symphony appears not to be a work by Haydn, but by Leopold Mozart. The authorship of the so-called Zittau Divertimenti, including the one in B-flat major with the Chorale St. Antonii, is also very doubtful. If Haydn was indeed not the author, then the Variations on a Theme by Haydn of Brahms, based on the Chorale St. Antonii, is a misnamed work. Two piano trios are now definitely known to be the works of Haydn's pupil Ignaz Pleyel, who was capable of imitating his master's style with amazing ingenuity. The generally accepted list of Haydn's authentic symphonies comprises 104 items; but see the monumental work The Symphonies of Haydn by H. C. Robbins Landon (1955) for particulars. Many of these symphonies bear descriptive titles, attached to them by publishers (only a few of them were authorized by Haydn himself, e.g., Nos. 6-8: Le Matin, Le Midi, and Le Soir): the Abschiedssymphonie (Farewell Symphony; performed by Haydn at Esterházy in 1772 as a humorous and sad leave-taking when Prince Esterházy decided to disband the orchestra; this explanation of the origin of the Farewell Symphony, found in Aneddoti piacevoli ed interessanti by G. G. Ferrari, 1830, is more plausible than the generally accepted one that the performance of the work was a hint that the orchestra needed a vacation); La Chasse (The Hunt, 1781); L'Ours (The Bear, 1786); La Poule (The Hen, 1786); Oxford (performed at Oxford in 1791, when Haydn was given an honorary degree); Paukenschlag (Drumstroke, 1791; known as Surprise Symphony); Military Symphony (1794); Die Uhr (The Clock, 1794); Paukenwirbel (Drumroll, 1795). The last of the 12 Salomon Symphonies (written for the London impresario Salomon) is known as the London Symphony; 6 symphonies written for performances in Paris are known as Paris Symphonies. Similarly distinctive titles are attached to some of Haydn's 82 string quartets: Russian Quartets (1781; known in Italian as Gli scherzi; the 2nd of the set, The Joke; 3d, The Bird; 5th, How Do You Do?); Prussian Quartets (1787; 5th of the set, The Dream; 6th, The Frog, or The House on Fire, or The Row in Vienna); Razor Quartet (1788; No. 2 of the set written for the Vienna merchant Johann Tost); Lerchenquartett (Lark Quartet; 1790; 5th of the Tost Quartets; also known as Hornpipe Quartet); Quintenquartett (Quartet of the Fifths, 1796-97; also known as The Bell or The Donkey; the minuet called Hexenminuet); Kaiserquartett (Emperor Quartet, 1796-97; contains variations on Haydn's hymn Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser); The Sunrise (1796-97). Other instrumental works include about 15 piano concertos; 3 violin concertos; 2 cello concertos (the most celebrated one, in D major, has been ascribed, erroneously, to Anton Kraft); 2 horn concertos; trumpet concerto; flute concerto; 5 concertos for 2 flutes with instruments; 8 Notturmi for the King of Naples (1790); a symphonie concertante for oboe, violin, bassoon, cello, and orch. (1792); about 40 divertimenti; numerous string trios, and some 35 piano trios; 6 duets for violin and viola; a violin sonata; a great number of works for baryton, written for Prince Esterházy, who was a baryton player: 125 divertimenti for baryton with viola and cello, 6 duets for barytons, 6 sonatas for baryton and cello, 12 cassations for baryton with other instruments, 3 baryton concertos; about 60 piano sonatas (of which 8 are lost); various pieces for piano solo; 32 miscellaneous arrangements written for mechanical clocks. Vocal Works: Operas and Singspiele: Der krumme Teufel (1752) and Der neue krumme Teufel (1758); 4 Italian comedies, La Marchesa Nespoli, La vedova, Il dottore, and Il Sganarello (all in 1762); Acide, opera seria (Eisenstadt, Jan. 11, 1763); La cantarina, opera buffa (Esterházy, 1767); Lo speciale, opera buffa (Esterházy, 1768); Le pescatrici, opera buffa (Esterházy, Sept. 16, 1770); L'infedeltà delusa, burletta (Esterházy, July 26, 1773); L'incontro improvviso (Esterházy, Aug. 29, 1775); Il mondo della luna (Esterházy, Aug. 3, 1777); La vera costanza (Esterházy, 1779); L'isola disabitata (Esterházy, Dec. 6, 1779); La fedeltà premiata (Esterházy, Oct. 15, 1780); Orlando Paladino (Esterházy, 1782); Armida (Esterházy, Feb. 26, 1784); Orfeo ed Euridice (originally entitled L'anima del filosofo; 1791; revised form, 1805); incidental music to various plays; several marionette operas.—3 oratorios: Il ritorno di Tobia (Vienna, April 2, 1775); The Creation (Haydn's most famous choral work; written to an English text by Lidley; translated into German and first performed, April 29, 1798 at the Schwarzenberg Palace in Vienna), and The Seasons (German text by Gottfried van Swieten after James Thomson; Vienna, April 24, 1801); several cantatas, numerous arias, etc.; The Seven Last Words (Die Sieben Worte des Erlösers am Kreuze; 1785; originally written for the Cadiz Cathedral as a suite of 7 instrumental sonatas with a concluding movement Il terremoto; then a series of accompanied recitatives were added; also arranged by Haydn in 1796 for solo voices, chorus, and orch.); 14 Masses (only 13 extant; one of them, Missa Rorate coeli desuper, in G major, long regarded as lost, was discovered by H. C. Robbins Landon in 1957); 2 Te Deums; a Stabat Mater; offertories; about 45 songs with piano accompaniment; 2 vocal duets, 4 vocal trios, and 9 vocal quartets with piano accompaniment; about 50 canons and rounds for 3-8 voices; arrangements of 150 songs of Scotland, publ. by Napier as Selections of Original Scots Songs in Three Parts, the Harmony by Haydn; arrangements of Scotch, Irish, and Welsh melodies in Thomson's Select Melodies of Scotland, Ireland and Wales; the hymn Gott erhalte Franz den Kaiser, which was the Austrian national anthem (until 1918).

Robbins Landon's The Symphonies of H. (London, 1955); see also his article H. and Authenticity in the 'Music Review' (May, 1955). A complete thematic catalogue, by Anthony van Hoboken, began to appear in 1957. A monumental edition of Haydn's works in about 80 volumes, prepared by G. Adler, H. Kretschmar, E. Mandyczewski, M. Seiffert, and others, was begun in 1907 by Breitkopf & Härtel, but was interrupted twice by the two world wars; 4 vols. of symphonies (3 edited by E. Mandyczewski, the 4th by H. Schultz), 3 vols. of piano sonatas (ed. by Päsler); the oratorios Die Schöpfung und Die Jahreszeiten (Mandyczewski), and songs (Friedlaender) have appeared; an attempt to continue the publication was made by the Haydn Society of Boston in 1950, but it, too, failed.—CORRESPONDENCE: No complete edition of Haydn's letters is available. The largest collection is that translated by Lady Wallace in her book Letters of Distinguished Musicians (London, 1867); J. C. Hadden, G. Thomson, His Life and Correspondence (London, 1898), contains letters from Haydn. Haydn's correspondence with W. Forster is published in W. Sandys and S. A. Forster, History of the Violin (London, 1864).

Haydn, (Johann) Michael, Austrian composer, brother of Franz Joseph Haydn; b. Rohrau, Sept. 14, 1737; d. Salzburg, Aug. 10, 1806. He served as boy soprano at St. Stephen's Cathedral in Vienna (1745-55); his voice was remarkable for its wide range, reaching 3 octaves. He replaced his brother in solo parts, when a younger voice was required. He studied composition mainly by reading books on counterpoint, particularly Gradus ad Parnassum by Fux. In 1757 he became chapelmaster at Grosswardein; in 1762, musical director to Archbishop Sigismund at Salzburg. In 1768 he married the daughter of the organist Lipp, Maria Magdalena, an excellent soprano singer, who was praised by Mozart. The French occupation of Salzburg in 1800 deprived him of his property, but he was aided by his brother. The Empress Maria Theresia rewarded him handsomely for a Mass composed at her command; it was performed at Laxenburg Palace on Oct. 4, 1801, and Maria Theresia herself sang the soprano solo part. He opened a school of composition, and educated many distinguished pupils, including Reicha and Carl Maria von Weber. In 1833, Martin Bischofsreiter, a Benedictine monk, published Partitur-Fundamente, a collection of thoroughbass exercises written by Michael Haydn for his scholars. He composed a Mass and vespers for Prince Esterházy, who twice offered to make him assistant chapel master; but Haydn declined, hoping that the Salzburg chapel would be reorganized. A prolific composer, his best works were his sacred compositions, which his brother held in high esteem. Although he had advantageous offers for publication from Breitkopf & Härtel, he was reluctant to accept, so that most of his music remained in MS at the time of his death. He left some 400 sacred works, including oratorios, cantatas, Requiems, Masses, graduals, offertories, etc.; also several operas; 2 collections of 4-part songs; some 60 symphonies; serenades, marches, minuets; concertos for flute, violin, and harpsichord, and a double concerto for viola, organ, and strings; string quartets and quintets; also a sextet. A selection of his Masses was edited by A. M. Klafsky in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (vols. XXII and XXXII), a selection of his instrumental works was edited and partly reorchestrated by L. H. Perger, in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (vol. XIV, 2), including a symph. in E♭ major (1783), a symph. in C major (1788), a Turkish March, etc.—Cf. F. J. Schinn and G. Otter, Biographische Skizze von J. M. Haydn (Salzburg, 1808); C. Haydon, Claude M., Australian composer; b. South Yarra, Melbourne, Nov. 8, 1884. He settled in Wellington, New Zealand; wrote an opera Paolo and Francesca, produced at Melbourne in 1920; much incidental music; also chamber music.

Haydon, Glen, American musicologist; b. Inman, Kansas, Dec. 9, 1896. He studied at the Univ. of California, Berkeley (B.A., 1918; M.A., 1921); then in Paris (with Eugene Cools) and in Vienna; obtained his Ph.D. at Vienna Univ. in 1932. Concurrently, he held the post of music instructor at the Univ. of California; in 1934, appointed head of the Dept. of Music at the Univ. of North Carolina; lectured at the Univ. of Michigan (1947), Harvard Univ. (1956), etc.; was president of the American Musicological Society from 1942-44. Among his theoretical publications are the extensive study, The Evolution of the Six-Four Chord (Univ. of California Press, Berkeley, 1933) and Introduction to Musicology (N. Y., 1941); also publ. a Graded Course of Clarinet Playing (1927), and translated Jeppesen's Counterpoint: The Polyphonic Vocal Style of the 16th Century (N. Y., 1939).

Hayes, Gerald Ravenscourt, English writer; b. London, April 18, 1889; d. there, Sept. 13, 1955. He entered the Hydrographic Dept. of the Admiralty in 1911; became chief cartographer in 1934; then transferred to Secretary's Dept. (1946-53). Apart from his writings on cartography, he became interested in musical instruments; was one of the founders of the Dolmetsch Foundation; publ. The Treatment of Instrumental Music (1928); The Viols and Other Bowed Instruments (1930); King's Musick, an anthology (1937); The Lute and Other Plucked Instruments (1938); numerous articles on instruments in various publications.

Hayes, Philip, English organist and composer, son of William Hayes; b. Oxford, April, 1738; d. London, March 19, 1797. He studied mainly with his father; Mus. B., Oxford (May 18, 1763); became Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1767; organist of New College, Oxford (1776); succeeded his father as organist of Magdalen College and prof. of music in the Univ. (1777); also received his Mus. D. the same year; organist of St. John's College (1790).—Works: oratorio Prophecy (Oxford, 1781); a masque, Telemachus; odes, anthems, services, psalms, glees; 6 concertos for organ, harpsichord, or piano (1769); also some numbers in Dibdin's The Two Misers and Dr. Arnold's Two to One. He edited 'Harmonia Wiccamica' (London, 1780).

Hayes, Roland, distinguished Negro tenor; b. Curryville, Georgia, June 3, 1887. He studied with A. Calhoun at Chattanooga, and later at Fiske Univ. in Nashville; further in Boston with Arthur J. Hubbard and Henschel, and in Europe. Beginning in 1916, he gave concert tours in the U. S., and gradually won the respect of the musical world for his lyric rendition of classical lieder and for his incomparable interpretation of Negro spirituals. In 1921, he went to Europe for further study; in later years, gave successful concerts in major European cities. In 1925 he was awarded the Spingarn Medal for 'most outstanding achievement among colored people'; in 1939 he received the honorary degree of Mus. D. Wesleyan Univ., Delaware, Ohio. In his programs, he featured many songs by American composers; also modern French songs. His home is in Brookline, Mass. He has published arrangements of 30 Negro spirituals, My Songs (N. Y., 1948).—Cf. Mackinley Helm, Angel Mo' and Her Son, Roland Hayes (Boston, 1932).

Hayes, William, English organist and composer; b. Gloucester, Dec., 1705 (baptized on Jan. 6, 1706); d. Oxford, July 27, 1777. He was a chorister at Gloucester cathedral; organist of St. Mary's, Shrewsbury (1729-31); then of Worcester cathedral (1731-34). In 1734 he became organist of Magdalen College, Oxford; Mus. Bac. (Oxford, 1735); Univ. prof. of music (1742); Mus. D. (1749). He conducted the Gloucester music festival in 1757, 1760, and 1763. His canons Alleluiah and Miserere nobis, and his glee Melting airs soft joys inspire won prizes offered by the Catch Club in 1763. His works include a masque, Circe; psalms, odes, glees, canons, ballads, and cantatas. He also wrote Remarks on Mr. Avison's Essay on Musical Expression (1762); Anecdotes of the Five Music-Meetings (1768); and was co-editor of Boyce's 'Cathedral Music.'

Haynes, John C., American music publisher; b. Brighton, Mass., Sept. 9, 1829; d. Boston, May 3, 1907. He entered the employ of Oliver Ditson in 1845; was given an interest in the business in 1851, and on Jan. 1, 1857, became a co-partner, the firm name being changed to O. Ditson & Co. In 1889, after the death of O. Ditson, Haynes became president on the firm's incorporation. —Cf. the 'Musician' (June, 1907).

Haynes, Walter Battison, English organist and composer; b. Kempsey, near Worcester, Nov. 21, 1859; d. London, Feb. 4, 1900. He studied first with his uncle, an organist, then with F. Taylor and E. Prout; also studied at the Leipzig Cons., with C. Reinecke and S. Jadassohn, where he won the Mozart scholarship. In 1884 he was appointed organist at St. Philip's Church, Sydenham; from 1890, also taught at the Royal Academy of Music. His works include a symphony; a concert overture; an Idyll for violin and orch.; a piano trio; organ pieces; 2 cantatas for women's voices, Fairies' Isle and A Sea Dream.

Hays, William Shakespeare, American song composer; b. Louisville, Ky., July 19, 1837; d. there, July 22, 1907. He wrote his first song at 16 years of age, and published nearly 300, which once had an enormous sale totaling several millions. The most widely known were Evangeline, My Southern Sunny Home, Write Me a Letter from Home, Driven from Home, and Mollie Darling.

Haywood, Charles, American musicologist; b. Grodno, Russia, Dec. 20, 1904; came to the U. S. in 1916; studied music at Columbia Univ. (M.A., 1940; Ph.D., 1949); also attended the Juilliard School of Music (1930-35). His first profession was that of a singer; he was a member of the Chautauqua Opera Company, Philadelphia Opera Company, etc.; also appeared as a singer on the radio; taught voice at the Juilliard School (1939-51). In 1939 he was appointed member of the faculty at Queens College, N. Y., as lecturer on opera, folk music, and American music. He publ. a valuable compendium, A Bibliography of North American Folklore and Folksong (N. Y., 1951); edited Art Songs of Soviet Russia (N. Y., 1947); has prepared for publication a large work on Shakespeare and music, and several bibliographical studies.

Hazlehurst, Cecil, English composer; b. Higher Runcorn, May 22, 1880. He studied at the Liverpool College of Music and the Univ. of Manchester. He composed a grand opera, Cleopatra (1918); comic opera, The Prince Elect; children's opera, The Dream; piano quintet; an organ fugue on a theme by Elgar; a choral ballad, The Saga of Baldur; songs and piano pieces.

Head, Michael, English singer, pianist, and composer; b. Eastbourne, Jan. 28, 1900. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with Frederick Corder; in 1927, was appointed prof. of piano there. In 1947, he made a tour through Asia, Canada, and Australia as singer and pianist. He publ. several song cycles: Over the Rim of the Moon (1918); Songs of the Countryside (1929); More Songs of the Countryside (1932); Snoubirds (7 songs; 1954); etc.; also wrote choruses and chamber music.

Heap, Charles Swinnerton, English pianist and conductor; b. Birmingham, April 10, 1847; d. there, June 11, 1900. He won the Mendelssohn scholarship in 1865 and studied at the Leipzig Cons. for 2 years under Moscheles, Hauptmann, Richter, and Reinecke; Mus. Bac., Cambridge (1871); Mus. D. (1872). He was conductor of the Birmingham Philharmonic from 1870-86; also conducted the Wolverhampton Musical Festival, North Staffordshire Festivals (from their foundation in 1888 until 1899), the Birmingham Festival Choral Society (from 1895); became chorusmaster of the Birmingham Festival in 1897. He wrote an oratorio, The Captivity; cantatas, The Voice of Spring (1882), The Maid of Astolat (1886), and Fair Rosamond (1890); 2 overtures; a quintet for piano and wind instruments; a piano trio; violin sonata, clarinet sonata, piano sonata; anthems; songs and organ pieces.

Hebenstreit, Pantaleon, German musician; b. Eisleben, 1669; d. Dresden, Nov. 15, 1750. In his early years, he was engaged variously as a violinist and a dancing master in Leipzig, but fled from his creditors to Merseburg, where the idea of improving the dulcimer was suggested to him, and he invented the instrument with which he made long and brilliant concert tours, and which Louis XIV named the 'Pantaleon,' after its originator's Christian name. As a precursor of the piano, it has disappeared in the process of evolution. In 1706, Hebenstreit was appointed Kapellmeister and dancing master to the court at Eisenach; in 1714, 'pantaleon chamber musician' at the Dresden court.

Heckel, Emil, German music publisher and piano manufacturer; b. Mannheim, May 22, 1831; d. there, March 28, 1908. He was head (from 1857, co-partner) of the music house and piano manufactory founded by his father, K. Ferdinand Heckel. He was the first president of the 'Allgemeine Richard Wagner-Verein'; the bust of Wagner (by J. Hoffart) in his residence at Mannheim is the earliest Wagner monument. Heckel was instrumental in the organization of the Bayreuth Festivals; became one of the directors of Bayreuth. His son, Karl, edited Briefe Richard Wagners an Emil Heckel (1899; English transl., by W. A. Ellis, 1899).

Heckel, Johann Adam, German manufacturer of musical instruments; b. Adorf, July 14, 1812; d. Biebrich, April 13, 1877. From 1824-35, he worked with the bassoonist K. Almenröder on experiments for improving the clarinet and bassoon. His son and successor, Wilhelm (b. Biebrich, Jan. 25, 1856; d. there, Jan. 13, 1909), continued his experiments with success and constructed the 'Heckelphone' (a baritone oboe; used by R. Strauss in the score of Salome) in 1905; also made various changes in the construction of other woodwind instruments. He wrote Der Fagott. Kurzgefasste Abhandlung über seine historische Entwicklung, seinen Bau und seine Spielweise (1899; new ed., 1931).

Heckel, Wolf, German lutenist at Strasbourg in the 16th century. He publ. a Lautenbuch (Strasbourg, 1556, 1562), a valuable and interesting collection of old German, French, and Italian songs, dances, fantasias, ricercari, pavaues, and saltarelli, arranged for 2 lutes; a copy of it is in the Hamburg town library. Reprints from it have been publ. by J. Wolf and L. Nowak in 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich,' XIV, 1 and XXXVII, 2 respectively, by H. D. Bruger in his 'Lautenschule' and W. Tapert in 'Sang und Klang aus alter Zeit.'

Heckscher, Céleste de Longpré (née Massey), American composer; b. Philadelphia, Feb. 23, 1860; d. there, Feb. 18, 1928. Of an artistic family (her grandfather was the artist Louis de Longpré), she studied piano and participated in the musical affairs of the city; was for many years president of the Philadelphia Operatic Society. She began to compose about 1890; wrote the operas The Flight of Time and Rose of Destiny (Philadelphia, May 2, 1918); Dances of the Pyrenees, an orch. suite (Philadelphia, Feb. 17, 1911); a fantasy To the Forest for violin and piano (1902); songs and piano pieces. Her style, melodious and without pretensions, is akin to Chami-nade's.—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and Its Composers (Philadelphia, 1927; pp. 256-58).

Hédouin (ā-d'wān), Pierre, French lawyer and littérateur; b. Boulogne, July 28, 1789; d. Paris, Dec., 1868. He studied law in Paris from 1809; became an advocate, and for 30 years practiced in Boulogne. He settled in Paris in 1842 when he was appointed head of the Ministry of Public Works. His relationship with Monsigny fostered a predilection for music and the arts, and he occupied his leisure moments with literature, especially that of music, and in composition. He wrote novels, contributed to the 'Annales archéologiques,' 'Annales romantiques,' and to several musical periodicals; composed nocturnes, romances, and songs, also writing the words; furnished the libretti of several operas.—Musical writings: Notice historique de Monsigny (1821); Gosssec, sa vie et ses ouvrages (1852); De l'Abandon des anciens compositeurs; Ma première visite à Grétry; Richard Cœur de Lion de Grétry; Lesueur; Meyerbeer à Boulogne-sur-Mer; Paganini; Joseph Dessauer (publ. in 'Le Ménestrel'); Trois anecdotes musicales (on Lesueur, Mlle. Dugazon, and Gluck) in his 'Mosaïque' (1856; a published collection of his miscellaneous articles); Gluck, son arrivée en France (1859); etc.

Heermann (här'-man), Hugo, distinguished German violinist; b. Heilbronn, Württemberg, March 3, 1844; d. Merano, Nov. 6, 1935. As a boy he was taken to Rossini in Paris for advice; then was sent to the Brussels Cons., where he studied violin with L. J. Meerts; made his début playing his teacher's violin concerto (1860); graduated with 1st prize in 1861; then studied with Joachim. In 1864 he settled in Frankfurt, where he taught at Hoch's Cons.; was first violinist of the famous Frankfurt String Quartet. Frankfurt remained his permanent residence for 40 years; frequent leaves of absence enabled him to make extended tours in Europe, the U. S., and Australia. From 1906-09 he taught violin at the Chicago Mus. College; then taught at Stern's Cons. in Berlin (1911), and at the Geneva Cons. (1912). He retired in 1922, and lived mostly in Merano, Italy. He held the distinction of having been the first to play the Brahms violin concerto in Paris, New York, and Australia. He publ. a new ed. of Bériot's École transcendente du violon (1896); publ. his memoirs, Meine Lebenserinnerungen (Leipzig, 1935).

Hegar, Friedrich, Swiss composer and conductor; b. Basel, Oct. 11, 1841; d. Zürich, June 2, 1927. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Hauptmann, Richter, Ferdinand David, Rietz, and Plaiddy. In 1860, he played violin in a Warsaw orch.; then taught music in Gebweiler, Alsace. In 1863, he established himself in Zürich, where he was active as violinist, conductor, and pedagogue. He conducted the Choral Society of Zürich for 37 years (1864-1901), and the concerts of the Tonhalle Orch. for 41 years (1865-1906); also led various other choral organizations. He was a founder of the Zürich Music School (later, Zürich Cons.) in 1876, and its director until 1914. He received many honors, including membership in the Berlin Academy of Arts in 1917. As a composer, he contributed a great deal to Swiss choral music, particularly in the field of romantic ballads. His most successful work is Manasse for soli, mixed chorus, and orch. (Zürich, Oct. 25, 1885; revised version, Jan. 10, 1888); other works are Hymne an die Musik, for chorus and orch. (1870); Das Herz von Douglas, for soli, male chorus, and orch. (1905); Festival Overture (1895); cello concerto (1919); Ballade for violin and orch. (1922); a string quartet, a violin sonata; 16 songs, etc.—Cf. A. Steiner, Friedrich Hegar, sein Leben und Wirken (Zürich, 1928); W. Jerg, Hegar, ein Meister des Männerchorliedes (Lachen, 1946).

Hegedüs, Ferencz, celebrated Hungarian violinist; b. Fünfkirchen, Feb. 26, 1881; d. London, Dec. 12, 1944. His precocious talent was carefully fostered by his father, a professional cellist; his mother (of Spanish origin) was also a musician; he then studied at the Budapest Cons. with Hubay (1893-1916; his style of playing had the manner tours of Europe; played in the U. S. with excellent success in 1906-7 and again in 1916; his style of playing had the manner of the Hungarian school; but his performances of Beethoven and other classics were entirely traditional. He lived in Switzerland after 1930; then went to London.

Heger, Robert, conductor and composer; b. Strasbourg, Aug. 19, 1886. He studied composition with Max Schillings in Munich; then conducted opera in Strasbourg (1907), Nuremberg (1913-21), and at the State Opera in Vienna (1925-33); Berlin State Opera (1933-45); at the Berlin City Opera (1945-50), and (from 1950) at the Munich Opera. From 1950-54, he was president of the Munich Academy of Music. He wrote several operas, among them Ein Fest auf Haderslev (Nuremberg, Nov. 12, 1919), Der Bettler Namenlos (Munich, April 8, 1932), Der verlorene Sohn (Dresden, March 11, 1936), and Lady Hamilton (Nuremberg, Feb. 11, 1951); 2 symphonies; a symph. poem, Hero und Leander; many songs.

Hegner, Anton, cellist and composer; b. Copenhagen, March 2, 1861; d. New York, Dec. 4, 1915. He studied at the Copenhagen Cons.; played with great success in Copenhagen, Berlin, and New York, where he settled in 1899 as a teacher. He wrote American Festival Overture, for orch.; 4 quartets, a piano trio; many soli for cello, violin; about 60 songs; 2 concertos for cello.

Hegner, Otto, pianist; b. Basel, Nov. 18, 1876; d. Hamburg, Feb. 22, 1907. He studied with Huber in Basel and later with Eugene d'Albert. He appeared as a child prodigy in Germany; in 1888, at the age of 12, he made an American tour, and for several years, was regarded as one of the most phenomenal young pianists. His early death cut short the development of his brilliant career. His sister, Anna Hegner (b. Basel, March 1, 1881), was a fine violinist.

Hegyesi (heh'gye-sē) (Magyarization of his real name, Spitzer), Louis, noted Hungarian cellist; b. Arpad, Nov. 3, 1853; d. Cologne, Feb. 27, 1894. He studied with Demis in Vienna and with Franchomme in Paris; then played in the orch. of the Vienna Opera; in 1887, he became prof. at the Cologne Cons. He publ. several brilliant cello pieces, and a valuable manual, Neue rhythmische Tonleiter- und Akkordstudien.

Heidingsfeld, Ludwig, German composer; b. Jauer, March 24, 1854; d. Danzig, Sept. 14, 1920. He studied at Stern's Cons. in Berlin, and later taught there. He subsequently settled in Danzig, and founded a conservatory there (1899). He wrote symph. poems, King Lear and Der Totentanz; piano pieces and songs.

Heifetz, Jascha, celebrated violinist; b. Vilna, Feb. 2, 1901. His father, Ruben Heifetz, an able musician, taught him the rudiments of violin playing at a very early age; he then studied with Elias Malkin at the Vilna Music School, and played in public before he was 5 years old; at the age of 6, he played Mendelssohn's concerto in Kovno. In 1910 he was taken by his father to St. Petersburg, and entered the Cons. there in the class of J. Nalbandian; after a few months, he was accepted as a pupil by Leopold Auer. He gave his first public concert in St. Petersburg on April 30, 1911. The following year, with a letter of recommendation from Auer, he went to Berlin; his first concert there (May 24, 1912), in the large hall of the Hochschule für Musik attracted great attention: Artur Nikisch engaged him to play the Tchaikovsky concerto with the Berlin Philharmonic (Oct. 28, 1912), and Heifetz obtained sensational success as a child prodigy of unexampled gifts. He then played in Austria and Scandinavia. After the Russian Revolution of 1917, he went to America, by way of Siberia and the Orient. His début at Carnegie Hall, N. Y. (Oct. 27, 1917) won for him the highest expression of enthusiasm from the public and in the press; veritable triumphs followed during his tour of the U. S., and soon his fame spread all over the world. He made his first London appearance on May 5, 1920; toured Australia (1921) and the Orient (1923), Palestine (1926), and South America. He revisited Russia in 1934, and was welcomed enthusiastically. He became a naturalized American citizen in 1925, and made his home at Beverly Hills, Calif.; in subsequent years he continued to travel as a concert violinist, visiting virtually every country in the world, and appearing with major symphony orchestras. The quality of his playing is unique in luminous transparency of texture, tonal perfection, and formal equilibrium of phrasing; he never allows his artistic temperament to superimpose extraneous elements on the music; this inspired tranquillity led some critics to characterize his interpretations as impersonal and detached. Heifetz made numerous arrangements for violin of works by Bach, Vivaldi, and pieces by contemporary composers (Poulenc, Aguirre, etc.); his most famous transcription is Hora Staccato by the Rumanian composer Gheorghe Dinicu (1865-1930), made into a virtuosic piece by adroit ornamentation and rhythmic elaboration. In his desire to promote modern music Heifetz commissioned a number of composers (Walton, Gruenberg, Castelnuovo-Tedesco, and others) to write violin concertos for him, and performed several of them.

Heiller, Anton, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Sept. 15, 1923. He studied organ and composition privately, and later at the Vienna Cons. (1941-42). In 1945, he was appointed prof. of organ at the Vienna Academy of Music. In 1952, he received first prize for organ at the International Organ Contest in Haarlem, Holland. His music is distinguished by fine polyphonic writing. Among his works are: Symphonie nordique (1946); Toccata for two pianos (1943; his most successful work; performed at several music festivals); Psalmen-Kantate (Vienna, June 16, 1955); several Masses; organ pieces.

Heilman, William Clifford, American composer; b. Williamsport, Penn., Sept. 27, 1877; d. there, Dec. 20, 1946. He studied at Harvard Univ. (B.A., 1900) and in Europe with Rheinberger and Widor. He was a member of the music dept. of Harvard Univ. from 1905 till 1930. Among his works are a symph. poem, By the Porta Catania (1916), piano trio, Romance for cello and piano, a number of character pieces for piano, and choruses. He made arrangements of Negro spirituals.

Hein, Carl, conductor; b. Rendsburg, Germany, Feb. 2, 1864; d. New York, Feb. 27, 1945. He studied at the Hamburg Cons.; then played cello in the Hamburg Philh. Orch. In 1890, he emigrated to America, settling in New York, where he conducted various German choral societies ('Mozart-Verein,' 'Schubert-Chor,' etc.). In 1894 and 1907, he conducted the national choral festival at Madison Square Garden; then was active mainly as a vocal coach. He publ. several male choruses and vocal exercises.

Heinefetter. Six sisters, all well known as opera singers: Sabina (b. Mainz, Aug. 19, 1809; d. Illemau, Nov. 18, 1872) was an itinerant harpist as a child; at the age of 16, she went to Kassel to study with Spohr; then sang with brilliant success in Vienna, Berlin, and Milan. One of her outstanding roles was Donna Anna in Don Giovanni. She died insane. Her sister, Maria (Mme. Stöckel; b. Mainz, Feb. 16, 1816; d. Vienna, Feb. 23, 1857), achieved during her short career several notable successes; she also died insane. Katinka (1820-1858), Fatima, Eva, and Nanette were other sisters who appeared professionally on the opera stage.

Heinemeyer, Ernst Wilhelm, outstanding German flutist; b. Hanover, Feb. 25, 1827; d. Vienna, Feb. 12, 1869. He studied with his father, Christian Heinemeyer (1796-1872), who was the chamber flutist at Hanover. In 1847, he went to Russia, where he played the flute in the Imperial Orch. at St. Petersburg; in 1859, he returned to Hanover; in 1866, he went to Vienna. He wrote several concertos for the flute.

Heinichen, Johann David, notable German composer and theorist; b. Krössuln, near Weissenfels, April 17, 1683; d. Dresden, July 15, 1729. He was educated at the Thomasschule in Leipzig, studying with Schell and Kuhnau; at the same time, he studied law, and practiced as a lawyer in Weissenfels. His first opera, Der angenehme Betrug, was perf. in Leipzig in 1709; he then held a position as conductor at Zeitz. Councillor Buchta of Zeitz supplied the funds for Heinichen to accompany him to Italy (1713-18), where he produced several operas. In Venice, he joined the Elector of Saxony, Frederick Augustus, and followed him to Dresden as director of the Italian opera company there (1718). However, as a result of confusion brought about by a violent quarrel between Heinichen and the celebrated singer, Senesino, the Dresden opera was dissolved. Heinichen remained in Dresden as director of church and chamber music. He was a prolific composer; a thematic catalogue of his works is found in G. A. Seibel, Das Leben des J. D. Heinichen (Leipzig, 1913), listing, besides his operas, 2 oratorios, 16 Masses, 63 cantatas, more than 100 other sacred works, 4 symphonies, 2 overtures, 30 concertos, 17 sonatas, 7 pieces for flute, many separate airs, etc. Most of them are preserved in the Dresden library; few of his works have been published. Heinichen's importance lies not so much in his compositions as in his basic theoretical work, Neu erfundene und gründliche Anweisung . . . zu vollkommener Erlernung des General-Basses (Hamburg, 1711); new revised ed. as Der General-Bass in der Composition (Dresden, 1728).—Cf. R. Tanner, J. D. Heinichen als dramatischer Komponist (Leipzig, 1916); G. Hausswald, J. D. Heinrichens Instrumentalwerke (Berlin, 1937).

Heinitz, Wilhelm, German musicologist; b. Altona, Dec. 9, 1883. He first studied the bassoon, and played in orchestras. In 1915 he became a member of the Phonetic Laboratory at the Univ. of Hamburg, where he studied primitive music as well as the languages of Africa and Polynesia; led a seminar in comparative musicology there until his retirement in 1949. He wrote a number of valuable articles on the problems of folk psychology, structural elements of speech, etc., printed in special publications; also the books, Klangprobleme im Rundfunk (Berlin, 1926), Strukturprobleme in primitiver Musik (Hamburg, 1931), Neue Wege der Volksmusikforschung (Hamburg, 1937); contributed the section Instrumentenkunde in Bücken's 'Handbuch der Musikwissenschaft' (Potsdam, 1929). A complete list of his writings is given in Hans Haase's article on Heinitz in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Heinrich, Anthony Philip (Anton Philipp), American violinist and composer of Bohemian birth; b. Schönbüchel, Bohemia, March 11, 1781; d. in extreme poverty in New York, May 3, 1861. As a boy he acquired proficiency on the piano and violin, but began life as a wholesale merchant and banker; having failed in business, he went to Bardstow, Ky., where, without any knowledge of harmony, he began to compose in 1818; these first songs and instrumental pieces he publ. later as Op. 1, The Dawning of Music in Kentucky, or The Pleasures of Harmony in the Solitudes of Nature (1820). He became director of music at Southwark Theater, Phila.; later, in Louisville, Ky. The year 1827 found him in London, playing violin in a small orch.; there he also studied theory, and about 1830 began to write for orch.; returned to the U. S. in 1832. In 1834 he again visited England, as well as Germany and Austria (1835), and had some of his works produced at Dresden, Prague, Budapest, and Graz (his symph., The Combat of the Condor, was perf. at Graz in 1836; also in France); in Vienna he entered a competition with a symphony, but the prize was awarded to Franz Lachner; disappointed, he returned to America and settled in New York, where he soon gained immense popularity, so that he was generally known as 'Father Heinrich'; during the '40's and '50's he was a commanding figure in the musical affairs of the U. S., publishing hundreds of piano pieces and songs, symphonies and oratorios, grand festivals of his works being arranged in N. Y., Philadelphia, and Boston, and the critics speaking of him as the 'Beethoven of America'; a tour of Germany in 1857-8 was a dismal failure. The quality of his works easily accounts for the speedy and complete oblivion of even his name; he wrote only for an enormous orch., à la Berlioz, and his musical ideas, out of all proportion to the means employed, recall the style of Haydn's imitators; nevertheless, he is historically important, being the first to employ Indian themes in works of large dimensions and to show decided nationalist aspirations. In 1917 O. G. Sonneck acquired for the Library of Congress Heinrich's 'Memoranda' (letters, programs, newspaper clippings, etc.), many publ. works and almost all the orchestral scores (in MS; many autographs) enumerated in a list made by Heinrich himself in 1857. A perusal of the titles is amusing and instructive: Grand American Chivalrous Symphony; The Columbiad, or Migration of American Wild Passenger Pigeons; The Ornithological Combat of Kings, or The Condor of the Andes and the Eagle of the Cordilleras; Pocahontas, the Royal Indian Maid and the Heroine of Virginia, the Pride of the Wilderness; The Wild-wood Spirit's Chant or Scintillations of 'Yankee Doodle,' forming a Grand National Heroic Fantasia scored for a Powerful Orch. in 44 Parts; etc.—Cf. F. A. Mussik, Skizzen aus dem Leben des . . . A. Ph. Heinrich (Leipzig, 1843); O. G. Sonneck, Musical Landmarks in New York, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1920); 'Dictionary of American Biography' (1932); Wm. T. Upton, A. Ph. Heinrich (N. Y., 1939).

Heinrich, Max, baritone; b. Chemnitz, Germany, June 14, 1853; d. New York, Aug. 9, 1916. He studied at the Dresden Cons.; in 1873, came to America; taught at Marion, Alabama (1876-82), then moved to New York, where he appeared in oratorio with various orchestras. From 1888-93, he taught singing at the Royal Academy of Music in London; then lived in Chicago (1894-1903) and in Boston (1903-10). He gave numerous recitals of German lieder, the last of them shortly before his death.

Heinroth (hīn'-roht), Charles, American organist; b. New York, Jan. 2, 1874. He studied with M. Spicker and John White (organ) and Victor Herbert (composition); also took courses with Rheinberger in Munich (1896). He occupied various posts as church organist in New York and Brooklyn; from 1907 till 1932 was organist at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh; from 1932-42, organist and head of the music dept. of The City College of N. Y.

Heinroth, Johann August Günther, German composer and writer; b. Nordhausen, June 19, 1780; d. Göttingen, June 2, 1846. He studied with his father, Christoph Gottlieb Heinroth, an able organist. He then attended the Univ. of Leipzig, and of Halle. In 1804, he became attached to the School of Jewish Studies organized by Israel Jacobson. This was the beginning of a lifelong study of the Jewish liturgy, which he reorganized, adding numerous original melodies that became part of the Jewish service. He also attempted the introduction of a simplified musical notation by figures. From 1818, he served as music director of the Univ. of Göttingen, in succession to Forkel.—Writings (all publ. at Göttingen): Gesangunterrichts-Methode für höhere und niedere Schulen (1821-23, 3 parts); Volksnoten oder vereinfachte Tonschrift (1828); Kurze Anleitung, das Klavier oder Forte-Piano spielen zu lehren (1828); Musikalisches Hilfsbuch für Prediger, Kantoren und Organisten (1833). Heinroth's ideas regarding musical education in schools exercised considerable influence. A monograph on him is included in W. Boetticher's book, Die Musik an der Georgia Augusta-Univ. zu Göttingen (1958).

Heinsheimer, Hans (Walter), publishing executive and writer on music; b. Karlsruhe, Sept. 25, 1900. He studied law in Heidelberg, Munich, and Freiburg (Juris Dr., 1923); then joined Universal Edition in Vienna; was in charge of its opera dept. (1925-38). He came to the U.S.A. in 1938; was associated with Boosey & Hawkes; in 1947, became director of symphonic and operatic repertory at G. Schirmer, Inc. He contributed numerous articles to 'Anbruch,' 'Mus. Quarterly,' 'Holiday,' 'The Reader's Digest,' etc. He publ. two entertaining books, Menagerie in F Sharp (N. Y., 1947; transl. into German); Fanfare for Two Pigeons (N. Y., 1952).

Heintze, Gustaf Hjalmar, Swedish pianist and composer; b. Jönköping, July 22, 1879; d. Saltsjöbaden, March 4, 1946. He was of a musical family; his father Georg Wilhelm Heintze (1849-95) was a well-known organist, as was his grandfather, Gustaf Wilhelm Heintze (1825-1909). He studied at the Stockholm Cons.; in 1910 was appointed organist at a Stockholm church, a post that he held until his death. He wrote cantatas, 2 violin concertos, chamber music, and organ pieces.

Heinze, Sir Bernard Thomas, eminent Australian conductor; b. Shepparton, near Melbourne, July 1, 1894. He studied at the Univ. of Melbourne, Royal College of Music in London, and with Vincent d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum in Paris. After service in the Royal Artillery during World War I, he returned to Australia; in 1926, was appointed prof. of music at the Univ. of Melbourne. In 1938 he made a tour of Europe as conductor. He was conductor of the Melbourne Symph. Orch. from 1933 till 1949; was knighted in 1950. In 1956, he became director of the State Cons. in Sydney.

Heinze, Gustav Adolph, German composer and conductor; b. Leipzig, Oct. 1, 1820; d.

Muiderberg, near Amsterdam, Feb. 20, 1904. He received his early musical education from his father, a clarinet player in the Gewandhaus Orch. in Leipzig, and joined that orchestra as clarinetist at the age of 16. He then conducted opera in Breslau, and also produced 2 operas there. In 1850 he went to Amsterdam as conductor of the German opera, and remained in Holland till the end of his life. He composed, besides his operas, several oratorios and other choral works.

Heise, Peter Arnold, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, Feb. 11, 1830; d. Stockerup, Sept. 12, 1879. He studied music with Niels Gade and Berggreen in Copenhagen and with Hauptmann at the Leipzig Cons. Returning to Denmark, he became a music teacher and organist at Sorø, where he remained until 1865. He then settled in Copenhagen; produced 2 successful operas, The Pasha's Daughter (Sept. 30, 1869) and King and Marshal (Sept. 25, 1878). He also wrote a symphony, chamber music, etc., which remain mostly unpublished. It was in his many lieder to Danish texts that Heise achieved enduring fame. — Cf. G. Hetsch, P. A. Heise (Copenhagen, 1926).

Heiter, Amalie. Pen-name of Marie Amalia Friederike, Princess of Saxony. See Amalia Friederike.

Heiter, Ernst. Pseudonym of Sechter.

Hekking, André, French cellist; b. Bordeaux, July 30, 1866; d. Paris, Dec. 14, 1925. He was the son of the Dutch cellist, Robert Gérard Hekking (1820-75), who settled in France, and received his training from him. From 1909, he lived in Paris; in 1919, was appointed prof. at the Paris Cons.; also taught at the American Cons. in Fontainebleau. He publ. a practice book for cellists, Violoncelle, exercices quotidiens (Paris, 1927).

Hekking, Anton, notable cellist; brother of André Hekking; b. The Hague, Sept. 7, 1856; d. Berlin, Nov. 18, 1935. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Joseph Giese; then undertook an American tour with the pianist Mme. Essipova. Returning to Europe, he was first cellist of the Berlin Philh. (1884-88 and 1898-1902). After another American tour, he became first cellist of the Boston Symp. (1889-91) and later of the N. Y. Symp. (1895-98). He returned to Berlin in 1898; taught at Stern's Cons. there, and became a member of a trio with Schnabel and Wittenberg (1902).

Hekking, Gérard, French cellist; cousin of André and Anton Hekking, b. Nancy, Aug. 12, 1879; d. Paris, June 5, 1942. He studied at the Paris Cons., winning 1st prize (1899). He was first cellist of the Concertgebouw Orch. in Amsterdam (1903-14) and taught at the Amsterdam Cons.; also made tours in Russia, Spain, Germany, and France. He was in the French Army during World War I; from 1921-27, was again in Holland; in 1927, became prof. at the Paris Cons. He wrote several cello pieces; also revised Principes de la technique du violoncelle of François Gervais (Paris, 1930).

Helder, Bartholomäus, German composer; b. Gotha, 1585; d. Remstedt, near Gotha, Oct. 28, 1635. He studied theology in Leipzig; was school teacher at a village near Gotha (1607-16); then was for 20 years a pastor at Remstedt. He died of the plague. He publ. a collection of Christmas and New Year's songs, Cymbalum genethiacum (1614); a book of psalm tunes, Cymbalum Davidicum; many of his secular songs are included in contemporary anthologies. His New Year's song Das alte Jahr vergangen ist became very popular.

Helfer, Walter, American composer; b. Lawrence, Mass., Sept. 30, 1896. He studied at Harvard Univ.; then took courses with Caussade at the Paris Cons. and with Respighi in Rome (1925-28). Returning to the U. S., he joined the staff of Hunter College as prof. of composition; was chairman of the music dept. from 1938 till 1950. In 1939 he won the Paderewski Prize for his overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream. His other works are Symphony on Canadian Airs (1937); Fantasy on Children's Tunes for small orch. (1935); concertino for piano and chamber orch. (1947); string quartet; string trio; Elegiac Sonata for piano (1931); Soliloquy for cello and piano (1947); choral pieces.

Helfert, Vladimir, Czech musicologist; b. Plánice, Bohemia, March 24, 1886; d. Prague, May 18, 1945. He studied with Hostinsky in Prague and with Kretzschmar and Wolf at the Berlin Univ. (1908, Mus. D., with the dissertation G. Benda und J. J. Rousseau); 1921 instructor, 1926 prof. of musicology at the Univ. of Brno; director of the Czech Orchestral Society there; from 1924, editor of the paper 'Hudební Rozhledy.' In 1940 he was arrested by the Nazis and held in Breslau; released in 1943; then rearrested in 1945 and taken to the Terezin concentration camp. He died a few days after his liberation.—Writings (mostly in Czech): History of the Melodrama (1908); Jaroměřice and the Count J. A. Questenberg (Prague, 1917); The Music of the Jaroměřice Castle: A Critical Analysis of the Works of the Composer Franz Míša (Prague, 1924); Contribution to the Development of the History of the Marseillaise (in Italian; Turin, 1922); The Creative Development of Smetana (Prague, 1924); Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Sonatenform, in the 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (1925); Histoire de la musique dans la république tchécoslovaque (in collaboration with Erich Steinhardt; Prague, 1936); and other essays, mostly about Czech music in the 18th century; joint author of O. Pazdirek's 'Dictionary of Music' (in Czech; vol. I, 1929; vol. II, 1937).

Helfman, Max, conductor and composer; b. Radzin, Poland, May 25, 1901. He came early to the U. S. and studied at the David Mannes School, N. Y. (1919-23) and the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia (1929-32). He then settled in N. Y. as choral conductor of Jewish groups. He wrote New Hagadah, a dramatic cantata for narrator, chorus, and orch. (1949); Jewish liturgical music; edited a series of choral works for the Jewish Music Alliance ('Gesang und Kampf,' vols. 5 and 6; 1937-38) and an anthology of modern choral works.

Helfritz, Hans, composer; b. Hilbersdorf, July 25, 1902. He studied at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin with Hindemith; in Vienna with Wellesz. In 1936 he emigrated to South America, and settled in Chile, where he became active in folklore research. Among his works are a concertino for piano and orch. (1940); saxophone concerto (1945); 2 string quartets; violin sonata; choral pieces. Most of his music is couched in austere polyphonic style, with dissonant counterpoint adding a modernistic touch; but he also utilizes South American melodic and rhythmic resources, and occasionally American jazz. In 1956 he undertook a journey along the west coast of Africa, and made recordings of native songs.

Hellendaal, Pieter, organist and composer; b. Rotterdam, March (baptized April 1), 1721; d. Cambridge, England, April 26, 1799. In 1760, he went to England and on June 12, 1760 was appointed successor to Charles Burney as organist at St. Margaret's, King's Lynn in Norfolk. He published 12 sonatas for violin (Amsterdam, 1744); 6 concertos for violin (London, 1760); 6 solos for violin with thorough-bass (London, 1761), and 8 solos for cello with thorough-bass (London, 1770); also a Celebrated Rondo for violin with instrumental accompaniment; A Collection of Psalms for the Use of Parish Churches, and 2 glees for 4 voices.—Cf. G. A. C. De Graaf, Pieter Hellendaal, Musiquant (1721-1799), in 'Mens en Melodie' (Aug., 1950).

Heller, Hans Ewald, composer; b. Vienna, April 17, 1894. He studied with J. B. Foerster and Camillo Horn; was engaged in Vienna as music critic and teacher. In 1938 he settled in the U. S. Among his compositions are the light operas Satan (Vienna, 1927), Messalina (Prague, 1928), and Der Liebling von London (Vienna, 1930); an overture Carnival in New Orleans (1940); a cantata, Ode to Our Women (1942); 2 string quartets; a suite for clarinet and piano; about 150 songs.

Heller, James G., American composer; b. New Orleans, Jan. 4, 1892. He studied at Tulane Univ., New Orleans (B. A., 1912), the Univ. of Cincinnati (M. A., 1914), the Hebrew Union College (Rabbi, 1916), and the Cincinnati Cons. of Music (Mus. D., 1934); for 12 years wrote the program notes for the Cincinnati Symph. Orch.; then taught musicology at the Cincinnati Cons. of Music. Among his works are Elegy and Pastorale for voice and string orch. (Cincinnati, Dec. 30, 1934); a string quartet; violin sonata; Jewish services (New Union Hymnal, 1930-32).

Heller, Stephen, celebrated pianist and composer; b. Budapest, May 15, 1813; d. Paris, Jan. 14, 1888. He was of a Jewish family, but was converted to Christianity as a youth. He studied piano with F. Brauer and showed such extraordinary ability that he was sent to Vienna to continue his studies; there he took lessons with Anton Halm. In 1828 he began a tour through Austria and Germany. However, the exertion of travel proved too much for him; in Augsburg, he became ill, and decided to remain there for a time; financial means were provided by a wealthy family. In 1838 he went to Paris, where he became friendly with Berlioz, Chopin, and Liszt. Soon he became very successful as a pianist; some critics even judged him as superior to Chopin. In Paris, Heller began to compose piano pieces in a Romantic vein, somewhat akin to Schumann's, and brilliant salon dances, studies, and characteristic pieces that became exceedingly popular. In 1849 he visited London, where his concerts charmed a large circle of music lovers. A nervous ailment forced him to curtail his appearances; in 1862, he revisited England and played with Hallé at the Crystal Palace. He then returned to Paris, where he remained for the rest of his life. He wrote in all several hundred piano pieces arranged in groups in 158 opus numbers; of these, the most effective are Traumbilder; Promenades d'un solitaire; Nuits blanches; Dans les bois; Voyage autour de ma chambre; Tablettes d'un solitaire; Tarentelles; admirable études; ballades (notably La Chasse); 4 sonatas, 3 sonatinas, waltzes, mazurkas, caprices, nocturnes, variations, etc.—Cf. M. Hartmann, Stephen Heller in 'Monatshefte' (1859); H. Barbedette, Stephen Heller (Paris, 1876; English transl., London, 1877); R. Schütz, Stephen Heller (Leipzig, 1911; standard biography); see also Isidor Philipp, Some Recollections of Stephen Heller, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1935).

Hellmesberger, Georg, Sr., renowned Austrian violinist; b. Vienna, April 24, 1800; d. Neuwaldegg, near Vienna, Aug. 16, 1873. His father, a country schoolmaster, gave him his first musical instruction; he succeeded Schubert as soprano chorister in the Imperial chapel; in 1820, became a pupil of the Vienna Cons. under Böhm (violin) and E. Förster (composition); in 1821, became assistant instructor there; in 1833, professor. In 1829 he succeeded Schuppanzigh as conductor of the Imperial Opera; 1830, member of the court chapel; pensioned in 1867. He had many distinguished pupils, including Ernst, Hauser, Auer, Joachim, and his own sons, Georg and Joseph.

Hellmesberger, Georg, Jr., Austrian violinist; son of preceding; b. Vienna, Jan. 27, 1830; d. Hanover, Nov. 12, 1852. He studied composition with Rotter; made a successful concert tour through Germany and England. At the age of 21, he was appointed concertmaster of the Hanover Royal orch., and produced there 2 operas, Die Bürgschaft and Die beiden Königinnen (1851), when his career, so brilliantly begun, was cut short by a lung ailment, to which he succumbed at the age of 22.

Hellmesberger, Joseph, Sr., distinguished Austrian violin virtuoso; another son of Georg Hellmesberger, Sr.; b. Vienna, Nov. 23, 1828; d. there, Oct. 24, 1893. In 1851, was appointed artistic conductor of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' (till 1859, when he was succeeded by Herbeck), and director of the Vienna Cons. till 1893, where he was violin prof. (1851-77); concertmaster at the Imperial Opera (1860); solo violinist in the court orch. (1863); court conductor (1877). From 1849-87 he led the famous string quartet bearing his name (Hellmesberger, Durst, Heissler, Schlesinger), which opened a new era for chamber music in Vienna.—Cf. A. Barthlmé, Vom alten Hellmesberger (Vienna, 1908); R. M. Prosl, Die Hellmesberger; hundert Jahre aus dem Leben einer Wiener Musikerfamilie (Vienna, 1947).

Hellmesberger, Joseph, Jr., Austrian violinist and dramatic composer; son of the preceding; b. Vienna, April 9, 1855; d. there, April 26, 1907. He was solo violinist in the Imperial orch., and prof. at the Vienna Cons. (1878); then conducted opera and ballet; in 1887 he succeeded his father as leader of the Hellmesberger quartet.—Works: 10 operettas, produced (1880-1906) at Vienna, Munich, and Hamburg: Kapitän Ahlström; Der Graf von Gleichen; Der schöne Kurfürst; Rikiki, oder Nelly, das Blumenmädchen; Das Orakel; Der bleiche Gast; Das Veilchenmädchen; Die drei Engel; Mutzi; and Der Triumph des Weibes; the ballets Fata Morgana; Die verwandelte Katze; Das Licht; Die fünf Sinne; etc.

Hellouin (ehl-wān'), Frédéric, French writer on music; b. Paris, April 18, 1864; d. St. Germain-en-Laye, March 26, 1924. He was a pupil of Massenet at the Paris Cons.; from 1902, lecturer at the 'École des hautes études sociales.' He publ. Feuilles d'histoire musicale française (1902), Gossec et la musique française à la fin du XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1903), Essai de critique de la critique musicale (1906), Le Noël musical français (1906), Un musicien oublié: Catel (1910).

Hellwig, Karl Friedrich Ludwig, German composer; b. Kunersdorf, near Wrietzen, July 23, 1773; d. Berlin, Nov. 24, 1838. He learned to play all the string instruments and piano; then studied theory with Zelter and others; at the same time, he was engaged in the manufacture of paint, which enabled him to pursue his musical studies as an avocation. In 1813 he became organist at the Berlin court. He wrote 2 operas, Die Bergknappen (Dresden, April 27, 1820) and Don Sylvio di Rosalbo (unperformed), much church music, and a number of German lieder, which show a certain poetic sensitivity and a ballad-like quality in the manner of Zelter and other early German Romanticists.

Helm, Everett, American composer and musicologist; b. Minneapolis, July 17, 1913. In 1935 he graduated from Harvard; received the John Knowles Paine traveling fellowship and studied in Europe with Malipiero and Vaughan Williams; head of the music department at Western College, Ohio (1943-44); toured South America (1944-46); theater and music officer under Military Government in Germany (1948-50). — Works: concerto for string orch. (1950); piano concerto (N. Y., April 24, 1954); Adam and Eve, an adaptation of a 12th-century mystery play (Wiesbaden, Oct. 28, 1951, composer conducting); concerto for 5 instruments, percussion, and string orch. (Donaueschingen, Oct. 10, 1953); The Siege of Tottenburg, opera in 3 acts commissioned by the Süddeutscher Rundfunk (1956); Le Roy fait battre tambour, ballet commissioned by the Frankfurt Opera (1956); 500 Dragon-Thalers, a Singspiel (1956); 2nd piano concerto (Louisville, Feb. 25, 1956); woodwind quartet: string quartet; 2 piano sonatas; songs and choral pieces. He also edited the chansons (Northampton, Mass., 1942) and madrigals of Arcadelt.

Helm, Theodor, Austrian music critic; b. Vienna, April 9, 1843; d. there, Dec. 23, 1920. He was the son of a physician; studied jurisprudence in Vienna and became a government employee; in 1867, he began writing music criticism for various Viennese publications; in 1874 became music teacher at Horák's music school; from 1875 till 1901, he was editor of Fromme's 'Kalender für die Musikalische Welt'; published Beethovens Streichquartette: Versuch einer technischen Analyse im Zusammenhang mit ihrem geistigen Gehalt (Leipzig, 1885; 2nd ed., 1910); 50 Jahre Wiener Musikleben, 1866-1916, in the 'Merker' (1917); many articles on Bruckner, and other essays.

Helman, Albert. See Lichtveld.

Helmholtz, Hermann (Ludwig Ferdinand) von, celebrated German scientist and acoustician; b. Potsdam, Aug. 31, 1821; d. Berlin, Sept. 8, 1894. His father was a school teacher in Potsdam, and Helmholtz received his education there. His mother, Caroline Penn, was of English extraction. He studied medicine at the Military Institute of Berlin; received his M.D., and became a member of the staff of the Charité Hospital there (1842); in 1843 he was appointed military surgeon at Potsdam; then recalled to Berlin as teacher of anatomy (for artists) at the Academy of Fine Arts (1848). In 1849, he obtained a position as prof. of physiology at Univ. of Königsberg; 1855, prof. at Bonn; 1858, at Heidelberg. In 1871, abandoning the teaching of physiology and anatomy, he accepted the position of prof. of physics at the Univ. of Berlin; publ. various scientific studies. The work of most interest to musicians, and indispensable for students of acoustics, is his Lehre von den Tonempfindungen als physiologische Grundlage für die Theorie der Musik (Brunswick, 1863); it was translated by Alexander John Ellis and publ. in London under the title, On the Sensations of Tone as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music (London, 1875; new ed., N. Y., 1948). By a long series of experiments, Helmholtz established a sure physical foundation for the phenomena manifested by musical tones, either single or combined. He supplemented and amplified the theories of Rameau, Tartini, Wheatstone, Corti, and others, furnishing impregnable formulae for all classes of consonant and dissonant tone-effects, and proving with scientific precision what Hauptmann and his school sought to establish by laborious dialectic processes. The laws governing the differences in quality of tone (tone-color) in different instruments and voices, covering the whole field of harmonic, differential, and summational tones; the nature and limits of musical perception by the human ear—these are the chief results of Helmholtz's labors. — Cf. S. Epstein, Hermann von Helmholtz als Mensch und Gelehrter (Stuttgart, 1896); L. Königsberger, Hermann von Helmholtz (3 vols., Brunswick, 1902-03; 1 vol., 1911); E. Waetzman, Zur Helmholtzschen Resonanztheorie (Breslau, 1907); L. S. Lloyd, Helmholtz and the Musical Ear, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1939); H. Ebert, Hermann von Helmholtz (Stuttgart, 1949).

Helsted, Gustaf, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, Jan. 30, 1857; d. there, March 1, 1924. He was a pupil of Hartmann and Gade; from 1892, prof. of theory and from 1904 also of organ, at the Copenhagen Cons.; from 1915, organist of the Frauenkirche. He wrote 2 symphonies, a decimet for woodwinds and strings, a string sextet, 3 string quartets, a piano trio, 2 violin sonatas, and 2 cantatas: Gurresange (Copenhagen, April 18, 1904) and Vort Land (Copenhagen, April 19, 1909).

Hempel, Frieda, brilliant German coloratura soprano; b. Leipzig, June 26, 1885; d. Berlin, Oct. 7, 1955. In 1900 she entered the Leipzig Cons. as a piano pupil; from 1902-05 she studied singing with Frau Nicklass-Kempner in Berlin; made her début at the Berlin Opera in Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor (Aug. 28, 1905); from 1905-07, at the Court Opera in Schwerin; 1907-12, member of the Royal Opera in Berlin; 1912-19, one of the foremost members of the Metropolitan Opera, where she made her début as the Queen in Les Huguenots on Dec. 27, 1912. In 1920 she impersonated Jenny Lind in the Lind centenary celebrations in New York and throughout the U. S. (70 concerts). She was married to William B. Kahn in 1918 (divorced in 1926). From 1940 till 1955 she lived in New York. A few months before her death, knowing that she was incurably ill, she returned to Berlin. Her memoirs, Mein Leben dem Gesang, were published posthumously (Berlin, 1955).

Hemsi, Alberto, composer; b. (of Italian-Jewish parents) Cassaba, Turkey, Dec. 23, 1896. He studied in Smyrna, and later at the Milan Cons. with Bossi; graduated in 1919. He was wounded while serving in the Italian Army in World War I. In 1928 he went (after a brief sojourn in Rhodes) to Alexandria, where he was appointed director of the Israelite Music School; from 1932-1940, taught at the Liceo Musicale Italiano there; later became instructor in harmony at the Alexandria Cons. In 1929 he founded the Edition Orientale de Musique.—Works: for orch.: Danses bibliques; Croquis Egyptiens, orchestral suite (Alexandria, March 19, 1951); for voice and orch.: Five Hebrew Songs, Poème biblique, Mélo-die religieuse; Tre arie antiche for string quartet; string quintet; violin sonata; Suite Séfardie for violin and piano; Trois danses égyptiennes for violin and piano; Six danses turques for piano; Coplas Séfardies (six cycles of traditional Jewish chants) for voice and piano.

Henderson, William James, American music critic; b. Newark, N. J., Dec. 4, 1855; d. (suicide) New York, June 5, 1937. He was a graduate (1876) of Princeton (M. A., 1886); studied piano with Carl Langlotz (1868-73) and voice with Torriani (1876-77); chiefly self-taught in theory. He wrote many librettos of light operas, and also Cyrano de Bergerac for Walter Damrosch (1913). He was first a reporter (1883), then music critic of the 'New York Times' (1887-1902); and for 35 years, until his death, for the 'New York Sun' (1902-37); lectured on music history in N. Y. College of Music (1899-1902); from 1904, lectured on the development of vocal art at the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y.—Writings: The Story of Music (1889; 12th enlarged ed., 1912); Preludes and Studies (1891); How Music Developed (1898); What is Good Music? (1898); The Orchestra and Orchestral Music (1899); Richard Wagner, His Life and His Dramas (1901); Modern Musical Drift (1904); The Art of the Singer (1906); Some Forerunners of Italian Opera (1911); Early History of Singing (1921); also The Function of Musical Criticism, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1915); Beethoven After a Hundred Years, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1927); many other articles in various journals. In the series Famous Composers and Their Works, Henderson wrote the biographies of Goldmark, Tchaikovsky, and Wagner, as well as the chapter on Dutch composers. — Cf. O. Thompson, An American School of Criticism: The Legacy Left by W. J. Henderson, R. Aldrich and Their Colleagues of the Old Guard, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1937). O. Thompson also edited excerpts from Henderson's scrapbook, published as The Art of Singing (N. Y., 1938).

Hendl, Walter, American conductor; b. West New York, New Jersey, Jan. 12, 1917. He studied regular musical subjects and conducting at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia (with Fritz Reiner); taught at Sarah Lawrence College (1939-41); joined the Berkshire Center at Tanglewood, as pianist and conductor, under the guidance of Koussevitzky (1941-42); in 1945 became associate conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic; held this position until 1949; then conducted various performances in Europe and America. In 1949 he was appointed conductor of the Dallas Symph. Orch.; in 1955 conducted the Symphony of the Air during its tour in the Far East. He wrote incidental music for the play Dark of the Moon (1945); made orchestral transcriptions of various works.

Henkel, Heinrich, German pianist; son of Michael Henkel; b. Fulda, Feb. 14, 1822; d. Frankfurt, April 10, 1899. He was a pupil of his father; also studied with Aloys Schmitt. He settled in Frankfurt in 1849, as a teacher. He publ. a piano method, Vorschule des Klavierspiels, an abridged ed. of A. André's Lehrbuch der Tonsetzkunst (1875), Mitteilungen aus der musikalischen Vergangenheit Fuldas (1882); piano pieces and songs.

Henkel, Michael, German composer of church music; b. Fulda, June 18, 1780; d. there, March 4, 1851. He studied with Vierling; then served as a local music teacher. He wrote a great number of sacred works, organ pieces, and instrumental works.

Henkemans, Hans, Dutch composer and pianist; b. The Hague, Dec. 23, 1913. He studied piano with Bernard van den Sigtenhorst-Meyer and composition with Pijper; made his début as composer-pianist in his piano concerto in Utrecht at the age of 19; also studied medicine at the Univ. of Utrecht, and obtained a doctor's diploma; was for a time a practicing psychiatrist. He received several state prizes, and decided to devote himself exclusively to music. In his style, he follows the early type of Impressionist music, with rich chromatic harmonies supporting melodic lines of a diatonic, often modal, character, and occasional bitonality. — Works: symphony (1934); 2 piano concertos (1932; 1936); flute concerto (1946); violin concerto (1948-50); viola concerto (1954); harp concerto (1955); 2 string quartets; quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon; Primavera, for 9 instruments; cello sonata; violin sonata; sonata for 2 pianos; songs and choruses.

Henneberg, Albert, Swedish composer; son of Richard Henneberg; b. Stockholm, March 27, 1901. He studied in Stockholm, Vienna, and Paris. Returning to Stockholm in 1931, he became active as conductor, composer, and an organizer in the association of Swedish composers. He has written several operas (Inka, Bolla och Badin, I Madonnas skugga), 5 symphonies, piano concerto, cello concerto, trumpet concerto, trombone concerto, 2 string quartets, a quartet for flute, oboe, bassoon, and horn, violin sonata, etc.

Henneberg, Johann Baptist, Austrian composer of church music; b. Vienna, Dec. 6, 1768; d. there, Nov. 26, 1822. He conducted at Vienna theaters (1790-1803); then became a member of the orch. of Count Esterházy; in 1818, returned to Vienna. He wrote a great number of Singspiele, of which the most successful were Die Waldmänner (Hamburg, 1787) and Liebe macht kurzen Prozess (Leipzig, 1799).

Henneberg, Richard, conductor and composer; b. Berlin, Aug. 5, 1853; d. Malmö, Oct. 19, 1925. He studied piano with Liszt; then traveled as accompanist with various artists, including Wieniawski; held posts as operatic coach at the Italian Opera in London, at various theatres in Berlin and Stockholm; from 1885 until 1907 conducted at the Stockholm Opera; from 1914-20, was conductor of the Malmö Orchestra. Henneberg gave the first performance of Tannhäuser in Stockholm (1876) and the first complete production of the Ring of the Nibelung in Sweden (1907), and was an ardent propagandist of Wagner's music. He wrote a comic opera Drottningens Valfart (Stockholm, 1882), incidental music to Ibsen's Brand, various Shakespearian pieces, a ballet Undine, some choral works and songs (all in a Wagnerian vein).

Hennerberg, Carl Fredrik, Swedish musicologist; b. Älgaras, Jan. 24, 1871; d. Stockholm, Sept. 17, 1932. As a young man, he was an organist at Varola; then went to Stockholm, where he studied at the Cons. (1899-1903) and remained on the faculty as harmony teacher. In 1909 he was appointed organist at the Royal Chapel; also served as librarian of the Music Academy. He specialized in the study of organ manufacture; traveled in European countries to collect information; publ. Die schwedischen Orgeln des Mittelalters (Vennna, 1909); Orgelns byggnad och vard (a treatise on organ building; Upsala, 1912; 2nd ed., 1928); contributed numerous bibliographical papers to musicological journals.

Hennes, Aloys, German pianist; b. Aachen, Sept. 8, 1827; d. Berlin, June 8, 1889. He studied with Hiller and Reinecke in Cologne; then taught piano in various provincial towns; in 1872, settled in Berlin. He publ. Klavierunterrichtsbrieft, containing ingenious teaching pieces. His daughter, Therese, was a child prodigy, who made an exceptionally successful tour in England in 1877.

Hennessy, Swan, composer; b. Rockford, Ill., Nov. 24, 1866; d. Paris, Oct. 26, 1929. He was the son of an American-Irish settler; studied general subjects in Oxford, and music in Germany; then traveled in Italy, France, and Ireland, eventually settling in Paris. He wrote about 70 compositions, several of which are derived from Irish folk melos; his technical equipment was thorough; his idiom, impressionistic. Among his Irish-inspired works are Petit trio celtique for violin, viola, and cello; Rapsodie celtique for violin and piano; Rapsodie gaëlique for cello and piano, and Sonata in Irish Style for violin and piano. Besides, he wrote several piano albums '2 la manière de . . . ' and characteristic piano pieces in a humorous vein, such as Épigrammes d'un solitaire, Impressions humoristiques, etc.; also 4 string quartets.

Hennig, Karl, German organist and composer; b. Berlin, April 23, 1819; d. there, April 18, 1873. A precocious musician, he brought out a psalm for soli, chorus, and orch. at the age of 14; began to conduct choral groups at an early age; then became a church organist at the Sophienkirche in Berlin; also was conductor of the Lyra Choral Society. He wrote a great number of miscellaneous pieces, sacred works, cantatas, as well as popular dances for piano.

Hennig, Karl Rafael, German music theorist and composer; son of Karl Hennig; b. Berlin, Jan. 4, 1845; d. Posen, Feb. 6, 1914. He studied music with his father; then with Richter in Leipzig and Kiel in Berlin; at the same time, studied law. After a brief period of teaching in Berlin, he went to Posen, where he founded the Hennig Vocal Society; also served as church organist. He composed several cantatas, choruses, songs, and instrumental pieces, but it is as a writer on theoretical subjects that he is mainly remembered. He publ. Die Methodik des Schulgesang-Unterrichts (Leipzig, 1885); Die Unterscheidung der Gesangsregister auf physiologischer Grundlage (Leipzig, 1892); Beitrag zur Wagner-Sache (Leipzig, 1893); Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Leipzig, 1896); Über die Entstehung der 'hohen Resonanz' (Leipzig, 1902); Musiktheoretisches Hilfsbuch (Leipzig, 1903; 2nd ed., 1906); Einführung in das Wesen der Musik (Leipzig, 1906); and excellent analyses of Beethoven's 9th Symph. and Missa Solemnis.

Henriot, Nicole, French pianist; b. Paris, Nov. 23, 1925. She studied with Marguerite Long; entered the Paris Cons. at the age of 12, graduating with a 1st prize two years later. She toured Europe (1946-49), appearing with major orchestras; she made her American début on Jan. 29, 1948; toured Canada and South America (1949-50).

Henriques, Fini Valdemar, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, Dec. 20, 1867; d. there, Oct. 27, 1940. He studied violin with Valdemar Tofte in Copenhagen, and with Joachim at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; composition with Svendsen; returning to Copenhagen, he was violinist in the court orch. (1892-96); also appeared as soloist. He organized his own string quartet, and traveled with it in Europe; also conducted orchestras. As a composer, he followed the Romantic school; he possessed a facile gift of melody; his Danish Lullaby became a celebrated song in Denmark. He also wrote an opera Staerstikkeren (Copenhagen, May 20, 1922); several ballets (The Little Mermaid, after Hans Andersen; Tata, etc.); Hans Andersen Overture; 2 symphonies; a string quartet; a quartet for flute, violin, cello, and piano; violin sonata; a number of piano pieces (several cycles, Lyrik, Erotik, etc.).—Cf. S. Berg, F. V. Henriques (Copenhagen, 1943).

Henriques, Robert, Danish cellist, conductor, and composer; b. Copenhagen, Dec. 14, 1858; d. there, Dec. 29, 1914. He studied cello with Popper, and composition with Kretschmer in Dresden. Upon his return to Copenhagen, he conducted the concerts of 'Symphonia' (1888-93); wrote music criticism; composed an overture Olaf Trygvason; symph. sketch, Aquarellen; a number of pieces for the cello.

Henry V, the English king; b. Monmouth, Aug. 1387; d. Bois de Vincennes, Aug. 31, 1422. During his reign (1413-22), he established a flourishing musical service at the Chapel Royal; was a musician himself; probably was the author of a Gloria and a Sanctus for 3 voices in the Old Hall MS (transcribed into modern notation, and publ. by the Plainsong and Medieval Music Society, 1933-38, vols. I and III; in that edition, these works are ascribed to Henry VI).

Henry VI, the English king; b. Windsor, Dec. 6, 1421; d. London, May 21, 1471. He reigned from 1422 till 1471. For a long time, he was regarded as the 'Roy Henry' who was the author of a Gloria and a Sanctus in the Old Hall MS; however, research by M. Bukofzer tends to indicate that the works may actually be by Henry V.—Cf. W. Barclay Squire, Henry VI, in the 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1900-01, p. 342); G. R. Hayes, King's Music, an anthology (London, 1937).

Henry VIII, the English king; b. Greenwich, June 28, 1491; d. Windsor, Jan. 28, 1547. He reigned from 1509 to 1547. He received regular instruction in music. His compositions include 2 Masses (lost); a Latin motet for 3 voices (publ. in the 'Baldwin Collection,' 1591); the anthem O Lord, the Maker of All Kings; a secular ballad, Passe tyme with good cumpanye, for 3 voices (publ. in Chappell's 'Popular Music of the Olden Time'); five 4-part songs and twelve 3-part songs; also several pieces for 3 and 4 viols.—Cf. Lady Mary Trefusis, Music Composed by Henry VIII (Roxburghe Club, 1912; privately printed); G. R. Hayes, King's Music (London, 1937).

Henry, Harold, American pianist; b. Neodesha, Kansas, March 20, 1884. He studied with Karl Preyer at the Univ. of Kansas (1898-1902); then went to Berlin where he took lessons with Leopold Godowsky; also studied with Moszkowski in Paris. He made his American début in Chicago (Jan. 30, 1906); in his concerts he often included works by American composers, particularly MacDowell. He settled in New York as a teacher. He wrote a number of characteristic piano pieces (Heroic Rhapsody, Fantasy Poem, Dancing Marionette, Night Sounds, Epilogue, etc.); also songs (In Autumn, Gather Ye Rosebuds, etc.).

Henry, Hugh Thomas, American Roman Catholic priest, and writer on church music; b. Philadelphia, 1862; d. there, March 12, 1946. He taught church music at Overbrook Seminary from 1889 to 1917; was prof. of homiletics at Catholic Univ., Washington, from 1919-37. Besides his many religious and literary writings, he contributed the following articles to the 'Mus. Quarterly': Music Reform in the Catholic Church (Jan., 1915), Choir-Boys in Catholic Churches (July, 1917), and Music in Lowell's Prose and Verse (Oct., 1924).

Henry, Leigh Vaughan, English writer and conductor; b. Liverpool, Sept. 23, 1889; received his earliest training from his father, John Henry, a singer and composer; then studied with Granville Bantock in London, Ricardo Viñes in France, and Buonamici in Italy; taught music at Gordon Craig's Theatrical School in Florence (1912); then was in Germany, where he was interned during World War I. Returning to England, he edited a modern music journal 'Fanfare' (1921-22); also was active in various organizations promoting modern music; in 1930, he went to the U. S.; lectured at various colleges. He was music director of the Shakespeare Festival Week in London in 1938, 1945, and 1946; organized and conducted orchestral concerts of British music, and the National Welsh Festival Concerts; also at the B.B.C.; publ. the following: Music: What it Means and How to Under- stand it (London, 1920); The Growth of Music in Form and Significance (1921); The Story of Music (1935); Dr. John Bull (largely fictional; London, 1937); My Surging World, autobiography (with R. Hale; 1937). Among his compositions are The Moon Robber, an opera; Llyn-y-Fan, symph. poem; various pieces on Welsh themes.

Henry, Michel, a member of the 24 'violons du roi' under Henry IV and Louis XIII; b. Paris, Feb., 1555; date of death unknown. He wrote ballets for the court. His younger brother, known as Le Jeune, also in the 'violons du roi', composed some very interesting instrumental music: a Fantaisie for 5 violins; another Fantaisie for 5 cornetti; Pavane for 6 oboes; some of this is reproduced by P. Mersenne in his Harmonie universelle (vol. 3, pp. 186-277). Dolmetsch made a modern arrangement of the Fantaisie for 5 violins.—Cf. F. Lesure, Le Recueil de Ballets de Michel Henry in 'Les Fêtes de la Renaissance' (Paris, 1956).

Henschel, Sir George (full name Isador Georg Henschel), conductor and singer; b. Breslau, Feb. 18, 1850; d. Aviemore, Scotland, Sept. 10, 1934. Both parents were of Polish-Jewish descent, but he was converted to Christianity when young. He studied with Julius Schäffer at Breslau, and with Moscheles (piano), Götze (singing), and Reinecke (theory) at the Leipzig Cons. (1867-70); then with Friedrich Kiel (composition) and Adolf Schulze (singing) in Berlin. He was a boy soprano; when his voice broke he gave concerts as a tenor; made his début in Leipzig (1868) as Hans Sachs (baritone) in a concert performance of Die Meistersinger; he then toured throughout Europe; later gave recitals as a bass, and in 1914 he appeared in London singing as a basso profundo. At the age of 78 he sang a group of Schubert lieder in London (Schubert centennial, 1928). An important turning point in his career came when he was selected by Higginson as the first conductor of the Boston Symphony, which he led for three seasons (1881-84); he also gave concerts in Boston and New York as a singer. Settling in England, he founded the London Symphony Concerts (inaugural concert. Nov. 17, 1886), and conducted them until the series was concluded in 1897. He was a vocal teacher at the Royal College of Music (1886-88) and conductor of the Scottish Symphony Orchestra (1893-95). From 1905-08 he was professor of singing at the Institute of Musical Art, New York. In 1931, at the age of 81, he was engaged to conduct a commemorative concert on the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, identical (except for one number) with his inaugural Boston concert of 1881. In 1881 Henschel married the American singer Lillian Bailey (see below), with whom he gave concerts; she died in 1901. In 1907 he was married, for a second time, to Amy Louis. He was knighted in 1914. His musical compositions (mostly vocal) are in the German Romantic tradition. They include the opera Nubia (Dresden, Dec. 9, 1899); Stabat Mater (Birmingham, Oct. 4, 1894); Requiem, in memory of his first wife (Boston, Dec. 2, 1902); Mass for 8 voices (London, June 1, 1916); a string quartet and about 200 songs (almost all published). He was the author of Personal Recollections of Johannes Brahms (Boston, 1907) and the autobiographical Musings and Memories of a Musician (1918). — Bibl.: Mark Antony de Wolfe Howe, The Boston Symphony Orchestra, 1881-1931 (Boston, 1931); H. Earle Johnson, Symphony Hall (Boston, 1950).

Henschel, Lillian June (née Bailey), American soprano; b. Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 17, 1860; d. London, Nov. 4, 1901. She made her professional début in Boston at 16; then went to Paris to study with Mme. Viardot-García. On April 30, 1879, she appeared in London, at a Philh. concert, when she sang, besides her solo number, a duet with George Henschel. She then studied with him, and on March 9, 1881, was married to him. When Henschel was appointed first conductor of the Boston Symph. Orch., she came to Boston with him, and appeared as a soloist with him accompanying her at the piano, also in duets at Boston Symph. concerts. Until her untimely death, the Henschels were constantly associated in American artistic life. Her well-trained voice and fine musical feeling won her many admirers.—Cf. Helen Henschel, When Soft Voices Die, a Musical Biography (London, 1944).

Hensel, Fanny Cäcilie, pianist and composer; sister of Felix Mendelssohn; b. Hamburg, Nov. 14, 1805; d. Berlin, May 14, 1847. Brought up in the cultured atmosphere of the Mendelssohn family, she received an excellent musical education at home. She married the painter W. Hensel on Oct. 3, 1829, but remained very close to her brother, who constantly asked her advice in musical matters; her death, which occurred suddenly, was a great shock to Mendelssohn, who died a few months afterwards. She had a talent for composing; publ. 4 books of songs; a collection of part-songs, Gartenlieder (reprinted, London, 1878); also Lieder ohne Worte for piano.—Cf. Jack Werner, Felix and Fanny Mendelssohn in 'Music & Letters' (1947); S. Hensel, Die Familie Mendelssohn (Berlin, 1879).

Hensel, Heinrich, German dramatic tenor; b. Neustadt, Oct. 29, 1874; d. Hamburg, Feb. 23, 1935. He studied in Vienna and Milan; was a member of the Frankfurt Opera (1900-06), then at Wiesbaden (1906-10), where Siegfried Wagner heard him and engaged him to create the chief tenor part in his opera Banadictich (Karlsruhe, 1910) and also to sing Parsifal at the Bayreuth Festival. He obtained excellent success; subsequently sang at Covent Garden, London (1911). He made his American début at the Metropolitan Opera House as Lohengrin (Dec. 22, 1911), and was hailed by the press as one of the finest Wagnerian tenors; he also appeared with the Chicago Opera.

Hensel, Octavia (real name Mary Alice Ives Seymour), American writer on music; b. 1837; d. near Louisville, May 12, 1897. She publ. Life and Letters of Louis Moreau Gottschalk, a regrettably unreliable volume (Boston, 1870); also The Rheingold Trilogy (Boston, 1884).

Hensel, Walther (real name Julius Janiczek), music educator; b. Moravska Trebova, Bohemia, Sept. 8, 1887; d. Munich, Sept. 5, 1956. He studied in Vienna, in Prague, and in Freiburg, Switzerland, where he obtained his Dr. phil. (1911); taught languages in Prague (1912-18). He traveled in Europe (1918-25) as organizer of folksong activities, with the aim of raising the standards of choral music for the young. From 1925-29, he was the head of the Jugendmusik School at the Dortmund Cons. In 1930, he went to Stuttgart, where he organized an educational program for the promotion of folk music. In 1938, he returned to Prague; taught at the German Univ. there. After 1945, he went to Munich. He edited a number of folksong collections (Der singende Quell, etc.); edited the periodicals 'Finkensteiner Blätter,' 'Lied und Volk,' etc.; publ. Lied und Volk, eine Streitschrift wider das falsche deutsche Lied (1921); Über die gesamte Musikpflege in Schule und Haus, in H. J. Moser's 'Grundfragen der Schulmusik' (1931); Im Zeichen des Volksliedes (1922; 2nd ed., 1936); Auf den Spuren des Volksliedes (1944); also publ. Musikalische Grundlehre (Kassel, 1937).

Henselt, Adolph von, distinguished German pianist and composer; b. Schwabach, May 9, 1814; d. Warmbrunn, Silesia, Oct. 10, 1889. The family moved to Munich when he was still an infant, and he studied piano there with Mme. von Fladt. In 1831, an allowance from King Ludwig I enabled him to continue piano study with Hummel at Weimar; then he took a course of theory under Sechter in Vienna. After a highly successful tour in Germany (1837), he went to St. Petersburg (1838), where he established himself as a piano teacher; was appointed chamber pianist to the Empress, and inspector of music at the Imperial Institutes for Girls in principal Russian cities. He remained in Russia for 40 years; a generation of Russian pianists studied under him. He was a virtuoso of the first rank; like Liszt (whose intimate friend he became), he developed an individual manner of playing, designed to express a personal feeling for the music. His technical specialty was the artful execution, in legato, of widely extended chords and arpeggios, for the achievement of which he composed extremely difficult extension studies. As a composer of piano pieces, he was praised by Schumann and Liszt. His principal works are a piano concerto, 2 sets of études, and a number of effective piano pieces (Frühlingslied, La gondola, etc.); all together, he publ. 54 works. A sympathetic character-sketch of Henselt is found in W. von Lenz, Die grossen Pianoforte Virtuosen unserer Zeit (Berlin, 1872; English ed., N. Y., 1899). See also La Mara, Adolph Henselt, in Musikalische Studienköpfe (vol. III, 1909; reprinted separately, 1911).

Hentschel, Ernst Julius, German music educator; b. Zudel, near Görlitz, July 26, 1804; d. Weissenfels, Aug. 14, 1875. He was taken to Langenwaldau as a child, where he was taught violin and piano; later he learned to play all the wind instruments also. He devoted himself mainly to musical education, and won the highest regard in this field. He compiled several collections of school songs; was co-founder and editor of the musical journal 'Euterpe.'

Hentschel, Franz, German conductor and composer; b. Berlin, Nov. 6, 1814; d. there, May 11, 1889. He studied with A. W. Bach; after conducting theater orchestras in provincial towns, he settled in Berlin as music teacher. He wrote an opera, Die Hexenreise, and numerous marches for military bands.

Hentschel, Theodor, German conductor and composer; b. Schirgiswalde, March 28, 1830; d. Hamburg, Dec. 19, 1892. He studied with Reissiger and Ciccarelli in Dresden; was active as theater conductor in Bremen (1860-90), and then at Hamburg. He wrote the operas Matrose und Sänger (Leipzig, 1857); Der Königspage (Bremen, 1874); Die Braut von Lusignan, oder die schöne Melusine (Bremen, 1875); Lancelot (Bremen, 1878); Des Königs Schwerdt (Hamburg, 1891); overtures and symphonic marches for orch.; piano music; songs; Mass for double chorus; etc.

Henze, Hans Werner, German composer; b. Gütersloh, July 1, 1926. He studied piano and percussion; was drafted into the German army in 1944; became a war prisoner of the British. Upon his release after the war, he studied with Wolfgang Fortner in Heidelberg and with René Leibowitz in Paris. From 1949-53, he lived mostly in Berlin and Munich; from 1953-56, in Ischia; in 1956, settled in Naples. In his music he adopts an uncompromising modern idiom, eventually tending towards an integrally dodecaphonic system. The performances of his theatrical works invariably aroused heated controversy, owing to the boldness of the librettos as well as the musical idiom. — Works: Operas: Das Wundertheater, operatic melodrama (Heidelberg, May 7, 1949); Boulevard Solitude (Hanover, Feb. 17, 1952); König Hirsch (Berlin, Sept. 23, 1956). Ballets: Jack Pudding (Wiesbaden, June 5, 1951); Anrufung Apolls (Wiesbaden, Oct. 28, 1951); choreographic fantasy, Labyrinth (Hamburg, April, 1952); Der Idiot, ballet pantomime, after Dostoyevsky (Berlin, Sept. 1, 1952); Tancred und Canthylene (Munich, 1952); Pas d'action (1952); Die schlafende Prinzessin (Essen, 1954); Maratona di danza (Berlin, Sept. 24, 1957). Orchestral works: Symph. No. 1 (Darmstadt, 1947); Symph. No. 2 (Stuttgart, Dec. 1, 1949); Symph. No. 3 (Don-aueschingen Festival, Oct. 7, 1951); Kranichsteiner Kammerkonzert (Darmstadt, Sept. 27, 1946); Ballet Variations (Cologne, Oct. 3, 1949); violin concerto (Baden-Baden, Dec. 12, 1948); piano concerto (Düsseldorf, Sept. 11, 1952); Ode an den Westwind, for cello and orch. (Bielefeld, May 6, 1954); Quattro Poemi, symph. suite (Darmstadt, May 3, 1955); Symphonische Etuden (1956). Chamber music: sonatina for flute and piano (1947); violin sonata (1947); string quartet (1952); serenade for cello solo (1953); wind quintet (1953); Concerto per il Marigny, for piano and instruments (Paris, March 9, 1956). Vocal music: Ein Landarzt, radio cantata, after Kafka (Hamburg, Nov. 29, 1951); Das Ende einer Welt, radio cantata (Hamburg, Dec. 4, 1953); 5 madrigals for chorus and chamber orch. (Frankfurt, April 25, 1950).

HERBART — HERBERT

Herbart, Johann Friedrich, eminent German philosopher and musician; b. Oldenburg, May 4, 1776; d. Göttingen, Aug. 14, 1841. He studied at Jena with Fichte. In 1805, appointed prof. of philosophy at Göttingen; 1809-35, at Königsberg; 1835 (to his death) again at Göttingen. Of importance to music theory are his Psychologische Bemerkungen zur Tonlehre (1811), treating of intervals, and the chapter Von den schönen Künsten, in his Kurze Enzyklopädie der Philosophie (1931). He composed a piano sonata, which was published (Leipzig, 1808), and several other works. —Cf. W. Kahl, Herbart als Musiker (Langensalza, 1926).

Herbeck, Johann (Franz) von, Austrian conductor and composer; b. Vienna, Dec. 25, 1831; d. there, Oct. 28, 1877. He was a boy chorister at the Heiligenkreuz monastery, where he had instruction in organ; then studied composition with Ludwig Rottner in Vienna; also studied philosophy at Vienna Univ.; from 1859-66, and from 1875 to his death, he was conductor of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde; from 1866-71, court conductor; from 1871-75, director of the court opera. He was particularly successful as conductor and organizer of several choral societies in Vienna. Herbeck publ. numerous choral works of considerable worth, if not of any originality. His son, Ludwig Herbeck, publ. a biography, Johann Herbeck, ein Lebensbild (Vienna, 1885), which contains a complete catalogue of his works. See also the sketch on Herbeck in Hanslick's Suite (Vienna, 1885).

Herberigs, Robert, Belgian composer; b. Ghent, June 19, 1886. He studied at the Ghent Cons.; won first Belgian Prix de Rome with his cantata De Legende van St. Hubertus (1909). From 1951-53, he was director of the Flemish Opera in Antwerp; was also active in radio. Apart from his musical works, he publ. a number of novels. He wrote a comic opera, Le Mariage de Rosine (1925); 2 symphonies; Cyrano de Bergerac, symph. poem (1910); Hiawatha's Song, symph. suite (1921); 2 piano concertos (1932; 1952); 4 ballades for orch. (1954), The Four Seasons (after Breughel; Brussels, 1956); much chamber music; 22 sonatas and sonatinas for piano, etc.

Herbert, Victor, famous composer of light music; b. Dublin, Ireland, Feb. 1, 1859; d. New York, May 26, 1924. He was a grandson of Samuel Lover, the Irish novelist; his father died when he was an infant; soon his mother married a German physician, and settled in Stuttgart (1867) taking the boy with her. He entered the Stuttgart high school, but did not graduate; his musical ability was definitely pronounced by then, and he selected the cello as his instrument, taking lessons from the celebrated cellist Bernhard Cossmann in Baden-Baden. He soon acquired a degree of technical proficiency that enabled him to take a position as cellist in various orchestras in Germany, France, Italy, and Switzerland; in 1880, he became a cellist of the Eduard Strauss waltz band in Vienna; in 1881, returned to Stuttgart, where he joined the court orch., and studied composition with Max Seifritz at the Cons. His earliest works were for the cello with orch.; he performed his suite with the Stuttgart orch. on Oct. 23, 1883, and the first cello concerto on Dec. 8, 1885. On Aug. 14, 1886, he married the Viennese opera singer Therese Förster (1861-1927); in the same year she received an offer to join the Metropolitan Opera in New York, and Herbert was engaged as an orchestra cellist there, appearing in N. Y. also as soloist (played his own cello concerto with the N. Y. Philh., Dec. 10, 1887). In his early years in New York, Herbert was overshadowed by the celebrity of his wife, but soon he developed energetic activities on his own, forming an entertainment orchestra which he conducted in a repertory of light music; he also participated in chamber music concerts; was soloist with the Theodore Thomas and Seidl orchestras. He was the conductor of the Boston Festival Orch. in 1891; Tchaikovsky conducted this orchestra in Philadelphia in a miscellaneous program, and Herbert played a solo. He was associate conductor of the Worcester Festival (1889-91), for which he wrote a dramatic cantata, The Captive (Sept. 24, 1891). In 1893 he became bandmaster of the famous 22nd Regiment Band, succeeding P. S. Gilmore. On March 10, 1894, he was soloist with the N. Y. Philh. in his 2nd cello concerto. In the same year, at the suggestion of William MacDonald, the manager of the Boston Ideal Opera Company, Herbert wrote a light opera, Prince Anan- ias, which was produced with encouraging success in New York (Nov. 20, 1894). From 1898 to 1904, Herbert was conductor of the Pittsburgh Symph. Orch., presenting some of his own compositions: Episodes amoureuses (Feb. 2, 1900); Hero and Leander (Jan. 18, 1901); Woodland Fancies (Dec. 6, 1901); Columbus (Jan. 2, 1903). In 1900 he directed at Madison Square Garden, New York, an orch. of 420 performers for the benefit of the sufferers in the Galveston flood. On April 29, 1906 he led a similar monster concert at the Hippodrome for the victims of the San Francisco earthquake. In 1904 he organized the Victor Herbert N. Y. Orch.; and gave concerts in New York and neighboring communities. But it is as a composer of light operas that Herbert became chiefly known. In the best of these he unites spontaneous melody, sparkling rhythm, and simple but tasteful harmony, while his experience as a symphonic composer and conductor imparted a solidity of texture to his writing that placed him far above the many gifted amateurs in this field. Furthermore, he possessed a natural communicative power in his music, which made his operettas spectacularly successful with the public. In the domain of grand opera, he was not so fortunate. When the production of his first grand opera, Natoma, took place at Philadelphia on Feb. 25, 1911, it aroused great expectations; but the opera failed to sustain lasting interest. Still less effective was his second opera, Madeleine, staged by the Metropolitan Opera Co. in New York on Jan. 24, 1914. Herbert was one of the founders of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) in 1914, and was vice-president from that date until his death. In 1916 he wrote a special score for the motion picture, The Fall of a Nation, in synchronization with the screen play. A list of his operettas follows: Prince Ananias (N. Y., Nov. 20, 1894); The Wizard of the Nile (Chicago, Sept. 26, 1895); The Gold Bug (N. Y., Sept. 21, 1896); The Serenade (Cleveland, Feb. 17, 1897); The Idol's Eye (Troy, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1897); The Fortune Teller (Toronto, Sept. 14, 1898); Cyrano de Bergerac (Montreal, Sept. 11, 1899); The Singing Girl (Montreal, Oct. 2, 1899); The Ameer (Scranton, Oct. 9, 1899); The Viceroy (San Francisco, Feb. 12, 1900); Babes in Toyland (Chicago, June 17, 1903); Babette (Washington, Nov. 9, 1903); It Happened in Nordland (Harrisburg, Nov. 21, 1904); Miss Dolly Dollars (Rochester, Aug. 31, 1905); Wonderland (Buffalo, Sept. 14, 1905); Mlle. Modiste (Trenton, Oct.

7, 1905; Herbert's most popular work); The Red Mill (Buffalo, Sept. 3, 1906); Dream City (N. Y., Dec. 25, 1906); The Tattooed Man (Baltimore, Feb. 11, 1907); The Rose of Algeria (Wilkes-Barre, Sept. 11, 1909); Little Nemo (Philadelphia, Sept. 28, 1908); The Prima Donna (Chicago, Oct. 5, 1908); Old Dutch (Wilkes-Barre, Nov. 6, 1909); Naughty Marietta (Syracuse, Oct. 24, 1910; highly successful); When Sweet Sixteen (Springfield, Mass., Dec. 5, 1910); Mlle. Rosita (later called The Duchess, Boston, March 27, 1911); The Enchantress (Washington, Oct. 9, 1911); The Lady of the Slipper (Philadelphia, Oct. 8, 1912); The Madcap Duchess (Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1913); Sweethearts (Baltimore, March 24, 1913); The Débutante (Atlantic City, Sept. 21, 1914); The Only Girl (Atlantic City, Oct. 1, 1914); Princess Pat (Atlantic City, Aug. 23, 1915); Eileen (Cleveland, Jan. 1, 1917, as Hearts of Erin); Her Regiment (Springfield, Mass., Oct. 22, 1917); The Velvet Lady (Philadelphia, Dec. 23, 1918); My Golden Girl (Stamford, Conn., Dec. 19, 1919); The Girl in the Spotlight (Stamford, Conn., July 7, 1920); Oui, Madame (Philadelphia, March 22, 1920); Orange Blossoms (Philadelphia, Sept. 4, 1922); The Dream Girl (New Haven, April 22, 1924). He also composed music for the following stage productions: Cinderella Man (1915), The Century Girl (1916), Ziegfeld Follies (1917, 1920-23), The Willow Plate (marionette play by Tony Sarg, 1924). Besides the above works he wrote Serenade, op. 12; a second concerto for cello, op. 30; Suite romantique, op. 31; Pan-Americana; a Suite of Serenades (composed for Paul Whiteman's orch.; perf. 1924); Golden Days; Dramatic Overture; orchestral arrangements; men's choruses; songs; many pieces for piano, violin and piano, and cello and piano.—Cf. J. Kaye, Victor Herbert (N. Y., 1931); Edward N. Waters, Victor Herbert (exhaustive biography, with a full list of works; N. Y., 1955).

Herbst, Johannes, 'Moravian' minister and composer; b. Kempten, Swabia, July 23, 1735; d. Salem, North Carolina, Jan. 15, 1812. Herbst came to the United States in 1786 to serve as minister at Lancaster, Pa. and later at Lititz; brought with him an incredibly large collection of music manuscripts which he had copied in Europe. Included in the collection, which is preserved in its entirety in the Moravian Church Archives at Winston-Salem, N. C., are over 1000 anthems and sacred songs and about 50 important oratorios by principal contemporary European composers. In 1811 Herbst was elevated to the episcopate and transferred to the Southern Province of the Moravian Church at Salem, where he died the following year. He was the most prolific of all the American Moravian composers, having to his credit some 125 choral anthems and songs. Many of his works show him to have been a highly skilled musical craftsman. His music collection is particularly important as the principal source of music by American and European Moravian composers.—Cf. A. G. Rau and Hans T. David, A Catalogue of Music by American Moravians (Bethlehem, 1938); Hans T. David, Musical Life in the Pennsylvania Settlements of the Unitas Fratrum, in 'Transactions of the Moravian Historical Society' (Nazareth, Pa., 1942); H. T. David, Background for Bethlehem: Moravian Music in Pennsylvania, in 'Magazine of Art' (April, 1939); Donald M. McCorkle, The Moravian Contribution to American Music, in 'Notes' (Dec., 1956).

Hering, Karl (Friedrich August), German violinist; b. Berlin, Sept. 2, 1819; d. Burg, near Magdeburg, Feb. 2, 1889. He studied with Rungenhagen in Berlin and Tomaschek in Prague; established a music school in Berlin (1851); publ. Methodischer Leitfaden für Violinlehrer (1857) and an elementary violin method; also wrote a monograph on Kreutzer's studies (1858).

Hering, Karl Gottlieb, German music pedagogue; b. Bad Schandau, Oct. 25, 1765; d. Zittau, Jan. 4, 1853. He studied academic subjects at the Leipzig Univ.; music with J. G. Schicht. In 1811 he was appointed music teacher at the Zittau seminary, and remained there until 1836, when he retired. He publ. a number of manuals on practical music study: Praktisches Handbuch zur leichten Erlernung des Klavier-Spielens (Halberstadt, 1796); Praktische Violin-Schule (Leipzig, 1810), etc.; also compiled Zittauer Choralbuch (Leipzig, 1822), and other collections, including original compositions. Some of his pieces for children became celebrated in Germany and elsewhere, particularly Steckenpferd ('Hopp, hopp, hopp, Pferdchen lauf Galopp'); Weihnachtsfreude ('Morgen, Kinder, wirds was geben'), and (most famous of them all) Grossvaterlied, which was used by Schumann in his Carnaval.—Cf. Lucy Gelber, Karl Gottlieb Hering, in Die Liederkomponisten . . . (Berlin, 1936).

Héritte-Viardot, Louise - Pauline - Marie, vocal teacher; daughter of Pauline Viardot-García; b. Paris, Dec. 14, 1841; d. Heidelberg, Jan. 17, 1918. She was for many years a singing teacher at the St. Petersburg Cons.; then taught in Frankfurt, Berlin, and Heidelberg. She was married to a French consular official, Héritte. She was also a composer; her opera Lindoro was performed in Weimar (1879); she further wrote the cantatas Das Bacchusfest (Stockholm, 1880) and Le Feu de ciel; some chamber music, and vocal exercises. Her memoirs (translated from the original German MS) were publ. in English as Memoirs and Adventures (London, 1913), in French as Mémoires de Louise Héritte-Viardot (Paris, 1923).

Herman, Reinhold (Ludwig), conductor and composer; b. Prenzlau, Germany, Sept. 21, 1849; d. probably in New York, c. 1920. He studied at the Stern Cons. in Berlin; came to the U. S. in 1871 as singing teacher; from 1884, conducted the choral society 'Liederkrantz'; from 1898-1900, conducted the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston; then lived in Italy; returned to New York in 1917. He publ. An Open Door for Singers (N. Y., 1912); wrote 3 operas, of which Wulfrin was perf. in Kassel (Oct. 11, 1898); also several choral works.

Herman, Woody (Woodrow Wilson), American clarinetist and band leader; b. Milwaukee, May 16, 1913. He studied there and at Marquette Univ. In 1931, joined a jazz band as a clarinet player, and in 1937 formed his own band, with which he made numerous successful appearances. On March 25, 1946, he presented in Carnegie Hall the first performance of Stravinsky's Ebony Concerto, written specially for him. He is also the composer of numerous popular songs.

Hermann, Hans, German composer; b. Leipzig, Aug. 17, 1870; d. Berlin, May 18, 1931. He studied with W. Rust in Leipzig, E. Kretschmer in Dresden, and H. von Herzogenberg in Berlin; from the age of 18, played the double bass in various European orchestras; then taught at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Cons. in Berlin (1901-07). From 1907 till 1927, he lived in Dresden; then returned to Berlin. He publ. some 100 songs, of which several became fairly well known (Drei Wanderer, Alte Landsknechte, etc.); he had a flair for imitating the simple style of the folk ballad; he further wrote a symphony subtitled Lebensepisoden, a stage work Der rote Pimpernell; pieces for clarinet with piano, etc.

Hermann, Matthias. See Werrekoren.

Hermann, Robert, Swiss composer; b. Bern, April 29, 1869; d. Ambach, Bavaria, Oct. 22, 1912. He studied in Frankfurt; as a youth, developed an original approach to composition; he met Grieg, who encouraged him; studied briefly with Humperdinck; his symph. was perf. by the Berlin Philh. Orch. (Nov. 7, 1895), and other works followed. —Cf. W. Niemann, Robert Hermann, in vol. III of 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (Leipzig, 1909).

Hermannus (surnamed Contractus on account of his paralyzed limbs), theoretician and composer; b. Saulgau, July 18, 1013; d. Althausen, near Biberach, Sept. 24, 1054. He was the son of Hermann, Count of Vehringer. He was a student in Reichenau monastery; under the guidance of his tutor, Abbot Berno, he acquired wide learning. In 1043 he entered the Benedictine Order. His best known work (containing valuable historical notices on music) is a chronology from the time of Christ to 1054. It has been republ. several times, and is to be found in Peres' (Pertz's) Monumenta (vol. V). He was the author of Opuscula Musica, in which he gives a thorough discussion of the modes, and criticizes the Daseian notation used in the 10th-century tract, Musica enchiridis. He proposed his own notation by Greek and Latin letters. In the indication of a change in pitch, it had an advantage over neume-notation. Hermannus' notation is written above the neume-notation in some MSS of the 11th and 12th centuries in the Munich Library. Hermannus was the composer of the Gregorian Marian antiphons, Salve Regina and Alma Redemptoris Mater. A transcription (into modern notation) of his Versus ad discernendum cantum is to be found in A. Schering's Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (No. 7). —Cf. W. Brambach, Hermann Contracti Musica (Leipzig, 1884); J. Wolf, Handbuch der Notationskunde (vol. I, pp. 126 and 143); Peter Wagner, Einführung in die gregorianischen Melodien (vol. III, pp. 316 and 496); Leonard Ellinwood, Musica Hermann Contracti (Rochester, 1936), which gives the Latin text, ed. after both the Vienna MS and an 11th-century MS now at the Eastman School, Rochester, N. Y., an English translation, and commentary.

Hermesdorff, Michael, German musicologist; b. Trier (Trèves), March 4, 1833; d. there, Jan. 17, 1885. He entered the priesthood, and was appointed organist of Trier cathedral. He founded the Choral Society, chiefly for the exposition of Gregorian plain chant, on which he was an authority by virtue of his study of original sources. He edited the 'Graduale ad usum Romanum cantus S. Gregorii,' publ. (Leipzig, 1876-82, 10 numbers) in the monthly supplements of the 'Cäcilia' journal (Hermesdorff and Böckeler, Aix), but died before its completion. He revised the 2nd ed. of Lück's collection of sacred compositions (4 volumes); publ. German translation of the Micrologus and Epistola of Guido d'Arezzo; a Kyriale, and Harmonica cantus choralis a 4; a Graduale, several anthems, and Praefatio (prayers used in the Trier diocese); and 3 Masses of his own composition.

Hermstedt, Johann Simon, famous German clarinetist; b. Langensalza, Dec. 29, 1778; d. Sondershausen, Aug. 10, 1846. He was educated at the Annaberg school for soldiers' children; studied with Knoblauch and Baer; became clarinetist in the Langensalza regiment; then conducted a military band in Langensalza. He made improvements in his instrument; composed concertos, variations, and other pieces for clarinet. Spohr wrote a clarinet concerto for him.

Hernández (är-nahn'-déz), Pablo, Spanish composer; b. Saragossa, Jan. 25, 1834; d. Madrid, Dec. 15, 1910. He was first a church chorister; at 14, played organ at the San Gil church in Saragossa. At 22, he went to Madrid to study with Eslava at the Madrid Cons.; graduated with a gold medal (1861) and joined the faculty in 1863 as a singing teacher. He wrote 2 zarzuelas: Gimnasio higienico and Un Sevillano en la Habana; also many sacred works.

Hernández Moncada, Eduardo, Mexican composer; b. Jalapa, Sept. 24, 1899. He studied with Rafael Tello at the National Cons. in Mexico City. He conducted theater orchestras; in 1936 became assistant cond. of the Orquesta Sinfónica in Mexico. As a composer he made an impression with his symphony, first performed in Mexico City (July 31, 1942). His ballet Ixtépec (1945) employs Mexican rhythms.

Hernando (är-nahn'-do), Rafael José María, Spanish composer; b. Madrid, May 31, 1822; d. there, July 10, 1888. He studied with Carnicer and Saldoni at the Madrid Cons. (1837-43); then went to Paris, where he took lessons with Auber. His Stabat Mater was performed there, and a grand opera, Romilda, was accepted for performance at the Théâtre des Italiens, but the revolutionary upheaval of 1848 prevented its production. Hernando returned to Madrid, where he produced a number of zarzuelas, of which the most successful was El duende (June 6, 1849); others were Palo de ciego (1849), Colegiales y soldados (1849), Bertoldo y Comparsa, Cosas de Juan, El tambor, Aurora, etc.; also collaborated with Barbieri, Oudrid, and Gaztambide in Escenas de Chamberi and Don Simplicio Bobadilla. In 1852 he became secretary of the Madrid Cons.; later taught harmony there.

Hernried, Robert, writer on music and composer; b. Vienna, Sept. 22, 1883; d. Detroit, Sept. 3, 1951. He studied at the Univ. of Vienna; for some years conducted opera at provincial theaters (1908-14); taught theory at the Mannheim Academy of Music (1919-22), at the Cons. of Heidelberg (1923), in Erfurt, and in Berlin. In 1933 he left Germany and taught in New York, Davenport, Iowa, Dickinson, N. D., and at Fort Wayne, Ind. In 1946 he became prof. of music at the Detroit Institute of Musical Art. He wrote an opera, Francesca da Rimini; about 75 choral works; a Mass; some characteristic pieces for orch., etc.; publ. a monograph on Jaques-Dalcroze (Geneva, 1929), a biography of Brahms (Leipzig, 1934), and 2 theoretical works, Allgemeine Musiklehre (Berlin, 1932) and Systematische Modulation (Berlin, 1935; 2nd ed., 1948).

Hérold (ä-röhl'd'), Louis-Joseph-Ferdinand, celebrated French dramatic composer; b. Paris, Jan. 28, 1791; d. Thernes, near Paris, Jan. 19, 1833. His father, François-Joseph Hérold (pupil of Ph. E. Bach), a piano teacher and composer, did not desire his son to become a musician, and sent him to the Hix school, where his aptitude for music was noticed by Fétis, then assistant teacher there. After his father's death (1802), Hérold began to study music seriously; in 1806 he entered the Paris Cons., taking piano lessons with Louis Adam, and winning first prize for piano playing in 1810. He studied harmony under Catel, and (from 1811) composition under Méhul; in 1812 his cantata Mlle. de la Vallière won the Prix de Rome (the MS score is in the Cons. Library with works composed during his three years' study in Rome). From Rome he went to Naples, where he became pianist to Queen Caroline; here he produced his first opera, La gioventù di Enrico Quinto (Jan. 5, 1815), which was well received. From Naples he went to Vienna, and after a few months' stay returned to Paris, where he finished the score of Boieldieu's Charles de France, an 'opéra d'occasion' (Opéra-Comique, June 18, 1816), and where all the rest of his operas were produced. The flattering reception of Charles de France led to the successful production of Les Rosières (Jan. 27, 1817), La Clochette (Oct. 18, 1817), Le premier venu (Sept. 28, 1818), Les Troqueurs (Feb. 18, 1819), and L'Auteur mort et vivant (Dec. 18, 1820); the failure of the last-named opera caused him to distrust his natural talent, and to imitate, in several succeeding stage works, the style then in vogue—that of Rossini. With the comic opera Marie (Aug. 12, 1826) Hérold returned, however, to his true element, and won instant and brilliant success. Meantime he had obtained the post of chorusmaster at the Italian Opera (1824); during this period he brought out Le Muletier (May 12, 1823), Lasthénie (Sept. 8, 1823), Vendôme en Espagne (Dec. 5, 1823), Le Roi René (Aug. 24, 1824), and Le Lapin blanc (May 21, 1825). In 1827 he was appointed to the staff of the Grand Opéra, for which he wrote several melodious and elegant ballets: Astolphe et Jaconde (Jan. 29, 1827); La Somnambule (Sept. 19, 1827); Lydie (July 2, 1828); La Fille mal gardée (Nov. 17, 1828); La Belle au bois dormant (April 27, 1829); La Noce de village (Feb. 11, 1830). La Somnambule furnished Bellini with the subject of his popular opera. On July 18, 1829 Hérold produced L'Illusion, a one-act opera full of charming numbers. Emmeline, a grand opera (Nov. 28, 1829), was a failure, but his next opera Zampa (May 3, 1831) was sensationally successful and placed Hérold in the first rank of French composers. He then wrote L'Auberge d'Aurey (May 11, 1830) jointly with Carafa; La Marquise de Brinvilliers (Oct. 31, 1831) in collaboration with Auber, Batton, Berton, Blangini, Boieldieu, Carafa, Cherubini, and Paër; also produced La Médecine sans médecin (Oct. 15, 1832). His last work published in his lifetime, Le Pré aux clercs (Dec. 15, 1832), had a remarkable vogue. He died of consumption shortly before his 42nd birthday. His unfinished opera Ludovic was completed by Halévy and produced posthumously at the Opéra-Comique on May 16, 1833. Hérold's piano music, comprising 55 opus numbers, consists of sonatas, caprices, rondos, divertissements, fantasies, variations, and potpourris. —Cf. B. Jouvin, Hérold, sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1868); Hector Berlioz, Les Musiciens et la musique (Paris, 1903); A. Pougin, Hérold (Paris, 1906).

Heron-Allen, Edward, English writer on the violin; b. London, Dec. 17, 1861; d. Selsey, Sussex, March 28, 1943. He is the author of a standard manual on the history of violin manufacture: Violin-making, as It Was and Is (London, 1884).

Herriot, Édouard, French statesman and writer on music; b. Troyes, July 5, 1872; d. Lyons, March 26, 1957. He entered politics as a member of the Radical Party; was premier of France 3 times between 1924 and 1932; then became president of the Chamber of Deputies. He was arrested in 1942 for refusing to cooperate with the Vichy Government, deported to Germany, and held in a castle near Potsdam until the end of the war. Returning to France, he resumed his activities; in 1946, he was elected to the French Academy. He was the author of a popular biography, La vie de Beethoven (Paris, 1929; many editions), publ. in English as The Life and Times of Beethoven (N. Y., 1935).

Herrmann, Bernard, American composer and conductor; b. New York, Jan. 29, 1911. He won a composition prize at the age of 13; then began to study music thoroughly, with Philip James at N. Y. Univ., and with Stoessel and Wagenaar at the Juilliard Graduate School of Music. He then became active as radio conductor; for several years conducted the C.B.S. summer series of the Columbia Broadcasting Symp. Orch., performing numerous works by American composers; then lived in Hollywood as film composer. His music is radical in its idiom, without losing contact with tonality and form; his scores for motion pictures are particularly effective.—Works: Moby Dick, dramatic cantata (N. Y. Philh., April 11, 1940); Johnny Appleseed, cantata (1940); Wuthering Heights, opera (1950). For orch.: The City of Brass, symph. poem (1934); Sinfonietta for strings (1935); Currier and Ives, suite (1935); Fiddle Concerto (1940); Symph. No. 1 (N. Y. Philh., Nov. 12, 1942); For the Fallen (N. Y., Dec. 16, 1943); also Aubade for 14 instruments (1933); string quartet and other chamber music. Film scores: Citizen Kane (1940); The Devil and Daniel Webster (1941); Anna and the King of Siam (1947), etc.

Herrmann, Eduard, conductor and composer; b. Oberrotweil, Germany, Dec. 18, 1850; d. Miami, Fla., April 24, 1937. He studied violin with Joachim in Berlin; played in various German orchestras; from 1878-81, he was concertmaster of the Imperial Orch. in St. Petersburg. In 1881, he settled in New York; formed a quartet with Schenck, Lillenthal, and Hauser, which enjoyed an excellent reputation; one of their features was the annual performance of all of Beethoven's quartets. He wrote a violin concerto, a string quintet, a string quartet, a sextet for oboe, clarinet, and strings, etc.

Herrmann, Georg. See Armin, Georg.

Herrmann, Hugo, German composer; b. Ravensburg, April 19, 1896. He learned to play the organ and acquired primary knowledge of music without systematic study; followed his father's profession as a school teacher in the provinces; then was drafted into the Germany army during World War I and severely wounded in 1918. After the Armistice, he turned to serious music study, and took courses with Schreker and Gmeindl in Berlin. In 1923 he went to the U. S., and was organist at the Church of the Holy Redeemer in Detroit and a member of the Detroit Symp. Orch. In 1925 he returned to Germany; in 1935 he obtained the post of director of a music school in Trossingen. Herrmann has written a great number of works in all genres; the operas Gazellenhorn, Picknick, Vasantasena, Das Wunder, Paracelsus, Der Rekord, Der Überfall, Die Heinzelmännchen; 5 symphonies; many symph. poems; violin concerto; 4 string quartets and other chamber music; choral works; lieder. Herrmann has been very active in organizing music festivals and school concerts. A believer in practical art, he has promoted various organizations for community music; took especial interest in the accordion, and wrote works for it, with orchestra, and in other combinations; also wrote pieces for the mouth harmonica.—Cf. Armin Fett, ed., Hugo Herrmann, Leben und Werk, a 'Festschrift' on Herrmann's 60th birthday (Trossingen, 1956).

Herschel, Friedrich Wilhelm, eminent astronomer; b. Hanover, Nov. 15, 1738; d. Slough, near Windsor, Aug. 23, 1822. Son of a military musician, he was brought up as a musician like his three brothers. At 14 years of age he entered the band of the Hanoverian guards as oboist, and was stationed at Durham when that regiment came to England (1755). He later played organ at the Halifax parish church. In 1766 he was employed at the Octagon Chapel in Bath. He devoted his leisure to astronomy, constructed the great 'Herschel' telescope, discovered the planet Uranus, was appointed 'Astronomer Royal' (1781), and abandoned the musical profession. He received the honor of knighthood (1816) and an Oxford degree. He composed a symphony and 2 concertos for wind instruments.

Hertog, Johannes den, Dutch conductor and composer; b. Amsterdam, Jan. 20, 1904. He studied with his father, Herman Johannes den Hertog; then with Cornelis Dopfer. He occupied various posts as operatic coach; was director and conductor of the Wagner Society in Amsterdam; from 1938-41, was assistant conductor of the Concertgebouw; also conducted at The Hague; in 1948, he was appointed conductor of the Flemish Opera in Antwerp. He has written a number of songs and some orchestral pieces.

Hertz, Alfred, eminent conductor; b. Frankfurt, July 15, 1872; d. San Francisco, April 17, 1942. After completing his academic studies, he entered the Raff Cons., where he studied with Anton Urspruch; then held positions as opera conductor in Altenburg (1892-95), Barmen-Elberfeld (1895-99), and Breslau (1899-1902). In 1902 he was engaged as conductor of the German repertory at the Metropolitan Opera; he conducted the first American performance of Parsifal (Dec. 24, 1903), which took place against the wishes of the Wagner family; consequently, Hertz could no longer obtain permission to conduct Wagner in Germany. In 1915 he was engaged to lead the San Francisco Symph. Orch.; he retained that post until 1930. He also organized the summer series of concerts at the Hollywood Bowl (1922), and conducted more than 100 concerts there; he was affectionately known as the 'Father of the Hollywood Bowl.'

Hertzka, Emil, music publisher; b. Budapest, Aug. 3, 1869; d. Vienna, May 9, 1932. He studied chemistry at the Univ. of Vienna; also took courses in music. He was engaged on the staff of the music publisher Weinberger in Vienna (1893); then joined the Universal Edition organized in 1901. In 1907 he became its director, and remained in that capacity until his death. He purchased the catalogues of several other music publishing firms: the Wiener Philharmonischer Verlag, Albert J. Gutmann Co. (which published Bruckner and Mahler), and acquired the rights of publication to works by many celebrated modern composers (Bartók, Schoenberg, Alban Berg, Kurt Weill, Krenek); also represented Soviet composers. An impassioned believer in the eventual worth of experimental music, he encouraged young composers, took active part in the organization of concerts of modern music, etc. An Emil Hertzka Foundation was established by his family after his death for the purpose of helping unknown composers to secure performances and publication of their works.

Hertzmann, Erich, musicologist; b. Krefeld, Germany, Dec. 14, 1902. He studied composition with Bernhard Sekles; then turned to musicology, studying under Moritz Bauer at the Univ. of Frankfurt and with J. Wolf, Abert, Schering, Sachs, Hornbostel, and Blume at the Univ. of Berlin. He then took an additional course with Pirro in Paris; received his Ph. D. at Berlin Univ. with a dissertation on Willaert (1931). From 1930 to 1933 he was musical correspondent in Berlin for several newspapers, including the London Times. In 1938 he left Germany and settled in the U. S.; in 1939 joined the faculty of Columbia Univ.; 1946, assistant prof.; 1949, associate prof.; 1956, full prof.; also lectured at Princeton Univ. (1946-49); in 1949 he held a Guggenheim Fellowship; in 1955 received a stipend from Columbia Univ. to study the creative processes of Beethoven.—Writings: Adrian Willaert in der weltlichen Vokalmusik seiner Zeit (Leipzig, 1931); The Newly Discovered Autograph of Beethoven's Rondo à Capriccio, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1946); Mozart's Creative Process, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1957); other articles in musical journals; edited A. Willaert und andere Meister: Volkstümliche italienische Lieder (Wolfenbüttel, 1930); Beethoven's Rondo à Capriccio, op. 129 (N. Y., 1947).

Hervé (properly Florimond Ronger), a French dramatic composer, the creator of French operetta; b. Houdain, near Arras, June 30, 1825; d. Paris, Nov. 4, 1892. He was a chorister and scholar of St-Roch; he became organist at various churches in Paris. With his friend Kelm, in 1848, he sang in Don Quichotte et Sancho Pansa, an interlude of his own composition, at the Opéra National. In 1851 he conducted the orch. at the Palais Royal; in 1855 he opened the 'Folies-Concertantes,' a small theater for the production of pantomimes, saynètes (musical comediettas for two persons), etc., and, with phenomenal activity, developed the light French operetta from these diminutive and frivolous pieces, writing both librettos and music, conducting the orchestra, and often appearing as an actor on the stage. From 1856 to 1869 he led this feverish life in Paris, producing his works at various theaters, meeting failures by doubling his efforts. In 1870-71, when the Franco-Prussian War and the Commune stopped theatrical activities in Paris, he went to London, where he produced several of his light operas; he revisited London many times afterwards. In all, he wrote about 50 operettas, of which only one became a universal success, Mam'zelle Nitouche (Paris, Jan. 16, 1883, followed by numerous productions in European cities); other fairly successful works were L'Oeil crevé (Paris, Oct. 12, 1867) and Le Petit Faust (Paris, April 29, 1869). He also wrote a grand opera, Les Chevaliers de la table ronde (Paris, Nov. 17, 1866); the ballets, Sport, La Rose d'Amour, Les Bagatelles, etc.—Cf. L. Schneider, Les Maîtres de l'opérette française, Hervé et Charles Lecocq (Paris, 1924).

Hervey, Arthur, composer and writer; b. (of Irish parentage) Paris, Jan. 26, 1855; d. London, March 10, 1922. At first intended for the diplomatic service, he embraced a musical career in 1880; was critic for 'Vanity Fair' (1889-92); 1892-1908, on the staff of the London 'Morning Post.'—Author of Masters of French Music (London, 1894); French Music in the XIXth Century (1904); Alfred Bruneau (1907); Franz Liszt and His Music (1911); Meyerbeer (1913); Rubinstein (1913); Saint-Saëns (1921); etc.

Herz, Henri, brilliant Austrian pianist; b. Vienna, Jan. 6, 1803; d. Paris, Jan. 5, 1888. He was taught by his father, and by Hüntner at Coblenz; later (1816) by Pradher, Reicha, and Dourlen at the Paris Cons., and won 1st piano prize; improved himself in Moscheles' style after that virtuoso's visit in 1821; was in high repute as a fashionable teacher and composer, his compositions realizing 3 and 4 times the price of those of his superior contemporaries. In 1831 he made a tour of Germany with the violinist Lafont; visited London in 1834, and at his first concert Moscheles and Cramer played duets with him. In 1842, was appointed piano prof. at the Paris Cons. He suffered financial losses through partnership with a piano manufacturer, Klepfer, and thereupon undertook a concert tour through the United States, Mexico, and the West Indies (1845-51). Returning, he established a successful piano factory, his instruments receiving 1st prize at the Paris Exhibition of 1855. He resigned his professorship at the Cons. in 1874. Herz acknowledged that he courted the popular taste; of his numerous works (over 200), at which Schumann frequently poked fun, only his Études and Méthode complète de piano (op. 100) survived him. They include piano concertos, variations, sonatas, rondos, violin sonatas, nocturnes, dances, marches, fantasias, etc. He publ. an interesting and vivid book, Mes voyages en Amérique (1866), a reprint of his letters to the 'Moniteur Universel,' describing his American tour.

Herzog (här'tsöhg), Benedikt. See Ducis.

Herzog, Emilie, brilliant German coloratura-singer and soubrette; b. Diessenhofen, Thurgau, 1859; d. Aarburg, Switzerland, Sept. 16, 1923. She was a pupil of the Zürich School of Music under Gloggnier (1876-8); at Munich, under Schimon (1878-80); made her theatrical début as the Page in Les Huguenots (Munich, 1880). In 1889, she was engaged for the Berlin Court Opera, where she became especially famous as an interpreter of Mozart; extended tours of Germany established her reputation as one of the foremost lieder-singers; she taught at the Hochschule, Berlin (1903-10); at the Zürich Cons. (until 1922); then retired and lived in Aarburg. In 1890 she married the writer Dr. H. Welter.

Herzog, George, musicologist; b. Budapest, Dec. 11, 1901; studied musicology and anthropology at the Berlin Univ. and later at Columbia Univ., where he received his Ph.D. (1931); made a survey of Indian music in the southwestern U. S. for Columbia Univ.; collected folk melodies in Maine; in 1930-31, joined the Chicago Univ. expedition to Liberia, where he studied West African music, poetry, and signal drumming; made over 2000 records of primitive music in West Africa and North America; lectured on primitive music, African ethnology, phonetics, primitive languages, etc.; between 1929 and 1948, he occupied positions of research associate at Columbia Univ., Yale, and Chicago Univ. In 1948, he was appointed prof. of anthropology and folk music at the Univ. of Indiana.—Publications: Die Musik der Karolinen-Inseln (Hamburg, 1936); Research in Primitive and Folk Music in the U. S. (Washington, 1936); numerous articles in anthropological, folkloristic, and musical journals. For a complete list of his writings, see B. Krader, Bibliography of George Herzog, in 'Ethnomusicology' (Middletown, Conn., Jan., 1956, pp. 11-20).

Herzog, Johann Georg, German organist and composer; b. Hummendorf, near Kronach, Aug. 5, 1822; d. Munich, Feb. 3, 1909. He studied at the music school in Schmölz, in Bavaria, and at the age of 11, began to earn a living playing the organ. In 1843, he went to Munich, where he was church organist, and later (1850) prof. at the Munich Cons.; among his pupils was Rheinberger. In 1854, he went to Erlangen; established a series of historical organ concerts there (1861-65); he then returned to Munich. He wrote a great number of organ works; also practical manuals.

Herzog, Sigmund, pianist; b. Budapest, June 13, 1868; d. New York, Aug. 28, 1932. He studied with Julius Epstein at the Vienna Cons., graduating in 1885; later with Rafael Joseffy in New York, where he then taught at the Institute of Musical Art. He publ. The Art of Octave-Playing and various piano pieces.

Herzogenberg, Heinrich von, pianist and composer; b. Graz, June 10, 1843; d. Wiesbaden, Oct. 9, 1900. He studied with Dessoff at the Vienna Cons.; then lived in Graz; went to Leipzig in 1872; with Spitta, Holstein, and Volkland, he founded the Bach-Verein there (1874); was its conductor from 1875-85; then was prof. of composition at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin (1885-88); director of the 'Meisterschule' (1889-92 and 1897-1900). He was a very prolific composer; his chief influences were Brahms and Bruch; among his works are the oratorios Die Geburt Christi, Die Passion, Erntefeier; choral works with orch., Der Stern des Liedes, Die Weihe der Nacht, Nannas Klage, Totenfeier, and several psalms and motets; a cantata Columbus; a symph. poem Odysseus; 2 symphonies; piano quintet; string quintet; 5 string quartets; quartet for piano, horn, clarinet, and bassoon; 2 piano quartets; 2 piano trios; 2 string trios; trio for piano, oboe, and horn; 3 violin sonatas; 3 cello sonatas; several works for piano four-hands; fantasies for organ.—Herzogenberg's wife, Elisabeth, née von Stockhausen (b. Paris, April 13, 1847; d. San Remo, Jan. 7, 1892), was an excellent pianist. They were great friends of Brahms, with whom they maintained a long correspondence (see M. Kalbeck, Johannes Brahms im Briefwechsel mit Heinrich und Elisabeth von Herzogenberg, 1907).—Cf. J. H. Spengel, Heinrich von Herzogenberg in seinen Vokalwerken (Leipzig, 1893); W. Altmann, Heinrich von Herzogenberg, Sein Leben und Schaffen (Leipzig, 1903). J. Rieter-Bieder-mann publ. a complete catalogue of Herzogenberg's works (1900).

Heseltine, Philip (pen-name Peter Warlock), brilliant English composer and writer; b. London, Oct. 30, 1894; d. there, Dec. 17, 1930. He studied at Eton with Colin Taylor (1908-10); a meeting with Delius in France in 1910 influenced him profoundly in the direction of composition; he adopted a style that was intimately connected with English traditions of the Elizabethan period and yet revealed impressionistic undertones in harmonic writing. Another influence was that of Bernard van Dieren, from whom he absorbed an austere contrapuntal technique. He publ. all his musical works under the name Peter Warlock. Psychological difficulties prevented him from utilizing his innate gifts to the full; most of his works are poetic miniatures, and yet their value appears incontestable. He was a conscientious objector during World War I; in 1917 was in Ireland; after the Armistice returned to London; in 1920 he founded the progressive journal of musical opinion, 'The Sackbut'; wrote criticism; made transcriptions of old English music; participated in organizing the Delius Festival in 1929. Suffering from depression, he committed suicide by gas in his London flat.—Books (under the name Philip Heseltine): Frederick Delius (London, 1923; revised ed. by Hubert Foss, London, 1952); Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa, Musician and Murderer (in collaboration with Cecil Gray; London, 1926); a pamphlet of 8 pages, Thomas Whythorne: an Unknown Elizabethan Composer (Oxford, 1927); as Peter Warlock, publ. a monograph, The English Ayre (London, 1926); ed. (with Ph. Wilson) 300 old songs (English Ayres, Elizabethan and Jacobean; French Ayres); co-editor, Oxford Choral Songs and the Oxford Orchestral Series, a collection of old English and Italian dances; transcribed for piano some lute music of John Dowland, Forlorn Hope; many other transcriptions. Musical compositions: song cycle The Cuckoo (with flute, English horn, and string quartet); Saudades (3 songs); Lilligay (5 songs); Peterisms (2 sets of 3 songs each); Candlelight (12 nursery songs), and many separate songs; Capriol Suite (on tunes from Arbeau's Orchésographie, in 2 versions: for string orch. and full orch.); Corpus Christi (2 versions, for chorus a cappella and for soprano and tenor soli with string quartet); numerous other vocal works.—Cf. Cecil Gray, Peter Warlock: a Memoir of Philip Heseltine (London, 1934); G.

Cockshott, A Note on Warlock's Capriol Suite, in the 'Monthly Musical Record' (1940); G. Cockshott, Some Notes on the Songs of Peter Warlock, in 'Music & Letters' (July, 1940); K. Avery, The Chronology of Warlock's Songs, in 'Music & Letters' (Oct., 1948).

Hess, Ludwig, German tenor; b. Marburg, March 23, 1877; d. Berlin, Feb. 5, 1944. He studied singing with Vidal in Milan; gave concerts of German lieder throughout Europe, specializing in the modern repertory (Richard Strauss, Max Reger, Hugo Wolf, etc.); made a successful tour of the U. S. and Canada in 1911; conducted a choral society in Königsberg (1917-20); then settled in Berlin. He was also a composer; wrote the operas Abu und Nu (Danzig, 1919) and Vor Edens Pforte (after Byron); Kranion (Erfurt, 1933); a symphony, and a symph. poem Himmelskönig mit musizierenden Engeln (after Hans Memling); Ariadne, a cantata; many choral works, and numerous songs. He publ. a book Die Behandlung der Stimme vor, während und nach der Mutation (Berlin, 1927).

Hess, Dame Myra, distinguished English pianist; b. London, Feb. 25, 1890. She studied at the Royal Academy of Music with Tobias Matthay. She made her debut on Nov. 15, 1907, in London, playing Beethoven's G major concerto with Thomas Beecham, producing such an impression that her reputation was established almost immediately. She played in Germany and France; made a successful American tour in 1922, and repeated these tours at regular intervals. In 1941 she was created Dame of the British Empire. Her playing is marked by classical precision and poetic individuality; she avoids modernistic works, but occasionally performs piano music by contemporary British composers.

Hess, Willy, German violinist; b. Mannheim, July 14, 1859; d. Berlin, Feb. 17, 1939. His first teacher was his father, who was a pupil of Spohr. As a child, he was taken to the U. S.; at the age of 9, he played with the Thomas Orch. He then studied with Joachim in Berlin; later occupied posts as concertmaster in Frankfurt (1878-86), Rotterdam, where he taught at the Cons. (1886-88), and in Manchester, England, with the Hallé Orch. (1888-95). From 1895 to 1903, he was prof. of violin at the Cons. of Cologne; then taught at the Royal Academy of Music in London (1903-04); in 1904, he was engaged as concertmaster of the Boston Symph. Orch., and remained in that position until 1910; also organized the Hess Quartet in Boston. From 1910-28 he taught at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; there he remained until his death.—Cf. F. Bonavia, Willy Hess, in the 'Monthly Musical Record' (1931).

Hess, Willy, Swiss musicologist; b. Winterthur, Oct. 12, 1906. He studied with Volkmar Andreae and Paul Müller at the Zürich Cons.; in 1940, engaged as bassoon player in the city orch. at Winterthur; also active as teacher. He has contributed a great number of articles dealing with various obscure points of Beethoven's works; publ. an exhaustive volume, Beethovens Oper Fidelio und ihre drei Fassungen (Zürich, 1953); also a biography, Beethoven (Zürich, 1956).

Hesse, Adolph (Friedrich), German organist and composer; b. Breslau, Aug. 30, 1808; d. there, Aug. 5, 1863. His father was an organ builder, and Hesse received his first instruction from him; he further profited by the advice of Hummel and Spohr. He was church organist at Breslau; visited Paris in 1844 for the inauguration of the new organ at St-Eustache; his virtuoso handling of the pedal evoked praise. In 1851 he gave demonstrations of organ playing in London; then returned to Breslau; there he enjoyed a great reputation, not only as an organist, but also as conductor of the Breslau Symph. He publ. a collection, Practical Organist; his organ works were brought out by Steggall in a complete edition.

Hesse, Ernst Christian, German composer; b. Grossgottm., April 14, 1676; d. Darmstadt, May 16, 1762. He studied the viola da gamba, first at Darmstadt, then in Paris; gave successful demonstrations of his virtuosity in various European towns. In 1713, he married the opera singer, Johanna Döbriht. He wrote 2 operas and many works for viola da gamba.

Hesse, Julius, German pianist; b. Hamburg, March 2, 1823; d. Berlin, April 5, 1881. He originated and successfully introduced a new measurement for piano keys; publ. System des Klavierspiels.

Hesse, Max, German music publisher; b. Sondershausen, Feb. 18, 1858; d. Leipzig, Nov. 24, 1907. In 1880 he founded a publishing house at Leipzig and in 1883, the printing establishment Hesse & Becker, for music and books. Publications include 'Musikalische Handbücher' (series); Riemann's 'Musiklexikon'; 'Deutscher Musikerkalender'; the monthly 'Die Musik.'

Hesselberg, Edouard Gregory, pianist and teacher; b. Riga, May 3, 1870; d. Los Angeles, June 12, 1935. He studied at the Cons. of the Moscow Philh. Society (1888-92); later was a private pupil of Anton Rubinstein. In 1892 he came to the U. S.; taught at the Ithaca Cons. (1895-96), Music Academy in Denver (1896-1900), Cons. of Music at Wesleyan College (1900-05), Belmont College, Nashville (1905-12), and at the Toronto Cons. (1912-18). He wrote a Russian Suite and a Russian Rhapsody, for orch.; also piano pieces; made arrangements for 2 pianos of works by Bach, Chopin, and Schubert.

Hessen, Alexander Friedrich, Landgraf von, blind musician; b. Copenhagen, Jan. 25, 1863; d. Fronhausen, March 26, 1945. Although blind from birth, he began at a very early age to study piano and violin, as well as composition; for his teachers he had Herzogenberg, Joachim, Bruch, Weingartner, and Draeske in Germany; also took lessons from Fauré in Paris (1899). His German lieder show a fine lyrical talent; he also composed chamber music (trio for clarinet, horn, and piano; 4 canons for 2 sopranos, 2 horns, and piano, etc.).—Cf. P. Hiller, Der Liederzyklus von A. Fr. von Hessen (1910).

Hessenberg, Kurt, German composer; b. Frankfurt, Aug. 17, 1908. He studied in Leipzig with G. Raphael (composition) and R. Teichmüller (piano). In 1933 he was appointed to the faculty of the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt; in 1940 he received the National Prize for composition; in 1951, the Schumann Prize. Possessing great facility, Hessenberg evolved an effective idiom, basically classical, but containing Wagnerian elements in dramatic passages. One of his earliest works, Struwwelpeter, a suite for small orch. based on a well-known children's tale, became also his most successful composition (1933). He further wrote 3 symphonies (1936, 1943, 1954); concerto grosso (1938); Konzertante Musik, for 2 string orchestras (1947); Spielmusik for strings (1954); concerto for harpsichord and strings (1931); piano concerto (1940); concerto for 2 pianos and orch. (1950); 4 string quartets; quartet for violin, viola, cello, and piano; piano trio; string trio, etc.; many sacred choral works; several song cycles.—Cf. Karl Laux, Kurt Hessenberg, in Musik und Musiker der Gegenwart (Essen, 1949).

Hetsch, (Karl Friedrich) Ludwig, German conductor; b. Stuttgart, April 26, 1806; d. Mannheim, June 28, 1872. He studied with Abeille; was attached to the court of the King of Württemberg; then conducted in Heidelberg (1835-46) and in Munich (from 1846). He wrote an opera, Ryno (Stuttgart, 1833), orchestral works, and chamber music.

Heuberger (hoi'-bër-gër), Richard (Franz Joseph), conductor and composer; b. Graz, June 18, 1850; d. Vienna, Oct. 27, 1914. By profession a civil engineer, in 1876 he turned his full attention to music; became choral master of the Vienna 'Gesangverein,' and conductor of the Singakademie (1878); from 1902-09, conductor of the 'Männergesangverein'; appointed prof. at the Vienna Cons. (1902). In 1881 he became music critic of the 'Wiener Tageblatt,' then of 'Neue Freie Presse' (1896-1901); after 1904, of 'Neue Musikalische Presse,' and editor of 'Musikbuch aus Österreich' (1904-06).—Works: operas: Abenteuer einer Neujahrsnacht (Leipzig, 1886); Manuel Venegas (Leipzig, March 27, 1889), remodeled as the 3-act grand opera Mirjam, oder Das Maifest (Vienna, Jan. 20, 1894); Barfüssle (Dresden, 1905); the ballet Struwwelpeter (Dresden, 1897); cantata, Geht es dir wohl, so denk' an mich, from 'Des Knaben Wunderhorn'; overture to Byron's Cain; and songs. He also wrote the operettas (all first performed at Vienna) Der Opernball (Jan. 5, 1898; exceptionally successful; in N. Y., May 24, 1909); Ihre Excellenz (1899; new version as Eine entzückende Frau); Der Sechszug (1900); Das Baby (1902); Der Fürst von Döbberstein (1909); Don Quixote (1910). He publ. a selection of his critiques as Musikalische Skizzen (Leipzig, 1901); a biography, Franz Schubert (Berlin, 1902; 2nd ed., 1908); Anleitung zum Modulieren (Vienna, 1910); and a new ed. of G. Jensen's revision of Cherubini's Counterpoint (Leipzig, 1911).

Heubner (hoib'-ner), Konrad, German composer; b. Dresden, April 8, 1860; d. Coblenz, June 6, 1905. He studied with Riemann in Leipzig, with Nottebohm in Vienna, and with Nicodé in Dresden. In 1890 he was appointed director of the Coblenz Cons. He wrote a symphony, a cantata Das Geheimnis der Sehnsucht, several overtures, and a violin concerto.

Heugel, Henry, music theorist; b. Neuchâtel, Switzerland, Sept. 26, 1798; d. Nantes, France, May 2, 1841. He studied in Paris with Galin and Reicha; developed a 'méthode de mélodiste' along the lines of Galin's system; publ. Nouvelle méthode pour l'enseignement de la musique inventée par H. Heugel et développée par lui de manière à permettre d'apprendre sans maître (1832).

Heugel (ö-zhël), Jacques-Léopold, French music publisher; son of Henry Heugel; b. La Rochelle, March 1, 1811; d. Paris, Nov. 12, 1883. In 1839 he joined a music publishing establishment founded in Paris by J. A. Meissonnier (1812), and became its director; the name was changed to 'Heugel et Cie.' After his death, his nephew, Paul Chevalier Heugel (1861-1932) became its owner. The firm is now managed by Philippe and François Heugel, successors to their father, Jacques-Paul Heugel, who was the grandson of Jacques-Léopold Heugel. The list of publications includes the famous Paris Cons. methods, in all branches of music, and the works of celebrated composers (Bizet, Bruneau, Charpentier, Debües, Fauré, Franck, Honegger, Ibert, d'Indy, Lalo, Massenet, Milhaud, Offenbach, Poulenc, Ravel, Roussel, Florent Schmitt, Widor, etc.). The firm also published the important weekly, 'Le Ménestrel' (founded in 1833; suspended publication during the Franco-Prussian War, 1870-71, and during World War I; ceased publishing in 1940).

Heuss (hois), Alfred Valentin, musicologist; b. Chur, Switzerland, Jan. 27, 1877; d. Gaschwitz, Germany, July 8, 1934. He studied at the Stuttgart Cons. (1896-98), then at the Akademie der Tonkunst in Munich, attending the Univ. of Munich simultaneously (1898-99); from 1900-03, he studied musicology with Kretzschmar at the Univ. of Leipzig (Dr. phil., 1903, with his dissertation Die Instrumentalstücke des 'Orfeo' und die venezianischen Opernsinfonien). He was music critic of the 'Signale' (1902-05); of the 'Leipziger Volkszeitung' (1905-12); of the 'Leipziger Zeitung' (1912-18); editor of the 'Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1904-14), to which he contributed valuable articles; editor-in-chief of the 'Zeitschrift für Musik' (1921-29); wrote analyses of works by Bach, Beethoven, Liszt, Bruckner, etc., for Breitkopf & Härtel's 'Kleiner Konzertführer.' Of special value are his program books of the Bach Festivals at Leipzig (1904-27); he also publ. Bachs Matthäuspassion (1909). Other writings include Über die Dynamik der Mannheimer Schule, in the 'Riemann-Festschrift' (1909); Kammermusikabende (1919); Beethoven: Eine Charakteristik (1921); Beethovens Orch.-Crescendo (Basel, 1924); etc.

Heward, Leslie, English conductor and composer; b. Littleton, Liversedge, Yorkshire, Dec. 8, 1897; d. Birmingham, May 3, 1943. He was a pupil of his father, an organist; at the age of 17 he played organ in a church; later studied at the Royal College of Music in London. He then taught at various schools and conducted opera. From 1924-27 he was conductor of the Cape Town orch. in South Africa. Returning to England, he conducted the orch. of the city of Birmingham. Heward was also a composer; he wrote several orchestral suites, choruses, and songs. A memorial volume was published after his death under the editorship of Eric Blom (London, 1944).

Hewitt, Helen, American musicologist; b. Granville, N. Y., May 2, 1900; studied at Vassar College and at the Eastman School of Music; later, in Paris, with Nadia Boulanger (theory) and Widor (organ); returning to America, she took a course in musicology with Paul Lang at Columbia Univ. (M. A., 1933); also took a course with Besseler at Heidelberg; received her Ph.D. from Radcliffe College in 1938. She held a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1947; taught organ and theory at various American schools. In 1942 she joined the faculty of North Texas State College. She has contributed several valuable articles on the music of the Renaissance to various publications; edited Petrucci's anthology of secular choral music of the 15th century, Harmonice Musices Odhecaton A (Cambridge, Mass., 1942).

Hewitt, James, composer, publisher, organist, and violinist; b. Dartmoor, England, June 4, 1770; d. Boston, Aug. 1, 1827. He played in the court orch. in London as a youth. In 1792 he went to America and settled in New York, where he was described as one of the 'professors of music from the Opera House, Hanover Square, and Professional Concerts under the direction of Haydn, Pleyel, etc., London.' On Sept. 21, 1792 he gave a benefit concert with the violinists J. Gehot and B. Bergmann, the flutist W. Young, and a cellist named Phillips, which included Hewitt's Overture in 9 Movements, expressive of a battle. Subsequently, Young and Gehot went to Philadelphia, and in 1793 Hewitt, Bergmann, and Phillips gave a series of 6 subscription concerts; at their 5th concert (March 25, 1793) they presented for the first time in America, Haydn's Passion of Our Saviour (i.e., The Seven Last Words); in 1794 Henri Capron joined Hewitt in promoting his 'City Concerts'; meanwhile, Hewitt became the leader of the Old American Co. Orch., and in 1795 gave up his activities in connection with the subscription concerts. In 1798 he bought out the N. Y. branch of Carr's 'Musical Repository' and established a publishing business of his own. In 1812 he went to Boston, where he played organ at the Trinity Church and was in charge of the music presented at the Federal Street Theatre. In 1818 he returned to N. Y.; also traveled in the South. In N. Y. he was director of the Park Theatre.—Works: opera Tammany (produced in N. Y., 1794, under the auspices of the Tammany Society); ballad-operas, The Patriot or Liberty Asserted (1794); The Mysterious Marriage (1799); Columbus (1799); Pizarro, or the Spaniards in Peru (1800); Robin Hood (1800); The Spanish Castle (N. Y., Dec. 5, 1800); The Wild Goose Chase (1800); an overture Demophon; a set of 3 piano sonatas; Battle of Trenton, for piano (reprinted in the collection Music from the Days of George Washington, ed. by Carl Engel and Oliver Strunk); The 4th of July — A Grand Military Sonata for the Pianoforte; some other music, much of it extant in the Library of Congress, Washington; N. Y. Public Library; and the Boston Public Library. In 1816 Hewitt published a new setting of the Star-Spangled Banner to Key's poem, but it never took root. A Nahant Waltz is reprinted in J. T. Howard's A Program of Early American Piano Music (N. Y., 1931).—John Hill Hewitt (b. New York, July 11, 1801; d. Baltimore, Oct. 7, 1890), eldest son of James Hewitt, studied at West Point Academy; was a theatrical manager, a newspaper man, and drillmaster of Confederate recruits in the Civil War; wrote poems and plays; about 300 songs (The Minstrel's Return from the War, All Quiet Along the Potomac, Our Native Land, The Mountain Bugle, etc.); cantatas (Flora's Festival, The Fairy Bridal, The Revelers, and The Musical Enthusiast); ballad-operas (Rip Van Winkle, The Vivandiere, The Prisoner of Monterey, The Artist's Wife). His admirers dubbed him the 'father of the American ballad' but the form of a ballad existed in America long before him. He wrote a book of memoirs, Shadows on the Wall (1877).—James Lang Hewitt, another son of James (1807-1853) was associated with the publishing firm of J. A. Dickson in Boston (1825); after his father's death he returned to N. Y. and continued his father's publishing business.—Cf. 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (vol. VI, p. 459); J. T. Howard, The Hewitt Family in American Music, in the 'Mus. Quarterly', (Jan., 1931); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939, and subsequent eds.).

Hewitt (eh-vit'), Maurice, French violinist; b. Asnières (Seine), Oct. 6, 1884. He studied at the Paris Cons.; was violinist in the Capet Quartet (1908-28); taught at the Cleveland Institute of Music (1930-34); from 1934, teacher at the American Cons. of Fontainebleau; at the Paris Cons. from 1938 (chamber music class); in 1928, organized in Paris the Quatuor Hewitt; in 1939, founded the Orchestre de Chambre Hewitt.

Hey (hî), Julius, German singing teacher; b. Irmelshausen, April 29, 1832; d. Munich, April 23, 1909. He first studied painting, but turned to music. He became an ardent Wagnerian after his introduction to the master by King Ludwig II, and worked under the direction of Hans von Bülow at the Munich School of Music (established by the King in accordance with Wagner's plans). After Bülow's departure (1869), he vainly tried to effect a reform from a German national standpoint in the cultivation of singing, but met with so many obstacles that he resigned when Wagner died (1883) and devoted himself to finishing his method of singing, Deutscher Gesangsunterricht (4 parts; 1886). It contains a complete and logical exposition of Wagner's views on vocal training. His book Richard Wagner als Vortragsmeister was publ. posthumously by his son Hans.

Heyden, Hans, German organist; son of Sebald Heyden; b. Nuremberg, Jan. 19, 1536; d. there, Oct. (buried Oct. 22), 1613. He was his father's successor as organist at St. Sebald Church, and was the inventor of the unique 'Geigen-Clavicymbel' ('Nürnbergisch Geigenwerk'), which he described in Musical instrumentum reformatum (1605).—Cf. G. Kinsky, Hans Heyden in 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (1924).

Heyden (Heiden, Haiden), Sebald, German composer; b. Nuremberg, Dec. 8, 1499; d. there, July 9, 1561. In 1519, he was appointed cantor of the Hospital School in Nuremberg; in 1537, became rector at the Church of St. Sebald. He was the author of the important theoretical work Musicae, i.e., artis canendi libri duo (1537; 2nd ed., as De arte canendi, etc., 1540); composed the famous Passion song, O Mensch, beweine dein Sünde gross.—Cf. A. Kosel, Sebald Heyden (Würzburg, 1940).

Heyer (hi'ër), Wilhelm, German patron of music; b. Cologne, March 30, 1849; d. there, March 20, 1913. A wealthy co-owner of the wholesale paper manufacturing firm Poensgen & Heyer, he was an enthusiastic amateur, and was active in the musical affairs of Cologne in advisory capacities. In 1906 he established a historical musical museum in Cologne, in which he assembled more than 2600 instruments with accessories, about 20,000 autographs of musicians, 3500 portraits, and a library of books about music, containing many rare editions. Georg Kinsky, curator of the museum from 1909, publ. an illustrated catalogue of the Heyer collections. The museum was dissolved in 1927, and the instruments were acquired by the Musicological Institute of Leipzig Univ.; the books were dispersed by auction sales.

Heyman, Katherine Ruth Willoughby, American pianist; b. Sacramento, Calif., 1877; d. Sharon, Conn., Sept. 28, 1944. She made her début as soloist with the Boston Symph. Orch. in 1899; from 1905 till 1915, toured the U. S. and Europe with Schumann-Heink, Marcella Sembrich, and others. She became greatly interested in the works of Scriabin, and played recitals of his works in Europe and America; also publ. many articles on Scriabin's theosophic ideas. In 1928 she founded the Groupe Estival pour la musique moderne, Paris (reorganized in 1937); lived in New York and in Paris. She publ. The Relation of Ultra-Modern to Archaic Music (Boston, 1921); composed Studies in Modern Idiom for the piano, and songs.

Heymann, Werner Richard, composer; b. Königsberg, Germany, Feb. 14, 1896. He studied with Paul Juon in Berlin. He was first a composer of serious music (Rhapsodische Sinfonie, for orch. and baritone; Frühlings-Notturmo, for orch.; a string quartet; songs with orch.); he then became a writer of successful songs; emigrated to the U.S. and settled in Hollywood as a composer for films.

Hickmann, Hans Robert Hermann, German musicologist; b. Rossau, May 19, 1908; studied at Halle Univ. and in Berlin with C. Sachs, A. Schering, G. Schünemann, and J. Wolf. In 1933, settled in Egypt as organist and teacher in Cairo and Alexandria. He also was active on the radio in Switzerland, France, Germany, England, and Sweden (1949-52); has contributed numerous articles on ancient Egyptian music to various publications. Books: Das Portativ (Kassel, 1936); La trompette dans l'Égypte ancienne (Cairo, 1946); Terminologie arabe des instruments de musique (Cairo, 1947); a very valuable catalogue of musical instruments in the Cairo Museum (Cairo, 1949), etc.—See his autobiographical notice in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

Hidalgo (ē-dahl'-gōh), Juan, one of the earliest and most notable Spanish opera composers; b. c. 1600; d. Madrid, March 30, 1685. In 1631 he became a member of the Royal Chapel in Madrid as harpist and also as player of the 'clavi-harpa,' an instrument he is said to have invented. A document of 1677 attests that he was 'of superior skill, and had merited the highest honors from Their Majesties at all times.' So great was his reputation that the Duke of Infantado called him 'unique in the faculty of music.' He composed the opera Celos aun del aire matan, text by Calderón de la Barca (perf. Madrid, Dec. 5, 1660); the music of Act I (voices and basso continuo) was discovered by J. Subirá and publ. by him in 1933 (this is the longest extant specimen of Spanish operatic music from the 17th century). Hidalgo also wrote music for Calderón's comedies, Ni amor se libra de amor (1662) and Hado y divisa de Leónido y de Marfisa (1680), and for Los celos hacen estrellas by Juan Vélez (c. 1662). It is very probable that he also composed the opera La púrpura de la rosa (1660), text by Calderón. He was likewise known as a composer of sacred and secular songs (some preserved in the National Library, Madrid). Music by Hidalgo is reprinted in Pedrell's 'Cancionero' (IV) and

'Teatro lírico' (vols. III, IV, and V).—Cf. J. Subirá, Celos aun del aire matan, Opera del siglo XVII (Barcelona, 1933); J. Subirá, El operista español Don Juan Hidalgo, in 'Las Ciencias' I, 3 (Madrid, 1934); O. Ursprung, Die älteste erhaltene spanische Oper, in the 'Schering-Festschrift' (Berlin, 1937); G. Chase, Origins of the Lyric Theater in Spain, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1939).

Hier, Ethel Glenn, American composer and pianist; b. Cincinnati, June 25, 1889. She graduated from the Cincinnati Cons. of Music (1911; hon. degree, 1922) and the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y. (1917). She studied composition with Rothwell, Stillman-Kelley, and Goetschius, then with Ernest Bloch (1918-21); was a private teacher in Cincinnati; then in N. Y. She has composed Asolo Bells for orch. (Rochester, Oct. 25, 1939); a cantata, Mountain Preacher for chorus and orch. (N. Y., Dec. 5, 1941); also for orch.: Carolina Suite and Scherzo; Sextet Suite, for flute, oboe, violin, viola, cello, and piano (1925); three quintets for flute, viola, cello, harp, and voice (1936); string quartet; Rhapsody for violin and piano (1940); also solo piano pieces.

Higginson, Henry Lee, founder of the Boston Symph. Orch.; b. New York, Nov. 18, 1834; d. Boston, Nov. 15, 1919. He studied singing and piano in Vienna (1856-60); in 1868 he established himself as a banker in Boston (Lee, Higginson & Co.). In 1881, in order to found the Boston Symph. Orch., he assumed the responsibility of providing for about $50,000 yearly of the annual budget of some $115,000, thus clearing the estimated deficit and assuring the organization's successful continuance; the orch., comprising 67 performers, gave its first concert at the old Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881; in the summer of 1885, the series of concerts of lighter music, famous as the 'Pops,' were instituted; on Oct. 15, 1900, the Boston Symph. Orch. inaugurated its own permanent home, Symphony Hall; in 1903 the Pension Fund was established, for the benefit of which a special concert is given annually. A firm believer in the superiority of German musicians, Higginson engaged George Henschel as the first conductor of the orch. (1881-84); there followed a line of German conductors: Wilhelm Gericke (1884-89), Artur Nikisch (1889-93), Emil Paur (1893-98), Gericke again (1898-1906), Karl Muck (1906-08), Max Fiedler (1908-12), and again Karl Muck, from 1912 till 1918, when he was arrested as an enemy alien when the U. S. entered World War I. Higginson, distraught over Muck's arrest, resigned his position shortly after and selected a Board of Directors to control the orchestra. He died the following year.—Cf. M. A. de Wolfe Howe, The Boston Symphony Orchestra (Boston, 1914; new augmented ed., 1931); H. Earle Johnson, Symphony Hall (Boston, 1950).

Hignard (ēn-yahr'), (Jean-Louis-) Aristide, French composer; b. Nantes, May 20, 1822; d. Vernon, March 20, 1898; studied with Halévy at the Paris Cons., taking the 2nd Grand Prix de Rome. He was an earnest composer of lofty aims, but brought out operas and other works of secondary importance; his best opera, Hamlet, composed in 1868, was to be performed in Paris; unluckily for him, Hamlet by Ambroise Thomas was produced that same year, with such spectacular success that Hignard could not compete with it; accordingly, he had to be content with a provincial production in his native city (Nantes, April 21, 1888). His other operas that reached the stage include Le Visionnaire (Nantes, 1851), Le Colin-Maillard (Paris, 1853); Les Compagnons de la Marjolaine (Paris, 1855); M. de Chimpanzé (Paris, 1858); Le nouveau Pourceaugnac (Paris, 1860); L'Auberge des Ardennes (Paris, 1860); Les Musiciens de l'orchestre (Paris, 1861).

Hijman (hī-man), Julius, Dutch composer and pianist; b. Almelo, Jan. 25, 1901. He studied with Dirk Schaefer, and in Vienna; program annotator for the Concertgebouw Orch., Amsterdam (1934-1939); then came to the United States. He was instructor at the Houston Cons., Texas (1940-42), and Kansas City Cons. (1945-49); since 1949, teaching composition at the Philadelphia Musical Academy. He has composed mostly chamber music, including sonatas for violin, cello, saxophone, oboe, flute, with piano; 4 string quartets; a sonata for 2 violins and piano. He is the author of New Austrian Music (in Dutch; Amsterdam, 1938); has contributed to music journals.

Hildach, Eugen, German baritone; b. Wittenberge-on-the-Elbe, Nov. 20, 1849; d. Zehlendorf, near Berlin, July 29, 1924. He began to study voice at the age of 24; married Anna Schubert, a singer, and went to Dresden, where they both taught at the Cons.; also toured together in Germany. In 1904, they established their own singing school in Frankfurt. He publ. a number of songs, several of which became well known; particularly popular was Der Lenz.

Hiles, Henry, English composer and pedagogue; b. Shrewsbury, Dec. 31, 1826; d. Worthing, near London, Oct. 20, 1904. He filled various positions as organist and harmony teacher for nearly 60 years (1846-1904); was editor of the 'Quarterly Musical Review' (1885-88). He composed several oratorios, glees, and part-songs; publ. the manuals Harmony of Sounds (1871); Grammar of Music (2 vols., 1879); First Lessons in Singing (1881); Part-Writing or Modern Counterpoint (1884); Harmony or Counterpoint? (1889); Harmony, Choral or Contrapuntal (1894).

Hill, Alfred, Australian composer; b. Melbourne, Dec. 16, 1870. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; played violin in the Gewandhaus Orch., including concerts under the direction of Brahms, Grieg, and Tchaikovsky. He then settled in New Zealand, where he became interested in aboriginal music. From 1916 to 1937 he taught at the Sydney Cons.; in 1947, was elected President of the Australian Composers' Society. Many of his works include melodic elements of primitive Maori music. He wrote a Maori opera, The Weird Flute; cantatas on Maori themes (Hinemoa, Tawhaki, etc.); a Maori Symphony, Maori Rhapsody, many lighter works for orch.; 17 string quartets (including the Maori Quartet); songs; publ. a manual, Harmony and Melody (Sydney, 1927).

Hill, Edward Burlingame, eminent American composer; b. Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 9, 1872. A member of a distinguished family of educators (his father was a professor of chemistry at Harvard, and his grandfather, president of Harvard), he pursued regular courses at Harvard Univ.; studied music with J. K. Paine; graduated in 1894 summa cum laude; took lessons in piano with B. J. Lang and A. Whiting, in composition with Chadwick and Bullard; also (for one summer) studied with Widor in Paris. He became greatly interested in the new tonal resources of the Impressionist school of composers; wrote articles (in the 'Boston Evening Transcript' and other publications) dealing with French music; publ. a book Modern French Music (Boston, 1924). In 1908 he joined the faculty of Harvard Univ. as instructor in music; became associate prof. in 1918; prof. from 1928-37; then James E. Ditson prof. (1937-40); retired in 1940, and lived mostly in New Hampshire; member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Chevalier of the Légion d'honneur; lectured at the universities of Strasbourg and Lyons (1921); was associate editor and contributor to the encyclopedia 'The Art of Music' (1915).—In his music, Hill reveals himself as a follower of the French school; clarity of design and elegance of expression are his chief characteristics. His best works are for orchestra; but he has also written chamber and choral music. — Orchestral works: symph. poem, The Parting of Lancelot and Guinevere (St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1915); Stevensoniana Suite No. 1 (N. Y., Jan. 27, 1918); symph. poem, The Fall of the House of Usher, after Poe (Boston, Oct. 29, 1920); Stevensoniana Suite No. 2 (N. Y., March 25, 1923). The following were perf. for the first time by the Boston Symph. Orch.: Waltzes (Feb. 24, 1922); Scherzo for 2 pianos and orch. (Dec. 19, 1924); symph. poem, Lilacs (his best work in the Impressionist manner; Cambridge, March 31, 1927; many subsequent performances); Symphony in Bb, No. 1 (March 30, 1928); An Ode (for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symph. Orch.; Oct. 17, 1930); Symphony in C, No. 2 (Feb. 27, 1931); Concertino for piano and orch. (Boston, April 25, 1932); Sinfonietta for string orch. (Brooklyn, April 3, 1936; also in Boston); Symphony in G, No. 3 (Dec. 3, 1937); violin concerto (Nov. 11, 1938); Concertino for string orch. (April 19, 1940); Music for English Horn and Orch. (March 2, 1945); Prelude for Orchestra (N. Y., March 29, 1953). Diversion for small ensemble was perf. at the Saratoga Festival (Sept. 6, 1947).—Chamber music: flute sonata (1926); clarinet sonata (1927); sextet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, and piano (1934); string quartet (1935); piano quartet (1937); sonata for 2 clarinets (1938); quintet for clarinet and string quartet (1945); sonata for bassoon and piano (1948); sonatina for cello and piano (1949); sonatina for violin and piano (1951).—Vocal works: Nuns of the Perpetual Adoration, cantata for women's voices with orch. or piano (1908); Autumn Twilight, for soprano and orch.; The Wilderness Shall Rejoice, anthem for mixed chorus (1915); 2 pantomimes (with orchestral accompaniment): Jack Frost in Midsummer (1908); and Pan and the Star (1914); also Poetical Sketches for piano (1902); Country Idyls, a set of 6 piano pieces; Jazz Study for 2 pianos (1924).

Hill, Granville, English organist and music critic; b. Manchester, March 9, 1878; d. there, Dec. 26, 1953. As a youth, he was church organist in Manchester; later began to study piano; achieving a commendable degree of proficiency; in 1936 he was appointed piano prof. at the Leeds College of Music; also became music critic of the 'Manchester Guardian,' leaving that position shortly before his death.

Hill, Junius Welch, American organist and music editor; b. Hingham, Mass., Nov. 18, 1840; d. Hollywood, Sept. 7, 1916. After studying in Boston with J.C.D. Parker, he went to Germany, where he took courses in piano and composition with Moscheles, Plaids, Richter, and Reinecke. Returning to Boston in 1863, he was organist at various churches; taught at Wellesley College (1884-97); then settled in California. He publ. a number of choral works for women's voices; edited several collections of music, among them 'Treasures of Lyric Art,' 'Arabesques,' 'Mozaïques,' 'Characteristic Piano Pieces,' etc.

Hill, Mabel Wood-. See Wood-Hill.

Hill, Ralph, English writer on music; b. Wattingford, Oct. 8, 1900; d. London, Oct. 20, 1950. He was first active in music publishing (1920-29); was music editor of the 'Radio Times' (1933-45); also wrote for the 'Daily Mail' (1933-39 and 1945-50); publ. An Outline of Musical History (1929); Brahms: a Study in Musical Biography (1933); Liszt (1936); Challenges: a Series of Controversial Essays (1943); Music Without Fears (1945).

Hill, Richard S., American music librarian; b. Chicago, Sept. 25, 1901. He was educated at Phillips Exeter Academy; studied at Cornell Univ. (B. A., 1924); post-graduate work at Oxford Univ., England (1924-26); held research fellowship in psychology under Kurt Koffka at Smith College (1927-29); returned to Cornell for further study and research in psychology and musicology, the latter under Otto Kinkeldey. In Sept., 1939, joined staff of Music Division, Library of Congress; made Head of Reference Section. 1950-51, vice president of the American Musicological Society. He was an associate editor of the quarterly journal of the Music Library Association, 'Notes,' during the last issues of its first series, and has served as editor since Dec., 1943. He was president of the International Association of Music Libraries (1951-55). He has contributed important articles to music magazines, one of the most notable being Schoenberg's Tone Rows and the Tonal System of the Future ('Mus. Quarterly,' Jan., 1936). In collaboration with Kurtz Myers, he edited a new type of discography publ. under the title Record Ratings (N. Y., 1956).

Hill, Ureli Corelli, American violinist and conductor; b. New York, c. 1802; d. Paterson, N. J., Sept. 2, 1875. His father, Uriah K. Hill, was a teacher of music in Boston and N. Y., and author of a manual, Solfeggio Americano, a System of Singing (N. Y., 1820). An admirer of Corelli, he named his son after him; the first name (Ureli) is a combination of the father's name Uriah and a friend's name, Eli. Ureli Corelli Hill played violin in various theaters in N. Y. as a boy; was violinist in the orch. of Garcia's opera company in 1825; then joined the N. Y. Sacred Musical Society, and conducted it in the first American performance, with orchestral accompaniment, of Handel's Messiah (1831). In 1836 he went to Germany, where he studied a year with Spohr. Returning to N. Y., he became a founder and first president of the N. Y. Philharmonic (1842-48); then went West in quest of fortune, which, however, failed to materialize. In N. Y. he exhibited a pianoforte of his own invention, in which he used small bell tuning-forks in place of strings, so as to secure perfect intonation; the attempt to promote this instrument met with failure. He played the violin in the N. Y. Philharmonic until 1873, when he retired because of age; continued to play engagements in various theater orchestras throughout his life; then moved to Paterson, N. J., where he engaged (unsuccessfully) in real estate schemes. Depressed on account of constant setbacks in his ventures of promotion in music and in business, he committed suicide by swallowing morphine.

Hill, W. E. & Sons, a firm of violin makers and music dealers in London. It is claimed that 'Mr. Hill, the instrument maker,' mentioned in Pepys' Diary (1660) was an ancestor of the present owners. The founder of the firm was Joseph Hill (1715-84); he served as an apprentice to Peter Wamsley; established his business about 1750. He had 5 sons, who were good violinists. William Ebsworth Hill, a grandson of the founder (b. London, 1817; d. Hanley, April 2, 1895), adopted the present name of the firm; his instruments took first prize at the expositions in London (1851) and Paris (1867). His sons, William Henry, Arthur Frederick (b. 1860; d. London, Feb. 8, 1939), and Alfred Ebsworth Hill (d. London, April 21, 1940), collaborated in the writing of Antonio Stradivari, His Life and Work (London, 1902), a standard work. From material also gathered by them, Lady M. L. Huggins previously wrote Giovanni Paolo Maggini. His Life and Work (London, 1892). William Henry, Arthur F., and Alfred Ebsworth Hill are the joint authors of The Violin-Makers of the Guarneri Family (with introductory note by E. J. Dent; London, 1931). — The Ashmolean Museum at Oxford contains a valuable collection of stringed instruments, including a 1716 Stradivari violin with a bow dated 1694, presented by Arthur F. Hill.

Hill, Wilhelm, German pianist and composer; b. Fulda, March 28, 1838; d. Homburg, June 6, 1902. He studied in Frankfurt, and received a prize for his opera Alona in the competition for the opening of a new opera house. He was a prolific composer; publ. violin sonatas; piano quartet; piano pieces. His song Es liegt eine Krone im tiefen Rhein achieved immense popularity.—Cf. K. Schmidt, Wilhelm Hill, Leben und Werke (Leipzig, 1910).

Hille, Eduard, German composer and conductor; b. Wahlhausen, May 16, 1822; d. Göttingen, Dec. 18, 1891. He studied music with Heinroth. In 1855 he founded a 'Singakademie' in Göttingen, and gave many concerts of choral music. He wrote an opera, Der neue Oberst (Hanover, 1849), and a number of part-songs.

Hillemacher, two brothers, French composers; Paul (b. Paris, Nov. 29, 1852; d. Versailles, Aug. 13, 1933) and Lucien (b. Paris, June 10, 1860; d. there, June 2, 1909). They both studied at the Paris Cons.; Paul Hillemacher won the 2nd Prix de Rome in 1875, and the 1st in 1876, with the cantata Judith; Lucien Hillemacher obtained 2nd Prix de Rome in 1879, and the 1st in 1880. After graduation, they decided to write music in collaboration, and adopted a common signature—P. L. Hillemacher. Together they produced the following stage works: Saint-Mégrin, opera (Brussels, March 2, 1886); Une Aventure d'Arlequin, opéra-comique (Brussels, March 22, 1888); Le Régiment qui passe (Royan, Sept. 11, 1894); Le Drac, lyric drama (perf. at Karlsruhe in German as Der Flutgeist, Nov. 14, 1896); Orsola, lyric drama (Paris, May 21, 1902); Circé, lyric drama (Paris, April 17, 1907). Paul Hillemacher, who survived his brother by 24 years, wrote a short 'tableau musical' Fra Angelico, which was produced at the Paris Opéra-Comique on June 10, 1924. In addition to their operas, the brothers wrote a symph. legend Loreley, which won the prize of the City of Paris (1882); 2 orchestral suites, La Cinquantaine and Les Solitudes; an oratorio, La Légende de Sainte Geneviève (1886); songs. They also brought out a biography of Gounod (Paris, 1905).

Hiller, Ferdinand, German conductor and composer; b. Frankfurt, Oct. 24, 1811; d. Cologne, May 10, 1885. He was a member of a wealthy Jewish family; received a fine education; studied piano with Aloys Schmitt, and appeared in public at the age of 10. In 1825 he went to Weimar to study with Hummel, whom he accompanied to Vienna in 1827; visited Beethoven a few days before the latter's death. He lived in Paris from 1828-35, and became a friend of Chopin, Liszt, Berlioz, and many other celebrated musicians. When his father died in 1836, he went back to Frankfurt, where he conducted the concerts of the Cäcilien-Verein. He went then to Italy, where he produced an opera, Romilda (Milan, 1839). It was unsuccessful, but an oratorio, Die Zerstörung Jerusalems, which he wrote in the following year, aroused the interest of Mendelssohn, who invited Hiller to Leipzig, where it was performed by the Gewandhaus Orch. (April 2, 1840). In 1841 he went to Italy, where he studied church music. His subsequent activities consisted mainly of conducting in Germany; he led the Gewandhaus concerts in Leipzig during the 1843-44 season; then conducted in Dresden, where he staged his operas Traum in der Christnacht (1845) and Konradin (Oct. 13, 1847); was municipal conductor at Düsseldorf (1847-50), then at Cologne. He established the Cologne Cons., and was its 1st director until his death; also conducted the Lower Rhine Festival, which further enhanced his reputation. His other engagements were at the Italian Opera in Paris (1852-53) and in St. Petersburg, Russia, where he led a group of symph. concerts (1870); he also visited London several times between 1852 and 1872. He never ceased to compose works in large forms, despite their indifferent success; wrote 3 more operas, Der Advokat (Cologne, 1854), Die Katakomben (Wiesbaden, Feb. 15, 1862), and Der Deserteur (Cologne, Feb. 17, 1865); oratorio, Saul; cantatas, Lorelei, Nal und Damajanti, Israels Siegesgesang, Prometheus, Rebecca, Prinz Papagei; a ballad, Richard Löwenherz, for soli, chorus, and orch.; 3 symphonies, 3 overtures, 3 piano concertos, 5 string quartets, 5 piano quartets, 5 piano trios; many choral works; more than 100 songs; piano music. In his musical leanings, he was a conservative, and violently attacked Wagner. His classical training, and friendly association with Spohr and especially Mendelssohn, naturally influenced his style. Gifted in many fields of artistic endeavor, he was also a brilliant critic; his writings were publ. in collected form as Die Musik und das Publikum (1864); Beethoven (1871); Aus dem Tonleben unserer Zeit (2 vols.; 1868, 1871); Musikalisches und Persönliches (1876); Briefe von M. Hauptmann an Spohr und andere Komponisten (1876); Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Briefe und Erinnerungen (1874); Briefe an eine Ungenannte (1877); Künstlerleben (1880); Wie hören wir Musik? (1881); Goethes musikalisches Leben (1883); and Erinnerungsblätter (1884).—Cf. Hiller, Friedrich Adam, German composer; son of Johann Adam Hiller; b. Leipzig, 1768; d. Königsberg, Nov. 23, 1812. He studied music with his father; was a conductor at various provincial theaters in Germany, and wrote a number of light operas: Biondella (Schwerin, 1790); Das Schmuckkästchen (Königsberg, 1804); Die drei Sultaninen (Königsberg, 1809); etc.; also chamber music.

Hiller (Hüller), Johann Adam, German composer; b. Wendisch-Ossig, near Görlitz, Dec. 25, 1728; d. Leipzig, June 16, 1804. After completing his primary education in his native town, he went to Dresden, where he studied music with Homilius. In 1751 he entered the Univ. of Leipzig, where he studied law; at the same time he was forced to earn his living by performing at popular concerts as a singer and flute player. In 1754 he became tutor to a nephew of Count Brühl at Dresden, whom he accompanied in 1758 to Leipzig; there he finally settled, and devoted himself to a revival of the Subscription Concerts in 1763; these developed into the famous 'Gewandhaus' concerts, of which he was appointed conductor. In 1771 he founded a singing school, and from 1789-1801 was Cantor and music director of the Thomasschule as successor of Doles. Hiller was one of the originators of the 'Singspiel,' the precursor of German

'comedy-opera,' which had a distinct development contemporaneously with Italian opera buffa and French opéra-comique. In order to stress the disparity of characters in his operas, he assigned arias in a grand manner to the gentry, while persons of low degree were given simple songs. His 'Singspiele' were the following: Lisuart und Dariolette, oder Die Frage und die Antwort (Leipzig, Nov. 25, 1766), Lottchen am Hofe (Leipzig, April 24, 1767), Die Liebe auf dem Lande (Leipzig, May 18, 1768), Die Jagd (Weimar, Jan. 29, 1770; his best known work), Der Krieg (Berlin, Aug. 17, 1772), Die Jubelhochzeit (Berlin, April 5, 1773), Das Grab des Mufti, oder Die zwey Geizigen (Leipzig, Jan. 17, 1779). Several remained unperformed (Das Orakel, Poltis, Die Friedensfeyer, etc.). He further wrote many instrumental works, church music, and lieder, in which he excelled; particularly fine are his Lieder für Kinder, to words by C. F. Weisse (1769; new ed., 1865); also Lieder mit Melodien an meinen Canarienvogel (1759); Letztes Opfer, in einigen Lieder-Melodien (1790); setting of Horace's Carmen ad Aelium Lamian; 3 string quartets (1796); a symphony; keyboard compositions. He edited many Classical works, and also brought out numerous collections of contemporary pieces by German and Italian composers. He publ. Allgemeines Choral-Melodienbuch für Kirchen und Schulen (1793). He brought out a weekly publication on music 'Wöchentliche Nachrichten und Anmerkungen, die Musik betreffend' (1766-70), the first music periodical in Germany to report news regularly. His writings include Lebensbeschreibungen berühmter Musikgelehrten und Tonkünstler (1784); Über Metastasio und seine Werke (1786); Anweisung zum musikalisch-richtigen Gesang (1774); Anweisung zum musikalisch-zierlichen Gesang (1780); Anweisung zum Violinspiel (1792).—Cf. Calmus, Die ersten deutschen Singspiele von Standfuss und Hiller (Berlin, 1908); H. von Hase, Johann Adam Hiller und Breitkopf, in the 'Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft' (Oct., 1919); A. Schering, Das Zeitalter J. S. Bachs und Johann Adam Hillers (Leipzig, 1940). A. Einstein publ. a reprint of Hiller's autobiography in Lebensläufe deutscher Musiker, vol. I (Leipzig, 1914).

Hillis, Margaret, American choral conductor; b. Kokomo, Ind., Oct. 1, 1921. She studied piano, wind instruments, and double-bass. She received her B. M. degree in composition at Indiana Univ. (1947); then studied conducting with Robert Shaw in N. Y. and became assistant conductor of the Robert Shaw Chorale. From 1951 she presented numerous concerts in New York conducting various choral groups in programs ranging from early composers to modernists; she also conducted operas by Purcell, Gluck, etc. in concert form.

Hilsberg (real name Hillersberg), Alexander, violinist and conductor; b. Warsaw, April 24, 1900. He studied violin with Auer at the St. Petersburg Cons. In 1918 he went on a concert tour in Siberia, eventually reaching Harbin in Manchuria; there he played in a string quartet; in 1923 he went to the U. S. via Japan. In 1926 he joined the violin section of the Philadelphia Orch.; became its concertmaster in 1931, and associate conductor in 1945. He was also on the staff of the Curtis Institute of Music in the ensemble department (1927-51). The great success that Hilsberg achieved conducting the Philadelphia Orch. at a Carnegie Hall concert in 1950 led to his engagement as permanent conductor of the New Orleans Symph. Orch. (1952); in the spring of 1956 he took this orchestra on a tour of Latin America.—See Hope Stoddard, Symphony Conductors of the U.S.A. (N.Y., 1957; pp. 89-95).

Hilton, John (the Elder), English organist and composer; d. Cambridge, March, 1608. He was appointed organist at Trinity College, Cambridge on Jan. 26, 1594. He was probably the composer of the anthem Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake; another anthem, Call to Remembrance (modern reprint by the Oxford Univ. Press), is also his. To distinguish him from a younger John Hilton, he is usually referred to as John Hilton, the Elder.

Hilton, John (the Younger), English composer; b. Oxford, 1599; d. London, March (buried March 21), 1657. He may have been the son of John Hilton, the Elder; obtained his degree of Mus. B. from Trinity College at Cambridge (1626); in 1628 he was appointed organist at St. Margaret's, Westminster.—Works: Ayres, or Fa-las for 3 voices (1627; reprinted by the Musical Antiquarian Society); Catch that catch can, or, a Choice collection of catches, rounds, and canons for 3 or 4 voices (1625); 2 services; Elegy; anthems. The British Museum has further MSS. Other compositions are to be found in F. Keel's collection

Elizabethan Love-Songs (N. Y., 1913), C. K. Scott's Euterpe (vol. 12, London, 1910), and E. H. Meyer's Spieldmusik des Barock (vol. 1, Kassel, 1934). Six pieces for string trio have been arranged by Peter Warlock (London, 1930).—Cf. W. H. G. Flood, New Light on Late Tudor Composers: John Hilton, in the 'Musical Times' (London, 1927).

Himmel, Friedrich Heinrich, German composer; b. Treuenbrietzen, Brandenburg, Nov. 20, 1765; d. Berlin, June 8, 1814. He studied theology at the Univ. of Halle; at the same time, he cultivated music. He received a stipend from Friedrich Wilhelm II to study with Naumann in Dresden; subsequently he went to Italy, where he acquired skill in stage music. His cantata Il primo navigatore was performed in Venice (March 1, 1794), and his opera La Morte di Semiramide in Naples (Jan. 12, 1795). He then returned to Berlin and was appointed court conductor. In 1798 he went to St. Petersburg, where he produced his opera Alessandro. In 1800 he returned from Russia by way of Sweden and Denmark; in Berlin he produced his Italian opera Vasco di Gama (Jan. 12, 1801). His subsequent operas, staged in Berlin, were in the nature of Singspiele, to German words: Frohsinn und Schwärmerei (March 9, 1801), Fanchon das Leiermädchen (May 15, 1804; his most successful work; many revivals), Die Sylphen (April 14, 1806), etc. His last opera, Der Kobold, was produced in Vienna (May 22, 1813). Many of his songs had great vogue (An Alexis, Es kann ja nicht immer so bleiben, etc.). He also composed an oratorio, Isacco figura del Redentore (Berlin, 1792); several works of sacred music; a piano concerto; piano sextet; piano quartet; pieces for piano solo.—Cf. L. O. Odendahl, Fr. H. Himmel; Bemerkungen zur Geschichte der Berliner Oper um die Wende des 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts (Bonn, 1917).

Hinckley, Allen (Carter), American bass singer; b. Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 11, 1877; d. Yonkers, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1954. He studied at Amherst College and the Univ. of Pennsylvania; then took singing lessons with Oscar Saenger in N. Y.; after singing in various churches, and also in light opera, he went to Germany, where he made his debut in grand opera at Hamburg as the King in Lohengrin (1903); he remained a member of the Hamburg Opera until 1908; also sang at Bayreuth (1905, 1906). On Nov. 18, 1908, he sang the part of Hunding in Die

HINDEMITH

Walküre with the Metropolitan Opera Company in N. Y.; from 1917, taught voice in N. Y.

Hindemith, Paul, one of the leading composers of the 20th century; b. Hanau, near Frankfurt, Nov. 16, 1895. Very early in life he learned to play several musical instruments, and as a boy, played in dance bands. He then entered the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt and studied with Bernhard Sekles and Arnold Mendelssohn. Having achieved considerable proficiency as a violinist, he became concertmaster of the Frankfurt Opera (1915-23); then made a specialty of the viola, and formed the Amar-Hindemith Quartet (Licco Amar, Kaspar, Hindemith, Maurice Frank), with which he traveled in Europe. He was associated with the 'Musikalische Jugendbewegung' (Musical Youth Movement); taught a master class in composition at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik (1927-35). In the meantime, his conflict with the ideology of the National Socialist Government in Germany became extremely sharp; he was attacked by propaganda agencies as a cultural Bolshevik, and was taken to task for his continued association with Jewish musicians. Although Furtwängler and other eminent German musicians sided with Hindemith, his works were banned for performance, and he finally decided to leave the country. In 1935 he was asked by the Turkish government to organize all branches of music study and research on occidental models; he made 3 visits to Ankara, and taught at the conservatory there. He made his first American appearance at the Coolidge Festival at the Library of Congress, Washington, playing his unaccompanied viola sonata (April 10, 1937); toured the U. S. again in 1938-39; taught at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in 1940; then was appointed to the faculty of Yale Univ. (1940); in 1947, was named Battell Prof. of the Theory of Music at Yale, and elected member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters; was Charles Eliot Norton Lecturer at Harvard Univ. (1950-51); became an American citizen in 1946. He conducted in Holland, Italy, and England during the summer of 1947; in 1949, revisited Germany for the first time since the war; conducted the Berlin Philharmonic in a program of his works on Feb. 14, 1949; in 1953 he settled in Switzerland; taught at the Univ. of Zürich; conducted concerts in Germany and Austria. In 1954 he received the 'Sibelius Award' of $35,000, offered annually to great men of music and science by a Finnish ship owner,

A. Wihuri.—Hindemith's early music reflects rebellious opposition to all tradition; this is noted in such works as the opera Mörder, Hoffnung der Frauen (op. 12, 1921) and Suite 1922, for piano (op. 26); at the same time he cultivated the techniques of constructivism, evident in such a work as his theatrical sketch, Hin und Zurück (op. 45a, 1927), in which 'Krebstanz' (retrograde movement) is applied to the action on the stage, so that events are reversed; in a work of a much later period, Ludus Tonalis (1943), the postlude is the upside-down version of the prelude. Along constructive lines is Hindemith's cultivation of so-called 'Gebrauchsmusik,' that is, music for use; he is also an ardent champion of 'Hausmusik,' to be played or sung by amateurs at home; the score of his Frau Musica (as revised in 1944) has an obligato part for the audience to sing. A neo-Classical trend is shown in a series of works, entitled Kammermusik, for various instrumental combinations, polyphonically conceived, and Baroque in style. Although Hindemith has made free use of atonal melodies, he has never been tempted to adopt the 12-tone method, which he opposes on ideological grounds. Having made a thorough study of old music, he has written works of a neo-archaic nature, artfully assimilating the elements of old polyphonic music in a modern manner. His masterpiece of this period is his opera, Mathis der Maler. An exceptionally prolific composer, Hindemith has written works in all genres and for all instrumental combinations including a series of sonatas for each orchestral instrument with piano. Hindemith's style may be described as a synthesis of modern, Romantic, Classical, and archaic principles, a combination saved from the stigma of eclecticism only by Hindemith's superlative mastery of technical means. As a theorist and pedagogue, Hindemith has developed a self-consistent method of presentation derived from the acoustical nature of harmonic combinations.—Works: Operas: Mörder, Hoffnung der Frauen, one act, op. 12 (Stuttgart, June 4, 1921); Das Nusch-Nuschi, marionette opera, op. 20 (Stuttgart, June 4, 1921; revised version, Königsberg, Jan. 22, 1931); Sancta Susanna, one act, op. 21 (Frankfurt, March 26, 1922); Cardillac (Dresden, Nov. 9, 1926; revised version, Zürich, June 20, 1952); Hin und Zurück, op. 45a (Baden-Baden, July 15, 1927); Neues vom Tage (Berlin, June 8, 1929; revised version, Naples, April 7, 1954, composer conducting); Wir bauen eine Stadt, children's opera (Berlin, June 21, 1930);

Hindle, John, English composer; b. London, 1761; d. there, 1796. He was mainly known as a composer of glees, one of which, Queen of the Silver Bow, became extremely popular.

Hine, William, English composer and organist; b. Brightwell, 1687; d. Gloucester, Aug. 28, 1730. He studied with Jeremiah Clarke; then served as organist at Gloucester Cathedral. A collection of his anthems under the title Harmonia sacra Gloucestriensis was published posthumously by his widow.

Hingston, John, English composer and organist; date of birth unknown; d. London, Dec. (buried Dec. 16), 1683. He studied with Orlando Gibbons; was in the service of Oliver Cromwell and taught music to his daughter. After the Restoration, he was engaged as Keeper of the Organs at the Court. Six vols. of his works are preserved in Oxford.

Hinrichs, Gustav, conductor; b. Ludwigs-lust, Germany, Dec. 10, 1850; d. Mountain Lake, N. J., March 26, 1942. He studied violin and piano with his father; composition with E. Marxsen in Hamburg. In 1870 he settled in America; was in San Francisco until 1885; then went to Philadelphia, where he organized his own opera company; gave the American premières of Cavalleria Rusticana (Philadelphia, Sept. 9, 1891) and Pagliacci (N. Y., June 15, 1893). From 1903-08, he conducted at the Metropolitan Opera House; then retired. He was the composer of an opera, Onti-Ora (Indian name of Catskill Mountains; 1st perf. Philadelphia, July 28, 1890).

Hinrichsen, Max, music publisher; b. Leipzig, July 6, 1901. He worked with his father, Heinrich Hinrichsen (1868-1942), in Peters Edition, Leipzig, until 1937, when he went to London, becoming a British subject in 1947. There he established the Hinrichsen Edition, Ltd.; since 1944, published 'Hinrichsen's Musical Year Book.' The catalogue of his London firm includes a number of orchestral and other works by modern European composers.

Hinrichsen, Walter, music publisher; brother of Max Hinrichsen; b. Leipzig, Sept. 23, 1907. He studied at the Univ. of Leipzig; then was connected with the Peters Edition there, headed by his father Heinrich Hinrichsen (1868-1942; see Peters, C. F.). In 1936 Walter Hinrichsen came to America; was in the U. S. Army (1942-45); after the war he became a government employee in the U. S. Zone in Germany (1945-47). He then returned to America and in 1948 opened new offices of the C. F. Peters Corporation in New York.

Hinshaw, William Wade, American baritone; b. Union, Iowa, Nov. 3, 1867; d. Washington, D. C., Nov. 27, 1947. He studied voice with L. G. Gottschalk in Chicago; was choir director at various churches; made his operatic début as Méphistophélès in Gounod's Faust with the H. W. Savage Co. (St. Louis, Nov. 6, 1899); in 1903, opened the Hinshaw School of Opera in Chicago, which was later incorporated into the Chicago Cons.; Hinshaw became president of the combined institutions (1903-07). In 1909 he organized the International Grand Opera Co. of Chicago. He made his début at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y., on Nov. 16, 1910; in 1912 he sang in the Wagner festival at Graz, and in 1914, in the special Ring festival at Berlin; then returned to America. In 1916 he offered a prize of $1000 for the best 1-act opera by an American composer (awarded to Hadley for his opera Bianca). From 1920-26 he produced Mozart's operas in English with his own company in the U. S., Canada, and Cuba (about 800 performances in all). He then settled in Washington.

Hinton, Arthur, English composer; b. Beckenham, Nov. 20, 1869; d. Rottingdean, Aug. 11, 1941. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London; then taught violin there; subsequently went to Munich for further study with Rheinberger. There he composed a symphony, which he conducted at one of the concerts of the Munich Cons.; traveled in Italy; returned to London in 1896. He continued to compose; his second symphony was performed in London in 1903. He married the pianist Katharine Goodson, who gave many performances of his piano works, including a concerto. He wrote the children's operettas, The Disagreeable Princess and St. Elizabeth's Rose; also a number of songs.

Hipkins, Alfred James, English authority on musical instruments; b. London, June 17, 1826; d. there, June 3, 1903. He was connected with the Broadwood piano manufacturers; acquired an excellent knowledge of the piano and was Chopin's favorite tuner on his last visit to England. He himself learned to play the piano well enough to give recitals. He contributed articles to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' and to the 'Encyclopedia Britannica'; publ. standard works on instruments, among them, Musical Instruments, Historic, Rare, and Unique (Edinburgh, 1888; contains numerous colored plates; reprinted, London, 1921) and A Description and History of the Pianoforte, and of the Older Keyboard Stringed Instruments (London, 1896).

Hirai, Kozaburo, Japanese composer; b. Kochi, Sept. 10, 1910; studied at the Academy of Music in Tokyo. He has written a ballet, Festival of Insects (Tokyo, Sept. 15, 1941), and a concerto for the Japanese national instrument koto with orchestra (Tokyo, Nov. 12, 1950).

Hirao, Kishio, Japanese composer, b. Tokyo, July 8, 1907. He studied literature in Tokyo; then went to Paris to study music at the Schola Cantorum. He has written several works for orch.; appointed professor at the Tokyo Music Academy.

Hirsch, Paul Adolf, bibliographer and collector; b. Frankfurt, Feb. 24, 1881; d. Cambridge, England, Nov. 25, 1951. He began collecting rare musical editions as a young man, and published successive catalogues of his rapidly growing library. In 1936 he left Germany and was able to transport his entire collection to England; it was purchased by the British Museum in 1946; the total of items was about 20,000. In 1922 he began the publication of new editions (several in facsimile, and with commentaries) of rare works; these are Francesco Caza, Tractato vulgare de canto figurato (Milan, 1492; ed. J. Wolf, 1922); Giovanni Luca Conforto, Breve et facile maniera d'essercitarsi a far passaggi (Rome, 1593; ed. J. Wolf, 1922); Neujahrsgriisse Seelen; eine Sammlung von Liedern mit Melodien und Bilderschmuck aus den Jahren 1770-1800 (ed. M. Friedlaender, 1922); Georg Philipp Telemann, Fantaisies pour le clavier: 3 douzaines (ed. Max Seiffert, 1923); Hercole Bottrigari, Il desiderio, ovvero de' concerti di varii strumenti musicali (Venice, 1594; ed. Kathi Meyer, 1924); Karl Friedrich Zelter, Fünfzehn ausgewählte Lieder (ed. Moritz Bauer, 1924); Giovanni Spataro, Dilucide et probatissime demonstratione (Bologna, 1521; ed. J. Wolf, 1925); Nicolaus Listenius, Musica, ab authore denuo recognita (Nuremberg, 1549; ed. Georg Schünemann, 1927); Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, Zwölf zwei- und dreistimmige kleine Stücke für die Flöte oder Violine und das Klavier (1770; ed. Richard Hohenemser, 1928); Christoph Schultze, Lukas-Passion (Leipzig, 1653; ed. Peter Epstein, 1930); Martin Luther, Deutsche Messe (1526; ed. J. Wolf, 1934); Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, The ten celebrated String Quartets, first authentic edition in score (ed. Alfred Einstein, 1945).—Cf. P. H. Muir, The Hirsch Catalogue, in the 'Music Review' (1948); a list of editions is found in the Jan. 1951 issue of 'Music Review.'

Hirschfeld, Robert, writer on music; b. Brünn, Moravia, Sept. 17, 1857; d. Salzburg, April 2, 1914. He studied at the Universities of Breslau and Vienna; in 1884, took his degree of Dr. phil. at the Vienna Univ. with a dissertation on Johannes de Muris; made arrangements of several stage works by Haydn, Mozart, etc., for modern performances.

Hirt, Franz Joseph, Swiss pianist; b. Lucerne, Feb. 7, 1899. He studied with Hans Huber and Ernst Lévy at the Cons. of Basel; later, with Egon Petri and Alfred Cortot; in 1919 he became a teacher at the Cons. of Bern; gave numerous recitals in Switzerland and elsewhere in Europe; publ. Die Entwicklung der besaiteten Tasteninstrumente in the 'Schweizerische Musikalische Zeitung' (Feb., 1948).

Hirt, Fritz, Swiss violinist; b. Lucerne, Aug. 10, 1888. He studied in Zürich and Prague; had an extended career as concert violinist in Europe; then settled in Basel as a teacher; was a member of the Basel String Quartet.

Hlobil, Emil, Czech composer; b. Mežimostí, Oct. 11, 1901. He studied with Křička and Novák in Prague; in 1941, was appointed instructor at the Prague Cons. He wrote several works for orch. in a Romantic style. His Symphonic Elegy in memory of the victims of the war (1945) is notable for its expressiveness; of his chamber music, the most interesting work is his nonet (1947).

Hoboken, Anthony van, Dutch music bibliographer; b. Rotterdam, March 23, 1887. He studied with Iwan Knorr at the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt, and with Schenker in Vienna. In 1927 he founded the Archive for Photographs of Musical Manuscripts in the National Library at Vienna. He then began to collect first and other early editions of classical works; his Haydn collection is particularly rich. Received an honorary Ph. D., Kiel University (1957). In 1957 he publ. the first vol. of his thematic catalogue of Haydn's works.

Hobrecht. See Obrecht.

Hochberg, Bolko von (pseudonym, J. H. Franz), German composer; b. Fürstenstein Castle, Silesia, Jan. 23, 1843; d. near Salzbrenn, Dec. 1, 1926. He established and for several years maintained the Hochberg Quartet; also founded the Silesian music festivals (1876); was general intendant of the Berlin Royal Theaters (1886-1903). His works include the operas Claudine von Villabella (Schwerin, 1864) and Die Falkensteiner (Hanover, 1876; rewritten and produced as Der Wärfwolf, Dresden, 1881); 3 symphonies, 3 string quartets; 2 piano trios; a concerto for piano; songs and choruses.

Hoddinott, Alun, Welsh composer; b. Bargoed, Aug. 11, 1929. He studied at the Univ. College of South Wales; since 1951 on the staff of the City of Cardiff College of Music and Drama. He has written a string trio (1949); clarinet concerto (1950); quartet for clarinet, violin, viola, and cello (1954); Symphony No. 1 (1955); oboe concerto (1955); harp concerto (1957); viola concertino (1957). His music, Romantic in essence, adopts chromatic procedures, tending towards 12-tone style; his asymmetric rhythmic system is essential in his thematic writing.—See A. F. Leighton Thomas, Alun Hoddinott, in the 'Mus. Times' (Oct., 1955).

Hodges, Edward, English organist and composer; b. Bristol, July 20, 1796; d. Clifton, Sept. 1, 1867. He was an organist at Bristol; received his Mus. Doc. at Cambridge (1825); in 1838, went to America, where he became an organist in Toronto and then in New York (1839). He publ. An Essay on the Cultivation of Church Music (N. Y., 1841). The Library of Congress acquired the bulk of his music library (743 vols.), including his own works in MS, in 1919.—Cf. A. H. Messier, History of the Choir and Music of Trinity Church (N. Y., 1906). His daughter, Faustina Hasse Hodges (d. Philadelphia, Feb. 4, 1895), was also an organist in the U. S. She composed songs and instrumental pieces and publ. a biography of her father (N. Y., 1896). His son, Rev. John Sebastian Bach Hodges (d. Baltimore, May 1, 1915), an accomplished organist, composed many anthems and services.

Höberg, Georg, Danish composer, conductor, and violinist; b. Copenhagen, Dec. 27, 1872; d. Vedboek, Aug. 3, 1950. He studied at the Cons. of Copenhagen, and later in Berlin; taught at the Copenhagen Cons. from 1900 till 1914; from 1914 till 1930, was conductor at the Royal Opera; from 1915 until 1949 he appeared as guest conductor in Scandinavia and Germany. He wrote the opera Bryllup i Katakomberne (The Wedding in the Catacombs; Copenhagen, March 6, 1909); the ballet The Paris Cathedral (Copenhagen, Oct. 25, 1912); several pieces for violin and orch.; a symphony; choral works and songs.

Hoérée (ö-rä), Arthur (Charles Ernest); critic and composer; b. Saint Gilles, near Brussels, April 16, 1897. He studied at the Brussels Cons., and later at the Paris Cons. with Paul Vidal and Vincent d'Indy; remained in Paris as a music critic. He publ. monographs on Stravinsky (1928), Albert Roussel (1938), and Honegger (1951). Among his works are the ballet La Souris blanche et la Dame de Paris, the oratorio Ode au Soleil, a Symphonie chorégraphique, and a septet for soprano, flute, piano, and strings (his most striking work; performed at the Zürich Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, June 23, 1926).

Hoesick, Ferdinand, Polish musicologist; b. Warsaw, Oct. 16, 1867; d. there, April 13, 1941. He received an excellent European education; studied at the Universities of Heidelberg, Cracow, and Paris, returning to Warsaw in 1891; was editor and writer on literature; his writings on music deal exclusively with Chopin; publ. (in Polish) the basic biography, Chopin's Life and Works (3 vols.; Warsaw, 1910-11; 2nd ed., in 2 vols., 1926); a brief preliminary biography, Chopin (Warsaw, 1898); Selection from J. Elsner's Memoirs (Warsaw, 1901); Chopiniana (letters, etc.; Warsaw, 1912); Slowacki and Chopin, Historic-Literary Parallels and Sketches (Warsaw, 1928).

Hoesslin, Franz von, German conductor; b. Munich, Dec. 31, 1885; d. (in a plane crash over southern France) Sept. 28, 1946. He studied general subjects at the Univ. of Munich; conducting with Felix Mottl, composition with Max Reger. He held the post of conductor at the Municipal Theater of St. Gall, Switzerland (1908-11); then conducted in Riga (1912-14); was in the German army during World War I; then in Lübeck (1919-20), Mannheim (1920-22), and at the Berlin Volksoper (1922-23); general music director in Dessau (1923-26); opera conductor in Barmen-Elberfeld (1926-27); later was engaged as conductor for the Bayreuth festival; conducted opera in France and Spain. He was also a composer; wrote some orchestral works, a clarinet quintet, and choruses.

Höfdding, Finn, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, March 10, 1899. He studied in Copenhagen with Knud Jeppesen and in Vienna with J. Marx. Since 1931, he has been professor at the Copenhagen Cons. —Works: opera, Kejserens nye Klæder (The Emperor's New Clothes), after Hans Christian Andersen (Copenhagen, Dec. 29, 1928); opera, Kilderejsen (1931; Copenhagen, Jan. 13, 1942); school opera, Pasteur (1935; Copenhagen, March 9, 1938); cantatas, Fem Svaner (Copenhagen, Sept. 9, 1938); Kristoffer Columbus (Copenhagen, March 5, 1941); 4 symphonies: Sinfonia impetuosa (1923), Il Canto liberato for coloratura soprano, chorus, and orch. (1924), Symphony No. 3 for 2 pianos and orch. (1928), Sinfonia concertante for small orch. (1934); symph. fantasies: Evolution (Copenhagen, Tivoli Garden, Sept. 5, 1940) and Det re ganske vist (Copenhagen, March 6, 1944; as a pantomime, Tivoli Gardens, July 1, 1948); Vår og Høst, for baritone and orch. (Copenhagen Radio, Jan. 24, 1946); concerto for oboe and strings (1933); 2 string quartets (1920; 1925); wind quintet (1940); oboe sonata (1944); choruses and songs.—Cf. G. Carritt, Finn Höfdding, in the 'Monthly Musical Record' (Sept., 1953).

Höffer, Paul, German composer; b. Barmen, Dec. 21, 1895; d. Berlin, Aug. 31, 1949. He studied piano with Walter Georgii in Cologne; music theory with Abendroth; then took courses in composition with Franz Schreker in Berlin. In 1923 he became piano teacher at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; in 1948, was appointed director. In his compositions he adopted a fairly radical idiom, making free use of the modern techniques of polytonality and atonality. However, most of his works preserve the formal unity of the Romantic school; the influence of his teacher Schreker is discernible. He wrote the operas Borgia (1931) and Der falsche Waldemar (1934); the oratorios Der reiche Tag (1938), Von edlen Leben (1941), and Mysterium der Liebe (1942); Sinfonie der grossen Stadt (1937); piano concerto (1939); oboe concerto (1946); 3 string quartets; clarinet quintet; wind sextet. — Cf. Karl Laux, Musik und Musiker der Gegenwart (pp. 127-35; Essen, 1949).

Hoffman, Richard, pianist and composer; b. Manchester, England, May 24, 1831; d. New York, Aug. 17, 1909. He received his first instruction from his father and then studied with Leopold de Meyer, Pleyel, Moscheles, Rubinstein, Döhler, and Liszt. He came to New York in 1847; traveled with Jenny Lind on her American tour (1850-52) as joint artist; appeared as soloist with Hans von Bülow in N. Y. (1875). He was a prolific composer, mainly of salon music for piano; wrote about 100 opus numbers; also about 100 songs; anthems, etc. He wrote Some Musical Recollections of Fifty Years (with biographical sketch by his wife; posthumous, 1910).

Hoffmann, Ernst Theodor Amadeus (his third Christian name was Wilhelm, but he replaced it by Amadeus from love of Mozart), famous German writer, who was also a composer; b. Königsberg, Jan. 24, 1776; d. Berlin, June 25, 1822. He was a student of law, and served as assessor at Poznan; also studied music with the organist Podbielski. He acquired considerable proficiency in music; served as music director at the theater in Bamberg; then conducted opera performances in Leipzig and Dresden (1813-14). In 1814 he settled in Berlin, where he remained. He used the pen-name of Kapellmeister Johannes Kreisler (subsequently made famous in Schumann's Kreisleriana); his series of articles in the 'Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung' under that name were reprinted as Phantasiestücke in Callot's Manier (1814). As a writer of fantastic tales, he made a profound impression on his period, and influenced the entire Romantic school of literature; indirectly, he was also a formative factor in the evolution of the German school of composition. His own compositions are passable from the technical viewpoint, but strangely enough, for a man of his imaginative power, they lack the inventiveness that characterize his literary productions. If his music is occasionally performed, it is only as a curiosity. He wrote a number of operas: Die Maske (1799), Scherz, List und Rache (Poznan, 1808), Der Renegat (Plozk, 1803), Faustine (Plozk, 1804), Die ungeladenen Gäste, oder der Canonicus von Mailand (Warsaw, 1805), Lustige Musikanten (Warsaw, 1805), Liebe aus Eifersucht (Warsaw, 1807), Der Trank der Unsterblichkeit (Bamberg, 1808), Das Gespenst (Warsaw, 1809), Aurora (performance planned in Bamberg, 1811, when Hoffmann conducted the theater there, but production failed to materialize; the opera was revised by L. Böttcher, and produced in a new version in Bamberg, Nov. 5, 1933), Undine (Berlin, Aug. 3, 1816; his best work; vocal score edited by Hans Pfitzner, 1907), Julius Sabinus (unfinished); also a ballet, Harlekin; some sacred works; a symphony; a piano trio; 4 piano sonatas. Two vols. of Hoffmann's collected musical works were publ. in 1922-23, edited by Gustav Becking. His writings on music were publ. separately by Hans von Ende (Cologne, 1896). There is a large literature on Hoffmann as a writer; books and articles on Hoffmann as a musician include E. Istel, E. T. A. Hoffmann als Musikschriststeller, in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik' (1903); Hans von Müller, Das Kreislerbuch (Leipzig, 1903); Hans von Wolzogen, E. T. A. Hoffmann und R. Wagner (Berlin, 1906); E. Kroll, E. T. A. Hoffmanns musikalische Anschauungen (Königsberg, 1909); Hans Ehinger, E. T. A. Hoffmann als Musiker und Musik-Schriftsteller (Cologne, 1954).

Hoffmann, Hans, German musicologist; b. Neustadt, Silesia, Jan. 26, 1902. He studied at the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin; received his Ph. D. at Kiel; then taught at Kiel Univ. (1925-30); later at Halle (1930-33); also conducted concerts in Bielefeld (1933-36). He is the author of the books, Heinrich Schütz und J. S. Bach (Kassel, 1940) and Zeitgenössische Kirchenmusik (Neuwied, 1947).

Hoffmann, Heinrich August (called Hoffmann von Fallersleben), distinguished German writer; b. Fallersleben, Hanover, April 2, 1798; d. at Castle Korvei, Jan. 29, 1874. He received his education at the Univ. of Göttingen; in 1835 he was appointed prof. at Breslau Univ. For some years (1842-48) he was not allowed to teach or reside in Prussia, on account of his dissenting political views; after 1848 he was librarian to Prince Lippe at Korvei. He wrote several important books dealing with music, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenlieds (1832; 2nd ed., 1854); Schlesische Volkslieder mit Melodien (1842); etc., but his chief claim to fame is the text of Deutschland, Deutschland, über alles, which he wrote to Haydn's Emperor's Hymn.

Hoffmeister, Franz Anton, German composer and publisher; b. Rottenburg, May 12, 1754; d. Vienna, Feb. 9, 1812. He went to Vienna as a law student, but became greatly interested in music, and in 1783, established his publishing firm, of historic significance owing to its publications of Mozart and Beethoven. In 1800 he went to Leipzig, where he organized (with Kühnel) a 'Bureau de Musique,' which eventually became incorporated into the celebrated firm of C. F. Peters. In 1805 he returned to Vienna, where he devoted himself mostly to composition. Amazingly prolific, he composed 9 operas, 66 symphonies and overtures, 42 string quartets, 5 piano quartets, 11 piano trios, 18 string trios, 12 piano sonatas; in addition to these he wrote a very great number of compositions for flute with various instruments. Hoffmeister's craftsmanship was of sufficient excellence to lead to confusion of his music with Haydn's. Regarding this, see E. F. Schmid, F. A. Hoffmeister und die 'Göttweiger Sonaten' in the 'Zeitschrift für Musik' (1937).

Hofhaimer (Hofheimer), Paul, celebrated organist and composer; b. Radstadt, Jan. 25, 1459; d. Salzburg, 1537. Cuspinianus and Luscinius both wrote of him as an unrivalled organist and lutenist. He was greatly appreciated at the various courts where he served. He was court organist to the Archduke Sigismund of Tyrol from 1480, residing at Innsbruck, and from 1490, at the court of the Emperor Maximilian I there. He was ennobled by the Emperor in 1515, when he played in St. Stephen's Cathedral in Vienna; he was also made Knight of the Golden Spur by King Ladislas of Hungary. Little of his organ music survives; some is preserved in the Berlin State Library. Extant works comprise Harmoniae poeticae (odes of Horace set for 4 voices; 35 by Hofhaimer and 9 by Senfl, Nuremberg, 1539; repub. by Achtleitner, 1868); 4-part German songs in contemporary collections (5 in Oeglin's Liederbuch, 1512; others in Forster's Liederbuch, 1539; etc. — Cf. H. J. Moser, Paul Hofhaimer (Stuttgart, 1929), containing transcriptions of Hofhaimer's surviving works.

Hofmann, Casimir, Polish pianist; father of Josef Hofmann; b. Cracow, 1842; d. Berlin, July 6, 1911. He studied at the Vienna Cons.; then conducted opera in Cracow. In 1878 he moved to Warsaw, where he taught and conducted. After the spectacular success of his young son, he followed him on his extended tours throughout Europe and America. From 1886, he lived mainly in Berlin. He wrote numerous works in various genres.

Hofmann, Heinrich (Karl Johann), German pianist and composer; b. Berlin, Jan. 13, 1842; d. Gross-Tabarz, Thuringia, July 16, 1902. He studied in Berlin with Grell, Dehn, and Wüerst. He became a concert pianist, then turned to composition. Exceptionally productive, he wrote a great deal of operatic, symphonic, and chamber music, choral works and solo piano pieces, all of which were published and frequently performed. His popularity declined precipitously towards the end of his life; his music vanished from concert programs after his death. His style reflected Wagnerian procedures, particularly in heroic moods; he possessed complete mastery of technique, but his music lacked originality or distinction. Hofmann wrote the following stage works: comic opera Cartouche (Berlin, 1869); heroic drama Armin (Dresden, Oct. 14, 1877); pastoral opera Aennchen von Tharau (Hamburg, Nov. 6, 1878); historic opera Wilhelm von Oranien (1882), and the comic opera Donna Diana (Berlin, Nov. 15, 1886). His Frithjof Symphony (1874) was enormously popular, having had 43 performances during the 1874-75 season in German cities alone; it was also performed in England and America. Similarly successful was his orchestral Hungarian Suite (1873). He also wrote a great number of choral works and songs; characteristic piano pieces; chamber music.

Hofmann, Josef, celebrated pianist; b. Podgorze, near Cracow, Jan. 20, 1876; d. Los Angeles, Feb. 16, 1957. He was the son of the pianist Casimir Hofmann; his mother was a professional opera singer. At the age of 4 he began to play the piano, tutored by an older sister and an aunt; at 5, his father began giving him regular lessons. He was barely 6 when he first appeared in public in Ciechocinek; at the age of 10 he played Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 with the Berlin Philharmonic, under Hans von Bülow. He also made a tour of Scandinavia; played in France and England; his concerts as a child prodigy became a European sensation; soon an American offer of a concert tour came from the impresarios Abbey, Schoeffel & Grau. On Nov. 29, 1887, Hofmann appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House, as a soloist in Beethoven's Concerto No. 1, with an orchestra conducted by Adolf Neuendorff, and played works by Chopin and some of his own little pieces. He electrified the audience, and hard-headed critics hailed his performance as a marvel. He appeared throughout the United States, giving 42 concerts in all; then agitation was started by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children against the exploitation of his talent. Alfred Corning Clark of N. Y. offered $50,000 to the family for his continued education. The offer was accepted, and young Hofmann began serious study with Moszkowski (piano) and Urban (composition) in Berlin. Then Anton Rubinstein accepted him as a pupil in Dresden, where Hofmann traveled twice a week for piano lessons. At the age of 18 he resumed his career, giving recitals in Dresden and elsewhere in Germany with enormous success; made his first tour of Russia in 1896, attaining huge popularity there; he reappeared in Russia frequently. In 1898 he again played in the U. S.; from then on, he appeared in American cities almost every year. At the peak of his career, he came to be regarded as one of the greatest pianists of the century. He possessed the secret of the singing tone, which enabled him to interpret Chopin with extraordinary delicacy and intimacy. He was also capable of summoning tremendous power playing Liszt and other works of the virtuoso school. His technique knew no difficulties; but in his interpretations, he subordinated technical effects to the larger design of the work. When the Curtis Institute of Music was founded in Philadelphia (1924), Hofmann was engaged to head the piano department; from 1926-38 he was director of the Curtis Institute. On Nov. 28, 1937, his golden jubilee in the U. S. was celebrated with a concert at the Metropolitan Opera House, where he had first played as a child 50 years before. He performed the D minor concerto of Anton Rubinstein, and his own Chromaticon, for piano and orch. From 1938 to his death he lived mostly in California. He became an American citizen in 1926. Hofmann was also a composer, under the pen-name Michel Dvorsky (literal translation into Polish of his German name, meaning 'courtyard man'). Among his works are several piano concertos; some symph. works; Chromaticon, for piano and orch. (first played by him with the Cincinnati Symph. Orch., Nov. 24, 1916); numerous piano pieces. He publ. a practical manual, Piano-Playing with Piano-Questions Answered (1915).

Hofmann, Ludwig, German baritone; b. Frankfurt, Jan. 14, 1895. He studied voice in Milan; was engaged at various German opera houses (1919-27); member of the Berlin State Opera (1928-32). He made his debut with the Metropolitan Opera Co., N. Y., on Nov. 24, 1932, as Hagen, in Die Götterdämmerung; returned to Europe in 1939; also appeared in South America. In 1949 he joined the staff of the Vienna Opera.

Hofmann, Richard, German violinist; b. Delitzsch, April 30, 1844; d. Leipzig, Nov. 13, 1918. He studied with Dreyschock and Jadassohn in Leipzig; later settled there as music teacher. He publ. instructive pieces for various instruments, and a valuable manual Praktische Instrumentationsschule (Leipzig, 1893; 3rd ed., 1907; in English, 1898); Katechismus der Musikinstrumente (many editions); Neuer Führer durch die Violin- und Viola-Litteratur (1909); Die F-Trompete im 2. Brandenburgischen Konzert von J. S. Bach, in the 'Bach-Jahrbuch' (1916).

Hofmeister, Friedrich, German music publisher; b. Strehlen, Jan. 24, 1782; d. Reudnitz, near Leipzig, Sept. 30, 1864. In 1807 he established in Leipzig the music firm that bears his name; beginning in 1829, he publ. a valuable monthly catalogue, the 'Musikalisch-literarischer Monatsbericht.' His son and successor, Adolf Hofmeister (b. c. 1818; d. Leipzig, May 26, 1870), publ. a 3rd and enlarged ed. of Whistling's Handbuch der musikalischen Litteratur (1845), with supplementary vols. filled from issues of Hofmeister's 'Monatsbericht.' After 1852, the 12 'Monatsberichte' for each complete year were arranged in alphabetical order and issued as a 'Jahresbericht.' All these valuable editions were continued by the firm under the proprietorship of Albert Röhling (b. Leipzig, Jan. 4, 1845; d. there, Aug. 11, 1907). In 1905 Karl Günther became the head of the firm; he was succeeded by Karl Ganzenmüller. In 1935 the firm acquired the catalogue of Merseburger (Leipzig); after World War II the firm had offices both in Frankfurt and Leipzig.

Hogarth, George, Scottish writer on music; b. Carfrae Mill, near Oxtou, Berwickshire, 1783; d. London, Feb. 12, 1870. He was a practicing lawyer in Edinburgh, and an amateur musician. He settled in London in 1830; contributed articles to the 'Harmonicon'; also wrote reviews for the 'Morning Chronicle.' His daughter married Charles Dickens in 1836; when Dickens became editor of the 'Daily News' (1846), Hogarth began writing music criticisms for it; also wrote for other papers. From 1850-64 he was secretary to the Philharmonic Society of London. He publ. the following books:

Musical History, Biography, and Criticism (1835); Memoirs of the Musical Drama (1838; 2nd ed., 1851, as Memoirs of the Opera); The Birmingham Festival (1855); The Philharmonic Society of London (1862), and The Life of Beethoven.

Hoiby, Lee, American composer; b. Madison, Wisconsin, Feb. 17, 1926. He received his B. M. in Madison in 1947; then studied piano with Egon Petri at Mills College, where he received his M. A. in 1952; studied with Menotti at the Curtis Institute (1948-52); in Rome and Salzburg (1952). — Works: Toccata for piano (1950); Noc-tambulation, for orch. (N. Y., Oct. 4, 1952); Hearts, Meadows & Flags, for orch. (Rochester, Nov. 6, 1952); Pastoral Dances, for flute and orch. (New Orleans, Nov. 6, 1956); The Witch, opera in one act (1956); incidental music to The Duchess of Malfi (N. Y., March 19, 1957); violin sonata (1952); 5 preludes for piano (1952); Design for Strings (1949-53); Diversions, 4 pieces for woodwind quintet (1954); Songs of the Fool, for mixed chorus (1956). In 1957 he received an award of $1,000 from the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Hol, Richard, Dutch composer, conductor, pianist, and organist; b. Amsterdam, July 23, 1825; d. Utrecht, May 14, 1904. He studied organ with Martens and theory with Bertelmann. After traveling in Germany, he taught music in Amsterdam; in 1862, became city music director at Utrecht, succeeding Kufferath; then cathedral organist (1869) and director of the School of Music (1875); conducted concerts in The Hague and Amsterdam. A prolific composer, he wrote the operas Floris V (Amsterdam, April 9, 1892), Uit de branding (Amsterdam, 1894), and De schoone schaapster; the oratorio David (1880), 4 symphonies, choral and orchestral works, chamber music, and songs. From 1886-1900 he was editor of 'Het Orgel'; wrote a monograph on Sweelinck (1860). — Cf. H. Nolthenius, Richard Hol, Levensschets (Haarlem, 1904).

Holbrooke, Josef, English composer; b. Croydon, July 5, 1878. He received his primary education from his father; then studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with F. Corder; received the Stern-dale Bennett Scholarship. After graduation (1898), he went on a tour with A. Lloyd; conducted ballet and various summer orchestras. Although he composed prolifically, and had many ardent admirers of his music, he never succeeded in establishing himself as a representative British composer. Perhaps this was owing to the fact that he stood aloof from modernistic developments of European music, and preferred to write for a mass audience, which, however, failed to materialize at the infrequent performances of his music. — Works: Operas: Pierrot and Pierrette (London, Nov. 11, 1909); a trilogy (his main dramatic work: The Cauldron of Anwyn: I. The Children of Don (London, June 15, 1912), II. Dylan, Son of the Wave (London, July 4, 1913), III. Bronwen, Daughter of Llyr (Huddersfield, Feb. 1, 1929); The Enchanter (Chicago, 1915); The Snob, 1-act comic opera. Ballets: The Red Masque, The Moth, The Enchanted Garden. Orchestral works: symph. poems, The Raven (London, 1900); The Viking; Ulalume (1904); Byron, with chorus; Queen Mab, with chorus (Leeds Festival, 1904); Homage to E. A. Poe, with chorus; The Bells, with chorus (Birmingham, 1906); The Skeleton in Armor; The Masque of the Red Death; 5 symphonies; variations on Three Blind Mice, The Girl I Left Behind Me, and Auld Lang Syne; Dreamland Suite; Les Hommages, suite; The Haunted Palace, fantasy; The New Renaissance, overture. Chamber music: 5 string quartets; 4 string sextets; 3 violin sonatas; 2 piano quartets; 2 clarinet quintets; a piano quintet; a trio for violin, horn, and piano. He wrote many piano pieces, songs, and clarinet pieces; also, a book, Contemporary British Composers (1925). — Cf. George Lowe, Josef Holbrooke and His Work (1920); also a symposium, Josef Holbrooke: Various Appreciations by many Authors (London, 1937).

Holde, Artur, German music critic; b. Randzburg, Oct. 16, 1885. He studied at Berlin Univ. with Max Friedlaender and Hermann Kretzschmar. From 1910-36 he was conductor at the Frankfurt Synagogue, and at the same time was active as music critic for various Frankfurt publications. In 1937 he came to the U. S.; was choir-master at the Hebrew Tabernacle in New York City (1937-43) and music critic of the German publication 'Aufbau' in New York; has contributed articles to the 'Mus. Quarterly' and other publications.

Holden, Oliver, American musician, carpenter, and minister; b. Shirley, Mass., Sept. 18, 1765; d. Charlestown, Mass., Sept. 4, 1844. After serving as a marine in the navy, he settled in Charlestown in 1787 and was active there as a justice of the peace and carpenter; then abandoned carpentry and established a music store (about 1790); also offered music lessons; officiated as preacher of the Puritan Church; served as Charlestown Representative in the State House of Representatives (1818-33). He composed psalm tunes and odes; at least 21 hymns are known to be of his authorship, his best being Coronation (set to the words All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name), first published in vol. I of his Union Harmony (1793); it has retained its popularity until modern times. His From Vernon's mount behold the hero rise, one of the many works written in commemoration of George Washington's death, was sung at the Old South Meeting House, Boston, in Jan., 1800. Other publications are The American Harmony (1792), The Massachusetts Compiler (1795; with H. Gram and S. Holyoke), The Worcester Collection (1797; ed. and revised by Holden), Sacred Dirges, Hymns and Anthems (1800), Modern Collection of Sacred Music (1800), Plain Psalmody (1800), Charlestown Collection of Sacred Songs (1803), Vocal Companion (1807), and Occasional Pieces.—Cf. F. J. Metcalf, American Psalmody (1917); F. J. Metcalf, American Writers and Compilers of Sacred Music (1925); 'Dictionary of American Biography' IX (1932); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939).

Holguín, Guillermo. See Uribe-Holguín.

Hollaender, Alexis, German pianist; b. Ratibor, Silesia, Feb. 25, 1840; d. Berlin, Feb. 5, 1924. He studied at the Berlin Royal Academy with Grell and others; became instructor at Kullak's Academy (1861); conducted choral groups (1864) and the 'Cäcilienverein' (1870). He composed piano works, choruses, songs, etc.; publ. an instructive edition of Schumann's piano music and Methodische Übungen fürs Halten einer tieferen Stimme.

Hollaender, Gustav, German violinist; b. Leobschütz, Silesia, Feb. 15, 1855; d. Berlin, Dec. 4, 1915. He was taught the violin by his father, appeared in public at an early age; then studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Ferdinand David, and in Berlin with Joachim. At the age of 20 he embarked on a concert career; gave concerts of chamber music with Scharwenka and Grünfeld in Berlin (1878-81); in 1881 he was appointed teacher at the Cologne Cons.; in 1894 became director of the Stern Cons. in Berlin, which post he filled with distinction until his death. He wrote numerous pieces for violin, in an effective virtuoso style.

Hollaender, Viktor (pen-name, Arricha del Tolveno), German composer; brother of Gustav Hollaender; b. Leobschütz, April 20, 1866; d. Hollywood, Oct. 24, 1940. He studied with Kullak; was theater conductor in Berlin for a number of years; also theater conductor in London. He lived mostly in Berlin until 1933, when he went to America and settled in Los Angeles. His works include the light operas San Lin, Trilby, The Bey of Morocco, Schwan von Siam, Die dumme Liebe, Der rote Kosak, Der Regimentspapa, etc.; songs and piano pieces. His pantomime Sumurun was produced by Max Reinhardt.

Holland, Theodore, English composer; b. London, April 25, 1878; d. there, Oct. 29, 1947. He studied with Frederick Corder at the Royal Academy of Music and with Joachim at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin. In 1927 he became prof. of composition at the Royal Academy of Music. Although his career was mainly that of a teacher, he was an estimable composer, particularly proficient in writing for the theater. Among his works is a children's operetta, King Goldemar; a musical play, Santa Claus; Evening on a Lake, for chamber orch. (1924); Cortège for an ensemble of cellos (1939); Spring Sinfonietta (1943); 2 string quartets; 2 piano trios; suite for viola and piano; and several song cycles.

Holle, Hugo, German writer on music; b. Mehlis, Thuringia, Jan. 25, 1890; d. Stuttgart, Dec. 12, 1942. He was a pupil of Max Reger; 1919-21, director of the Heilbronn Cons.; 1921-25, editor of the 'Neue Musikzeitung' in Stuttgart; since 1925 teacher of music theory at the Hochschule für Musik, Stuttgart; conductor of the famous 'Holle's Madrigal Choir,' with which he toured Central Europe; member of the Board of the Max Reger Society; co-editor of the 'Musikalische Volksbücher.' — Writings: Goethes Lyrik in Weisen deutscher Tonsetzer bis zur Gegenwart (1914); Die Chorwerke Max Regers (Munich, 1922); and numerous articles in music periodicals. He revised Storck's Mozartbiographie in 1923, and has edited old choral music for the Schott publ. firm (Die hohen Feste, Motetten alter Meister, etc.).

Höller, Karl, German composer; b. Bamberg, July 25, 1907. He received a good musical training as a chorister at the Cathedral of Bamberg; pursued his formal studies at the Cons. of Würzburg with Zilcher; later took courses in Munich with Joseph Haas. He taught at Hoch's Cons. in Frankfurt (1937-45). After the end of the war he was appointed professor at the Musik-hochschule in Munich.—Works: Kammerkonzert for harpsichord and chamber orch. (1935); 2 violin concertos (1938; 1952); 2 cello concertos (1941; 1950); a symphony (1952); 6 string quartets; piano trio; 8 violin sonatas; cello sonata; many works for organ; choral works; piano pieces.

Hollingsworth, John, English conductor; b. Enfield, Middlesex, March 20, 1916. He studied flute and violin at Bradfield College; then enrolled at the Guildhall School of Music in London. In 1940-41 he conducted a band of the Royal Air Force; after the war, director of a film studio orch.; from 1950, ballet conductor at Covent Garden.

Hollingsworth, Stanley, American composer; b. Berkeley, Calif., Aug. 27, 1924. He studied at the State College in San José, Cal.; then with Darius Milhaud at Mills College and with Gian Carlo Menotti at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. He was then in Rome, at the American Academy (1955-56). As a composer, he follows the principles of practical modernism; in this respect he emulates Menotti. Among his works are Dumbarton Oaks Mass for chorus and string orch.; sonata for oboe and piano; opera The Mother, after Andersen (1954); quintet for harp and woodwind instruments; a television opera La Grande Bretèche, after Balzac (NBC production, Feb. 10, 1957); and Stabat Mater for chorus and orch. (San José, May 1, 1957). In some works, he has used the pseudonym Stanley Hollier.

Hollins, Alfred, blind English pianist; b. Hull, Sept. 11, 1865; d. Edinburgh, May 17, 1942. He studied piano at several schools for the blind; then studied with Hans von Bülow in Berlin. In 1886 he made a tour of the U. S. playing in an ensemble with other blind musicians; in 1888, appeared in America once more, as soloist with several orchestras. Returning to England, he became a church organist in Edinburgh (1897-1904). Then followed tours in Australia (1904), South Africa (1907, 1909, and 1916), and the U. S. (1925). He also composed some music. He publ. an autobiography, A Blind Musician Looks Back (London, 1936).

Hollmann, Joseph, cellist; b. Maastricht, Holland, Oct. 16, 1852; d. Paris, Jan. 1, 1927. He studied with Servais at the Brussels

Cons., winning first prize (1870); then at the Paris Cons. with Jacquard; played many concerts in Europe and America; lived mostly in Paris. Saint-Saëns wrote his 2nd cello concerto for Hollmann.

Holmboe, Vagn, Danish composer; b. Horsens, Dec. 20, 1909. He was a pupil at the Copenhagen Cons. (1926-29), taking courses with Jeppesen; later studied in Berlin with Ernst Toch. A highly prolific composer, he has written 8 symphonies (1935-53); 12 chamber concertos for various instruments (1939-50); 2 violin sonatas; a wind quintet; a musical play, Fanden og Borgmesteren (1940); and a ballet, Den galsindede Tyrk (1944).

Holmes, Alfred, violinist; b. London, Nov. 9, 1837; d. Paris, March 4, 1876. His only teacher was his father, an amateur violinist; he sang at the Oratory in London as a soprano chorister; appeared as a violinist at the age of 9, playing a duet with his brother, Henry. The 2 brothers then went on a European tour, playing in Belgium, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland (1855-61). Alfred Holmes then lived in Paris (1861-64); visited Russia in 1867; then returned to Paris, making occasional visits to London. He composed several stage works; his opera Inez de Castro was not produced; he also wrote several programmatic symphonies, entitled Robinhood, The Siege of Paris, Charles XII, and Romeo and Juliet; also overtures, The Cid and The Muses. His brother, Henry Holmes (b. London, Nov. 7, 1839; d. San Francisco, Dec. 9, 1905), was also a precocious violinist; after 1865 he settled in London, where he taught at the Royal College of Music. In 1894, he went to San Francisco, where he remained until his death. He wrote 4 symphonies, 2 cantatas, and a violin concerto (London, Dec. 11, 1875); also some chamber music.

Holmès, Augusta (Mary Anne), French composer; b. Paris (of Irish parents), Dec. 16, 1847; d. there, Jan. 28, 1903. She progressed very rapidly as a child pianist, and gave public concerts; also composed songs under the pen-name Hermann Zenta. She studied harmony with H. Lambert, an organist; later became a pupil of César Franck. She then began to compose works in large forms, arousing considerable attention, mixed with curiosity, for she was undoubtedly one of the very few professional women composers of the time. Her music, impartially considered, lacks individuality or strength; at best, it represents a conventional by-product of French Romanticism, with an admixture of fashionable exotic elements. — Works: operas: La Montagne noire (Paris Opéra, Feb. 8, 1895), Héro et Léandre, Astarte, Lancelot du lac; for orch.: Andante pastoral (Paris, Jan. 14, 1877); Lutèce (Angers, Nov. 30, 1884); Les Argonautes (Paris, April 24, 1881); Irlande (Paris, March 2, 1882); Ode triomphale (Paris, March 4, 1888); Pologne, Andromède, Hymne à Apollon, etc.; cantatas, La vision de la Reine; La chanson de la Caravane; La fleur de Neflier; some piano pieces; 117 songs, some of which have remained in the active repertory of French singers. — Cf. P. Barillon-Bauché, Augusta Holmès et la femme compositeur (Paris, 1912); R. Pichard du Page, Augusta Holmès; une musicienne versaillaise (Paris, 1921).

Holmes, Edward, English pianist and author; b. London, 1797; d. there, Aug. 28, 1859. He received a fine education; was a friend of Keats at Enfield. He studied music with Vincent Novello. In 1826 he became a contributor to a literary journal, 'Atlas.' He publ. A Ramble among the Musicians of Germany (1828); The Life of Mozart (his most important work; 1845; 2nd ed., 1878); Life of Purcell; Analytical and Thematic Index of Mozart's Piano Works; also articles in the 'Musical Times' and other journals.

Holoubek, Ladislav, Slovak conductor and composer; b. Prague, Aug. 13, 1913. He studied with Alexander Moyzes at Bratislava and with Novák in Prague; became conductor of the Slovak National Theater at Bratislava, for which he wrote several operas: Stella (March 18, 1939); Svitanie (Daybreak; March 14, 1941); Tůžba (Dessire; Feb. 12, 1944); also composed symph. works.

Holst, Edvard; composer of light music; b. Copenhagen, 1843; d. New York, Feb. 4, 1899. He emigrated to America in 1874, and was active in New York as actor, dancing master, etc.; also wrote numerous pieces for military band (Marine Band March, Battle of Manila, etc.); a number of songs, and a comic opera, Our Flats (N. Y., 1897); in all, more than 2,000 numbers.

Holst, Gustav Theodore (real name, Gustav Theodore von Holst; he removed the Germanic particle 'von' after 1914; before World War I, his works were published under the name Gustav von Holst), famous English composer; b. Cheltenham, Sept. 21, 1874; d. London, May 25, 1934. He was the son of a Swedish father, an able organist, and an English mother, an amateur pianist. Reared in a musical family, Holst performed on the organ and led a chorus in Wyck Rissington, Gloucestershire, at the age of 19. He then entered the Royal College of Music in London, where he studied composition with Stanford; also took up the trombone, and acquired such proficiency that he was able to earn his living as trombonist with the Carl Rosa Opera Co. and in various symphony orchestras. In 1905 he became music master at St. Paul's Girls' School; from 1907, he was music director at Morley College in London, retaining both positions until his death. From 1919 he also taught composition at the Royal College of Music. In 1923 he undertook a journey to the U. S.; lectured and performed his works at Harvard Univ. and at the Univ. of Michigan. His last years were devoted entirely to composition. In his music, he was inspired equally by exotic subjects and by English folklore; Oriental themes particularly fascinated him; he studied Hindu literature, and wrote several works reflecting Hindu legends. His most enduring work is the orchestral suite, The Planets (1914-16), depicted as astrological or mystical symbols. Also popular is his unassuming but effective work for string orch., St. Paul's Suite (1913). His daughter, Imogen Holst (b. Richmond, Surrey, April 12, 1907), compiled a detailed biography. — Works: Operas and other stage works: Lansdown Castle, operetta (Cheltenham, Feb. 7, 1893); The Revolve, op. 1 (one act; 1895); The Youth's Choice, op. 11 (1902); Sita, op. 23 (1899-1906); Savitri, chamber opera, op. 25 (after the Hindu epic Mahabharata; 1908; London, Dec. 5, 1916); The Perfect Fool, op. 39 (London, Covent Garden, May 14, 1923); At the Boar's Head, op. 42 (Manchester, April 3, 1925); The Wandering Scholar, op. 50 (1929); choral ballet, The Morning of the Year, op. 45a (1927); choral ballet, The Golden Goose, op. 45b (Liverpool, Jan. 11, 1929). Orchestral works: Walt Whitman, op. 7 (1899); Cotswolds, op. 8 (1900); symph. poem, Indra, op. 13 (1903); Song of the Night, for violin and orch., op. 19a (1905); Marching Song and Country Song, for small orch., op. 22 (1906); Songs of the West, op. 21a (1906), and Somerset Rhapsody, op. 21b (London, Queen's Hall, April 6, 1910); incidental music to A Vision of Dame Christian, op. 27a, and music for the Stepney Pageant, op. 27b (1909); Suite No.

1 for military band, op. 28a (1909); Oriental Suite, Beni Mora, op. 29a (1910; London, May 1, 1912); Invocation, for cello and orch., op. 19b (1911); Suite No. 2 for military band (1911); Phantastic Suite (1911); St. Paul's Suite for string orch. (1913); The Planets, suite for large orch. and voices, op. 32 (1914-16; London, Queen's Hall, Sept. 29, 1918); Japanese Suite, op. 33 (1915); Fugal Overture, op. 40, 1 (London, Queen's Hall, Oct. 11, 1923); Fugal Concerto, for flute, oboe, and strings, op. 40, 2 (London, 1923); First Choral Symphony, for soprano and mixed voices, op. 41 (Leeds Festival, Oct. 7, 1925); Egdon Heath, symph. poem (after Thomas Hardy; N. Y., Feb. 12, 1928); Double Concerto, for 2 violins, op. 49 (London, Queen's Hall, April 3, 1930); Hammersmith, prelude and scherzo, op. 52 (London, Queen's Hall, Nov. 25, 1931). Chamber music: Fantasy Pieces for oboe and strings, op. 2; piano quintet, op. 3 (1896); Suite in Eb, op. 10 (1900; London, April 6, 1904); woodwind quintet, op. 14 (1903). Choral and vocal works: Clear and Cool, for chorus and orch., op. 5 (1897); Ornulf's Drapa, scena for baritone and orch., op. 6 (1898); Ave Maria, for 8-part women's chorus, op. 9 (1900); King Estmere, ballade for chorus and orch., op. 17 (1903); The Mystic Trumpeter, for soprano and orch., op. 18 (1904); The Cloud Messenger, ode for chorus and orch., op. 30 (1910); Christmas Day (1910); 4-part songs for children; women's chorus, op. 20a (1905); 4 Carols for mixed chorus, op. 20b; Two Eastern Pictures, for women's chorus and harp (1911); Hecuba's Lament, for contralto, op. 31, No. 1 (1911); choral songs, op. 12; Choral Hymns from the Rig-Veda, op. 26 (1910); 2 Psalms for chorus, strings, and organ (1912); Hymn to Dionysus, op. 31, No. 2 (1913); Dirge for Two Veterans, for men's chorus and brass band (1914); part-songs for mixed chorus, op. 34 (1916); 3 Hymns for chorus and orch., op. 36a (1916); 6 Folksongs for chorus, op. 36b (1916); Hymn of Jesus, for 2 choruses, orch., piano, and organ, op. 37, 1 (1917); part-songs for children, op. 37, 2; Ode to Death, with orch., op. 38 (after Walt Whitman, 1919; Leeds Festival, 1922); choruses to Alceste, for women's chorus, harp, and flutes (1920); motet, The Evening Watch, op. 43 (1924); Choral Fantasia, for soprano, chorus, organ, and orch., op. 51 (1930); 12 Welsh folksongs for mixed chorus (1930-31). Holst, Henry, violinist; b. Copenhagen, July 25, 1899, of English parentage. He studied at the Copenhagen Cons., then with Willy Hess in Berlin; was concertmaster of the Berlin Philh. (1923-31); then taught at the Royal College of Music in Manchester (1931-45). From 1945 to 1954 he was prof. of violin at the Royal College of Music in London; then returned to Denmark.

Holstein, Franz (Friedrich) von, German composer; b. Brunswick, Feb. 16, 1826; d. Leipzig, May 22, 1878. His father was an army officer; at his behest, Holstein entered the Brunswick Cadet School; there he had an opportunity to study musical theory. While a lieutenant, he privately produced his operetta, Zwei Nächte in Venedig (1845). He fought in the Schleswig-Holstein campaign; returning to Brunswick, he wrote a grand opera, Waverley, after Walter Scott. He sent the MS to Hauptmann at the Leipzig Cons.; the latter expressed his willingness to accept Holstein as a student. Accordingly, he resigned from the army (1853) and studied with Hauptmann until 1856. He then undertook some travels in Italy, finally returning to Leipzig, where he settled. He was also a poet, and wrote his own librettos. The musical style of his operas was close to the French type, popularized by Auber. He was a man of means, and left a valuable legacy for the benefit of indigent music students. — Works: operas: Der Hadeschacht (Dresden, Oct. 22, 1868), Der Erbe von Morley (Leipzig, Jan. 23, 1872), Die Hochländer (Mannheim, Jan. 16, 1876); another opera, Marino Faliero, remained unfinished; overture, Frau Aventure (left in sketches only; orchestrated by Albert Dietrich; perf. posthumously, Leipzig, Nov. 13, 1879); Beatrice, scene for soprano solo with orch.; a piano trio; other chamber music; part-songs for mixed and men's voices, etc.—Cf. G. Glaser, Franz von Holstein: ein Dichterkomponist des 19. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1930).

Holter, Iver (Paul Fredrik), Norwegian composer; b. Gausdal, Dec. 13, 1850; d. Oslo, Jan. 25, 1941. He entered the Univ. of Christiania (Oslo) as a student of medicine, but devoted much more time to music, which he studied under Svendsen; then was a pupil of Jadassohn, Richter, and Reinecke at the Leipzig Cons. (1876-78); lived in Berlin (1879-81); became Grieg's successor as conductor of the 'Harmonie' in Bergen (1882); from 1886 to 1911 he was conductor of 'Musikforeningen' in Oslo, and from 1890-1905, also of 'Handvaerkersangforeningen'; in 1907, founded (and conducted until 1921) 'Holters Korforening,' a society devoted to the production of large choral works (sacred and secular); was conductor of several of the great Scandinavian festivals; in 1900 he conducted with Svendsen the 'Northern Concerts' in Paris. In 1919 the Norwegian Government granted him an artist's stipend. He was editor of 'Nordisk Musik Revue' (1900-06). His compositions include a symphony (1885), a violin concerto, and several cantatas: for the 300-year jubilee of Christiania (1924); for the 900-year Olavs-jubilee (1930); choruses, chamber music, songs.

Holtzner, Anton, German organist and composer of the early 17th century; d. 1635. He was educated in Italy. His keyboard canzonas make use of free rhythmic transformation of themes in the manner of Frescobaldi's 'variation canzonas'; one of them is reprinted in A. G. Ritter's Geschichte des Orgelspiels im 14.-18. Jahrhundert (1884).

Holy, Alfred, harpist; b. Oporto, Portugal, Aug. 5, 1866; d. Vienna, May 8, 1948. He studied violin and piano; then took harp lessons with Stanek at the Prague Cons. (1882-85). He subsequently was engaged as first harpist at the German Opera in Prague (1885-96); at the Berlin State Opera (1896-1903); at the Vienna Court Opera (1903-13). In 1913 he became first harpist of the Boston Symp. Orch.; retired in 1928 and returned to Vienna. He publ. studies for harp, arranged from the symphonic works of Richard Strauss, and various other harp transcriptions.

Holyoke, Samuel, American composer; b. Boxford, Mass., Oct. 15, 1762; d. East Concord, N. H., Feb. 7, 1820. His father was a clergyman, and Holyoke was naturally drawn to composing hymns. Although he received no formal training in music, he began to compose early, following his innate musical instinct. He wrote his most popular hymn tune, Amheim, when he was only 16. He attended Harvard College, graduating in 1789; in 1793 he organized a school of higher education, known as the Groton Academy (later Lawrence Academy). In 1800 he went to Salem, where he was active as a teacher; was also a member of the Essex Musical Association in Salem. Holyoke was among those who did not favor the application of 'fuging' tunes in sacred music, as advocated by Billings, and generally omitted that style of composition from his collections; in the preface to his Harmonia Americana he states his reason for this as being because of 'the trifling effect produced by that sort of music; for the parts . . . confound the sense and render the performance a mere jargon of words.' His first collection was the Harmonia Americana (Boston, 1791); then followed The Massachusetts Compiler (co-ed. with Hans Gram and Oliver Holden; Boston, 1795); The Columbian Repository of Sacred Harmony (publ. Exeter, N. H., and dedicated to Essex Musical Association; copyright entry dated April 7, 1802; contains 734 tunes, many of his own composition); The Christian Harmonist (Salem, 1804); and The Instrumental Assistant (Exeter; 2 vols., 1800-07; includes instructions for violin, German flute, clarinet, bass viol, and hautboy). He also publ. the song Washington (1790), Hark from the Tombs (music for the funeral of Washington; 1800), etc.—Cf. F. J. Metcalf, American Psalmody (N. Y., 1917); F. J. Metcalf, American Writers and Compilers of Sacred Music (Cincinnati, 1925).

Holzbaumer, Ignaz, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Sept. 17, 1711; d. Mannheim, April 7, 1783. While studying law, he taught himself music with the aid of Gradus ad Parnassum by Fux, whom he met later, and was encouraged towards further study. For a brief time, he was musical director to Count Rottach in Moravia; in 1741 he returned to Vienna, where he produced his first opera, Ipermestra. He traveled to Italy; on his journey in 1747, he was accompanied by his wife, an excellent singer. In 1750, he became court conductor at Stuttgart; in 1753 he was engaged as music director at Mannheim and remained there for most of his life. In 1756 he visited Rome; in 1757, Turin; in 1759, Milan; produced some of his operas there. He was greatly respected as a musician by his contemporaries; his church music was warmly praised by Mozart, who heard it in Mannheim in 1777. Historically, his most significant opera is Günther von Schwarzburg, in which Holzbauer presented a purely German story without concession to the prevalent Italian taste. It was produced in Mannheim in 1776, and the full score publ. at the time (reprint, in vols. 8 and 9 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'). He also wrote 12 Italian operas: Il figlio delle selve (Schwetzingen, 1753), L'isola disabitata (Schwetzingen, 1754), Issipile (Mannheim, 1754), Don Chisciotte (Schwetzingen, 1755), Le nozze d'Arianna (Mannheim, 1756), I cinesi (Mannheim, 1756), La clemenza di Tito (Mannheim, 1757), Nüteti (Turin, 1757), Ippolito ed Aricia (Mannheim, 1759), Alessandro nell'Indie (Milan, 1759), Adriano in Siria (Mannheim, 1768), Tancredi (Munich, 1783). In addition, he wrote 4 oratorios (of which only one is extant), 21 Masses, 37 motets, and other church music. Most importantly, he was the composer of 69 symphonies, 17 divertimentos, string quartets, instrumental concertos, etc., in the innovating style of the Mannheim school; a thematic catalogue is in vols. 3 and 7 of the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' and in vol. 16 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst.' His symphony in E-flat is reproduced in vol. 7 of the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Bayern' (also reprinted by Carse in an English edition, 1939); a string quintet in E-flat is reprinted in the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst,' vol. 16.—Cf. K. M. Klob, Drei musikalische Biedermänner (Ulm, 1911).

Homer, Louise (née Louise Dilworth Beatty), American contralto; b. Pittsburgh, April 28, 1871; d. Winter Park, Fla., May 6, 1947. She studied in Philadelphia, and later in Boston, where her teacher in harmony was Sidney Homer, whom she married in 1895. With him she went to Paris, and there continued her study of voice with Fidèle Koenig; she also took lessons with Paul Lhéris in dramatic action. She made her début in opera as Leonora in La Favorita (Vichy, 1898). In 1899 she was engaged at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, singing various parts of the French and Italian repertoires. She subsequently sang Wagnerian contralto roles in German at Covent Garden, London. She made her American début in opera as Amneris with the Metropolitan Opera Co. (then on tour) at San Francisco (Nov. 14, 1900); sang the same part in N. Y. (Dec. 22, 1900); continued on the staff of the Metropolitan from 1900 to 1919; was then with the Chicago Opera Co. (1920-25); with the San Francisco and Los Angeles Opera companies (1926), and again with the Metropolitan, reappearing there on Dec. 13, 1927. Her classic interpretation of Orfeo at the Paris revival of Gluck's opera (1909) and subsequently in N. Y. (1910, under Toscanini) produced a great impression. One of her greatest operatic triumphs was her performance of Dalila, with Caruso singing Samson. After retiring from the opera stage, she gave recitals with her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, soprano. Her husband wrote a book of memoirs, My Wife and I (N. Y., 1939).

Homer, Sidney, American composer; b. Boston, Dec. 9, 1864; d. Winter Park, Fla., July 10, 1953. He studied in Boston, with Chadwick; then in Leipzig and in Munich. Returning to Boston, he taught theory of music. In 1895 he married Louise Dilworth Beatty, his pupil, and went with her to Paris. He retired in 1940 and settled in Winter Park. He publ. about 100 songs, many of which won great favor, particularly A Banjo Song; also Dearest, Requiem, Prospice, Bandanna ballads, It was the time of roses, General William Booth enters into Heaven, The song of the shirt, Sheep and Lambs, Sing me a song of a lad that is gone, The pauper's drive; also 17 lyrics from Christina Rossetti's Sing-song. Other works include a sonata for organ (1922), quintet for piano and strings (1932), violin sonata (1936), string quartet (1937), piano trio (1937). He publ. a book of memoirs, My Wife and I (N. Y., 1939).—Cf. H. C. Thorpe, The Songs of Sidney Homer, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1931).

Homilius, Gottfried August, eminent German organist and composer; b. Rosenthal, Feb. 2, 1714; d. Dresden, June 5, 1785. He was a pupil of J. S. Bach; completed his education at the Univ. of Leipzig in 1735; became organist of the Frauenkirche in Dresden; then was appointed music director of 3 main churches there (1755). Published works are: Passion (1775); a Christmas oratorio, Die Freude der Hirten über die Geburt Jesu (1777); 6 deutsche Arien (1786); in MS in the Berlin State Library and in the Dresden Kreuzchor archives: Passion according to St. Mark; church music for each Sunday and Feast-day in the year; motets, cantatas, fugued chorales, a thorough-bass method, 2 chorus books, etc.—Cf. R. Steglich, Ph. Em. Bach und G. A. Homilius im Musikleben ihrer Zeit ('Bach-Jahrbuch,' 1915). For a complete list of works, see Georg Feder's detailed article in 'Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart.'

HONEGGER

Honegger, Arthur (Oscar), a remarkable composer; b. Le Havre (of Swiss parents), March 10, 1892; d. Paris, Nov. 27, 1955. He studied violin with Lucien Capet in Paris; then took courses at the Zürich Cons. with L. Kemptner and F. Hegar. Returning to France in 1912, he entered the Paris Cons. in the classes of Gedalge and Widor; further studied with Vincent d'Indy. His name first attracted attention when he took part in a concert of 'Nouveaux Jeunes' (Paris, Jan. 15, 1918). In 1920, the Paris critic Henri Collet published an article in 'Comoedia' in which he drew a parallel between the Russian Five and a group of young French composers whom he designated 'Les Six,' which comprised Honegger, Milhaud, Poulenc, Auric, Durey, and Germaine Tailleferre. The label persisted, even though the six composers went their separate ways and rarely gave concerts together. Honegger became famous with his 'symphonic movement' Pacific 231, a realistic tonal portrayal of a powerful American locomotive, depicting, in a series of rhythmic pulses, a gradual progress towards full speed, the slackening of pace, and the final stop. The piece, widely performed in 1924, became, in the mind of music critics and listeners, a perfect symbol of the 'machine age.' However, Honegger soon turned away from literal representation towards symphonic and choral music in quasi-Classical structures. Among his cantatas, Le Roi David and Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher are fine examples of modern vocal music; of his 5 symphonies, the 3rd (Liturgique) and the 5th (Di tre re, so designated by the composer to draw attention to the endings of each movement on a thrice repeated note D) are particularly impressive. Honegger makes free use of the devices of atonality in melodic writing, and polytonality in harmonic constructions, but only to enhance the basic sense of tonal unity. He lived most of his life in Paris; married the pianist Andrée Vaurabourg (who often played his works) in 1926. In 1929 he visited the U. S.; in 1947 was engaged to teach summer classes at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. — Works: For the stage: Le Roi David, dramatic Psalm (Mézières, June 11, 1921); Antigone, opera (Brussels, Dec. 28, 1927); Judith, biblical opera (Monte Carlo, Feb. 13, 1926); Amphion, melodrama (Paris, June 23, 1931); Les Aventures du Roi Pausole, operetta (Paris, Dec. 12, 1930); Cris du monde, stage oratorio (Paris, June 2, 1931); La Belle de Moudon, vaudeville (Mézières, 1933); Jeanne d'Arc au bûcher, stage oratorio

(Basel, May 12, 1938); L'Aiglon, opera (Monte Carlo, March 11, 1937); Les Mille et une Nuits, spectacle (Paris Exhibition, 1937); Les Petites Cardinal, operetta (with J. Ibert; Paris, Feb. 20, 1938); Nicolas de Flue, dramatic legend (Neuchâtel, 1941); Charles le Téméraire, opera (Mézières, May, 1944). Ballets: Vérié-Mensonge (Paris, 1920); Skating Rink (Paris, Jan. 20, 1922); Sous-marine (Paris, June 27, 1925); Sémiramis, ballet-pantomime (Paris, May 11, 1934); Le Cantique des cantiques (Paris, Feb. 2, 1938); L'appel de la montagne (Paris, July 9, 1945); Chota Roustaveli (with Harsanyi and Tcherepnin; Monte Carlo, May 14, 1946). Incidental music: Le Dit des jeux du monde (Paris, Dec. 2, 1918); La Mort de Sainte Alméenne (1918); La Danse macabre (1919); Saül (Paris, June 16, 1922); Fantasio (1922); L'Impératrice aux rochers (1925); Phaedra (1926). Film music: Mlle. Doctor (1937); Pygmalion, after Bernard Shaw's play (1938). For orch.: Prélude d'Aglaïne et Sélysette (Paris Cons., April 3, 1917, composer conducting); Le Chant de Nigamon (Paris, Jan. 3, 1920); Pastorale d'Été (Paris, Feb. 12, 1921); Les Mariés de la tour Eiffel (with Milhaud, Auric, Poulenc, and Tailleferre; Paris, June 19, 1921); Horace Victorieux, 'mimed symphony' (Lausanne, Oct. 30, 1921); Prelude pour la Tempête (Paris, May 1, 1923); Chant de Joie (Paris, May 3, 1923); Pacific 231 (designated as Mouvement symphonique No. 1; Koussevitzky's concert, Paris, May 8, 1924); Concertino for piano and orch. (Paris, May 23, 1925, Andrée Vaurabourg soloist); Rugby (Mouvement symphonique No. 2; Stade Colombe, Paris, Dec. 31, 1928, during the intermission of the International Rugby Match between France and England); cello concerto (Boston, Feb. 17, 1930); Symphony No. 1 (Boston, Feb. 13, 1931); Mouvement symphonique No. 3 (Berlin, March 27, 1933); Symphony No. 2, for string orch. (Basel, May 18, 1942); Suite, Jour de fête suisse (1943); Symphony No. 3, Liturgique (Zürich, Aug. 17, 1946); Sérénade à Angélique, for small orch. (Paris, Dec. 11, 1946); Symphony No. 4, Deliciae Basilienses (Basel, Jan. 21, 1947); Concerto da camera, for flute, English horn, and strings (1949); Suite archaïque, for orch. (Louisville, Feb. 28, 1951); Symphony No. 5, Di tre re (Boston, March 9, 1951); Monopartita, for orch. (Zürich, June 12, 1951). Radio music: Radio Panoramique, symphonic sketch (Radio-Geneva, March, 1935; in concert form, Paris, Oct. 19, 1935); Christophe Colomb (Radio, Lausanne, April 17, 1940); etc. Choral and vocal works: Cantique de Pâques, for soli, women's chorus, and orch. (1918); Pâques à New York, for voice and string quartet (1920); La Danse des morts, oratorio for soli, chorus, and orch. (Basel, March 2, 1940); Chant de Libération, for baritone, chorus, and orch. (Paris, Oct. 22, 1944); Cantate de Noël (Basel, Dec. 18, 1953). Chamber music: 1st string quartet (1916-17); Rhapsody for 2 flutes, clarinet (or 2 violins, viola), and piano (1917); 2 violin sonatas (1918; 1919); viola sonata (1920); sonatina for 2 violins (1920); cello sonata (1920); Hymn, for 10 strings (1920); sonatina for clarinet and piano (1922); Trois Contrepoints, for flute, English horn, violin, and cello (1922); sonatina for violin and cello (1932); 2nd string quartet (1934); 3rd string quartet (1936). For piano: Trois pièces (1910); Hommage à Ravel (1915); Toccata et Variations (1916); Prélude et danse (1919); Le Cahier romand (1923); Hommage à Roussel (1928); Prélude, arioso et fughetta sur le nom de Bach (1932); also a Partita for 2 pianos (arranged from Trois Contrepoints; 1928). Songs: 4 Poèmes (1914-16); 6 Poésies de Jean Cocteau (1920-23); 5 Mémoires-minute (1941); publ. a book Je suis compositeur (Paris, 1951).—Cf. R. Chalupe, Arthur Honegger, in the 'Revue Musicale' (1922); E. B. Hill, Modern French Composers (N. Y., 1924); Roland-Manuel, Arthur Honegger (Paris, 1925); A. Honegger, Henri, Swiss cellist; b. Geneva, June 10, 1904. He studied with Casals in Paris; returning to Switzerland, he became 1st cellist in the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande; in 1950 he presented a series of concerts in New York, performing all of Bach's cello suites.

Hood, Helen, American song composer; b. Chelsea, Mass., June 28, 1863; d. Brookline, Mass., Jan. 22, 1949. She studied piano with B. J. Lang and composition with Chadwick; also took a piano course with Moszkowski in Berlin; lived most of her life in Boston. Among her published pieces are The Robin (part-song); 5 pieces for violin and piano; Song Etchings (a set of 6 songs); she also wrote some chamber music.

Hoogstraten, Willem van, Dutch conductor; b. Utrecht, March 18, 1884. He studied violin with Alexander Schmutler; then with Bram Eldering at the Cons. of Cologne and with Ševčík in Prague; played concerts with the pianist Elly Ney, whom he married in 1911 (divorced in 1927). From 1914-18 he conducted the municipal orch. in Krefeld; in 1922 he was engaged as conductor of the summer concerts of the N. Y. Philharmonic (until 1938); associate conductor of the N. Y. Philharmonic (1923-25). He was regular conductor of the Portland, Oregon, Symph. Orch. from 1925-37. During World War II he was in charge of the Mozarteum Orch. in Salzburg (1939-45). In 1949 he settled in Stuttgart; conducted the Stuttgart Philharmonic.

Hook, James, English organist and composer; b. Norwich, June 3, 1746; d. Boulogne, 1827. He exhibited a precocious talent as a boy; took lessons with Garland, organist of the Norwich cathedral. In 1764 he went to London, where he played organ at various entertainment places. In 1765 he won a prize for his Parting Catch. He was subsequently organist and music director at Marylebone Gardens, London (1769-73) and at Vauxhall Gardens (1774-1820); his last position was at St. John's, Horsleydown. He was a highly industrious composer of songs; he may have written as many as 2,000 numbers; of these, only a few escaped oblivion (Within a mile of Edinboro' Town; Sweet Lass of Richmond Hill, etc.); many oratorios and odes; concertos for harpsichord; 117 sonatas, sonatinas, and divertimentos for piano; about 30 theater scores, all produced in London: Cupid's Revenge (June 12, 1772), The Lady of the Manor (Nov. 23, 1778), The Fair Peruvian (March 8, 1786), Jack of Newbury (May 6, 1795), Wilmore Castle (Oct. 21, 1800), The Soldier's Return (April 23, 1805), The Invisible Girl (April, 28, 1806), The Fortress (July 16, 1807), Safe and Sound (August 28, 1809), etc. He publ. a manual, Guida di musica, in 2 parts (1785; 1794); some of the musical examples from it were reprinted by H. Wall in Leaves from an Old Harpsichord Book.

Hope-Jones, Robert, English organ manufacturer; b. Hooton Grange, Cheshire, Feb. 9, 1859; d. (by suicide) Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 13, 1914. As a boy, he entered the employ of Laird Bros., engineers at Birkenhead; then became chief electrician of the National Telephone Co.; at the same time, was engaged as church organist. In 1889 he set up his own business as organ builder. In 1903 he settled in America; was connected with the E. M. Skinner Co. of Boston; in 1907, founded the Hope-Jones Organ Co. at Tonawanda, N. Y., but sold the plant and his patents in 1910 to the Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. of N. Y. He introduced many innovations into the building of electrical organs; the development of the modern organ in the U. S. owes much to his inventive genius. One of the finest of his organs is in the Auditorium at Ocean Grove, N. J.—Cf. G. L. Miller, The Recent Revolution in Organ Building (N. Y., 1913).

Hopekirk, Helen, Scottish pianist; b. Edinburgh, May 20, 1856; d. Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 19, 1945. She studied with A. C. Mackenzie; then went to Germany; made her début with the Gewandhaus Orch., Leipzig (Nov. 28, 1878); also took lessons with Leschetizky in Vienna. She married William Wilson, a business-man, in 1882; lived in Vienna; in 1897, settled in Boston; taught at the New England Cons. In her recitals she featured many works of the modern French school (Debussy, Fauré, etc.). She wrote many piano pieces; played her piano concerto with the Boston Symph. Orch. (Dec. 27, 1900); publ. a collection of Scottish folksongs.—See Constance Hall, Helen Hopekirk (Cambridge, Mass., 1954).

Hopkins, Edward Jerome, American composer and musical journalist; b. Burlington, Vt., April 4, 1836; d. Athenia, N. J., Nov. 4, 1898. Self-taught in music (he took only 6 lessons in harmony), he learned to play piano sufficiently well to attain professional status. He studied chemistry at the N. Y. Medical College; played organ in N. Y. churches, and was active in various educational enterprises. In 1886 he organized several 'Free Singing and Opera Schools,' for which he claimed nearly 1,000 pupils. In 1889 he went to England on a lecture tour announcing himself as "the first American Operatic Oratorio composer and Pianist who has ever ventured to invade England with New World Musical theories and practices." He was the founder and editor of the N. Y. Philharmonic Journal (1868-85). Throughout his versatile career, he was a strong advocate of American music; his sensational methods and eccentric professional conduct brought him repeatedly into public controversy; in England he was sued for libel. As composer, Hopkins claimed a priority in writing the first "musicianly and scientific Kinder-Oper" (Taffy and Old Munch, a children's fairy tale, 1880). He further wrote an operatic oratorio, Samuel, and a great number of choruses and songs, few of which are published. He compiled two collections of church music and an Orpheon Class-Book.—Cf. N. Slonimsky, The Flamboyant Pioneer, in A Thing or Two About Music (N. Y., 1947, pp. 250-261).

Hopkins, Edward John, English organist and composer; b. London, June 30, 1818; d. there, Feb. 4, 1901. He was a chorister at the Chapel Royal (1826-33); then studied theory with T. F. Walmisley. In 1834 he became organist at Mitcham Church; from 1838, was at St. Peter's, Islington; from 1841, at St. Luke's, and from 1843 at the Temple Church, London. There he remained for 55 years, retiring in 1898; Walford Davies was his successor. Several of his many anthems have become established in the church repertory (Out of the Deep, God is Gone Up, Thou Shalt Cause the Trumpet of the Jubilee to Sound, etc.). His book, The Organ: Its History and Construction (in collaboration with Rimbault, London, 1855; 5th ed., 1887), is a standard work. He contributed articles to Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' and to various musical publications.—Cf. Charles W. Pearce, The Life and Works of Edward John Hopkins (London, 1910).

Hopkinson, Francis, American statesman, writer, and composer; signer of the Declaration of Independence; b. Philadelphia, Sept. 21, 1737; d. there, May 9, 1791. By profession a lawyer, he was deeply interested in music; learned to play the harpsichord; studied music theory with James Bremner; was a member of an amateur group in Philadelphia who met regularly in their homes to play music, and also gave public concerts by subscription. He was the composer of the first piece of music written by a native American, Ode to Music, which he wrote in 1754, and of the first original American song, My days have been so wondrous free (1759). At least, this is the claim he makes in the preface to his 7 Songs (actually 8, the last having been added after the title page was engraved) for the harpsichord or forte piano, dated Philadelphia, Nov. 20, 1788, and dedicated to George Washington: "I cannot, I believe, be refused the Credit of being the first Native of the United States who has produced a Musical Composition." Other works: Ode in Memory of James Bremner (1780); a dramatic cantata, The Temple of Minerva (1781); there are also some songs. Hopkinson's music was couched in the conventional English style, modeled after pieces by T. A. Arne, but he undoubtedly possessed a genuine melodic gift. He also provided Benjamin Franklin's glass harmonica with a keyboard and introduced improvements in the quilling of the harpsichord, and invented the Bell-Harmonic, 'a contrivance for the perfect measurement of time.' He was probably, but not certainly, the compiler of A Collection of Psalm Tunes with a Few Anthems, etc. A MS book of songs in Hopkinson's handwriting is in the possession of the Library of Congress.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Francis Hopkinson, the First American Poet Composer . . . (Washington, 1905); H. V. Milligan, The First American Composer: 6 Songs by Francis Hopkinson (Boston, 1918); O. E. Albrecht, Francis Hopkinson, Musician, Poet and Patriot (Philadelphia, 1938); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939, and subsequent eds.). Hopkinson's son, Joseph Hopkinson, wrote the words to Hail Columbia.

Horák, Adolph, pianist and teacher; b. Jankovic, Bohemia, Feb. 15, 1850; d. Vienna, Jan. 14, 1921. With his brother Eduard he established the Horák Piano-forte School in Vienna; in collaboration, they publ. a valuable Klavierschule; Adolph alone wrote Die technische Grundlage des Klavierspiels.

Horák, Antonin, Czech composer; b. Prague, July 2, 1875; d. Belgrade, March 12, 1910. He was engaged as opera conductor in Prague and Belgrade; his own opera, Babička (Grandmother), was fairly successful at its first production, in Prague (March 3, 1900); he also wrote cantatas and other choral works.

Horák, Eduard, pianist and teacher; b. Holitz, Bohemia, April 22, 1838; d. Riva, Lake of Garda, Dec. 6, 1892. With his brother Adolph he founded in Vienna the Horák Piano-forte School, which soon acquired a European reputation. In collaboration with Fr. Spigl, who succeeded him as director of the Horák School, he published Der Klavierunterricht in neue, natürliche Bahnen gelenkt (Vienna, 1892; in 2 vols.), and with his brother, a practical manual, Klavierschule.

Horák, Wenzel Emanuel, church composer and organist; b. Mscheno-Lobes, Bohemia, Jan. 1, 1800; d. Prague, Sept. 15, 1871. He studied theory by himself, with the aid of the standard manuals of Vogler, Cherubini, etc.; also played organ, and was organist at various churches in Prague; wrote 10 Masses, motets, and a theoretical work, Die Mehrdeutigkeit der Harmonien (1846).

Horenstein, Jascha, conductor; b. Kiev, Russia, May 6, 1898. His family moved to Germany when he was a child, and he studied with Max Brode in Königsberg and with Adolf Busch in Vienna; also took advanced courses in composition with Franz Schreker in Berlin. After some concerts which he conducted in Vienna and in Berlin, he was appointed conductor of the Düsseldorf Opera; then appeared in France (1929) and in Russia (1931); made a tour in Australia (1936-37); conducted the Ballets Russes de Monte Carlo in Scandinavia (1937) and gave a series of concerts in Palestine (1938). After 1945 he conducted in the U. S. and South America as well as in Europe. In the spring of 1957 he conducted several programs at the Caracas (Venezuela) Festival.

Horký, Karel, Czech composer; b. Stěmčichy, near Třebíč, Moravia, Sept. 4, 1909. He played in a military band as a boy; then in a theater orchestra in Brno; there he began to study composition with Pavel Haas; later went to Prague to study with J. Křička. In 1945 he became teacher of harmony at the Cons. of Brno. He has written several operas, including Jan Hus (Brno, May 27, 1950); the ballets Lastura (Brno, Oct. 23, 1945) and Král Ječmínek (Brno, Sept. 8, 1951); also Romantic Sinfonietta and other orchestral works.

Horn, August, German composer and arranger; b. Freiberg, Sept. 1, 1825; d. Leipzig, March 25, 1893. He was a pupil of Mendelssohn at the Leipzig Cons.; wrote overtures and light music; but became principally known as arranger of symphonies, operas, etc. for piano, 2 and 4 hands. His comic opera Die Nachbarn was produced in Leipzig in 1875.

Horn, Camillo, composer; b. Reichenberg, Bohemia, Dec. 29, 1860; d. Vienna, Sept. 3, 1941. He was a pupil of Bruckner at the Vienna Cons.; conducted choruses there, and was also active as music critic. Many of his works have been published; he wrote a symphony; a cantata, Bundeslied der Deutschen in Böhmen; Deutsches Lied for chorus and orch.; many choruses a cappella; a number of piano pieces.

Horn, Charles Edward, composer and conductor; son of Karl Friedrich Horn; b. London, June 21, 1786; d. Boston, Oct. 21, 1849. He studied with his father, and practiced voice under the guidance of Rauzzini. Made his début as a singer in a light opera (June 26, 1809); sang Kaspar in the English production of Der Freischütz. In 1833 he emigrated to America; there he wrote several oratorios: The Remission of Sin (later named Satan), etc. In 1848 he became conductor of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston. In the U.S., he was notable primarily as a singer and composer of ballads.

Horn, Karl Friedrich, German composer; b. Nordhausen, April 13, 1762; d. Windsor, England, Aug. 5, 1830. He settled in England at the age of 20 and with the patronage of Count Brühl, Saxon Ambassador in London, became a fashionable teacher. In 1823 he became organist of St. George's Chapel at Windsor. With Wesley he prepared an English edition of Bach's Wohltemperiertes Klavier; also wrote a treatise on thorough-bass; composed 12 sets of piano variations with flute obbligato; 6 piano sonatas; Military Divertimentos.

Hornbostel, Erich Moritz von, eminent musicologist; b. Vienna, Feb. 25, 1877; d. Cambridge, Nov. 28, 1935. He studied philosophy in Vienna and Heidelberg; 1900, Dr. Phil.; 1905-6 assistant of Stumpf in Berlin; 1906, came to the U. S. for the purpose of making a special study of Indian music (Pawnee), and made many records of it; 1906-33, director of the Phonogramm-Archiv in Berlin. In 1933 he left Germany and went to England. He was a specialist on tone-psychology.—Writings: Studien über das Tonsystem und die Musik der Japaner (in collaboration with Otto Abraham), in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1903); Phonographierte türkische Melodien (with O. Abraham), in 'Zeitschrift für Ethnologie' (1904); Phonographierte indische Melodien (with O. Abraham), in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1904); Melodischer Tanz, in 'Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1903-4); Phonographierte Indianermelodien aus Britisch-Columbia (with O. Abraham), in the 'Boas Memorial Volume' (1906); Notiz über die Musik der Bewohner von Süd-New-Mecklenburg in Stephan's and Gräbner's 'Neu Mecklenburg' (1907); Phonographierte tunesische Melodien, in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1907); Vorschläge zur Transkription exotischer Melodien (with O. Abraham), in 'Sammelbände der Internationalen Musik-Gesellschaft' (1909); Phonographierte Melodien aus Madagaskar und Indonesien (1909); Wanyamwezi-Gesänge, in 'Anthropos' (1909); Über einige Panpfeifen aus Nordwest-Brasilien, in Koch-Grümberg's 'Zwei Jahre unter den Indianern' (1910); Notizen über kirgisische Musikinstrumente und Melodien, in R. Karutz' 'Unter Kirgisen und Turkmenen' (1911); Über ein akustisches Kriterium für Kulturzusammenhänge, in 'Zeitschrift für Ethnologie' (1911); Melodie und Skala, in 'Jahrbuch Peters' (1913); Systematik der Musikinstrumente (in collaboration with C. Sachs), in 'Zeitschrift für Ethnologie' (1914); Formanalysen an siamesischen Orchesterstücken, in 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (1920); Die Entstehung des Jodelns, in the 'Basler Kongressbericht' (1924); Zur Psychologie der Tondistanz (with O. Abraham), in 'Zeitschrift für Psychologie' (1925); Musikalische Tonsysteme (edited by Geiger and Scheel), in 'Handbuch der Physik' (1927); Die Massnorm als kulturgeschichtliches Forschungsmittel, in the 'P. W. Schmidt-Festschrift' (1928); Tonart und Ethos, in the 'J. Wolf-Festschrift' (1929); African Negro-Music (London, 1929); Gestaltpsychologisches zur Stilkritik, in the 'Adler-Festschrift' (1930); Phonographierte isländische Zwiègeänge, in 'Deutsche Islandforschung' (1930); other valuable essays. He edited a collection of records, Musik des Orients (Lindström, 1932); from 1922 until death was co-editor, with C. Stumpf, of the 'Sammelbände für vergleichende Musikwissenschaft.'

Horneman, Christian Emil, Danish composer; son of Johan Ole Horneman; b. Copenhagen, Dec. 17, 1841; d. there, June 8, 1906. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. (1858-60), where he became a friend of Grieg. He composed light music under various pseudonyms; returning to Copenhagen, he organized a concert society there; produced an opera, Aladdin (Nov. 18, 1888); also was active as choral conductor and teacher. He wrote, in addition, 2 string quartets and numerous songs.

Horneman, Johan Ole, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, May 13, 1809; d. there, May 29, 1870. He composed music in a popular vein; in 1844 established a publishing firm with Emil Erslev. His collection of piano pieces, Nordiske sange uden tekst (Nordic Songs Without Text), enjoyed some popularity; he further published a piano manual, Ny praktisk Pianofortesko (new ed. by L. Schytte).

Horner, Ralph Joseph, English conductor and composer; b. Newport, Monmouthshire, April 28, 1848; d. Winnipeg, Canada, April 7, 1926. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. (1864-67) with Moscheles, Reinecke, and Plaidy. On his return to England, he was active as choral conductor; also conducted light opera. From 1906-9 he was in New York; then settled in Winnipeg, where he became director of the Imperial Academy of Music and Arts and conductor of the Oratorio Society (1909-12). He wrote the operas Confucius, Amy Rosbart, and The Belles of Barcelona; the oratorios St. Peter and David's First Victory; a Torch Dance for orch. (won the Earl Grey Prize, 1911); many sacred cantatas, anthems, piano pieces, songs.

Hornstein, Robert von, German composer; b. Donaueschingen, Dec. 6, 1833; d. Munich, July 19, 1890. He studied at the Leipzig Cons.; then went to Munich where he became a teacher at the municipal school of music. He was a close friend of Wagner; composed operas in a Romantic vein; one of these, Adam und Eva, was produced in Munich in 1870; other works are a ballet, Der Blumen Rache; incidental music to Shakespeare's As You Like It; many songs.

Horowitz, Vladimir, remarkable pianist; b. Kiev, Oct. 1, 1904; studied there with Felix Blumenfeld; made his début in Khar'kov at the age of 17; then went to Paris; his European tour in 1924 was sensationally successful. On Jan. 12, 1928, he made his American début with the N. Y. Philharmonic, in Tchaikovsky's 1st Concerto, Thomas Beecham conducting. He then appeared with many American orchestras, and also in recital, quickly earning the reputation of a virtuoso of the highest caliber. In 1933 he married Wanda Toscanini, daughter of Arturo Toscanini. In 1938-39 he lived mostly in Switzerland; in 1940 returned to America, and settled in N. Y. On Dec. 9, 1949, he played in Havana the first performance anywhere of Samuel Barber's piano sonata, op. 26. —Horowitz has made a virtuoso transcription for piano of Sousa's march Stars and Stripes Forever, a veritable tour de force of pianistic display, and has frequently performed it at his concerts.

Horsley, Charles Edward, English organist and composer; b. London, Dec. 16, 1822; d. New York, Feb. 28, 1876. He was a pupil of his father, William Horsley; then studied with Moscheles. In Leipzig he became friendly with Mendelssohn, who instructed him in composition. Upon his return to London, he obtained a post as organist of St. John's; wrote the oratorios David, Joseph, and Gideon; incidental music to Milton's Comus. In 1862 he went to Australia, and served as organist in Melbourne. There he wrote an ode, Euterpe, for the opening of the Town Hall (1870). He eventually settled in New York. His Text Book of Harmony was publ. posthumously (1876).

Horsley, William, English organist and composer; father of the preceding; b. London, Nov. 15, 1774; d. there, June 12, 1858. He had little formal study, but his friendly association with John Callcott, the composer of glees, led him to try his hand at the composition of light vocal pieces. He married Callcott's daughter in 1813. He was instrumental in the establishment of the choral society 'Concentores Sodales' (1798-1847) for which he wrote many anthems, catches, and glees; was also a founder of the Philharmonic Society of London (1813); occupied various posts as church organist. Many of his songs (See the Chariot at Hand, O Nightingale, etc.) were frequently sung. He further publ. 5 albums of glees (1801-7), hymn tunes (1820), canons, piano pieces, etc.; also An Explanation of Musical Intervals and of the Major and Minor Scales (1825); Introduction to Harmony and Modulation (1847); edited Callcott's glees, with a biography and analysis; brought out the 1st book of Byrd's Cantiones Sacrae.

Horst, Anthon van der, Dutch composer and organist; b. Amsterdam, June 20, 1899. He played organ at the Walloon Church in Amsterdam; in 1936, appointed prof. of organ and conducting at the Amsterdam Cons. In some of his works he has adopted the scale of alternating tones and semitones, which he calls 'modus conjunctus'; wrote a Suite in modo conjuncto for organ (1943). —Other works: Psalm 90, for voices and organ (1933); a symphony (1939); Te Deum, for double chorus, soli, organ, and orch. (1946); concerto for organ and orch. (1954); Divertimento pittorale, for orch. (1954); Rembrandt Cantata, for chorus, organ, and brass instruments (1956; for 350th anniversary of Rembrandt's birth).

Horszowski, Mieczyslaw, pianist; b. Lwow, June 23, 1892. He studied with M. Soltys at the Lwow Cons.; then went to Vienna to study with Leschetizky; made his first public appearance at the age of 9 in Warsaw. He began extensive concert tours in Europe a few years later; gave joint recitals with Casals; played with orchestras under Toscanini. In 1940 he settled in New York, and continued his career as soloist.

Horwitz, Karl, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Jan. 1, 1884; d. Salzburg, Aug. 18, 1925. He studied with Arnold Schoenberg, and adopted an atonal idiom. He was active in organizing the Donaueschingen Festivals (from 1921) and in other societies devoted to modern music; among his works are a symphonic poem, Vom Tode; 2 string quartets, and several song cycles. In 1924 he suffered a loss of hearing, as a result of disease, and died shortly afterwards.

Hosmer, Elmer Samuel, American organist and composer; b. Clinton, Mass., March 21, 1862; d. Pawtucket, R. I., April 25, 1945. He studied music in Boston with George Whiting, Percy Goetschius, and others; occupied various positions as organist; composed cantatas (Pilgrims of 1620, The Man Without a Country, etc.) and many anthems.

Hosmer, Lucius, American composer; b. South Acton, Mass., Aug. 14, 1870; d. Jefferson, N. H., May 9, 1935. He studied with Chadwick at the New England Cons.; lived mostly in Boston; wrote a 'romantic comic opera' The Rose of the Alhambra (Rochester, 1905, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1907); a comic opera, The Walking Delegate (revised and produced under the title The Koreans); various light pieces for orch.: On Tiptoe, Chinese Wedding Procession; Southern Rhapsody, Northern Rhapsody, Ethiopian Rhapsody, etc.; also songs.

Hostinský, Otakar, Czech writer on music; b. Martinoves, Jan. 2, 1847; d. Prague, Jan. 19, 1910. He studied at the Univ. of Prague and later in Munich; became instructor of esthetics and history of music at Charles Univ. in Prague (1877); prof. in 1892. He publ. Das Musikalisch-Schöne und das Gesamtkunstwerk vom Standpunkt der formalen Ästhetik (1877), as a philosophical reply to Hanslick's famous book (in Czech as Hostinského esthetika, Prague, 1921); Die Lehre von den musikalischen Klängen (1879); Über die Entwicklung und den jetzigen Stand der tschechischen

Oper (1880); Über die Bedeutung der praktischen Ideen Herbarts für die allgemeine Ästhetik (1883); his articles on Smetana were collected and publ. in 1901 (new ed., 1941); he wrote numerous articles on Czech folksongs, etc. A jubilee pamphlet was publ. in Prague on the occasion of his 60th birthday (1907).

Hothby, John, English music theorist; b. about 1415; d. probably in England, Nov. 6, 1487. He was a student at Oxford; was a member of the Carmelite order; lived in Florence, Italy, about 1440, and was known there under the Italianized name Ottobi; was then in Lucca (1468-86), where he taught in canonic schools. In 1486 he was recalled to England by Henry VII. He wrote about 12 treatises: Ars musica; Regulae super proportionem; De cantu figurato; Regulae super contrapunctum; Regulae de monochordo manuali; Quid est proportio; Tractatus quarundam regularum artis musices; etc. His La Calliopea legale was publ. by Coussemaker in Histoire de l'harmonie au moyen-âge; Regulae super proportionem, De cantu figurato and Regulae super contrapunctum in Coussemaker's Scriptores de musica (vol. 3).—Cf. U. Kornmüller, Johann Hothby . . . in 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1893); H. Schmidt, Die 'Calliopea legale' des J. Hothby (Leipzig, 1897).

Hotter, Hans, German baritone; b. Offenbach, Jan. 19, 1909. He was a choirboy in Munich, and also played the organ; took courses in music history at the Munich Academy. He then studied singing and rapidly progressed, so that at the age of 23 he became a member of the German Opera at Prague. In 1940 he joined the Munich Opera, and also made guest appearances with several other opera companies. As a Wagnerian singer, he obtained signal success at the Bayreuth Festivals.

Hotteterre (oht-tär'), a family of French musicians: Nicolas Hotteterre (b. 1637; d. Paris, May 10, 1694), a hurdy-gurdy player; his brother Martin (d. 1712), also a hurdy-gurdy player and a performer at the court ballets; Louis Hotteterre (d. 1719), son of Nicolas, who played the flute at the French court for 50 years (1664-1714); his brother Nicolas Hotteterre (d. Paris, Dec. 4, 1727), who (like his brother) played flute and oboe in Lully's orchestra at the court of Louis XIV; Jacques Hotteterre (d. Paris, c. 1760), surnamed 'le Romain' evidently owing to his long sojourns in Rome, popularized the transverse (German) flute at the French court and published several manuals on that instrument and others: Principes de la flûte traversière ou flûte d'Allemagne, de la flûte à bec ou flûte douce et du hautbois (Paris, 1707; sometimes attributed to his cousin Louis; the 1728 ed. was reprinted in facsimile, Kassel, 1941); Méthode pour la musette (1738); L'Art de préluder sur la flûte traversière, sur la flûte à bec, etc. (Paris, 1712; 2nd ed. under the title, Méthode pour apprendre . . ., c. 1765); also wrote sonatas, duos, trios, suites, rondes (chansons à danser), and minuets for flute. — Cf. J. A. Carlez, Les Hotteterre (Caen, 1877); E. Thoinan, Les Hotteterre et les Chédeville (Paris, 1894); N. Mauger, Les Hotteterre, nouvelles recherches (Paris, 1912); H. M. Fitzgibbon, Of Flutes and Soft Recorders, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1934).

Houdard (oo-dahr'), Georges, French authority on Gregorian chant; b. Neuilly-sur-Seine, March 30, 1860; d. Paris, Feb. 28, 1913. He studied with L. Hillemacher and with Massenet at the Paris Cons.; then devoted himself exclusively to old church music; publ. valuable treatises: L'Art dit grégorien d'après la notation neumatique (1897); L'Evolution de l'art musical et l'art grégorien (1902); Aristoxène de Tarrente (1905); La Rythmique intuitive (1906); Textes théoriques; Vademecum de la rythmique grégorienne des X<sup>e</sup> et XI<sup>e</sup> siècles (1912); also wrote some sacred music (a Requiem, offertories, elevations, etc.).

Houdoy, Jules. See Hudoy.

Houseley, Henry, organist and composer; b. Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, Sept. 20, 1852; d. Denver, Colo., March 13, 1925. He studied at the Royal College of Organists in London; then filled various posts as church organist. In 1888 he emigrated to the U. S., settling in Denver, where he was active in many musical and cultural fields; produced there several light operas: The Juggler (May 23, 1895); Pygmalion (Jan. 30, 1912); Narcissus and Echo (Jan. 30, 1912); also wrote a cantata, Omar Khayyâm, which was performed in Denver on June 1, 1916.—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and Its Composers (Philadelphia, 1934; pp. 268-69).

Housman, Rosalie, American composer; b. San Francisco, June 25, 1888; d. New York, Oct. 28, 1949. She studied with Arthur Foote in Boston; also took lessons in N. Y. with Ernest Bloch; composed Color Sequence for soprano and small orch.; women's choruses; children's pieces; songs.

Hovhaness (former spelling Hovaness), Alan, American composer of Armenian descent (father, Armenian; mother Scottish); b. Somerville, Mass., March 8, 1911. He studied piano with Heinrich Gebhard; composition with Frederick Converse; also took lessons with Bohuslav Martinu. While mastering the traditional technique of composition, he became fascinated by Indian and other Oriental musical systems; from his earliest works, he made use of Armenian melorythmic patterns. As a result, he gradually evolved an individual type of art, in which quasi-Oriental cantillation and a curiously monodic texture became the mainstay. By dint of ceaseless repetition of themes and relentless dynamic tension, a definite impression is created of originality; the atmospheric effects often suggest Impressionistic exoticism. He has written a great many works, of which he destroyed nearly a thousand in 1940. The list of his extant compositions written after 1940 is still very large. He has written 2 Armenian Rhapsodies for strings (1944-45); Elibris, for flute and strings (San Francisco, Jan. 26, 1950); Lousadzak (Coming of Light), for piano and strings (Boston, Feb. 4, 1945); concerto for trumpet and strings (N. Y., June 17, 1945); Sosi for violin, piano, percussion, and strings (N. Y., March 6, 1949); Arekaval, for orch. (N. Y., Feb. 18, 1952); Janabar, 5 hymns for violin, trumpet, piano, and strings (N. Y., March 11, 1951); Concerto for orch. (Louisville, Feb. 20, 1954); Ad Lyram, for orch. (Houston, March 12, 1957); a large number of works for chamber combinations; violin pieces; piano works; church melodies; etc.—Cf. Oliver Daniel, Alan Hovhaness, in 'Bulletin of American Composers Alliance' (Oct., 1952).

Howard, George Henry, American music pedagogue and song composer; b. Norton, Mass., Nov. 12, 1843; d. Boston, Feb. 27, 1917. He studied at the Boston Music School; then taught there (1864-69); subsequently went to Germany for further study at the Leipzig Cons. with Moscheles and Richter; also in Berlin with Haupt and Kullak. Returning to America, he devoted himself to pedagogy; taught at various schools. In 1891 he organized the Boston School for Teachers of Music. He publ. some songs; also wrote organ pieces.

Howard, John Tasker, American writer on music; b. Brooklyn, Nov. 30, 1890. He attended Williams College for 3 years (1910-13); honorary M. A., 1937; studied piano with P. Tidden, and composition with H. Brockway and Mortimer Wilson. He was managing editor of 'The Musician' (1918-22); educational director of the Ampico Corp. (1922-28); music editor of 'McCall's Magazine' (1928-30); music editor of U. S. George Washington Bicentennial Commission (1931-32); received the Commission's medal of award in 1932; music editor of 'Cue Magazine' (1936-38); music editor of the U. S. Constitutional Sesquicentennial Commission (1937); curator of the Americana Music Collection, New York Public Library (1940-56); librarian of the Henry Hadley Memorial Library (1940); member of the Board of Directors, American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (1945; secretary since 1953). He settled in Montclair, N. J. —Writings: Our American Music (1931; revised 1939, 1946, 1954); The Music of George Washington's Time (1931); Stephen Foster, America's Troubadour (1934; revised, 1953); Ethelbert Nevin (1935); Our Contemporary Composers (1941); This Modern Music (1942; revised ed., Modern Music, 1956); The World's Great Operas (1948); and (with G. K. Bellows) A Short History of Music in America (1957). II; London, 1912); Latin Hymnody (London, 1923); Worcester Mediaeval Harmony (Burnham, 1928); The House of My Pilgrimage (London, 1929); Anglo-French Sequelae (London, 1934); Index to the Facsimile Edition of MS Wolfenbüttel 677 (Oxford, 1939); Liturgical Terms for Music Students (Boston, 1940); Medieval Polyphony in the Bodleian Library (Oxford, 1951); Catalogue of the Musical Manuscripts at Peterhouse, Cambridge (Cambridge, 1953). He also contributed compositions to The Tenor Tune Book (London, 1917); composed Missa Sancti Benedicti (London, 1918); and various small pieces of church music.

Hughes, Edwin, American pianist; b. Washington, D. C., Aug. 15, 1884. He studied with S. M. Fabian in Washington, with Rafael Joseffy in New York (1906-07), and with T. Leschetizky in Vienna (1907-10); taught at the Ganapol School of Musical Art, Detroit (1910-12), Volpe Institute of Music, N. Y. (1916-17), and the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y. (1918-23); lectured at various schools. From 1920 to 1926 he was special editor of piano music for G. Schirmer, Inc.; edited Bach's Well-tempered Clavichord for Schirmer's Library of Musical Classics (with a preface in English and Spanish); publ. piano transcriptions of Strauss's Waltzes; wrote songs; etc.

Hughes, Herbert, Irish critic and composer; b. Belfast, March 16, 1882; d. Brighton, May 1, 1937. He studied at the Royal College of Music in London. He was one of the founders of the Irish Folksong Society and co-editor of its early journals; was music critic of the 'Daily Telegraph.' He collected and edited many folksongs, including the collections Boosey's Modern Festival Series; Irish Country Songs (in 4 vols.); Old Irish Melodies (3 vols.); Historical Songs and Ballads of Ireland; Songs from Connacht; Songs of Uladh. He composed incidental music to the comedy And So To Bed, the film Irish Hearts; Nursery Rhymes, studies in imitation (2 vols.); Parodies, for voice and orch. (2 vols.); Brian Boru's March, for piano; 3 Satirical Songs, for violin, flute, clarinet, and bassoon; Shockheaded Peter, cycle for soprano, baritone, and piano; etc.

Hughes, Rupert, American writer on music; b. Lancaster, Mo., Jan. 31, 1872; d. Los Angeles, Sept. 9, 1956. He studied with W. G. Smith in Cleveland (1890-92), E. S. Kelley in New York (1899), and Ch. Pearce in London (1900-01). His publications include: American Composers (Boston, 1900; revised, 1914); The Musical Guide (2 vols., N. Y., 1903; republished as Music Lovers' Encyclopedia, in 1 vol., 1912; revised and newly edited by Deems Taylor and Russell Kerr as Music Lover's Encyclopedia, 1939; revised, 1954); edited 'Thirty Songs by American Composers' (1904). He composed a dramatic monologue for baritone and piano, Cain (1919); piano pieces, and songs. He was principally known, however, as a successful novelist.

Hugo, John Adam, American pianist and composer; b. Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 5, 1873; d. there, Dec. 29, 1945. From 1888-97 he studied at the Stuttgart Cons. with Speidel, Faiszt, Doppler, and Zumpe; appeared as concert pianist in Germany, England, and Italy; returned to the U. S. in 1899. His one-act opera, The Temple Dancer, is one of the few operas by American composers presented in the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. (March 12, 1919); it was also produced in Honolulu (Feb. 19, 1925). His other works are the operas, The Hero of Byzanz (written while studying at the Stuttgart Cons.) and The Sun God; a symphony; 2 piano concertos; a piano trio; pieces for the violin; pieces for the cello; piano pieces, and songs.—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and Its Composers (Philadelphia, 1927; pp. 270-74).

Hugon, Georges, French composer; b. Paris, July 23, 1904. He studied at the Paris Cons.; received the Prix Bizet (1926). He was director of the Cons. of Boulogne-sur-Mer (1934-41); in 1941, became prof. at the Cons. of Paris.—Works: oratorio, Chants de deuil et d'espérance (1947); 2 symphonies (1941, 1949); symph. poems, Au nord (1930) and La reine de Saba (1933); piano trio; string quartet; various pieces for piano; songs.—Cf. A. Machabey, Portraits de trente musiciens français (Paris, 1949; pp. 101-104).

Huhn, Bruno, song composer; b. London, Aug. 1, 1871; d. New York, May 13, 1950. He studied piano in London and New York; toured in Egypt, India, and Australia (1889-91). In 1891 he settled in New York, where he made a successful début as a pianist (April 17, 1896). Subsequently he held various positions as conductor of suburban choral groups and also as accompanist to singers. He wrote many sacred choruses and solo songs, of which his setting of Henley's Invictus (1910) attained great popularity.

Huizar, Candelario, Mexican composer; b. Jerez, Feb. 2, 1883. He studied violin and composition; in 1917 settled in Mexico City, where he continued his studies with Gustavo Campa. He was copyist in various music schools (1920-25), and in 1931 became librarian of the Conservatorio Nacional. His compositions reflect Mexican folklore, and often contain authentic Mexican themes.—Works: for orch. (all first performed in Mexico City): Imágenes, symph. poem (Dec. 13, 1929); Symphony No. 1 (Nov. 14, 1930); Pueblerinas, symph. poem (Nov. 6, 1931); Surco, symph. poem (Oct. 25, 1935); Symphony No. 2 (Sept. 4, 1936); Symphony No. 3 (July 29, 1938); Symphony No. 4 (Aug. 7, 1942); sonata for clarinet and bassoon (1931); string quartet (1938); choral works and songs.—Cf. J. C. Romero, Candelario Huizar in 'Nuestra Música' (Jan., 1952).

Hull, Arthur Eaglefield, English writer on music; b. Market Harborough, March 10, 1876; d. London, Nov. 4, 1928. He studied privately with Matthay and Charles Pearce in London; served as organist at Huddersfield Parish Church; was (from 1912) editor of the 'Monthly Musical Record.' In 1918 he founded the British Music Society; was its honorary director until 1921; Mus. Doc. (Queen's College, Oxford). In 1906 he married Constance Barratt, an accomplished violinist. A man of broad culture, he was an enthusiast for new music; was an early champion of Scriabin in England. In 1924 he brought out a Dictionary of Modern Music and Musicians. This was a pioneer volume, and despite an overabundance of egregious errors and misconceptions, is of service as a guide; a German transl. was made by Einstein, with numerous errors corrected (1926); another volume which still retains its value is Modern Harmony: Its Explanation and Application (London, 1914; 3rd ed., 1923; reprint, 1934). In 1927 he publ. a book, Music, Classical, Romantic and Modern, which proved to be a pasticcio of borrowings from various English and American writers; this was pointed out by many reviewers, and the book was withdrawn by the publishers in 1928; this episode led directly to Hull's suicide; he threw himself under a moving train at the Huddersfield Railway Station, suffered grave injuries and a loss of memory, and died a few weeks later. The list of his publications includes also Organ Playing, Its Technique and Expression (1911); The Sonata in Music (1916); Scriabin (1916); Modern Musical Styles (1916); Design or Construction in Music (1917); Cyril Scott (1918); he made English translations of Romain Rolland's Handel (1916) and Vie de Beethoven; edited the complete organ works of Bach and Mendelssohn (with annotations for students); was also editor of 'Music Lovers' Library' and 'Library of Music and Musicians' (in which his book on Scriabin appeared); other books by him in the same series were Bach and Three English Composers.

Hullah, John Pyke, English composer and organist; b. Worcester, June 27, 1812; d. London, Feb. 21, 1884. He was a pupil of William Horsley; in 1833 he studied singing with Crivelli at the Royal Academy of Music; as a composer he was entirely self-taught. At the age of 24 he produced an opera to a story by Charles Dickens, The Village Coquette (London, Dec. 6, 1836); 2 other operas followed: The Barber of Bassora (London, Nov. 11, 1837) and The Outpost (May 17, 1838). In the meantime, he obtained a post of church organist at Croydon. He made several trips to Paris, where he became interested in the new system of vocal teaching established by Wilhem; he modified it to suit English requirements, and, with the sanction of the National Education Committee, he opened his Singing School for Schoolmasters at Exeter Hall (1841). The school became the target of bitter criticism; nonetheless, it prospered; thousands of students enrolled; his wealthy supporters helped him build St. Martin's Hall for performances of vocal music by his students; the hall was inaugurated in 1850; it was destroyed by fire in 1860. From 1844-74 Hullah taught singing at King's College, and later at Queen's College and Bedford College in London. He conducted the student concerts of the Royal Academy of Music (1870-73); in 1872 he became Inspector of Training Schools. He held the honorary degree of LL. D. from Edinburgh Univ. (1876); was also a member of the Cecilia Society in Rome and of the Academy of Music in Florence. He edited Wilhem's Method of Teaching Singing Adapted to English Use (1841); publ. A Grammar of Vocal Music (1843); A Grammar of Harmony (1852); A Grammar of Counterpoint (1864); The History of Modern Music (1862); The Third or Transition Period of Musical History (1865); The Cultivation of the Speaking Voice (1870); Music in the House (1877); also brought out useful collections of vocal music: The Psalter, The Book of Praise Hymnal, the Whole Book of Psalms with Chants. He was the composer of the celebrated song O that we two were Maying; other popular songs are The Storm and Three Fishers. A Life of John Hullah was publ. by his wife (London, 1886).

Humbert (ön-bär'), Georges, Swiss organist and writer on music; b. St. Croix, Aug. 10, 1870; d. Neuchâtel, Jan. 1, 1936. He studied with Huberti at the Brussels Cons. and with Bargiel in Berlin. In 1892 he became prof. of music history at the Geneva Cons., retaining this post until 1912; from 1898 till 1918 he was organist at Morges. In 1918 he established the Neuchâtel Cons., and was its director until his death; also conducted various performing societies in Switzerland. He was editor of 'Gazette musical de la Suisse romande' (1894-96) and 'La Vie musicale' (1918-24); publ. Notes pour servir à l'étude de l'histoire de la musique (1904). He was the translator into French of Riemann's Musiklexikon (1899; 3rd ed., 1931).

Hume, Paul, American music critic; b. Chicago, Dec. 13, 1915; studied at the Univ. of Chicago; took private lessons in piano, organ, and voice; was organist, choirmaster, and a baritone soloist at various churches in Chicago and Washington; gave song recitals in Boston and in the Middle West; taught voice at Catholic Univ., Washington; in 1946, became music editor and critic of the 'Washington Post'; instructor in music history at Georgetown Univ. from 1949; contributor to 'Saturday Review' (N. Y.); active as lecturer and radio commentator on music; publ. Catholic Church Music (N. Y., 1956) and Our Music, Our Schools, and Our Culture (National Catholic Education Association, 1957). Paul Hume leaped to national fame in 1950 when President Truman, outraged by Hume's unenthusiastic review of Margaret Truman's song recital, wrote him a personal letter threatening him with bodily injury. Hume sold the letter to a Connecticut industrialist for an undisclosed sum of money.

Humfrey, Pelham, English composer; b. 1647; d. Windsor, July 14, 1674. He was among the first children appointed to the restored Chapel Royal in 1660, and (together with fellow-choristers John Blow and William Turner) he wrote the famous Club Anthem. In 1664 King Charles II sent him to study in France and Italy under the Secret Service Funds; that he worked under Lully remains unverified, nor can it be proved that he got to Italy. He returned to England in 1667 and was appointed Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on Oct. 26, 1667. An entry in Pepys' diary for Nov. 15, 1667 described him as being 'full of form, and confidence, and vanity' and disparaging 'everything, and everybody's skill but his own.' Humfrey's justification of his self-confidence lay in his undoubted mastery of the Italian declamatory style, greater than anyone had yet achieved in England. On July 15, 1672, he was appointed Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal. Two years later he died at the early age of 27. One of his wards was the young Henry Purcell, whose style clearly shows Humfrey's influence. Humfrey's works consist of 24 secular songs; 4 sacred songs; a dialogue, composed with John Blow; songs and vocal ensembles for Shadwell's version of Shakespeare's The Tempest; 3 odes, all to Charles II; 26 anthems, of which 19 are extant (one composed with John Blow and William Turner); Have Mercy Upon Me, O God in MS in the British Museum; O Praise God in His Holyness in MS at the Durham Cathedral Library; and Hear My Prayer, O God (in the Egerton MSS of the British Museum); etc.; one complete Service for the Anglican Church (Morning Prayer, Communion, and Evening Prayer); The Grand Chant, a widely used Anglican chant. Seven anthems by Humfrey are included in Boyce's 'Cathedral Music'; 3 sacred songs in 'Harmonia Sacra' (1714); a number of secular songs in the following collections: Playford's Choice Songs (1673), Choice Ayres, Songs and Dialogues (1676-84); J. S. Smith's Musica Antiqua (1812).—Cf. W. Barclay Squire, The Music of Shadwell's Tempest, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1921).

Humiston (höhm'-is-ton), William Henry, American organist; b. Marietta, Ohio, April 27, 1869; d. New York, Dec. 5, 1923. He studied organ with C. Eddy in Chicago (1885-94); at the same time, held various positions in and around Chicago as church organist. In 1896 he moved to New York, where he became a pupil of MacDowell (1896-99); served as organist at suburban churches until 1909; conducted traveling opera companies (1909-12). In 1912 he became the annotator of the programs of the N. Y. Philharmonic; also served as assistant conductor (1916). He wrote a Southern Fantasy, for orch. (1906); some overtures, and songs.

Hummel, Ferdinand, German composer and harpist; b. Berlin, Sept. 6, 1855; d. there, April 24, 1928. He gave concerts as a child harpist (1864-67); then studied music at Kullak's Academy in Berlin and later at the Hochschule für Musik there. He established himself as a teacher in Berlin, and also became a prolific composer. Much impressed by the realistic school of Italian opera (Mascagni), he wrote several short operas in the same genre: Mara (Berlin, 1893), Angla (Berlin, 1894), Assarpai (Gotha, 1898), Sophie von Brabant (Darmstadt, 1899), Die Beichte (Berlin, 1900), Ein treuer Schelm, and Die Gefilde der Seligen (Altenburg, 1917). He also wrote a symphony, a piano concerto, chamber music, choral works, aggregating to about 120 opus numbers.

Hummel, Johann Nepomuk, celebrated pianist and composer; b. Pressburg, Nov. 14, 1778; d. Weimar, Oct. 17, 1837. He studied with his father, Joseph Hummel, who was music master of the Imperial School for Military Music. In 1786 the father was appointed conductor at Schikaneder's Theater in Vienna, and there Mozart interested himself in young Hummel and took him into his house, and for 2 years instructed him. He made his début in 1787 at a concert given by Mozart in Dresden; 1788-93 he accompanied his father on professional concert tours as pianist, visiting Germany, Denmark, Scotland, England, and Holland. In London he studied briefly with Clementi; in Oxford he presented his string quartet. In 1793 he returned to Vienna, and began a course of studies with Albrechtsberger, and also profited by the counsel of Haydn and Salieri in composition. From 1804-11 he acted as deputy Kapellmeister for Haydn, in Prince Esterházy's service. In the meantime, he had his opera Mathilde von Guise produced in Vienna (March 26, 1810). He settled in Vienna in 1811 as a teacher; in 1816 was appointed court Kapellmeister at Stuttgart, and in 1819, at Weimar, a post he held until his death. His duties were not too rigorous, and he was allowed to make frequent professional tours. He traveled to St. Petersburg in 1822; in 1825 he was in Paris, where he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor; in 1826, visited Belgium and Holland; in 1827, was in Vienna, in 1828, in Warsaw, and in 1829, again in France. He conducted a season of German opera at the King's Theatre in London in 1833. The last years of his life were marred by ill health and much suffering. During the peak of his career as a pianist, he was regarded as one of the greatest virtuosos of his time; both as pianist and composer he was often declared to be the equal of Beethoven. His compositions were marked by excellent craftsmanship; his writing for instruments, particularly for piano, was impeccable; his melodic invention was rich, and his harmonic and contrapuntal skill was of the highest caliber. Yet, with his death, his music went into an immediate eclipse; performances of his works became increasingly rare, until the name of Hummel all but vanished from active musical programs. However, some of his compositions were revived by various musical societies in Europe and America, and as a result, at least his chamber music was saved from oblivion. He wrote 124 opus numbers; these include 9 operas, several ballets, cantatas; 3 Masses for 4 voices and organ; a Graduale and Offertorium, still in use in Austrian churches; 7 concertos and concertinos for piano and orch.; many works for piano solo; 6 piano trios; a piano quintet; quintet for violin, viola, cello, double bass, and piano; and septet in D minor (his most outstanding work), for flute, oboe, viola, horn, cello, double-bass, and piano. He also publ. Anweisung zum Pianofortespiel (1828), an elaborate instruction book and one of the first to give a sensible method of fingering. His wife, Elisabeth Hummel-Röckl (1793-1883), was an opera singer.—Cf. G. Sporck, L'Interprétation des sonates de J. N. Hummel (Paris, 1933); K. Benyovszky, J. N. Hummel, der Mensch und Künstler (Bratislava, 1934).

Humperdinck, Engelbert, celebrated German composer; b. Siegburg, near Bonn, Sept. 1, 1854; d. Neustrelitz, Sept. 27, 1921. He first studied architecture in Cologne; there he met Ferdinand Hiller, who discovered his musical talent and took him as a student at the Cologne Cons.; his other teachers there were Gernsheim and Jensen (composition), Seiss and Mertke (piano), Rensberg and Ehlert (cello). In 1876 he won a Mozart scholarship of Frankfurt; studied in Munich with Franz Lachner and Rheinberger; there he published his first works, Humoreske, for orch. (1880) and Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaar, for chorus (1897), which won the Mendelssohn prize (1897); previously he won the Meyerbeer prize of 7,600 marks (1881), which enabled him to visit Italy and France. In Italy he met Wagner, who invited him to be his guest at Bayreuth. Here Humperdinck assisted in preparing the score of Parsifal for publication; from then on, the relations between Humperdinck and the Wagner family were most cordial; Siegfried Wagner became Humperdinck's pupil and received his entire musical education from him. From 1885-87, Humperdinck was prof. in the Cons. in Barcelona; after his return to Germany, he taught for a short time in Cologne, and then went to Mainz in the employ of the Schott publishing firm; in 1890 he became prof. at Hoch's Cons. in Frankfurt, and music critic for the 'Frankfurter Zeitung.' On Dec. 23, 1893, in Weimar, he produced the fairy-opera Hänsel und Gretel (text by his sister, Adelheid Wette). The work, aside from its intrinsic merit, appeared at the right psychological moment. The German public, weary of the bombast of the Wagner-imitators, were almost willing to accept the blunt realism of the Italian 'verismo' as a relief from the labored dullness of its native composers. And now a new composer, drawing inspiration from native folk music, found musical expression for a thoroughly German subject, and the public was delighted. Before a year had passed, the work was in the repertory of every German opera house; also abroad its success was extraordinary and lasting (London, Dec. 26, 1894; N. Y., Oct. 8, 1895). A host of imitators ransacked German fairy-lore, but with ill success. Since Humperdinck's health had never been robust, he determined after this success to give up teaching, and in 1896 he retired to Boppard on the Rhine to devote himself entirely to composition. His next work was Die sieben Geislein (Berlin, Dec. 19, 1895), a fairy play for children, written for voice and piano; in 1898 he wrote incidental music to Rosmer's Königskinder (Munich, Jan. 23, 1897); in this music Humperdinck made a bold attempt to prescribe definite rhythmic and pitch inflections ('Sprechnoten') to the actors in the drama. He later recast the score into an opera, which was produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. (Dec. 28, 1910). In 1900 he became director (with practically nominal duties) of the 'Akademische Meisterschule' in Berlin. His other operas are Dornröschen (Frankfurt, Nov. 12, 1902); Die Heirat wider Willen (Berlin, April 14, 1905); Die Marktentenderin (Cologne, May 10, 1914), and Gaudeamus (Darmstadt, March 18, 1919); he wrote incidental music for Berlin productions of 5 plays of Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice (Nov. 9, 1905), The Winter's Tale (Sept. 15, 1906), Romeo and Juliet (Jan. 29, 1907), Twelfth Night (Oct. 17, 1907), The Tempest (Oct. 8, 1915); to Lysistrata, by Aristophanes (Berlin, Feb. 27, 1908), and The Blue Bird, by Maeterlinck (Berlin, Dec. 23, 1912). He contributed music to Max Reinhardt's production of The Miracle (London, Dec. 23, 1911). He further wrote a choral ballade, Das Glück von Edenhall (1884), Maurische Rhapsodie, for orch. (1898), and a symphony. Among his songs, the cycle Kinderlieder is particularly fine. Humperdinck's lasting fame still rests, however, upon his one opera Hänsel und Gretel, which succeeded thanks to Humperdinck's ability to write melodies of ingenious felicity, despite the almost incompatible Wagnerian instrumental and dramatic design. — Cf. G. Münzer, E. Humperdinck, in 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (Leipzig, 1906); E. Istel, German Opera since Richard Wagner, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1915); O. Besch, E. Humperdinck (Leipzig, 1915); H. Kühlmann, Stil und Form in Humperdincks 'Hänsel und Gretel' (Marburg, 1930).

Humpert, Hans, German composer; b. Paderborn, April 19, 1901; killed in battle at Salerno, Sept. 15, 1943. He studied at the Frankfurt Cons. and in Berlin; then taught at Paderborn until he was called into the army. His music is marked by a neo-Romantic quality, with a strong contrapuntal structure. There was a considerable revival of his works after his death. He wrote 2 symphonies (1937, 1942); 3 string quartets; string trio; violin sonata; viola sonata; sonata for flute solo; 5 cantatas; 4 Masses; 3 motets; 7 psalms; many choral and organ works.—Cf. G. Hoffmann, Hans Humpert, in 'Musica' (Sept., 1953).

Huneker (hyu'něh-kěr), James Gibbons, brilliant American journalist and writer on music; b. Philadelphia, Jan. 31, 1860; d. Brooklyn, Feb. 9, 1921. He studied piano with Michael Cross in Philadelphia, and in 1878 in Paris with Th. Ritter; later with Joseffy at the National Cons. in N. Y.; then taught piano there (1888-98). He was music and drama critic of the N. Y. 'Recorder' (1891-95), the 'Morning Advertiser' (1895-97); music, drama, and art critic for the 'Sun' (1900-12). In 1917 he was music critic of the Philadelphia 'Press'; after one season (1918-19) with the 'N. Y. Times,' he became music critic for the 'N. Y. World,' a position he held until his death; also wrote for various journals in N. Y., London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. He published a novel dealing with artistic life in N. Y., Painted Veils (1921), but he devoted most of his uncommon gifts to musical journalism. He was capable of rising to true poetic style, when writing about Chopin and other composers whom he loved; but he also possessed a talent for caustic invective; his attacks on Debussy were particularly sharp. He had a fine sense of humor, and candidly described himself as an 'old fogey.' In addition to his literary publications, he furnished introductory essays for Joseffy's edition of Chopin's works. — Writings: Mezzotints in Modern Music (1899); Chopin: The Man and His Music (1900; in German, 1914); Melomaniacs (1902); Overtures, a Book of Temperaments (1904); Iconoclasts: A Book for Dramatists (1905); Visionaries: Fantasies and Fiction (1905); Egoists: A Book of Supermen (1909); Promenades of an Impressionist: Studies in Art (1910); Franz Liszt: A Study (1911; in German, 1922); The Pathos of Distance (1913); Old Fogey, His Musical Opinions and Grotesques (1913); New Cosmopolis (1915); Ivory Apes and Peacocks (1915); Unicorns (1917); The Philharmonic Society of New York and Its 75th Anniversary (1917); Bedouins (1920); Steeplejack (his memoirs; 1920); Variations (1921). A selection of his letters was publ. posthumously by Josephine Huneker (1922); a collection of essays, with an introduction by Mencken, in 1929.—Cf. B. De Casseres, James Gibbons Huneker (N. Y., 1925).

Hüntten, Franz, German pianist and composer; b. Coblenz, Dec. 26, 1793; d. there, Feb. 22, 1878. He studied with his father, an organist; at the age of 26 he went to Paris, and took courses at the Cons. with Pradher (piano) and Cherubini (composition); composed salon music for piano (fantasies, variations on opera themes, waltzes, etc.), some 250 opus numbers in all, most of which he succeeded in publishing; also brought out a Méthode nouvelle pour le piano, and other didactic compilations which became popular among teachers and students; Hüntten was very much in demand as a piano teacher in Paris. Having accumulated considerable capital from his enterprises, he returned to Coblenz in 1848, and remained there until his death.

Huré (üh-rä'), Jean, French composer and writer on music; b. Gien, Loiret, Sept. 17, 1877; d. Paris, Jan. 27, 1930. He received his musical education at a monastery in Angers; went to Paris in 1895; there he founded the École normale pour pianistes (1912) and the monthly magazine L'Orgue et les Organistes (1923); in 1925 he became church organist at St. Augustin; in 1926 he won the Prix Chartier for composition. His opera, Le Bois sacré, was produced at the Opéra-Comique; he further wrote incidental music to Musset's Fantasio, 3 symphonies, a violin concerto, concerto for saxophone and orch., 2 string quartets, piano quintet, violin sonata, 3 cello sonatas, etc.; publ. the manuals La Technique du piano (1908), La Technique de l'orgue (1918); also L'Esthétique de l'orgue (1923) and Saint Augustin, musicien (1924).—Cf. G. Migot, Jean Huré (1926).

Hurley, Laurel, American coloratura soprano; b. Allentown, Pa., Feb. 14, 1927. Of a musical family, she studied with her mother, a church organist; at 16, appeared on Broadway (Aug. 21, 1943) as Kathie in Romberg's operetta The Student Prince; then toured with the company that produced it. She was the winner of the Walter W. Naumburg Foundation Award, which enabled her to give a song recital in N. Y. (Nov. 6, 1952). She made her début at the Metropolitan Opera on Feb. 8, 1955, in a minor role; on Jan. 11, 1957, she appeared in the title role of La Périchole. On May 6, 1949, she married John Peter Butz.

Hurlstone, William Yeates, English composer and pianist; b. London, Jan. 7, 1876; d. there, May 30, 1906. A precocious musician, he composed waltzes as a young child; studied at the Royal College of Music with Stanford (composition) and Edward Dannreuther (piano); performed his piano concerto in 1896. In 1905 he was appointed prof. at the Royal College of Music. Among his works are the fairy suite The Magic Mirror, for orch.; Variations on a Hungarian Air and Variations on a Swedish Air, for orch.; quartet for flute, oboe, horn, and bassoon; quintet for flute, oboe, horn, bassoon, and piano; piano trio; trio for clarinet, bassoon, and piano; clarinet sonata; bassoon sonata; several song cycles. — Cf. Hurum, Alf, Norwegian composer; b. Oslo, Sept. 21, 1882. He studied in Oslo, Paris, and Berlin. In 1920 he went to Hawaii; conducted the Honolulu Symph. Orch. (1924-26); then returned to Norway, settling in Bergen. Among his works is an Exotic Suite (Oslo, Jan. 20, 1918); Fairyland, suite (1921); Bendik and Aarolilja, symph. poem (1923); chamber music; several piano suites (Gothic Pictures, Nordic Suite, etc.).

Husa, Karel, Czech composer; b. Prague, Aug. 7, 1921. He studied in Prague; in 1946, went to Paris where he took lessons with Honegger and Nadia Boulanger. In 1954 he was appointed a member of the music faculty at Cornell Univ. — Works: Trois fresques, for orch.; Divertimento, for string orch.; Concertino, for piano and orch.; Portarit, for string orch. (Donaueschingen, Oct. 10, 1953); 2 string quartets; piano pieces.

Hus-Desforges, Pierre Louis, French cellist and composer; b. Toulon, March 14, 1773; d. Pont-le-Voy, near Blois, Jan. 20, 1838. He studied at the Paris Cons.; played the cello in various orchestras; held numerous posts as theatrical conductor and teacher. He was conductor at the Théâtre-Français in St. Petersburg early in the 19th century; returning to France, was cellist at the Théâtre Saint-Martin in Paris; from 1819 until 1822 taught at Metz; in 1823 was in Bordeaux; from 1824 again in Paris. His name as composer appears for the first time as Citoyen Desforges, on a song entitled L'autel de sa patrie (Paris, 1798); he was the author of a Méthode de violoncelle à l'usage des commençants (Paris, 1828); a string quartet, and a 'Sinfonia concertante' with violin and cello obbligato; he also published a historical novel, Sapho à Leucade (Paris, 1818).

Huss, Henry Holden, American composer and pianist; b. Newark, N. J., June 21, 1862; d. New York, Sept. 17, 1953. He was a descendant of Leonhard Huss, brother of the Bohemian martyr, John Huss. His mother, Sophia Ruckle Holden Huss, was a granddaughter of Levi Holden, a member of Washington's staff. Huss studied piano and theory with his father and with Otis B. Boise. In 1882 he went to Germany, and studied organ and composition with Rheinberger at the Munich Cons.; graduated with a Rhapsody for piano and orch. (1885), which he subsequently performed with several American orchestras; also played his piano concerto in B major with the N. Y. Philharmonic, Boston Symph., etc. In 1904 he married Hildegard Hoffmann, a concert singer; they appeared frequently in joint recitals. He continued to compose music almost to the very end of his long life. His works include the symph. poems Life's Conflicts (1921) and La Nuit (originally for piano solo, 1902; orchestrated, 1939; first perf., Washington, March 12, 1942); 4 string quartets; violin sonata; cello sonata; viola sonata; choral works: The 23rd Psalm, Mankind's Own Song, Winged Messengers of Peace, The Flag, The Fool's Prayer, Captain, Oh My Captain, Lord, Make My Heart a Place Where Angels Sing, etc.

Hutchens, Frank, pianist and composer; b. Christchurch, New Zealand, Jan. 15, 1892. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with Matthay (piano) and Corder (composition); taught there from 1908-14; in 1914, was appointed prof. at the State Cons. at Sydney, N. S. Wales. His compositions include Ballade for orch. (1938); concerto for 2 pianos and orch. (1940); Air Mail Palestine, for voice and orch. (1942); also piano pieces.

Hutcheson, Ernest, pianist; b. Melbourne, July 20, 1871; d. New York, Feb. 9, 1951. He studied piano in Australia with Max Vogrich; played concerts as a very young child; then was sent to the Leipzig Cons. to study with Reinecke, graduating in 1890. In 1898 he performed his own piano concerto with the Berlin Philharmonic. In 1900 he arrived in the U. S.; was head of the piano dept. at the Peabody Cons. in Baltimore (1900-12). In 1915 he created a sensation in New York by playing 3 concertos (Tchaikovsky, Liszt, and MacDowell) in a single evening; in 1919 he repeated his feat, playing 3 Beethoven concertos in one evening; during 1924-37 he was dean of the Juilliard School; in 1937, appointed its president. Among his compositions are several symphonic works and numerous piano pieces. He publ. Elements of Piano Technique (N. Y., 1907); Elektra by Richard Strauss: A Guide to the Opera (N. Y., 1910); A Musical Guide to the Richard Wagner Ring of the Nibelung (N. Y., 1940); The Literature of the Piano (N. Y., 1948).

Hutschenruyter (hüts'-hen-röi-ter), Wouter, Dutch composer; b. Rotterdam, Dec. 28, 1796; d. there, Nov. 18, 1878. He was a pupil of Hummel; also studied trumpet, and became a famous trumpet player. An energetic promoter of music, he organized a music corps of the Civic Guard (1821), conducted the municipal band (1822), established a choral society called 'Eruditio musica'; also led various other music societies. He wrote an opera, Le Roi de Bohème; 4 symphonies; more than 150 works for military band; Konzertstück for 8 kettle-drums with orch.; cantatas, songs.

Hutschenruyter, Wouter; grandson of the preceding; Dutch conductor and writer on music; b. Rotterdam, Aug. 15, 1859; d. The Hague, Nov. 24, 1943. After diligent study, he became a choral conductor; in 1890, was appointed assistant conductor of the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam; from 1894 to 1917 he conducted the municipal band in Utrecht, which he brought to a high degree of excellence; performed many works by Dutch composers. From 1917-25 he taught at Rotterdam; then lived in The Hague. He wrote a number of symphonic and chamber works; publ. many books and manuals: Orkest en orkestspel na 1600 (1903); Mozart (1905; new ed., 1927); De geschiedenis der toonkunst (1919); Geschiedenis van het orkest en van den instrumenten (1926); De symphonieën van Beethoven geanalyseerd en toegelicht (1928); Chopin (1926); Mahler (1927); Wagner (1928); Brahms (1929); Richard Strauss (1929); De sonates van Beethoven toegelicht (1930); De Antwikkeling der Symphonie door Haydn, Mozart en Beethoven (1931); De Programma-Muziek (1933); also a volume of personal memoirs (1930).

Hüttenbrenner, Anselm, Austrian composer; b. Graz, Oct. 13, 1794; d. Ober-Andritz, near Graz, June 5, 1868. At the age of 7 he studied with the organist Gell; in 1815 he went to Vienna to study law; also took lessons with Salieri there. Schubert was his fellow student, and they became close friends. Hüttenbrenner also knew Beethoven intimately, and was present at his death. He was an excellent pianist and a prolific composer; Schubert praised his works. He wrote 4 operas, 6 symphonies, 10 overtures, 9 Masses, 3 Requiems, 3 funeral marches, 2 string quartets, a string quintet, piano sonatas, 24 fugues, and other piano pieces; some 300 male quartets and 200 songs. One of his songs, Erkönig, was included in the collection 12 Lieder der deutschen Romantik, ed. by H. H. Rosenwald (1929). His reminiscences of Schubert were publ. by Otto Deutsch in 1906. It was Hüttenbrenner who came into the possession of many Schubert MSS after Schubert's death; the MS of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was held by him until 1865. It has been suggested that Hüttenbrenner had lost the 3rd and 4th movements of Schubert's work, and for that reason was reluctant to part with the incomplete MS, but the extant sketches for the Scherzo make that unlikely. —Cf. K. Kurth, Anselm Hüttenbrenner als Liederkomponist (Cologne, 1932); T. C. L. Pritchard, The Unfinished Symphony, in the 'Music Review' (Jan., 1942).

Huybrechts, Albert, Belgian composer; b. Dinant, Feb. 12, 1899; d. Woluwé, Feb. 21, 1938. He studied at the Brussels Cons. with Joseph Jongen; his first success was the winning of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge prize (1926) for his violin sonata; he also won first prize at the Ojai Valley Festival with his string quartet (1926). He wrote in a moderately advanced idiom, and his music won renewed appreciation after his death. —Works: 2 symph. poems: David (1923) and Chant d'Angoisse (1930; his most distinctive work); concertino for cello and orch. (1932); violin sonata (1925); trio for flute, viola, and piano (1926); sextet for wind (1927); suite for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and piano (1929); sonatina for flute and viola (1934); string trio (1935); wind quintet (1936); 2 string quartets; cello pieces; songs, of which the best known is Horoscopes (1926). A catalogue of his works was publ. by the Centre Belge de Documentation Musicale (1954).

Hyde, Walter, English tenor; b. Birmingham, Feb. 6, 1875; d. London, Nov. 11, 1951. He studied with Gustave Garcia; sang in light opera before he undertook Wagnerian roles, which became his specialty. He sang Siegmund at Covent Garden in 1908; his other roles included Walter in Die Meistersinger and also Parsifal. He was a frequent participant at many musical festivals in England.

Hyllested, August, pianist and composer; b. Stockholm, June 17, 1856; d. Blairmore, Scotland, April 5, 1946. He played in public as a child; then studied at the Copenhagen Cons. with Niels Gade, and subsequently with Th. Kullak (piano) and Fr. Kiel (composition) in Berlin; then had some lessons from Liszt. He gave concerts as pianist in England (1883) and in America (1885). From 1886-91 he was prof. and assistant director of the Chicago Musical College; from 1891-94, taught piano at the Gottschalk Lyric School, Chicago. After a concert tour in Europe, he returned to Chicago in 1897; he was in Glasgow from 1903-14; then again in the U. S. (1916-19); in Denmark and Sweden (1919-21); in 1923, retired to Blairmore, where he died shortly before his 90th birthday. He publ. numerous piano pieces in a Romantic style (Album Leaf, Valse sentimentale, Suite romantique, etc.), a suite of Scandinavian dances; also a fantasia on Scotch tunes; choral pieces; a symph. poem, Elizabeth, with double chorus (London, 1897, composer conducting).

Ibach (ē'bäh), Johannes Adolf, German piano maker; b. Barmen, Oct. 20, 1766; d. there, Sept. 14, 1848. In 1794, he founded a piano factory at Barmen; also manufactured organs from 1834, with his son C. Rudolf Ibach; then traded under the name of 'Adolf Ibach & Sohn'; from 1839, as 'Adolf Ibach & Söhne,' when his son Richard joined. From 1862 the firm was known as 'C. Rudolf & Richard Ibach,' to distinguish it from another business founded by a third son, Gustav J. The same year C. Rudolf died, and in 1869 his son Rudolf (d. Herrenalb, Black Forest, July 31, 1892) continued the piano factory alone as 'Rudolf Ibach Sohn,' establ. a branch at Cologne, gained medals for the excellence of his pianos, and became purveyor to the Prussian court. Richard Ibach continued the organ-factory.—Cf. Das Haus Ibach 1794-1894 (1895).

Ibert (ē-bär'), Jacques, French composer; b. Paris, Aug. 15, 1890. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Gedalge and Fauré (1911-14); during World War I served in the French Navy; returned to the Paris Cons. after the Armistice and studied with Paul Vidal; received the Prix de Rome in 1919 for his cantata Le Poète et la Fée; while in Rome, he wrote his most successful work, the symph. suite Escales (Ports of Call), inspired by a Mediterranean cruise while serving in the Navy. In 1937 he was appointed director of the Academy of Rome, and held this post until 1955, when he became director of the united management of the Paris Opéra and Opéra-Comique (until 1957). In his music, Ibert combines the most felicitous moods and techniques of Impressionism and neo-Classicism; his harmonies are opulent; his instrumentation is coloristic; there is an element of humor in lighter works, such as his popular orchestral Divertissement and an even more popular piece, Le petit âne blanc from the piano suite Histoires. His craftsmanship is excellent; an experimenter in tested values, he never fails to produce the intended effect.—Works: Operas: Angélique (Paris, Jan. 28, 1927); Persée et Andromède (Paris, May 15, 1929); Le Roi d'Yvetot (Paris, Jan. 15, 1930); Gonzague (Monte Carlo, 1935); L'Aiglon, after Edmond Rostand, in collaboration with Honegger (Monte Carlo, March 11, 1937); Les Petites Cardinal, with Honegger (Paris, 1938); Barbe-bleue, radio opera (Lausanne Radio, Oct. 10, 1943). Ballets (all first performed in Paris): Les Rencontres (Nov. 21, 1925); Diane de Poitiers (April 30, 1934, produced by Ida Rubinstein); Les Amours de Jupiter (March 9, 1946); Le Chevalier errant (May 5, 1950). For orch.: symph. poem, Noël en Picardie (1914); Ballade de la geôle de Reading, after Oscar Wilde (Paris, Oct. 22, 1922); Escales, 3 symph. pictures (Paris, Jan. 6, 1924); Féerique, a symph. scherzo (Paris, Dec. 12, 1925); concerto for cello and wind instruments (Paris, Feb. 28, 1926); Divertissement, suite (Paris, Nov. 30, 1930; from incidental music to Le Chapeau de paille d'Italie); Paris, suite for chamber orch. (Venice, Sept. 15, 1932; from incidental music to Donogoo, play by Jules Romains); flute concerto (Paris, Feb. 25, 1934); Concertino da Camera for saxophone and chamber orch. (Paris, May 2, 1935); Capriccio (1938); Ouverture de fête (Paris, Jan. 18, 1942); Suite élisabéthaine (1944); Symphonie Concertante, for oboe and string orch. (Basel, Feb. 11, 1949); Louisville Concerto (Louisville, Feb. 17, 1954). Vocal works: Le Poète et la Fée, cantata (1919); Chant de Folie for solo voices, chorus, and orch. (Boston, April 23, 1926); Trois chansons for voice and orch. or piano; La Verduce dorée, for voice and piano; Chanson du rien, for voice and piano; Quintette de la peur for chorus and piano (1946). Chamber music: 2 mouvements, for 2 flutes, clarinet, and bassoon (1923); Jeux, sonatina for flute and piano (1924); 3 pièces brèves, for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon (1930); Pastoral, for 4 fifes (in Pipeaux, by various composers, 1934); Entr'acte, for flute and guitar (1935); string quartet (1944); trio for violin, cello, and harp (1944); 2 Interludes for violin and harpsichord (1949); also 6 pieces for harp (1917); a piece for unaccompanied flute (1936). For piano: Histoires (10 pieces); Les Rencontres, arranged from the ballet (5 pieces); Petite suite en 15 images (1943).—Cf. A. Hoérée, J. Ibert, in 'Revue Musicale' (July, 1929); G. Samazeuilh, Musiciens de mon temps (Paris, 1947).

Idelsohn (ē-dēl-son), Abraham Zevi, eminent Jewish musicologist; b. Pilsburg, near Libau (Latvia), July 13, 1882; d. Johannesburg, South Africa, Aug. 14, 1938. He studied in Königsberg, at the Stern Cons. in Berlin, and with Jadassohn and Kretzschmar at the Leipzig Cons. He possessed a powerful baritone voice and for a time was cantor of the Synagogue at Regensburg (1903); then went to Johannesburg and later (1905-21) to Jerusalem, where he founded an Institute for Jewish Music (1910) and a Jewish Music School (1919). In 1921, he returned to Germany; then lectured in England; from 1924-34, was prof. at the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati. In 1934 he suffered a paralytic stroke; was taken to Miami, and in 1937 to Johannesburg, where he finally succumbed. Idelsohn was one of the greatest authorities on Jewish music and contributed much towards its establishment on a scientific basis. He publ. a quantity of studies in English, German, and Hebrew on Oriental and Hebrew music, of which the most important are: History of Jewish Music (in Hebrew, 1924; 2nd ed., 1928, also publ. in English); The Ceremonies of Judaism (1929-30); Diwan of Hebrew and Arabic Poetry of the Yemenite Jews (in Hebrew; 1930); Jewish Liturgy and Its Development (1932; reprint issued by the Hebrew Union College, N. Y., 1956); Musical Characteristics of East European Jewish Folk-Songs, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Oct., 1932). His most important contribution to the study of Jewish music is the monumental 'Thesaurus of Hebrew-Oriental Melodies' (10 vols.; 1914-32), in which are collected, with the aid of phonograph recordings, Jewish melodies of Northern Africa, Asia Minor, Palestine, and other parts of the world. He also composed and publ. 6 Synagogue Services, Hebrew songs (1929), a music drama Jephthah (1922), and a Jewish Song Book for Synagogue, Home and School (1929).

Ifukube, Akira, Japanese composer; b. Kushiro (Hokkaido), March 7, 1914. As a young man, he was trained in forestry; then turned to music, and took lessons from Alexander Tcherepnin, who was in Japan at the time. Ifukube has written several ballets based on Japanese melodies and employing Impressionistic harmonies: Enchanted Citadel (Tokyo, Dec. 20, 1949), Drums of Japan (Tokyo, Dec. 29, 1951), etc.; for orch.: Japanese Rhapsody (Boston, April 5, 1936); Aboriginal Triptych (1938); Symphonie Concertante for piano and orch. (Tokyo, March 3, 1942; music destroyed in an air raid); Ballade Symphonique (Tokyo, Nov. 20, 1943); Arctic Forest (Changchun, Manchuria, April 26, 1944); also a violin concerto (Tokyo, June 22, 1948).

Ikenouchi, Tomojiro, Japanese composer, b. Tokyo, Oct. 21, 1906. He received his musical education at the Paris Cons.; upon his return to Japan, was appointed professor of composition at Tokyo University. — Works: Yuya, music for a Nō drama (Tokyo, Feb. 1, 1943); 2 symph. movements (Tokyo, Nov. 4, 1951); 3 string quartets, etc.

Ikonen, Lauri, Finnish musicologist and composer; b. Mikkeli, Aug. 10, 1888. He studied at the Helsingfors Univ. and with Paul Juon in Berlin; editor of the Finnish music magazine 'Suomen Musikkilehti' (1923-29); in 1946, received the Sibelius stipend. He has written 5 symphonies (No. 3, 1942; No. 4, 1943; No. 5, 1945); violin concerto (1941); cello concerto (1942); piano concerto (1943); chamber music; choral works; piano pieces; songs.

He studied at the State Univ. of Montana and then at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, with Howard Hanson (Mus. Bac., 1925; M.M., 1928; B.A., 1931). After teaching for several years at the Eastman School, he became a member of the faculty at Hunter College, N. Y., in 1937. He was a fellow of the American Academy in Rome in 1931; traveled in India and Australia in 1934. — Works: Variations on a Modal Theme (Rochester, April 29, 1927); Three Pieces, for small orch. (Rochester, Oct. 24, 1930); Symphony No. 1 (Rochester, May 5, 1932); Serenade, for small orch. (Rochester, Oct. 24, 1939); piano concerto (1940); Answers to a Questionnaire, for orch. (1942); Northwest Overture (1943); violin concerto (Rochester, May 1, 1947); Return to Zion, for women's chorus (1945); piano quintet (1930); Mediterranean Sketches, for string quartet (1933); Divertimento, for brass (1934); string quartet (1936); cello sonata (1941); Three Conversations, for string quartet (1944).

d'Indy (dăn-dê'), (Paul-Marie-Théodore-) Vincent, eminent French composer; b. Paris, March 27, 1851; d. there, Dec. 2, 1931. Owing to the death of his mother at his birth, his education was directed entirely by his grandmother, a woman of culture and refinement who had known Grétry and Monsigny, and who had shown a remarkable appreciation of the works of Beethoven when that master was still living. From 1862-5 he studied piano with Diémer, and later harmony and theory with Marmontel and Lavignac. In 1869 he made the acquaintance of Henri Duparc, and with him spent much time studying the masterpieces of Bach, Beethoven, Berlioz, and Wagner; at that time, he wrote his op. 1 and 2, and contemplated an opera on Victor Hugo's Les Burgraves (1869-72; unfinished). During the Franco-Prussian war he served in the Garde Mobile, and wrote his experiences in Histoire du 105<sup>e</sup> bataillon de la Garde nationale de Paris en l'année 1870-71 (1872). He then began to study composition with César Franck, continuing until 1880; when the latter was appointed prof. of organ at the Cons. (1873), he joined the class, winning a second accessit in 1874 and the first the following year. On his first visit to Germany in 1873 he met Liszt and Wagner, and was introduced to Brahms; in 1876, heard the first performances of the Ring dramas at Bayreuth, and for several years thereafter made regular trips to Munich to hear all the works of Wagner; also attended the première of Parsifal in 1882. From 1872-6, organist at St.-Leu; 1873-8, chorusmaster and timpanist with the Colonne Orch.; for the Paris première of Lohengrin in 1887 he drilled the chorus and was Lamoureux's assistant. In 1871 he joined the 'Société Nationale de Musique' as a junior member, and was its secretary from 1876 till 1890, when, after Franck's death, he became president. In 1894 he founded with Bordes and Guilmant the famous 'Schola Cantorum' (opened 1896), primarily as a school for plainchant and the Palestrina style. Gradually the scope of instruction was enlarged so as to include all musical disciplines, and the institution became one of the world's foremost music schools. From the beginning d'Indy not only was one of the directors, but also taught; after the death of Guilmant (1911) he became sole director. His fame as a composer began with the performance of Le Chant de la cloche at a Lamoureux concert in 1886; the work itself had won the City of Paris Prize in the competition of the preceding year. As early as 1874 Padeloup had played the overture Piccolo- mini (later embodied as the second part in the Wallenstein trilogy), and in 1882 the 1-act opera Attendez-moi sous l'orme had been produced at the Opéra-Comique; but the prize work attracted general attention, and d'Indy was recognized as one of the most important of modern French masters. Although he never held an official position as conductor, he frequently, and with marked success, appeared in that capacity (chiefly upon invitation to direct his own works); thus he visited Spain in 1897, Russia in 1903 and 1907, and the U. S. in 1905, when he conducted the regular subscription concerts of Dec. 1 and 2 of the Boston Symph. Orch. In 1892 he was a member of the commission appointed to revise the curriculum of the Conservatoire, and refused a proffered professorship of composition; but in 1912 accepted an appointment as prof. of the ensemble class. Besides other duties, he discharged, from 1899, those of inspector of musical instruction in Paris; last U. S. visit in 1921. He was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1892, Officer in 1912; was also member of many academies and artistic associations (in Belgium, Holland, Spain, Italy, Sweden, etc.).

Both as teacher and creative artist d'Indy continued the traditions of César Franck. Although he cultivated almost every form of composition, his special talent seemed to be in the field of the larger instrumental forms. Some French critics assign to him a position in French music analogous to that of Brahms in German music. His style rests on Bach and Beethoven; however, his deep study of Gregorian Chant and the early contrapuntal style added an element of severity, and not rarely of complexity, that renders approach somewhat difficult, and has prompted the charge that his music is lacking in emotional force.—For the edition of Rameau's complete works (ed. by Saint-Saëns and Malherbe) he revised Dardanus, Hippolyte et Aricie, and Zaïs; also ed. Monteverdi's Orfeo and Incoronazione di Poppea; he also made piano arrangements of orchestral works by Chausson, Duparc, and other composers. His numerous articles in various journals are remarkable for critical acumen and literary finish. He publ. an important manual, Cours de Composition musicale (Book I, 1903; Book II: Part 1, 1909, Part 2, 1933); César Franck, in 'Les Maîtres de la Musique' (1906); Beethoven: Biographie critique (1911; English transl. by Th. Baker, Boston, 1913); La Schola Cantorum en 1925 (1927); Wagner et son influence sur l'art musical français (1930); Introduction à l'étude de Parsifal (1937; posthumous).

Infantas, Fernando de las, Spanish musician and theologian; b. Córdoba, 1534; d. after 1607. He belonged to a noble family and enjoyed the protection of the Emperor Charles V and later of Philip II, who employed him on diplomatic missions in Italy. He went to Venice, and then to Rome, where he lived for 25 years (1572-97). He exerted a decisive influence upon the course of Catholic church music by opposing the plan for the reform of the Roman Gradual undertaken by Palestrina in 1578 at the request of Pope Gregory XIII. Backed by the authority of Philip II of Spain, he succeeded in having the project abandoned. He publ. Sacrarum varii styli cationum tituli Spiritus Sancti, a collection of motets in 3 books: I for 4 voices, II for 5 voices (both publ. in Venice, 1578), III for 6-8 voices (Venice, 1579), and Plura modulationum genera quae vulgo contrapuncta appellantur super excelso gregorian cantu (Venice, 1579; contains 100 contrapuntal exercises for 2-8 voices based on 1 plain-song theme; pointed the way to a new freedom and elasticity in polyphonic writing); separate compositions were also publ. in various collections of the time. A Sequence for 6 voices, Victimae paschali, was publ. by W. Dehn in Sammlung älterer Musik aus dem 16. und 17. Jahrhundert, vol. V, pp. 6-11 (Berlin, 1837-40).—Cf. R. F. Molitor, Die nachtridentinische Choralreform (vol. I); R. Mitjana, Don Fernando de las Infantas, teólogo y músico (Madrid, 1918).

Infante, Manuel, Spanish composer; b. Osuna, near Seville, July 29, 1883. He studied piano and composition with Enrique Morera; in 1909 he settled in Paris; gave concerts of Spanish music; wrote numerous pieces for piano, mostly on Spanish themes, in an Impressionistic idiom: Gitanerias;

Pochades Andalouses; Sevillana, fantasy (1922); El Vito (variations on a popular theme); also an opera, Almanza.

Ingegneri (in-jeh-nä-rē), Marco Antonio, Italian composer; b. Verona, 1545; d. Cremona, July 1, 1592. He was a pupil of Vincenzo Ruffo, organist of Verona Cathedral. He went to Cremona about 1568 and became maestro di cappella at the cathedral there (1576). Monteverdi was his pupil.—Works: a book of Masses a 5-8 (1573); a second, a 5 (1587); 4 of Madrigals a 4-5 (1578, 1579, 1580, 1584); Sacrae cantiones a 5 (1576); Sacrae cantiones a 7-16 (1589). The 27 celebrated Responses, formerly attributed to Palestrina, are by Ingegneri. They had been printed in Breitkopf & Härtel's edition of Palestrina's works (vol. 32) as of doubtful authenticity, but were eliminated when Haberl, in 1897, discovered a copy (printed in Venice, 1588) with the full name of Ingegneri. Many other motets and madrigals appeared in collections of the time. A reprint of one of his motets is in Johannes Wolf's Sing- und Spielmusik aus älterer Zeit.—Cf. F. Haberl, M. A. Ingegneri, in the 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1898); R. Casimiri, in 'Note d'Archivio' (1926); Ellinor Dohrn, Marc Antonio Ingegneri als Madrigalkomponist (Hanover, 1936); G. Cesari, La musica in Cremona, in 'Istituzioni e monumenti dell' arte musicale italiana' (vol. 6).

Ingenhoven, Jan, Dutch composer; b. Breda, May 29, 1876; d. Hoenderlo, May 20, 1951. He studied with L. Brandts-Buys in Rotterdam and Mottl in Munich; lived in Germany and Switzerland; conducted a madrigal choir in Munich (1909-12); then devoted himself mainly to composition. His works are influenced by Debussy, but he preserves an element of peculiarly native melos. Among his works are a symph. fantasy, Brabant and Holland; 3 symphonic poems (Lyric; Dramatic; Romantic); 4 string quartets; woodwind quintet; trio for violin, cello, and harp; trio for flute, clarinet, and harp; trio for piano, violin, and cello; several choral works in the classical tradition; songs.—Cf. D. Ruyneman, De komponist Jan Ingenhoven (Amsterdam, 1938).

Inghelbrecht, Désiré Émile, French conductor and composer; b. Paris, Sept. 17, 1880. He studied at the Paris Cons.; after graduation, conducted at various theaters in Paris; toured as conductor of the Ballets Suédois (1919-22); was director of the Opéra-Comique (1924 and 1932-33). In 1945 he became conductor of the Paris Opéra; also conducted abroad. He publ. several books and pamphlets on conducting: Comment on ne doit pas interpréter Carmen, Faust et Pelléas (1932); Diabolus in musica (1933); Mouvement contraire: souvenirs d'un musicien (1947); and Le chef d'orchestre et son équipe (1948; English transl. as The Conductor's World, 1953). —Works: La Nuit vénitienne, opera in 3 acts after Musset (1908); the ballets, La bonne Aventure (1912), El Greco (Ballets Suédois, Paris, Nov. 18, 1920), Le Diable dans le beffroi (after Edgar Allan Poe; Paris Opéra, June 1, 1927), Jeux de Couleurs (Opéra-Comique, Feb. 21, 1933); for orch.: Automne (1905); Pour le jour de la première neige au vieux Japon (1908); Rapsodie de printemps (1910); Trois poèmes dansés (1925); La Métamorphose d'Ève (1925); La Légende du grand St. Nicolas (1925); chamber music: Deux esquisses antiques, for flute and harp (1902); Poème sylvestre, for woodwinds (1905); quintet for strings and harp (1918); pieces for cello and piano, and viola and piano; choral works: Le Cantique des créatures de Saint François d'Assise, for chorus and orch. (1919); Requiem (1940); Quatre chansons populaires françaises, for mixed chorus; piano works: La Nursery, four-hand pieces for children, 3 vols. (1905 and 1911); Suite petite-russienne (1908); Paysages (1918), etc.; also songs (Mémoires sur des poésies russes, 1905; Au jardin de l'enfance, 1910; etc.).

Insanguine, Giacomo (Antonio Francesco Paolo Michele), called Monopoli, Italian composer; b. Monopoli, March 22, 1728; d. Naples, Feb. 1, 1795. He studied with Cotumacci at the Cons. of San Onofrio in Naples; then became his master's assistant (1767) and second teacher (1774); after Cotumacci's death (1785), first teacher. He concurrently was second organist at the Cappella del Tesoro di San Gennaro (1774), first organist (1776); and maestro di cappella there (1781). He wrote some 15 operas, among them: Lo Fumaco revotato (1756); Didone abbandonata (1772); Arianna e Teseo (1773); Adriano in Siria (1773); Le astuzie per amore (1777); Medonte (1779); Calipso (1782). His best work is the 71st Psalm for 3-part chorus and orch.; he also composed other psalms, hymns, Masses, etc.

Inten, Ferdinand von, pianist and teacher; b. Leipzig, Feb. 23, 1848; d. New York, Jan. 16, 1918. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. (1862-66) with Moscheles, Plaidy, Hauptmann, and Reinecke; in 1868, came to the U. S. and settled in New York; made his American début in N. Y. (Dec. 12, 1868). He organized concerts of chamber music, which became famous. As a teacher, he also achieved success; among his pupils were Frank and Walter Damrosch.

Inzenga (ên-thên'-gah), José, Spanish writer on music; b. Madrid, June 3, 1828; d. there, June 28, 1891. He first studied with his father, then at the Madrid Cons. and the Paris Cons.; prof. at the Madrid Cons. (1860). He was commissioned by the Minister of Public Instruction to make a collection of Spanish folksongs, which he publ. as Cantos y bailes populares de España (4 vols., 1888); also wrote a treatise on accompaniment, and Impresiones de un artista en Italia. He was very successful as a composer of zarzuelas: Para seguir una mujer (1851); Don Simplicio Bobadilla (1853); Un día de reino (1854); El campamento (1861); Si yo fuera rey (1862); etc.

Iparraguirre y Balerdi (ê-pah-rah-gêr'-reh ê bah-lâr-dê'), José Maria de, Spanish-Basque composer and poet; b. Villarreal de Urrechú, Aug. 12, 1820; d. Zozobastro de Isacho, April 6, 1881. He led a wandering life; improvised songs, accompanying himself on the guitar; one of his songs, Guernikako Arbola, a hymn to the sacred tree of Guernica, became the national anthem of the Basques. As a result of the unrest in the Basque country, and his own participation in it, he was compelled to leave Spain; spent many years in South America; was enabled to return to Spain in 1877, and even obtained an official pension.

Ippolitov-Ivanov (real name Ivanov, but assumed his mother's name to distinguish himself from Michael Ivanov, the music critic), Mikhail Mikhailovitch, Russian composer; b. Gatchina, Nov. 19, 1859; d. Moscow, Jan. 28, 1935. He entered the St. Petersburg Cons. in 1875; studied composition with Rimsky-Korsakov, graduating in 1882. He then received the post of teacher and director of the Music School in Tiflis, in the Caucasus, where he remained until 1893; he became deeply interested in Caucasian folk music; many of his works were colored by the semi-Oriental melodic and rhythmic inflections of that region. Upon Tchaikovsky's recommendation, was appointed in 1893 prof. of composition at the Moscow Cons.; from 1906-22 he was its director.

IRELAND

Among his pupils were the composers Glière and Vasilenko. From 1899 on, he was conductor of the Mamontov Opera in Moscow; in 1925, became conductor of the Bolshoy Theater in Moscow. Sergei Boguslavsky, Ippolitov-Ivanov (Moscow, 1936).

Ireland, John, English composer; b. Inglewood, Bowden, Cheshire, Aug. 13, 1879. A member of a literary family (both his parents were writers), he received a fine general education. As his musical inclinations became evident, he entered the Royal College of Music in 1893, studying piano with Frederick Cliffe, and composition with Stanford. His parents died while he was still a student; he obtained positions as organist in various churches; the longest of these was at St. Luke's, Chelsea (1904-26). In 1905 he received the degree of Bac. Mus. at the Univ. of Durham; honorary Mus. Doc. there in 1932. He taught at the Royal College of Music for a number of years; Benjamin Britten, Alan Bush, E. J. Moeran, and other British composers were his pupils. He began to compose early in life; during his student years, he wrote a number of works for orch., chamber groups, and voices, but destroyed most of them. His creative catalogue, therefore, begins in 1903 (with the song cycle Songs of a Wayfarer). His early compositions were influenced by the German Romantic school; soon he felt the impact of modern musical ideas; he adopted many devices of the French Impressionist school; his rhythmic concepts were enlivened by the new Russian music presented by the Diaghilev ballet. At the same time, he never wavered in his dedication to the English spirit of simple melody; his writing is often modal or pentatonic, evocative of the basic outlines of insular folk music. — Works: For orch.: The Forgotten Rite, symph. prelude (1913); Mai-Dun, symph. rhapsody (1921); A London Overture (1936); Concertino pastorale, for strings (1939); Epic March (1942); Satyricon (1946); piano concerto (London, Oct. 2, 1930). Choral works: Morning Service, for voices with organ (1907-20); motet, Greater love hath no man (1912); Communion Service (1913); Evening Service (1915); These things shall be, for baritone solo, chorus, and orch. (1937); a number of four-part songs a cappella; two-part songs with piano accompaniment; unison choral songs with piano accompaniment. Chamber music: Fantasy Trio for piano, violin, and cello (1906); trio for violin, clarinet, and piano (1913; rewritten for violin, cello, and piano, 1915, and revised again in 1938); trio No. 2, for violin, cello, and piano (1917); violin sonata No. 1 (1909; revised twice, 1917, 1944); violin sonata No. 2 (1917); cello sonata (1923); Fantasy Sonata, for clarinet and piano (1943). For piano: The Daydream, and Meridian (1895; revised 1941); Decorations (1913); The Almond Trees (1913); Rhapsody (1915); London Pieces (1917-20); Leaves from a Child's Sketchbook (1918); Summer Evening (1919); sonata (1920); On a Birthday Morning (1922); Soliloquy (1922); sonatina (1927); Ballade (1929); Indian Summer (1932); Green Ways (1937); Sarnia, 'An Island Sequence' (1941); Three Pastels (1941); organ works; about 100 songs, to words by D. G. Rossetti, Christina Rossetti, Thomas Hardy, A. E. Housman, Ernest Dowson, etc. A miniature essay on Ireland was publ. by J. & W. Chester, Ltd., in 1923; see also Edwin Evans' article on Ireland in Cobbett's 'Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music'; Josef Holbrooke, Contemporary British Composers (London, 1925); Nigel Townshend, The Achievement of John Ireland, in 'Music & Letters' (April, 1943).

Irino, Yoshiro, Japanese composer; b. Vladivostok (Siberia), Nov. 13, 1921. He studied economy at the Tokyo Imperial Univ.; studied music with S. Moroi; won the Mainichi Music Prize (1949; 1950); employed the 12-tone technique in his music. His works include: a symphony (1948); a concert overture (1948); Sinfonietta (Tokyo, Nov. 13, 1953); an operetta, The Man in Fear of God (Tokyo, May 25, 1954); a string quartet (1945); a piano trio (1948); a string sextet (1950); Concerto da camera for 7 instruments (1951); sonata for cello and piano (1945); etc.

Isaac (ē'zakh), Heinrich (or Isaak, Isak, Yzac, Ysack; in Italy, Arrigo Tedesco [Henry the German]; Low Latin Arrighus), Netherlandish polyphonist (the Italian term 'Tedesco' was used at the time for Netherlanders as well as Germans); b. Brabant, c. 1450; d. Florence, 1517. From 1480-92 he was in the service of Lorenzo de' Medici, in the capacities of organist, maestro di cappella, and teacher to Lorenzo's children. He afterwards spent several years in Rome, and finally was called to the court of Maximilian I, at Vienna, as 'Symphonista regis'; from 1514 until his death he lived in Florence. He was greatly influenced by the music of the countries in which he lived, writing with equal facility in the Netherlandish, Italian, and German styles as they flourished in his day.—Works: 23 Masses a 4-6 (of which 10 were publ. between 1506-39); those in MS are in the libraries at Vienna (8), Munich (4), and Brussels (1). Motets and psalms by Isaac were printed in some 40 collections from 1501-64 (see Eitner, 'Bibliographie der Musiksammlerwerke'; Berlin, 1877). One of the most beautiful of German chorales, Nun ruhen alle Wälder, is sung to the melody by Isaac, Inspruk, ich muss dich lassen. A voluminous collection of motets, Choralis Constantinus, was ed. by his pupil Ludwig Senfl, in 1550 (3 parts). Parts I and II were republished in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (vols. 5 and 16);

Part III, by the Univ. of Michigan Press (1950; ed. by Louise Cuyler). Isaac's secular works were ed. by Joh. Wolf and also republished in the 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich' (vol. 14). The Missa carminum was publ. in F. Blume's 'Das Chorwerk,' ed. by R. Heyden (1932). Other reprints are in Eitner's 'Publikation älterer Musikwerke' I (5 4-voiced vocal works) and A. Schering's Geschichte der Musik in Beispielen (a Kyrie and a canzona). 5 polyphonic Masses from Isaac's Choralis Constantinus were transcribed and ed. by Louise Cuyler (Univ. of Michigan, 1956).—Cf. Blaschke, Heinrich Isaaks Choralis Constantinus, in 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch' (1931).

Ishii, Kan, Japanese composer; b. Tokyo, March 30, 1921. He studied at the Musashino Music School with T. Goh, T. Ikenouchi, and H. Odaka; later at the Hochschule für Musik in Munich, with Eichhorn and Orff. Among his works are a symph. poem, Mountain (Tokyo, Oct. 7, 1954); the ballets, God and the Bayadere (Tokyo, Nov. 6, 1950) and Birth of a Human (Tokyo, Nov. 27, 1954); a piano sonata (1948); etc.

Isidore of Seville, Spanish theologian; b. Cartagena; d. Seville, April 4, 636. He was brought to Seville as a child; in 599, became archbishop there. Between 622 and 633, compiled a treatise on the arts, Etymologiarum sive originum libri XX; he expressed the conviction that music can only be preserved through memory, for musical sounds could never be notated (scribi non possunt). The text was published in Oxford (1911); an English transl. of the pertinent parts is included in Strunk's Source Readings in Music History (N. Y., 1950). See also Karl Schmidt, Quaestiones de musicis scriptoribus romanis imprimis Cassiodoro et Isidoro (Leipzig, 1898).

Isler, Ernst, Swiss organist and music critic; b. Zürich, Sept. 30, 1879; d. there, Sept. 26, 1944. He studied in Zürich and Berlin; served as organist in Zürich, and taught organ there. He became music critic of the influential daily paper, 'Neue Zürcher Zeitung,' in 1902 and held this position until his death; he was editor of the 'Schweizerische Musikzeitung' from 1910-27. He publ. several monographs, on Hans Huber, Max Reger, etc., also a valuable compendium, Das Zürcherische Konzertleben, 1895-1914 (Zürich, 1935), and its sequel, covering the years 1914-31 (Zürich, 1936).

Isolfsson, Pall, Icelandic organist and composer; b. Stokkseyri, Oct. 12, 1893. He studied in Leipzig with Reger and Straube; was assistant organist at the Thomaskirche (1917-19); then studied in Paris with Bonnet. Returning to Iceland, he was appointed director of the Reykjavik Cons. in 1937. He has written numerous choral and organ works.

Isouard (ē-zōō-ahr'), Nicolo, opera composer; b. Malta, Dec. 6, 1775; d. Paris, March 23, 1818. A son of a prosperous merchant, he was sent to Paris to study engineering; afterwards, he served as a clerk in Malta, Palermo, and in Naples, where he took lessons with Sala and Guglielmi. In the spring of 1794 he produced his first opera, L'avviso ai maritati, in Florence; from that time on he abandoned business pursuits, dedicating himself to operatic composition. In order not to embarrass his family, and particularly his father, who was against his career as a musician, he adopted the name Nicolo de Malte, or simply Nicolo. He served as organist of St. John of Jerusalem at Malta (1795-98); in 1799, went to Paris, where he became increasingly successful as an opera composer; he was also popular as a pianist. In Paris he had to undergo strong competition with Boieldieu; but the lengthy list of productions of his operas up to 1816 shows that he had never relaxed his industry. The music of his operas demonstrates a facile melodic gift in the French manner, as well as sound craftsmanship; it is the lack of originality that led to the eventual disappearance of his works from active repertory. Besides operas, he also wrote church music. The best known of his operas are Cendrillon, Joconde, and Jeannot et Colin. A list of his operas, produced in Paris, includes: Le Petit Page (with R. Kreutzer; Feb. 14, 1800); La Statue (April 26, 1802); L'intrigue au Sérail (April 25, 1809); Cendrillon (Feb. 22, 1810); La Victime des arts (Feb. 27, 1811); La Fête du village (March 31, 1811); Le Billet de loterie (Sept. 14, 1811); Le Magicien sans magie (Nov. 4, 1811); Lully et Quinault (Feb. 27, 1812); Le Prince de Catane (March 4, 1813); Les Français à Venise (June 14, 1813); Joconde (Feb. 28, 1814); Michel-Ange (Dec. 11, 1802); Les Confidences (March 31, 1803); Le Baiser et la quittance (June 18, 1803); Le Médecin turc (Nov. 19, 1803); L'Intri- gue aux fenêtres (Feb. 26, 1805); Le Déjeuner de garçons (April 24, 1805); La Ruse inutile (May 30, 1805); Léonce (Nov. 18, 1805); La Prise de Passaw (Feb. 8, 1806); Idala (July 30, 1806); Les Rendez-vous bourgeois (May 9, 1807); Les Créanciers (Dec. 10, 1807); Un Jour à Paris (May 24, 1808); Cimarosa (June 28, 1808); Jeannot et Colin (Oct. 17, 1814); Les Deux Maris (March 18, 1816); L'une pour l'autre (May 11, 1816); Aladin (Feb. 6, 1822; posthumous work, completed by Benincori and Habeneck).—Cf. E. Wahl, Nicolo Isouard (Munich, 1906).

Isserlis, Julius, pianist; b. Kishinev, Nov. 7, 1888. He studied with Puchalski at the Kiev Cons.; then with Safonov and Taneyev at the Moscow Cons. (1906; gold medal); toured in Europe and America (1907-09); taught at the Moscow Philharmonic Institute of Music (1913-23); then in Vienna (1923-28); in 1928, settled in London. He has written a number of character pieces for piano.

Istel, Edgar, eminent musicologist; b. Mainz, Feb. 23, 1880; d. Miami, Fla., Dec. 17, 1948. He studied in Munich with Thuille and Sandberger; received his Dr. phil. with the dissertation J. J. Rousseau als Komponist (1900); then settled in Munich as a teacher; in 1919, taught in Berlin; in 1920 he moved to Madrid, where he remained until the outbreak of the civil war in 1936; then went to England, and eventually to the U. S. (1938). — Writings: Das deutsche Weihnachtsspiel und seine Wiedergeburt aus dem Geiste der Musik (Langensalza, 1901); Richard Wagner im Lichte eines zeitgenössischen Briefwechsels (1902); Peter Cornelius (1906); Die Entstehung des deutschen Melodramas (1906); Die komische Oper (1906); Die Blütezeit der musikalischen Romantik in Deutschland (1909); Das Kunstwerk Richard Wagners (1910); Das Libretto (1914; English ed. as The Art of Writing Opera Librettos, N. Y., 1922); Die moderne Oper vom Tode Wagners bis zum Weltkrieg (Leipzig, 1915); Niccolo Paganini (Leipzig, 1919); Revolution und Oper (1919); Das Buch der Oper; die deutschen Meister von Gluck bis Wagner (Berlin, 1919); Bizet und Carmen (Stuttgart, 1927). Between 1915 and 1934, he contributed a number of articles on various composers to the 'Mus. Quarterly'; edited the musical writings of E. T. A. Hoffmann, the collected essays of Cornelius, and Dittersdorf's autobiography; wrote analytical brochures on works of Mahler, Humperdinck, and others. Istel was also a composer: he wrote 6 operas; Hymn to Zeus, for chorus and orch.; songs.

Istomin, Eugene, American pianist; b. New York (of Russian parents), Nov. 26, 1925. He studied with Rudolf Serkin at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia; in 1943 won the Leventritt Award for an appearance with the N. Y. Philharmonic, which he made on Nov. 21, 1943, playing the 2nd Concerto of Brahms. He has appeared with several other American orchestras, and has also played in recitals.

Ito, Ryuto, Japanese composer; b. Hiroshima, March 4, 1922. He studied at the Tokyo Univ.; then turned to music and studied composition with Ikenouchi, Moroi, and Takata. Subsequently he divided his interests between music and medicine. Several of his works received prizes awarded by the Tokyo newspaper 'Mainichi.'

Iturbi, José, celebrated pianist and conductor; b. Valencia, Spain, Nov. 28, 1895. He took lessons with Joaquin Malats in Barcelona as a small child; then played in cafés in Valencia to earn a living. A sum of 1400 pesetas was raised through a newspaper campaign to enable him to go to Paris for further study; he entered the Paris Cons., graduating with honors in 1912. He then went to Switzerland, where he again played in cafés and hotels. In 1919 he obtained the post of piano teacher at the Geneva Cons. From 1923 he turned to a virtuoso career; his playing of Spanish music was brilliantly successful; extensive tours in Europe and South America followed. In 1928 he made his American début, which at once established his reputation as a pianist of individual gifts; he gave 77 concerts in the U. S. during his second American tour in 1930; also appeared with leading symphony orchestras. In 1936 he began a career as conductor; conducted the Rochester Philharmonic Orch. for several seasons; also gave concerts in the dual role of pianist and conductor. He has written a number of pieces in the Spanish vein, of which Pequeña danza española, for piano, is particularly attractive. His sister, Amparo Iturbi (b. Valencia, March 12, 1899), is also a talented pianist; she appeared with Iturbi on numerous occasions in Europe and America as duo pianists.

Ivanov, Mikhail Mikhailovitch, Russian music critic and composer; b. Moscow, Sept. 23, 1849; d. Rome, Oct. 20, 1927. He studied at the Technological Institute in St. Petersburg, graduating in 1869; then went to Moscow, where he took private lessons with Tchaikovsky; from 1870-76 he lived in Rome, where he studied with Sgambati. In 1876 he returned to St. Petersburg, and became critic of the influential newspaper 'Novoye Vremya.' He assumed a hostile attitude towards composers of the National School; possessing a lively literary style, he used irony as well as direct attack against new musical developments; this earned him the enmity of most composers. In his own works, Ivanov imitated Tchaikovsky. He wrote a ballet, Vestal Virgin (St. Petersburg, Feb. 29, 1888); an opera, Zabava Putiatishna (Moscow, Jan. 15, 1899); another opera, Potemkin Holiday, written earlier, was produced in St. Petersburg on Dec. 16, 1902. He also wrote a symph. poem, Grasshopper Musician, and a number of songs; publ. Pushkin in Music (St. Petersburg, 1899); The Historical Development of Music in Russia (2 vols., St. Petersburg, 1910-12); translated into Russian Hanslick's Vom Musikalisch-Schönen.

Ivanov-Boretzky, Mikhail Vladimirovitch, Russian musicologist; b. Moscow, June 26, 1874; d. there, April 1, 1936. He studied law in Moscow; then went to Italy, where he studied music in Florence; returning to St. Petersburg, he took lessons with Rimsky-Korsakov. In 1921 he was appointed member of the Council of the State Institute of Musical Science; also was dean of the Moscow Cons. He edited a number of anthologies; translated several books by European music historians, and published little biographies of Palestrina, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and other composers.—Publications: Materials and Documents of Music History (with a synoptic table of 18th-century music; Moscow, 1934); preface to a transl. of Schweitzer's book on Bach (Moscow, 1934); articles on various composers in the Soviet Encyclopedia. He wrote 2 operas: The Jewels of Aphrodite and The Witch; also a pageant, Festival of Electricity (Omsk, 1925); some chamber music; choral works.

Ivanov - Radkevitch, Nicolay Pavlovitch, Russian composer; b. Krasnoyarsk, Siberia, Feb. 10, 1904. He studied at the Moscow Cons. with Glière, graduating in 1928. He has written 4 symphonies (1928, 1932, 1937, 1945); Russian Overture (1939); Heroic Poem (1942); Rhapsody on Ukrainian Themes (1946); Sketches of the Russian Landscape; violin sonata; cello sonata; clarinet sonata; piano pieces. His military marches, expertly orchestrated for band, are very popular in Russia. In 1943 he received a Stalin prize for his patriotic band pieces, Our Own Moscow, The People's Avengers, etc.

Ivanovici (ē-vah-noh'-vē-tchē), Rumanian composer; b. Banat, 1848; d. Bucharest, April 1, 1905. He was a military band leader; wrote a great number of effective pieces, of which the waltz, The Waves of the Danube (1880), achieved tremendous popularity.

Ives, Charles Edward, remarkable American composer; b. Danbury, Conn., Oct. 20, 1874; d. New York, May 19, 1954. His father, George Ives, was a band leader of the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery during the Civil War, and the early development of Charles Ives was determined by the village concerts organized by his father. At the age of 12 he played the drums in the band, and also received from his father rudimentary training in piano and cornet playing; at 13 he played organ at the Danbury church; soon he began to compose band music; his first piece was Holiday Quick Step, performed by the band in 1888. He attended the Danbury High School; then entered Yale Univ. (1894), where he took regular academic courses, and also studied composition with Horatio Parker and organ with Dudley Buck; graduated in 1898; was a clerk in an insurance company; also played organ at the Central Presbyterian Church in New York (1899-1902), and continued to compose. In 1907 he formed a partnership with Julian Myrick in an agency for insurance; the firm of Ives & Myrick prospered, and Ives was able to devote himself to music without thoughts of earning a living from it. In 1908, he married Harmony Twichell. He retired from business in 1930. About the same time he was compelled to stop writing music because of a diabetic condition which made it difficult for him to handle a pen. It is an extraordinary fact that his recognition as a composer came gradually only after that. His works, written early in the century, were performed for the first time decades later; in 1947 he received the Pulitzer Prize for his 3rd symphony, written in 1911. In 1919 Ives published, at his own expense, his Concord Sonata, for piano; and in 1922, a volume of 114 songs written between 1884 and 1921; copies were distributed free of charge; most of the songs were republished in 'New Music Quarterly'; 2 movements of his 4th symphony were publ. by 'New Music Quarterly' in 1929; an orchestral set, Three Places in New England, was publ. by Birchard (1935). As his fame grew, many of his works appeared in print. After his death, his manuscripts were given to Yale Univ. for study and eventual publication.—The role of Ives in American music is unique; he was a true pioneer of a strong national art, and at the same time he applied methods and techniques that anticipated by many years the advance of modern music elsewhere in the world. Virtually every work he wrote bears relation to American life, not only by literary association, but through actual quotation of American musical sources, from church anthems to popular dances and marches. He experimented with dissonant harmonies, simultaneous conflicting rhythms, and fractional intervals, such as quarter-tones, and combined simple diatonic tunes with chromatically embroidered counterpoints resulting in a highly complex polytonal and polyrhythmic texture. In some of his works he introduced an element of improvisation, in the manner of village musicians playing a constant refrain in a free style. In his orchestration, he often indicated interchangeable instruments and optional parts, so that the same work is available in several versions; thus in the last movement of the Concord Sonata, there is an optional part for flute obbligato. — Ives possessed an uncommon gift for literary expression; his annotations to his works are trenchant and humorous; he publ. Essays Before a Sonata (N. Y., 1920) as a literary companion volume to the Concord Sonata; contributed articles to the musical press. He was acutely conscious of his civic duties as an American, and once circulated a proposal to have federal laws enacted by direct popular referendum. — Works: For orch.: 5 symphonies: No. 1, in D minor (1896-98); No. 2 (1897-1902; N. Y., Feb. 22, 1951); No. 3 (1901-04; N. Y. May 5, 1947); No. 4 (1910-16; 2nd movement only perf. N. Y., Jan. 29, 1927); also incomplete fragments of a Universe Symphony (1911-16); Three Places in New England (1903-14; N. Y., Jan. 10, 1931; perf. by the Chamber Orch. of Boston, Slonimsky conducting); Calcium Light Night, for chamber orch. (1898-1907); Central Park in the Dark (1898-1907); The Unanswered Question (1908); Theater Orchestra Set: In the Cage, In the Inn, In the Night (1904-11); Hallowe'en for piano and strings (1911); The Pond (1906); Browning Overture (1911); The Gong on the Hook and Ladder, or Firemen's Parade on Main Street, for chamber orch. (1911); Lincoln, the Great Commoner, for chorus and orch. (1912); A Symphony: Holi- days, in 4 parts, also performed separately: Washington's Birthday (1913), Decoration Day (1912), Fourth of July (1913), Thanksgiving and/or Forefathers' Day (1904); Over the Pavements, for chamber orch. (1913); Orchestral Set No. 2 (1915); Tone Roads, for chamber orch. (1911-15); Orchestral Set No. 3 (1919-27). Chamber music: string quartet No. 1, subtitled A Revival Service (1896); Prelude, from 'Pre-First Sonata,' for violin and piano (1900); trio for violin, clarinet, and piano (1902); 'Pre-Second String Quartet' (1905); Space and Duration, for string quartet and a mechanical piano (1907); All the Way Around and Back, for piano, violin, flute, bugle, bells (1907); The Innate, for string quartet and piano (1908); Adagio Sostenuto, for English horn, flute, strings, and piano (1910); violin sonata No. 1 (1908); violin sonata No. 2 (1910); trio, for violin, cello, and piano (1911); string quartet No. 2 (1913); violin sonata No. 3 (1914); Set, for string quartet and piano (1914); violin sonata No. 4, subtitled Children's Day at the Camp Meeting (1915). Choral works: Psalm 67 (1898); The Celestial Country, cantata (1899); Three Harvest Home Chorales, for mixed chorus, brass, double bass, and organ (1898-1912); General William Booth's Entrance into Heaven, for chorus with brass band (1914). Piano pieces: Three-Page Sonata (1905); Some Southpaw Püchling (1908); The Abolitionist Riots (1908); sonata No. 1 (1909); Twenty-Two (1912); Three Protests for Piano (1914); sonata No. 2, for piano, subtitled Concord, Mass., 1840-1860, in 4 movements; Emerson, Hawthorne, The Alcotts, Thoreau (1909-15; 1st perf. in its entirety by John Kirkpatrick, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1939; the last movement requires the application of a strip of wood on the keys to produce pandiatonic or panpentatonic chords); Three Quarter-tone Piano Pieces (1903-24); 114 songs (1884-1921).—Bibliography: the basic biography is Charles Ives and His Music, by Henry and Sidney Cowell (N. Y., 1955). See also Henry Bellamann, Charles Ives, The Man and His Music, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1933); Henry Cowell, Charles Ives, in American Composers on American Music (Stanford Univ., 1933); Paul Rosenfeld, Discoveries of a Music Critic (N. Ives (Ive), Simon, English composer; b. Ware, July (baptized July 20), 1600; d. London, July 1, 1662. He was organist in Newgate and a choral master at St. Paul's Cathedral in London; wrote music for masques at the court. His songs, catches, and rounds were published in several 17th-century collections: Playford's Select Ayres and Dialogues (1669) and Musical Companion (1672), Hilton's Catch that Catch can (1652), etc. He also wrote instrumental music, some of which was included in Musick's Recreation (1652 and 1661).

Ivögün, Maria (real name Inge von Gunther), Hungarian coloratura soprano; b. Budapest, Nov. 18, 1891. She studied with Irene Schlemmer-Ambros in Vienna; was a member of the Munich Opera (1913-25); Berlin State Opera (1925-45); taught at the Music Academy in Vienna (1948-50); in 1950, appointed prof. at the Musik Hochschule in Berlin. She was married to the Bavarian tenor, Karl Erb, in 1921 (divorced, 1932); then to her accompanist, Michael Raucheisen (1933).

Ivry, Richard d', French opera composer; b. Beaune, Feb. 4, 1829; d. Hyères, Dec. 18, 1903. He studied music as an avocation; wrote mostly for the stage; also songs and hymns; composed several grand operas: Les Amants de Vérone, after Romeo and Juliet (Paris, Oct. 12, 1878); Fatma, Omphale et Pénélope, etc. He used the anagram Yrvid as a nom de plume.

Iwamoto, Marito, Japanese violinist; b. Tokyo, Jan. 19, 1926. She studied at the Music Academy in Tokyo; played at 14 with the Tokyo Symph. Orch. She made her American début in N. Y. on June 14, 1950, with considerable success, and remained in the U. S.

J

Jacchia (yahk-kē'-ah), Agide, Italian conductor; b. Lugo, Jan. 5, 1875; d. Siena, Nov. 29, 1932. He studied at the Cons. of Parma (1886-91) and at the 'Liceo Musicale' at Pesaro (1891-98); won prizes for flute (1896), conducting (1897), and composition (1898). He made his début as conductor in Brescia (Dec. 26, 1898); then conducted in Ferrara (1899-1900) and at La Fenice in Venice (1901). In 1902 he accompanied Mascagni on his American tour; then filled various engagements in Italy (1903-06). He conducted the Milan Opera Co. on its American tour in 1907-09; was conductor of the Montreal Opera Co. (1910-13); of the Century Opera Co. (1914); and of the Boston National Opera (1915-16). In 1918 he became conductor of the Boston Pops concerts, and led them for 9 seasons (until 1926). In 1928 he returned to Italy.

Jachet of Mantua (Jaquet Collebaud de Vittré), composer; b. Vittré, France, c. 1495; d. Mantua, 1559. He served at the Cathedral of Mantua as maestro di cappella (1539-58). His published works include 4-part motets (Venice, 1539); 5-part motets (Venice, 1540); Mass in 4 parts (Paris, 1554); Masses in 5 parts (Venice, 1555); Messe del Fiore in 5 parts (Venice, 1561); Passions in 5 parts, and other church works (Venice, 1567). Many of his motets were included in contemporary anthologies. His Mass, La Fede non debbe esser corrotta, was reprinted by A. Reinbrecht in 1892.—Cf. G. Reese, Music in the Renaissance (N. Y., 1954; pp. 366-67).

Jachimecki (yah-ki-met'-skē), Zdzisław, eminent Polish musicologist; b. Lwow, July 7, 1882; d. Cracow, Oct. 27, 1953. He studied in Lwow with S. Niewiadomski and H. Jarecki, and in Vienna with Adler (musicology) and Schoenberg (composition); Dr. phil. with a dissertation 150 Psalms by Mikolaj Gomolka (1906). He then became a member of the faculty at the Univ. of Cracow. Jachimecki was one of the most renowned Polish musicologists; he was also a composer of choral works; was conductor of symphonic concerts in Cracow from 1908-24. Most of his writings are published in Polish, in Cracow. They include: The Influence of Italian Music on Polish Music (1911); Organ Tablature of the Holy Ghost Cloister in Cracow, 1548 (1913); Music of the Royal Court of King Wladyslaw Jagiello (1915); Outlines of Polish History of Music (Warsaw, 1919); Moniuszko (Warsaw, 1921); Chopin (1926; in French as F. Chopin et son œuvre, Paris, 1930); monographs on Mozart, Haydn, Wagner, Szymanowski, etc.; contributed an article on Moniuszko to the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1928); publ. Muzyka Polska (2 vols., 1948, 1951).

Jachino, Carlo, Italian composer; b. San Remo, Feb. 3, 1889. He studied with Luporini in Lucca and with Riemann in Leipzig; then taught at the Parma Cons. (until 1936), at Naples (1936-38), and at the Santa Cecilia in Rome (1938-50). He became director of the Cons. San Pietro in Naples in 1950. His opera Giocondo e il suo re was produced in Milan (June 24, 1924). He also wrote several works of chamber music; a treatise on the 12-tone method of composition, Tecnica dodecafonica (Milan, 1948); and Gli strumenti d'orchestra (Milan, 1950). In his early compositions he followed the Romantic Italian style; later he adopted a modified 12-tone method.

Jachmann-Wagner. See Wagner, Johanna.

Jackson, George K., English organist and theorist; b. Oxford, 1745; d. Boston, Mass., Nov. 18, 1822. He was a pupil of Dr. James Narer; became a surplice boy at the Chapel Royal, London; was among the tenor singers at the Handel Commemoration in 1784; 1791, Mus. Doc., St. Andrew's College. In 1796 he came to Norfolk, Va., then to Elizabeth, N. J., and N. Y. City (1804, music director at St. George's Chapel). By 1812 he was in Boston, where he remained as organist at various churches; also gave a series of oratorios with Graupner and Mallet. A collection of his music is in the library of the Harvard Music Association, Boston. He publ. First Principles, or a Treatise on Practical Thorough Bass (London, 1795); David's Psalms (1804); A Choice Collection of Chants (1816); The Choral Companion (1817); Watt's Divine Hymns set to music.—Cf. F. J. Metcalf, American Writers and Compilers of Sacred Music (1925); H. E. Johnson, George K. Jackson, Doctor of Music (1745-1822), in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (Jan., 1943).

Jackson, George Pullen, American folklorist and writer; b. Monson, Maine, Aug. 20, 1874; d. Nashville, Jan. 19, 1953. He studied philology in Dresden and at the Univ. of Chicago (Ph. B., 1904; Ph. D., 1911); was teacher of German at Vanderbilt Univ. (1918-43); founder of the Tennessee State Sacred Harp Singing Association; elected president of the Tennessee Folklore Society (1942). He was the author of the following books: The Rhythmic Form of the German Folk Songs (1917); White Spirituals in the Southern Uplands (1933); Spiritual Folk songs of Early America (1937; 2nd ed., 1953); White and Negro Spirituals (1943); Story of the Sacred Harp (1944); Another Sheaf of White Spirituals (1952).

Jackson, Samuel P., organist; b. Manchester, England, Feb. 5, 1818; d. Brooklyn, N. Y., July 27, 1885. Son of the organ-builder James Jackson, he was taken to America in 1825, and learned his father's trade; his music teachers were Moran (piano) and Thornton (harmony). From 1830-42 he played the organ at St. Clement's Church; at St. Bartholomew's from 1842-61; later at other churches. He taught organ and theory; was for many years music proof reader for G. Schirmer, Inc. Besides a variety of excellent vocal sacred music, he published Gems for the Organ, and 4 books of very popular Organ-Voluntaries.

Jackson, William (I), English organist and composer; b. Exeter, May 29, 1730; d. there, July 5, 1803. He was a pupil of Sylvester, organist of Exeter Cathedral, and of J. Travers in London. After teaching for years at Exeter, he became (1777) organist and choirmaster at the cathedral. Besides the operas The Lord of the Manor (London, Dec. 27, 1780) and Metamorphoses (London, Dec. 5, 1783), he composed odes (Warton's Ode to Fancy; Pope's The Dying Christian to his Soul; etc.) and a large number of songs, canzonets, madrigals, pastorals, hymns, anthems, church services, etc.; also sonatas for harpsichord.—Writings: 30 Letters on Various Subjects (London, 1782); Observations on the Present State of Music in London (1791); and The Four Ages, together with Essays on Various Subjects (1798).

Jackson, William (II), English organist and composer; b. Masham, Yorkshire, Jan. 9, 1815; d. Bradford, April 15, 1866. A self-taught musician, he became organist at Masham in 1832; won first prize, offered by the Huddersfield Glee Club, in 1840; 1852, established a music business and became organist of St. John's Church at Bradford; later was conductor of Bradford Choral Union.

Jacob, Benjamin, English organist; b. London, May 15, 1778; d. there, Aug. 24, 1829. He was a pupil of Willoughby, Shrubsole, and Arnold (1796); served as organist at various churches, finally at Surrey Chapel (1794-1825). With Wesley and Crotch, he gave organ recitals (1808-14), which were attended by large crowds; conducted a series of oratorios in 1800, and the Lenten Oratorios at Covent Garden in 1818. Jacob was very active in spreading the Bach cult in London (see O. A. Mansfield, J. S. Bach's First English Apostles in the Mus. Quarterly, April, 1935). He publ. National Psalmody (London, 1819) and other collections; also glees and catches.

Jacob, Gordon, English composer and pedagogue; b. London, July 5, 1895. He studied with Stanford at the Royal College of Music; from 1926, taught there; served as examiner of music schools; also was active as music editor (Penguin Scores, etc.). Among his works are 2 symphonies (1929 and 1944); 3 symph. suites; a Sinfonietta (1942); Variations on an Air by Purcell, for strings (1930); viola concerto (1925); concerto for piano and strings (1927); concerto for oboe and strings (1933); concerto for bassoon, strings, and percussion (1947); concerto for violin and string orch. (London, Aug. 21, 1953); Rhapsody for English horn and strings (1948); concerto for horn and strings (1951); quartet for oboe and strings (1938); quintet for clarinet and strings (1942); many arrangements for ballet performances (Schumann's Carnaval, William Byrd Suite, Orlando Gibbons Suite, also suites from works by Couperin, Liszt, Chopin, etc.); original ballets (The Jew in the Bush, Uncle Remus, etc.); film music. He publ. Orchestral Technique: a Manual for Students (Oxford, 1931) and How to Read a Score (Oxford, 1944).

Jacob, Maxime, French composer; b. Bordeaux, Jan. 13, 1906; studied in Paris with Gedalge, also with Koechlin and Milhaud; living in Paris. — Principal works: comic opera, Blaise le Savetier; incidental music to Voulez vous jouer avec moi? (Paris, 1921); a Sérénade for piano 4 hands (orchestrated, 1923); a number of songs to poems of Musset, Lamartine, Cocteau, and others; a cycle of 14 Chansons d'amour to 17th-century texts. In 1930 he joined the Benedictine Order, and devoted himself to sacred music.—Cf. Jean Roy, Maxime Jacob, in the Revue Musicale (July, 1939).

Jacobi, Frederick, American composer; b. San Francisco, May 4, 1891; d. New York, Oct. 24, 1952. He studied with Paolo Gallico and Rafael Joseffy (piano) and Rubin Goldmark (composition); then went to Germany, where he studied with Paul Juon in Berlin. Returning to America, he took lessons with Ernest Bloch. From 1913-17, he was coach at the Metropolitan Opera; in 1917-18, played saxophone in army bands. In 1917 he married the pianist Irene Schwarz. He taught at the Master School of United Arts in N. Y. (1927) and at the Juilliard School of Music (1936-50). He was very active in modern music societies; was a member of the executive board of the League of Composers. In his compositions he often employed American Indian themes (he was a student of Indian music); another group of his works is based on Jewish motives; he also wrote music in a neo-Classical style. He received the David Bispham Memorial Award for his opera, The Prodigal Son (1944). His other works include: For orch.: The Pied Piper, symph. poem (1915); A California Suite (San Francisco, Dec. 6, 1917); The Eve of St. Agnes (1919); Symphony No. 1, 'Assyrian' (1922; San Francisco, Nov. 14, 1924); Indian Dances (Boston Symph., Cambridge, Nov. 8, 1928); Three Psalms, for cello and orch. Jacobi, George, violinist and composer; b. Berlin, Feb. 13, 1840; d. London, Sept. 13, 1906. He studied in Brussels with Bériot and in Paris with Massart and Gevaert; won first prize (violin) at the Paris Cons. in 1861; became first violinist at the Paris Opéra and also conducted concerts in Paris. In 1871 he became conductor at the Alhambra Theatre in London; from 1896, taught at the Royal College of Music. He wrote about 100 ballets and a comic opera, The Black Crook, which attained temporary popularity.

Jacobs-Bond. See Bond, Carrie Jacobs.

Jacobson, Maurice, English publisher and composer; b. London, Jan. 1, 1896. He studied with Stanford and Holst at the Royal College of Music; was active as a pianist; then joined the staff of J. Curwen & Sons; became director of the firm in 1933. He composed a ballet, David (1936), incidental music to Shakespeare's plays, the cantatas The Lady of Shalott (1942) and The Hound of Heaven (1953), many short instrumental pieces, songs, etc.

Jacobsthal (jah'-köhbs-tähl), Gustav, German music theorist; b. Pyritz, Pomerania, March 14, 1845; d. Berlin, Nov. 9, 1912. He studied at the Univ. of Strasbourg (1863-70); from 1872, taught music there; publ. the valuable treatises, Die Mensuralnotenschrift des 12. und 13. Jahrhunderts (1871) and Die chromatische Alteration im liturgischen Gesange der abendländischen Kirche (1897). Friedrich Ludwig and Erich Schmidt publ. a memorial tribute, Trauerfeier für Gustav Jacobsthal (Berlin, 1912). See also Friedrich Gennrich, Die Stassburger Schule für Musikwissenschaft (1940).

Jacoby, Georg. See Jacobi, George.

Jacopo da Bologna (Jacobus de Bononia), 14th-century composer; one of the earliest representatives of the Florentine 'Ars nova'; he wrote madrigals, ballate, etc.; his MSS are in the libraries of Florence and Paris and at the British Museum in London. His complete works are publ. in W. T. Marocco, The Music of Jacopo da Bologna (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1954). Johannes Wolf publ. 3 madrigals in his Geschichte der Mensuralnotation (Nos. 40-42); one madrigal is in G. Reese's Music in the Middle Ages (N. Y., 1940; p. 363), and another in A. T. Davison and W. Apel, Historical Anthology of Music (Cambridge, Mass., 1947). A treatise by Jacopo da Bologna is described by Wolf in the 'Kroyer-Festschrift' (1933; L'arte del biscanto misurato secondo el maestro Jacopo da Bologna).

Jacotin (zhäh-köh-tan') (real name Jacques Godebrie), Flemish composer; b. Antwerp, c. 1445; d. there, March 23, 1529. He was for nearly half a century 'chapelain' in the choir of Notre Dame in Antwerp (1479-1528). His vocal works were publ. in collections by Attaignant (1529, 1530-35) and Rhaw (1545), in Le Roy's & Ballard's 'Chansons nouvellement composées' (1556), etc. He excelled especially in French chansons; of these Trop dure m'est ta longue demeure is reproduced in H. Expert's reprint of Attaignant's collection of 1529; and Mon triste cœur, in Eitner's 'Selection of 60 Chansons' (1899). Several motets attributed to Jacotin and publ. by Petrucci are of doubtful authenticity. His Sancta Divinitas unus Deus for 8 voices appeared in Uhlhardt's collection of 1546.

Jacques-Dalcroze. See Jaques-Dalcroze.

Jacques de Liège (Jacobus de Leodio), Belgian music theorist; b. Liège, about 1270; d. there, after 1330. He studied in Paris; then was a cleric in Liège. About 1330, already at an advanced age, he wrote the important compendium Speculum musicae in 7 parts, in 293 folios (586 pages; approximating some 2000 pages in modern typography); it was formerly attributed to Johannes de Muris, but the authorship of Jacques de Liège is proved by the specific indication in the manuscript (Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale) that the initial letters of the 7 chapters form the name of the author; these letters are I-A-C-O-B-U-S. W. Grossmann in his book, Die einleitenden Kapitel des Speculum Musicae von J. Muris (Leipzig, 1924), overlooks this indication. For detailed discussion of the problem, see R. Bragard, Le Speculum Musicae du Compilateur Jacques de Liège in 'Musica Disciplina' (1953-54; also printed separately); H. Besseler, Studien zur Musik des Mittelalters in the 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (1925-27). Selections from the Speculum musicae are given in English transl. in O. Strunk's Source Readings in Music History (N. Y., 1950); the complete Latin text, ed. by R. Bragard, was publ. in the Corpus Scriptorum de Musica of the American Institute of Musicology (1956).

Jadassohn (yäh'-dähs-son), Salomon, noted German pedagogic; b. Breslau, Aug. 13, 1831; d. Leipzig, Feb. 1, 1902. He studied piano and violin in Breslau; in 1848 he took courses at the Leipzig Cons.; in 1849 he was in Weimar, where Liszt accepted him as a student; then he returned to Leipzig, and studied privately with Hauptmann. He remained in Leipzig during his entire life; organized a choral society, Psalterion (1866); conducted the concerts of the Euterpe Society. In 1871 he was appointed instructor at the Leipzig Cons.; in 1887 he was made Dr. phil. (honoris causa); in 1893 he became Royal Professor. A scholar of the highest integrity and great industry, he codified the traditional views of harmony, counterpoint, and form in his celebrated manuals, which have been translated into many languages. He was a firm believer in the immutability of harmonic laws, and became the Rock of Gibraltar of conservatism in musical teaching; through his many students, who in turn became influential teachers in Germany and other European countries, the cause of orthodox music theory was propagated far and wide. He was also a composer; wrote 4 symphonies; a piano concerto; 3 piano quintets; a piano quartet; 4 piano trios; 2 string quartets; a serenade for flute and string orch.; a cavatina for cello with orch.; choral works; many piano pieces and songs. He was a master of contrapuntal forms, and wrote a number of vocal duets in canon; other contrapuntal devices are illustrated in many of his works. His music is totally forgotten; but his importance as a theorist cannot be doubted. His manuals, covering a wide range of musical subjects, are: Harmonielehre (Leipzig, 1883; 7th ed., 1903; English ed., N. Y., 1893, under the title, A Manual of Harmony, transl. by Th. Baker); Kontrapunkt (1884; 5th ed., 1909); Kanon und Fuge (1884; 3rd ed., 1909); Die Formen in den Werken der Tonkunst (1889; 4th ed., 1910); Lehrbuch der Instrumentation (1889; 2d ed., 1907); Die Kunst zu Modulieren und Präludieren (1890); Allgemeine Musiklehre (1892); Elementar-Harmonielehre (1895); Methodik des musiktheoretischen Unterrichts (1898); Das Wesen der Melodie in der Tonkunst (1899); Das Tonbewusstsein; die Lehre vom musikalischen Hören (1899); Erläuterung der in Bachs 'Kunst der Fuge' enthaltenen Fugen und Kanons (1899); Der Generalbass (1901).

Jadin (zhah-dan'), Louis Emmanuel, French composer and conductor; b. Versailles, Sept. 21, 1768; d. Paris, April 11, 1853. He was at first a page in the household of Louis XVI; after the Revolution, he was on the staff of the Théâtre de Monsieur; there he produced his comic opera, Joconde (Sept. 14, 1790). He then wrote all kinds of festive compositions to be performed on special occasions during the revolutionary years. In 1802 he became prof. of piano at the newly established Paris Cons., succeeding his brother, Hyacinthe Jadin (1769-1800). During the Napoleonic wars he continued to write patriotic pieces; his orchestral overture, La Bataille d'Austerlitz, enjoyed great popularity for a while. He also wrote pieces for piano, and piano duets. —Cf. G. de Saint-Foix, Les Frères Jadin, in the 'Revue Musicale' (1925).

Jadlowker (yăhd-lôhv'-kër), Hermann, tenor; b. Riga, July 5, 1878; d. Tel Aviv, May 13, 1953. He left home as a boy to escape a commercial career and entered the Vienna Cons. He made his début as operatic tenor in Cologne (1889). In 1901 he was heard in Karlsruhe by Wilhelm II, who engaged him to sing in Berlin; after 5 years with the Berlin Opera, he went to Vienna. He made his American début at the Metropolitan Opera House in Faust (Jan. 22, 1910); in 1913, went again to Berlin; from 1929 until 1938 he was cantor at the synagogue of his native town, Riga; then went to Palestine, where he settled as a teacher.

Jaëll (yah'-el), Alfred, noted pianist; b. Trieste, March 5, 1832; d. Paris, Feb. 27, 1882. He studied with his father, Eduard Jaëll; appeared as a child prodigy in Venice in 1843; continual concert tours earned him the nickname of 'le pianiste voyageur.' He traveled in America in 1852-54; after this, he lived in Paris, Brussels, and Leipzig. In 1866 he married Marie Trautmann (see below); made piano transcriptions from Wagner, Schumann, and Mendelssohn.

Jaëll-Trautmann, Marie, pianist, wife of Alfred Jaëll; b. Steinseltz, Alsace, Aug. 17, 1846; d. Paris, Feb. 7, 1925. She studied with Henri Herz at the Paris Cons., where she won first prize. After her marriage, she accompanied her husband on his travels. She wrote many characteristic pieces for piano, and published pedagogical works: La musique et la psycho-physiologie (1895); Le mécanisme du toucher (1896); Le toucher (1899); L'intelligence et le rythme dans les mouvements artistiques (1905); Le rythme du regard et la dissociation des doigts (1906); La coloration des sensations tactiles (1910); La résonance du toucher et la topographie des pulpes (1912); La main et la pensée musicale (posthumous, 1925). —Cf. H. Kiener, Marie Jaëll (1952).

Jagel (yă'-gël), Frederick, American tenor; b. Brooklyn, June 10, 1897. His mother and father were pianists. He was a clerk for the Mutual Life Insurance Co.; studied in Milan (1923-27) and with William Brady in N. Y. (1932-42). He made his operatic début in 1924 in Leghorn as Rodolfo; then sang in Italy and Spain; début with the Metropolitan Opera Co. as Radames (Nov. 8, 1927). He was a member of the San Francisco Opera Co. (1931, 1939, 1942-44); at the Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires (1928, 1939-41). On June 12, 1928, he married Nancy Weir, an opera singer.

Jahn (yahn), Otto, learned German philologist and musicographer; b. Kiel, June 16, 1813; d. Göttingen, Sept. 9, 1869. He studied languages and antiquities at Kiel, Leipzig, and Berlin; then traveled in France and Italy; in 1839 he settled in Kiel as a lecturer on philology; in 1842 became prof. of archeology at Greifswald; was director of the Archeological Museum in Leipzig (1847); he lost this position in the wake of the political upheaval of 1848. In 1855 he was appointed prof. of archeology at Bonn Univ. He went to Göttingen shortly before his death. In the field of music, his magnum opus was the biography of Mozart (Leipzig, 1856-59, in 4 vols.; 2nd ed., 1867, in 2 vols.; 3rd ed., 1889-91, revised by H. Deiters; 4th ed., also revised by Deiters, 1905-07; 7th ed., revised by Hermann Abert, 2 vols., 1956). The English translation (by P. Townsend) appeared in 3 vols. in London (1882). Jahn's biography was the first musical life written according to the comparative critical method; it reviews the state of music during the period immediately preceding Mozart; this comprehensive exposition has become a model for subsequent musical biographies. Jahn intended to write a biography of Beethoven, according to a similar plan, but could not complete the task; Thayer utilized the data accumulated by Jahn in his own work on Beethoven; Pohl used Jahn's notes in his biography of Haydn. Numerous essays by Jahn were publ. in his Gesammelte Aufsätze über Musik (1866). He composed songs, of which 32 were publ. in 4 books; he also brought out a volume of songs for mixed voices; edited the vocal score of Beethoven's Fidelio. —Cf. J. Vahlen, Otto Jahn (1870); E. Petersen, Otto Jahn in seinen Briefen (Leipzig, 1912); J. Pulver, Otto Jahn, in the 'Musical Times' (April, 1913).

Jahn, Wilhelm, conductor; b. Hof, Moravia, Nov. 24, 1834; d. Vienna, April 21, 1900. At the age of 20 he became a theater conductor in Budapest; then occupied similar posts in Agram, Amsterdam, and Prague. He spent a number of years in Wiesbaden (1864-81); finally settled in Vienna, where he became musical director of the Vienna Opera. He retired in 1897, and was succeeded by Mahler.

Jähns (yāns), Friedrich Wilhelm, German vocal pedagogue and writer on music; b. Berlin, Jan. 2, 1809; d. there, Aug. 8, 1888. He studied singing with Grell; sang at the Berlin Opera as a boy soprano in the chorus. In 1845 he founded a singing society, which he conducted until 1870; in 1881 he became instructor of rhetoric at Scharwenka's Cons. He was very successful as a vocal teacher in Berlin; had some 1,000 pupils. His admiration for Weber impelled him to collect all materials pertaining to Weber's life and works; his unique library, containing 300 autograph letters and many other documents, pamphlets, essays, and first editions, was acquired in 1883 by the Berlin Royal Library. He publ. a treatise on Weber, with a thematic catalogue, Carl Maria von Weber in seinen Werken (Berlin, 1871). Apart from exhaustive bibliographical data, this book is historically interesting, because in the preface the author introduced, for the first time in print, the Wagnerian term 'Leitmotiv'; this was later popularized by Wolzogen and others. In 1873 Jähns publ. a biographical sketch of Weber. He was also a composer; his works include a Grand Sonata for violin and piano; a piano trio; a book of Schottische Lieder, and many other vocal pieces.

Jalas (yah'-lass), Jussi (real name, Blomstedt), Finnish conductor; b. Jyväskylä, June 23, 1908. He studied with Krohn in Helsinki, and later in Paris with Rhené-Baton and Monteux. Since 1945 he has conducted at the Helsinki Opera. He has appeared as guest conductor in Scandinavia, Germany, France, and England; also in the U. S. (1950 and 1955). Jalas is regarded as one of the most authentic interpreters of the music of Sibelius, whose son-in-law he was.

James, Dorothy, American composer; b. Chicago, Dec. 1, 1901. She studied with Gruenberg and Weidig at the Chicago Musical College and the American Cons. of Music (M.M.); in 1929, was appointed to the staff of the Michigan State Normal College. Among her works are Three Symphonic Fragments (Rochester, March 24, 1932); 3 Pastorales, for clarinet, harp, and strings (1933); Recitative and Air, for viola, 2 violins, and 2 cellos (1943); also choral works: The Little Jesus Came to Town (1935), Paul Bunyan (1938), Niobe (1941), Mary's Lullaby (1942).

James, Philip, eminent American composer; b. Jersey City, N. J., May 17, 1890. He studied with Rubin Goldmark, Scalero, Norris, and Schenck. He was in the army during World War I; and after the Armistice was appointed bandmaster of the American Expeditionary Force General Headquarters Band. At various times, he conducted the Winthrop Ames Theatrical Productions (1915-16), Victor Herbert Opera Co. (1919-22), New Jersey Symph. Orch. (1922-29), Brooklyn Orchestral Society (1927-30), Bamberger Little Symphony (Station WOR; 1929-36); also was guest conductor with the Philadelphia Orch. and the N. Y. Philharmonic. In 1933 he was elected a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters; won numerous prizes, among them one by the 'Homiletic Review' for a hymn (1927); $5000 1st prize offered by NBC, for his orch. suite, Station WGZ-BX; honorable mention in the American Composers' Conference, sponsored by the N. Y. Philharmonic, for his overture Bret Harte; 1st prize of $500 given by the Woman's Symph. Orch., N. Y. (1938), etc. Philip James had a distinguished career as teacher. In 1923 he joined the faculty of N. Y. Univ.; became chairman of the music dept. in 1933; retired in 1955.—Works: For the stage: Judith, dramatic reading with ballet and small orch. (1927); incidental music to the play Arms for Venus (1937). For orch.: suite for strings (N. Y. Univ., April 28, 1934); a Sea Symph. (1928); Overture in Olden Style on French Noël's (Montclair, N. J., Dec. 14, 1926, composer conducting); orchestral transcription of Bach's Wir glauben all' (1929; Brooklyn, Feb. 18, 1929, composer conducting); Song of the Night, symph poem (1931; N. Y., March 15, 1938); Concertino for piano and orch. (1931; after Mozart); Station WGZBX, satirical suite (NBC Symph. Orch., May 1, 1932); Bret Harte, overture (N. Y. Philh., Dec. 20, 1936); Gwalia, a Welsh rhapsody for orch. (N. Y., Feb. 18, 1940, composer conducting); Symph. No. 1 (1943; Vienna, 1952); Sinfonietta (1946; N. Y., 1950); 2nd suite (1943; Saratoga Springs, Sept. 5, 1946); for string orch. Miniver Cheevy, and Richard Cory, for narrator and orch. (Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 9, 1947); Brennan on the Moor (CBS Symph. Orch. Nov. 28, 1939); symph. poem Chaumont, for small orch. (1948; N. Y., 1951); Symph. No. 2 (1949). Chamber music: string quartet (1924); suite for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn (1936); piano quartet (1938). Choral works: The Nightingale of Bethlehem, for soloists, chorus, and orch. (1919); The Nun, for women's chorus and orch. (1922); Song of the Future, for mixed chorus a cappella (1922); The Light of God, for mixed chorus and organ (1919); Missa Imaginum, for mixed chorus and orch. (1929); Stabat Mater Speciosa, for mixed chorus and orch. (1921; rev. 1930); General William Booth Enters Into Heaven, for tenor, male voices, and small orch. (1932); Psalm 150, for mixed chorus and orch. (1940); World of Tomorrow, for mixed chorus and orch. (1938); Psalm 117, for mixed chorus (1944); Shirat Ha-Yam, for mixed chorus and orch. (1944); organ sonata (1930); organ suite; various minor works.—Cf. J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939, and subsequent eds.); Gilbert Chase, America's Music (N. Y., 1955).

Jan (yahn), Karl von, German writer on music; b. Schweinfurt, May 22, 1836; d. Adelboden, Switzerland, Sept. 3, 1899. He took the degree of Dr. phil. at Berlin (1859) with the thesis De fidibus Graecorum; taught at the 'Graues Kloster' and at Landsberg until 1875, when he went to Saargemünd, and thence (1883) to the Lyceum at Strasbourg. He publ. several essays on ancient Greek music. An important work is his critical edition (superseding Meibom's) of the Greek writers on music: Musici scriptores graeci; Aristoteles, Euclides, Bacchius, Cleonides, Nichomachus, Gaudentius, Alypius (1895), with an appendix, Melodiarum reliquiae, containing all the vocal music known in his day to be extant (this also in a separate edition, augmented and revised, 1899).

Jan, Maistre. See Gallus, Johannes.

Janáček (yah'-näh-chěk), Leoš, renowned Czech composer; b. Hukvaldy, Moravia, July 3, 1854; d. Moravian-Ostau, Aug. 12, 1928. At the age of ten he was placed at the Augustine monastery in Brno as a chorister; then studied in high school, and at the Cons. of Prague, where he took lessons in organ with Skuherský; later studied composition with L. Grill at the Leipzig Cons. (1879-80), and with Franz Krenn at the Vienna Cons. After a few months of study there, he returned to Brno, where he was active in many capacities throughout his life. He was appointed director of the Brno Organ School in 1881; was conductor of the Czech Philh. (1881-88); in 1919 became prof. of composition at the Brno Cons., attracting many young Czech composers whose creative efforts he greatly helped; was pensioned in 1925, and received an honorary Dr. phil. from the Univ. of Prague. Although he began to compose early in life, it was not until 1904, with the production of his opera, Její Pastorkyna (commonly known under its German title, Jenufa), that his importance as a national composer was established. Many performances followed in Vienna, throughout Germany and Russia, and in New York. He wrote several more operas, some of them on satirical subjects, which, however, had less impact on the outside world. In the field of religious music, he created a unique score, Glagolitic Mass (also known as Festival Mass or Slavonic Mass), to a text in old Slavonic, but not admissible to church performance because he made use of instrumental accompaniment contrary to the usage of the Eastern Church. Janáček took great interest in Russian literature and music; he visited Russia three times; his operas Kata Kabanová and From the House of the Dead and several other works are based on Russian literary works. There is an affinity between Janáček's method of dramatic prosody and Mussorgsky's ideas of realistic musical speech, but Janáček never consciously imitated the Russian models. He was a firm believer in the artistic importance of folksongs and collected a number of them in his native Moravia; contributed a paper on the musical structure of national songs to the Prague Academy (1901). During the last two decades of his life, Janáček was strongly influenced by the French school; the idiom of his instrumental works of that period clearly reflects Impressionist usages. — Works: operas: Sarka (1887; several revisions; perf. Brno, Nov. 11, 1925); Počátek románu (Beginning of a Romance; Brno, Feb. 10, 1894); Její pastorkyna (Her Foster Daughter; German title, Jenufa; 1894-1903; Brno, Jan. 21, 1904); Osud (Fate; 1904; Brno Radio, Sept. 18, 1934); modern comic operas, Výlet pana Broučka do měsíce (Mr. Brouček's Excursion to the Moon) and Výlet pana Broučka do XV. století (Mr. Brouček's Excursion into the 15th Century; both in Prague, April 23, 1920); Kata Kabanová (after Ostrovsky's play, The Storm; Brno, Nov. 23, 1921); Přítomný Lůžky Bystroušky (The Cunning Little Vixen; Brno, Nov. 6, 1924); Věc Makropulos (The Makropulos Affair; 1923-25; Brno, Dec. 18, 1926); Z mrtvého domu (From the House of the Dead; 1928; after Dostoyevsky; posthumously produced, Brno, April 12, 1930); a ballet, Rákoczi Rákoczy (Prague, July 24, 1891); choral works: for chorus and orch.: Amarus (1898), Na Soláni Carták (1911), Otče Náš (The Lord's Prayer), Glagolitic Mass (Slavonic Mass, or Festival Mass), for soli, chorus, and orch. (Brno, Dec. 5, 1927); for chorus a cappella: Potulný šilenec; Maryčka Magdónova; orchestral works: Valašské tanze (Brno, May 23, 1889); symph. poem Šumařovo dítě (The Musician's Child; 1912; Prague, Nov. 14, 1917); Taras Bulba, rhapsody, after Gogol (Prague, Nov. 9, 1924); Balada blanická (Ballad of Blaník, symph. poem; Brno, March 21, 1920); Sinfonietta (Prague, June 29, 1926); concertino for piano and orch. (Brno, Feb. 16, 1926); Capriccio for piano, left hand and orch. (Prague, March 2, 1928); chamber music: piano trio, subtitled From Tolstoy's Kreutzer Sonata (1908); 3 violin sonatas (1879, 1913, 1921); 3 string quartets (1880, 1923, 1928); sextet for wind instruments (1924); piano pieces (a sonata, etc.); song cycles: Ryhadly, nursery songs; Zápisník zmizelého (Diary of a Vanished Man); also many excellent folksong arrangements. — Bibliography: Max Brod, Leoš Janáček (1924; in German, 1925); H. A collection of documents and studies pertaining to Janáček's work was publ. in Prague under the title O lidové písne a lidové hudbě (1955). A complete list of works with exact dates of composition and performance is found in Gr. Černušák and Vlad. Helfert, Pazdírkuv Hudební Slovník Naučný, vol. 2 (Prague, 1937).

Janeček, Karel, Czech composer; b. Czeszochowa, Poland, Feb. 20, 1903. He studied at the Prague Cons. with Křicka and with Novák; in 1941 became instructor there. In his music Janáček has adopted a traditional national style.—Works: symphony (1940); 3 string quartets; string trio; trio for flute, clarinet, and bassoon; several choral works on national themes.

Janequin (zhähn-kän'), Clément, creator and chief representative of the new 16th-century French polyphonic chanson; b.

Châtellerault, about 1485; d. c. 1560. He was a pupil of Josquin. In his youth he may have been in the service of Louis Ronsard, father of the poet Pierre Ronsard, and may have accompanied his master during the Italian campaigns, from 1507 to the battle of Marignano, 1515. About 1520 he was in Paris and later perhaps in Spain. There is evidence that in 1529 he was in Bordeaux, subsequently in the service of the Cardinal of Lorraine (d. 1550), then chaplain of the Duke de Guise, whose victories he celebrated by extended chansons. From 1545 to 1558 he was curate at Unverre. In a dedication in verse, of 1559, he bemoans his old age and poverty.—Besides many detached pieces in collections of the time (Attainant's, Gardane's, etc.), and chansons in special editions, there were publ. 2 Masses (1532, 1554), Sacræ cantiones seu motetæ 4 voc. (1533), Proverbs de Salomon mis en cantiques et ryme françoise (1554), Octante deux psaumes de David (1559); etc. Among the most interesting 'Inventions' (chansons) in 4-5 parts are La Bataille (portraying the battle of Marignano; Verdelot added a fifth part to the original four), La Prise de Boulogne, Le Chant des oiseaux, etc. Some of Janequin's works are ambitious examples of program music. Reprints have been made by Henri Expert in his 'Maîtres Musiciens de la Renaissance française' (chansons; vol. 7) and by Maurice Cauchie in 'Les Concerts de la Renaissance,' Part 2 (a collection of 30 3- and 4-voiced chansons by Janequin; 1928). Cauchie also ed. 2 5-voiced chansons (Le Caquet des femmes and La Jalouzie). — Cf. M. Cauchie, Clément Janequin: Recherches sur sa famille et sur lui-même, in the 'Revue de musicologie' (Feb., 1923); M. Janigro, Antonio, Italian cellist; b. Milan, Jan. 21, 1918. He studied at the Milan Cons.; then with Alexanian in Paris; toured in Europe, South America, Africa, and Asia. In 1939 he was appointed prof. at the Zagreb Cons.

Janis, Byron (real name, Yanks), American pianist; b. Pittsburgh, March 24, 1928; appeared as soloist with the Pittsburgh

Symph. Orch. at the age of 15; then studied privately with Vladimir Horowitz. He has appeared with orchestras and in solo recitals in the U. S. and Europe. He made his American début with the Pittsburgh Symph. Orch. in Rachmaninoff's 2nd piano concerto (Feb. 20, 1944).

Jankélévitch, Vladimir, French music critic; b. Bourges, Aug. 31, 1903. He has publ. a number of biographical studies: Gabriel Fauré et ses mélodies (1938; new augmented ed., 1951); Maurice Ravel (1939); Debussy et le mystère (1949); also La Rapsodie: verve et improvisation musicale (1955); contributed a number of articles to music magazines.

Jankó, Paul von, Hungarian pianist and inventor; b. Totis, June 2, 1856; d. Constantinople, March 17, 1919. He studied at the Polytechnic, Vienna, and also at the Cons. (under Hans Schmitt, Krenn, and Bruckner); then (1881-2) at Berlin Univ. (mathematics), and with Ehrlich (piano); from 1892 lived in Istanbul (Constantinople). His keyboard, invented in 1882, is really a new departure in piano-mechanics, though standing in distant relationship to the older 'chromatic' keyboard advocated by the society 'Chroma.' It has six rows of keys in step-like succession; the arrangement of the two lowest rows (typical of the other two pairs) is as follows: the capitals representing white keys, and the small letters black ones. The 3rd and 4th rows, and the 5th and 6th rows, are mere duplications of the 1st and 2nd; and corresponding keys in the 1st, 3rd, and 5th rows, and in the 2nd, 4th, and 6th rows, are on one and the same key-lever, so that any note can be struck in three different places. The fingering of all diatonic scales is alike; chromatic scales are played by striking alternative keys in any two adjoining rows. A full description of the keyboard was published in pamphlet form by its inventor (1886).—Cf. R. Hausmann, Die Jankó-Klavatur (1892); K. W. Marschner, Das Jankó-Klavier (1899); H. Schmitt, Zur Geschichte der Jankó-Klavatur (in 'Wiener Rundschau,' 1889); R. F. Münnich, Materialien für die Jankó-Klavatur (1905).

Jannaconi (yähn-nah-coh'-nē), Giuseppe, one of the last composers in 'Palestrina-style'; b. Rome, 1741; d. there, March 16, 1816. A pupil of S. Rinaldini and G. Carpani, he succeeded Zingarelli in 1811 as maestro at St. Peter's. He is noted for his scoring of many of Palestrina's works, aided by his friend Pisari. His works remain in MS in the Santini College now at Münster; they include a Mass, a Te Deum, a Magnificat, a Dixit Dominus, and a Tu es Petrus, all a 16; 16 Masses in 4-8 parts, with organ; 14 other Masses; 32 psalms in 4-8 parts; 10 Masses with orch.; 16 motets in 2-6 parts; 57 offertories and anthems a 3-8; a canon a 64; 2 canons a 16; an Ecce terrae motus for 6 basses; an oratorio for 2 tenors and 1 bass, L'Agonia di Gesù Christo; etc.

Janowka, Thomas Balthasar, Bohemian organist; b. Kuttenberg, 1660; date of death unknown. He was the compiler of Clavis ad thesaurum magnae artis musicae (Prague, 1701), which was the second (after Tinctoris) music dictionary in print. Only a few copies are extant.

Jansa, Leopold, Bohemian violinist and composer; b. Wildenschwert, March 23, 1795; d. Vienna, Jan. 24, 1875. He studied in Vienna; then taught violin there; was dismissed in 1849 after he took part in a concert in London for the benefit of the Hungarian revolutionists. He remained in England as a teacher for several years until the amnesty of 1868, when he returned to Vienna and received a pension. He was greatly esteemed as a violinist; he composed much violin music, including 4 concertos and 36 violin duets; other works are 8 string quartets, 3 string trios, and some church music.

Janssen, Herbert, German baritone; b. Cologne, Sept. 22, 1895. He studied in Cologne and Berlin; gave recitals; then became a member of the Berlin State Opera. He made his American début with the Metropolitan Opera Co. (Philadelphia, Jan. 24, 1939) as Wotan in Siegfried; then sang in other Wagnerian roles.

Janssen, Werner, American composer and conductor; b. New York, June 1, 1899. He studied with Frederick Converse in Boston, and as a young man began to compose operettas; contributed musical numbers to Ziegfeld's Follies and other revues. After graduation from Dartmouth College, he won the Prix de Rome of the American Academy (1930), and made his début as conductor during his stay in Rome; he then conducted in Berlin and Budapest and in Scandinavia. He gave a concert of music by Sibelius in Helsinki (1934) and was highly praised by Sibelius himself; received the Finnish Order of the White Rose, First Class, for his services to Finnish music. After conducting various European orchestras as guest, he made his American début as conductor with the N. Y. Philharmonic (Nov. 8, 1934); then conducted other American orchestras. He was the regular conductor of the Baltimore Symph. from 1937-39; then went to Hollywood, where he organized the Janssen Symph., with the purpose of commissioning and performing new works (1940); toured South America in 1941. He was conductor of the Utah Symph. Orch., Salt Lake City (1946-47), of the Portland, Oregon, Orch. (1947-49), and of the San Diego Philharmonic (1952-54). In 1937 he married the famous motion picture actress Ann Harding. As a composer, Janssen tends towards illustrative representation of modern life. His most spectacular work of this nature is New Year's Eve in New York (Rochester, May 9, 1929), a symph. poem for large orchestra with jazz instruments; the orchestra men are instructed to shout at the end, 'Happy New Year.' Other works are Obsequies of a Saxophone, for 6 wind instruments and a snare drum (Washington, D. C., Oct. 17, 1929); Louisiana Suite, for orch. (1930); Dixie Fugue (extracted from the Louisiana Suite; Rome, Nov. 27, 1932); Foster Suite, for orch., on Stephen Foster's tunes (1937); 2 string quartets; Kaleidoscope, for string quartet; film music; also popular songs.

Janssens, Jean-François-Joseph, Belgian composer; b. Antwerp, Jan. 29, 1801; d. there, Feb. 3, 1835. He studied with his father and later with Lesueur in Paris. Returning to Antwerp, he became a lawyer; was a notary public until the siege of Antwerp (1832); composed in his leisure hours. Going to Cologne, he lost his manuscripts and other possessions in a fire on the night of his arrival; this misfortune so affected him that he became insane. He wrote 4 operas, 2 cantatas, 2 symphonies, 5 Masses; a number of motets, anthems, and hymns; also songs.—Cf. Hendricks, Simple histoire. Boutades biographiques à l'occasion du 25<sup>ème</sup> anniversaire de la mort de J.-F.-J. Janssens (Antwerp, 1860); E. van der Straeten, J.-F.-J. Janssens, compositeur de musique (Brussels, 1866; contains a list of his works).

Jakues - Dalcroze (zhäkh dähk - krozh'), Émile, composer and creator of 'Eurhythmics'; b. (of French parents) Vienna, July 6, 1865; d. Geneva, July 1, 1950. In 1873 his parents moved to Geneva; having completed his course at the Univ. and also at the Cons. there, he went to Vienna for further study under R. Fuchs and A. Bruckner, and then to Paris, where he studied orchestration at the Cons. with Delibes; in 1892 he returned to Geneva as instructor of theory at the Cons. Since he laid special stress on rhythm, he insisted on all his pupils' beating time with their hands, and this led him, step by step, to devise a series of movements affecting the entire body. Together with the French psychologist Édouard Claparède, he worked out a special terminology and reduced his practice to a regular system, which he called 'Eurhythmics.' When his application to have his method introduced as a regular course at the Cons. was refused, he resigned, and in 1910 established his own school at Hellerau, near Dresden. Even before that time the new system had attracted wide attention, and the school flourished from the beginning; within three years branches were opened in France, Russia, Germany, England, and the U. S. (Bryn Mawr College, New York, and Chicago). Conditions resulting from the war brought about the closing of the school at Hellerau in 1915. After that he founded another school at Geneva, the headquarters of which were later moved to Paris. In 1925 the Hellerau School was established in Laxenburg, near Vienna. Jaques-Dalcroze himself also taught in London; in his later years he lived in Geneva. Without question, the results obtained by Jaques-Dalcroze have contributed toward the recent development of the ballet. Aside from his rhythmical innovations, he also commanded respect as a composer of marked originality and fecundity of invention; many of his works show how thoroughly he was imbued with the spirit of Swiss folk music. — Works: the operas Le Violon maudit (Geneva, 1893), Janie (Geneva, March 13, 1894), Sancho Panza (Geneva, 1897), Onkel Dazumal (Cologne, 1905; as Le bonhomme Jadis, Paris, 1906), Les Jumeaux de Bergame (Brussels, 1908), Fête de la jeunesse et de la joie (Geneva, 1932); an operetta, Respect pour nous (Geneva, 1898); a pantomime, Écho et Narcisse (Hellerau, 1912); Festival vaudois, for soli, chorus, and orch.; La Veillée, for soli, chorus, and orch.; Dance Suite in A for orch.; Suite de ballet; 2 violin concertos; string quartet; suite for cello and piano; Fantasia appassionata, for violin and piano; Images (1928); Dialogues (1931); Ariettes (1931); Rondeaux for piano (1933); several collections of songs (Chansons romandes et enfantines, Chansons populaires et enfantines, Idylles et chansons, Volkskinderlieder, Tanzlieder für Kinder, Chansons religieuses, Chansons de la gosse, etc.) He publ. Le cœur chante; impressions d'un musicien (Geneva, 1900); L'Éducation par le rythme, a series of lectures (1907); a comprehensive Méthode Jaques-Dalcroze (5 parts, 1907-14); Rhythm, Music and Education (Basel, 1922; in German, French, and English); Souvenirs (Neuchâtel and Paris, 1942); La musique et nous (Geneva, 1945); also The Child and the Piano, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1928); Eurhythmics and its Implications, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1930); L'Improvisation au piano, in 'Rhythm' (1932).—Cf. A. Járdányi, Pál, Hungarian composer; b. Budapest, Jan. 30, 1920. He studied violin as a child; later took lessons with Kodály; in 1946 was appointed instructor at the Budapest Academy of Music; has also been active as music critic. His works follow the style of modern Hungarian music, based on national folksongs. Járdányi has written a symphonic poem, Tisza (1952); violin sonata (1944); string quartet (awarded the Bartók prize in 1948); several albums of dances for piano, and numerous arrangements of folksongs.

Jardillier, Robert, French statesman and writer on music; b. Caen, March 31, 1890. He studied in Paris and Lyons; was prof. at the universities of Rochefort (1913-18) and Dijon (1918-32); in 1936 was appointed postmaster general in Léon Blum's cabinet. He publ. several valuable books: Smetana vu par les étrangers (Paris, 1924); Pelléas (Paris, 1927); La musique de chambre de César Franck (Paris, 1929), etc.

Jarecki (yăh-rět'-skē), Henryk, Polish conductor and composer; b. Warsaw, Dec. 6, 1846; d. Lwow, Dec. 18, 1918. He studied with Moniuszko; from 1877 to 1900 he was conductor at the Lwow Opera; wrote 7 operas on subjects from Polish literature; also a Polish Mass and a number of songs.

Jarecki (yăh-ret'-skē), Tadeusz, Polish conductor and composer; b. Lwow, Dec. 31, 1888. He studied with his father, Henryk Jarecki, and with Niewiadomski; then with Taneyev in Moscow (1913), where he graduated from the Cons. In 1913 he came to the U. S.; won the Coolidge Prize in 1918 for his 2nd string quartet. He remained in New York until 1932; then went back to Poland; was guest conductor with the Warsaw Philharmonic and the Lwow Orch.; then led symph. concerts and opera in Stanislawow (1932-37); lived in Paris (1938) and subsequently in London. In 1948 he settled in New York. His works include the symph. poem Chimère (1926); symph. suite La foule (1928); Sinfonia breve (Lwow, Jan. 15, 1932); 3 string quartets; songs. On Feb. 23, 1921 he married the American lyric soprano Louise Llewellyn Jarecka (b. New York, Dec. 10, 1889; d. there, March 6, 1954).

Jarnach, Philipp, composer; b. Noisy, France, July 26, 1892. He was a son of the Catalan sculptor E. Jarnach and a German mother. He studied at the Paris Cons. with Risler (piano) and Lavignac (theory). At the outbreak of World War I he went to Zürich, where he met Busoni; this meeting was a decisive influence in his musical development; he became an ardent disciple of Busoni; after Busoni's death, he completed Busoni's last opera, Doktor Faust, which was produced in Jarnach's version in Berlin on May 21, 1925. From 1922-27 Jarnach wrote music criticism in the 'Börsen-Courier' in Berlin. In 1927 he was appointed prof. of composition at the Cologne Cons., and remained at that post until 1949. In 1950 he became director of the Hamburg Cons. Jarnach's own music is determined by his devotion to Busoni's ideals; it is distinguished by impeccable craftsmanship, but it lacks individuality. He participated in the modern movement in Germany between the two world wars, and many of his works were performed at music festivals during that period. Among his works are a Sinfonia Brevis (1923); string quintet (1920); string quartet (1924); Musik zum Gedächtnis des Einsamen, for string quartet (1952); sonatina for flute and piano; cello sonatina, etc.—Cf. Hans Mersmann and E. G. Klusmann, Philipp Jarnach zum 60. Geburtstag (Hamburg, 1952); also references in E. J. Dent's Ferruccio Busoni (Oxford, 1933).

Järnefelt (yăr'-neh-felt), Armas, Finnish conductor and composer; b. Viborg, Aug. 14, 1869. He studied with Wegelius at the Helsinki Cons., and also with Busoni, who taught there at the time; he then went to Berlin (1890) and to Paris (1892), where he studied with Massenet. He began his career as an opera coach in Magdeburg (1896); then was at Düsseldorf (1897). Returning to Finland in 1898, he was conductor in his native town; in 1903 he received a government stipend for travel; was for 25 years conductor of the Stockholm Opera (1907-32); conductor of the Helsinki Opera (1932-36), and of the Helsinki Municipal Orch. (1942-43). He was married to the Finnish singer, Maikki Pakarinen (1893; divorced in 1908), then to another singer, Liva Edström. He wrote several works for orch., in a national Finnish style: Korsholm, Suomen synti, Laulu Vuokselle, Abo slott, etc.; his Berceuse and Praeludium for small orch. became extremely popular. See Väinö Pesola, Armas Järnefelt in Suomen Säveltäjiä, edited by Sulho Ranta (Helsinki, 1945; pp. 300-06).

Järnefelt, Maikki (née Pakarinen), Finnish soprano, wife of Armas Järnefelt; b. Joensuu, Aug. 26, 1871; d. Turku, July 4, 1929. She studied with Mme. Marchesi in Paris; became a well-known opera singer in Europe; also lived in America for several years. She was married to Järnefelt in 1893 and divorced in 1908; then was married to Palmgren (1910).

Jarno (yahr'-noh), Georg, composer; b. Budapest, June 3, 1868; d. Breslau, May 25, 1920. He conducted opera in Breslau; produced his own operas there: Die schwarze Kaschka (Breslau, May 12, 1895; his most successful opera), Der Richter von Zalamea (1899), and Der Goldfisch (1907); in Vienna he produced Die Förster-Christel (1907), Das Musikantenmädcl (1910), and Die Marine-Gustel (1912). Another opera, Das Farmer-mädchen, was produced in Berlin (1913).

Jarov (zhah'-rof), Sergey, Russian choral conductor; b. Moscow, March 20, 1896. He studied at the Academy for Church Singing at the Imperial Synod; then became an officer of the Cossacks. After the Revolution, and the defeat of the White Army, he left Russia and established a Don Cossack Chorus, with which he made successful tours in Europe; eventually settled in America.

The repertory of his chorus includes popular Russian songs in artful arrangements, emphasizing dynamic contrasts, and also sacred works by Russian composers.

Jaubert, Maurice, French composer; b. Nice, Jan. 3, 1900; killed in action in France, June 19, 1940. He studied law and took lessons in piano and composition at the Cons. of Nice. He abandoned the legal profession in 1923, when he went to Paris. He obtained considerable success with the score for the French film, Carnet de bal (1938). His works include: Suite française, for orch. (St. Louis, Nov. 10, 1933); Sonata a due, for violin, cello, and string orch. (Boston, Dec. 27, 1946); Jeanne d'Arc, symph. poem (1937), etc.

Jausions (zhoh-z'yóhn'), Dom Paul, French writer on church music; b. Rennes, Nov. 15, 1834; d. Vincennes, Indiana, Sept. 9, 1870. He entered the order of St. Benedict at Solesmes in 1856, and under the direction of Dom Guéranger began to study Gregorian Chant; continued his investigations in company with Dom Pothier, whose Mémoires Grégoriennes are the result of their joint labors. In 1869 he was sent to the U. S. to collect data for a biography of Bruté de Rémur, bishop of Vincennes (an uncle of Dom Guéranger), and died as he was about to return. His interpretation of the Gregorian melodies according to the tonic accent has become one of the guiding principles in the publications of the Benedictines of Solesmes. A complete list of his writings is found in the Bibliographie des Bénédictins de la congrégation de France (1907).

Jean-Aubry (zhón oh-bré'), Georges, French writer on music; b. Paris, Aug. 13, 1882; d. there, Nov. 14, 1949. He was a journalist; became interested in music; traveled in Europe and South America (1908-15); then lived in London, where he edited 'The Chesterian,' house organ of the publishing firm J. & W. Chester. He publ. La Musique française d'aujourd'hui (1915; in English, London, 1919) and La Musique et les nations (1922; in English, London, 1923).

Jean le Coq. See Gallus, Johannes.

Jeannin (zhāh-nān), Dom Jules Cécilien, French musicologist, specialist on Gregorian Chant; b. Marseilles, Feb. 6, 1866; d. Hautecombe, Feb. 15, 1933. He studied in Marseilles; later traveled extensively in Syria and Mesopotamia, gathering material for his collection, Mémoires liturgiques syriennes et chaldéennes (in 3 vols.: I, 1925; II, 1928; III, not publ.). Other works: Études sur le rythme grégorien (Lyons, 1926); Nuove osservazioni sulla ritmica gregoriana (Turin, 1930); La Question rythmique grégorienne in 'Revue Musicale' (1930). As a scholar he was an opponent of Dom Mocquereau, and wrote a book, Rythme grégorien: réponse à Dom Mocquereau (Lyons, 1928), disputing his theories. He spent the last years of his life as organist in the Hautecombe monastery.—Cf. L. Bonvin, Jules Cécilien Jeannin, in the 'Kirchen-musikalisches Jahrbuch' (1930).

Jeanson (yahn'-son), Bo Gunnar, Swedish musicologist; b. Göteborg, Oct. 10, 1898; d. Stockholm, Jan. 20, 1939. He studied at the Stockholm Cons. with L. Lundberg (piano) and T. Norlind (musicology); then took courses in Vienna with Wellesz, and in Freiburg, Switzerland, with Peter Wagner. In 1926 he received the degree of Dr. phil. for a dissertation on August Söderman; in 1927 became editor of the musicological publication 'Svensk Tidskrift för Musikforskning.' He publ. a music history, Musiken genom tiderna (2 vols.; Stockholm, 1927 and 1931; revised by J. Rabe, 1945).

Jedliczka (yěd'-lich-kah), Ernst, pianist; b. Poltava, Russia, June 5, 1855; d. Berlin, Aug. 3, 1904. He studied at the Moscow Cons. with Tchaikovsky and Nicholas Rubinstein; then taught there (1881-88). In 1888 he settled in Berlin; was first prof. of the Klindworth Institute (1888-97); then at the Stern Cons. (from 1897).

Jeep (yeh-ep), German composer, b. Dransfeld, 1581; d. Hanau, Nov. 19, 1644. He studied in Göttingen and Celle; traveled in Italy; was Kapellmeister in Weickersheim (1610-33); cathedral organist in Frankfurt (1633-40); from 1640, in Hanau. He publ. a book of songs for 3, 4, 5, and 6 voices, Studentengärtlein (2 vols., 1607 and 1609; many subsequent reprints; included in H. J. Moser, Studentenlust, 1930); sacred songs (1607); secular songs, Tricinia (1610).

Jeffries, George, English composer; date and place of birth unknown; d. 1685. He was a member of the Chapel Royal and organist to King Charles I; went to Oxford in 1643 as organist and composer. Many of his sacred works are extant in MS, preserved in the British Museum and at the Royal College of Music, among them about 190 motets and anthems and several services (in Latin); madrigals in the Italian manner; also masques, cantatas, dramatic dialogues, and other stage pieces.

Jehan. See Gallus, Johannes.

Jehin (zhū-ăn'), François, celebrated violinist; b. Spa, Belgium, April 18, 1839; d. Montreal, Canada, May 29, 1899. As a child he studied with Servais and with his uncle François Prume, whose name he added to his own, often performing as Jehin-Prume; then took lessons with Bériot at the Brussels Cons.; studied harmony with Fétis; won 1st prize in violin and in theory; at the age of 16, after completing advanced studies with Vieuxtemps and Wieniawski, he undertook a European tour; appeared with Anton and Nicholas Rubinstein, Jenny Lind, and other celebrities; formed a famous trio with Kontski and Monsigny. In 1863 he traveled through Mexico, Cuba, New York, to Montreal; met and married the singer Rosita del Vecchio. Thenceforth, his time was divided between Europe and America; he eventually settled in Montreal. Among his pupils was Eugène Ysaÿe. He wrote 2 violin concertos and many brilliant solo pieces for his instrument. He publ. in Montreal a book of memoirs, Une vie d'artiste (gives a list of his works from op. 1 to op. 88).

Jelich, Vincenz, Austrian composer; b. St. Veit, c. 1595; date and place of death unknown; during 1605-16 was in Graz as choirboy; in 1617, went to Zabern, Alsace, as court musician. He wrote Parnassia militia (1622); Arion (2 books of sacred songs, 1628); motets, etc.—Cf. H. Federhofer, V. Jelich in 'Archiv für Musikwissenschaft' (1955).

Jelinek, Hanns, Austrian composer; b. Vienna, Dec. 5, 1901. He studied with Schoenberg, and in the 1930's adopted the 12-tone method. He wrote for orch. Sinfonia ritmica (1932); Divertimento No. 8, for small clarinet, clarinet, basset horn, and bass clarinet (1952); string quartet; suite for strings; a series of piano pieces under the title of Zwölftonwerk. He is the author of the manual Anleitung zur Zwölftonkomposition (Vienna, 1952).

Jelinek, Joseph. See Gelinek.

Jelmoli (yehl-mö'h'-le), Hans, Swiss pianist and composer; b. Zürich, Jan. 17, 1877; d. there, May 6, 1936. He studied with Humperdinck and Iwan Knorr at Frankfurt; then conducted operatic productions in Mainz and Würzburg. Upon his return to Zürich, he was mainly active as teacher and writer; wrote music criticism for the 'Schweizerische Musikzeitung.' He composed the operas Die Schweizer, Sein Vermächtnis, and Die Badener Fahrt; incidental music to various plays; also 26 Swiss songs in the Zürich dialect. He publ. Ferruccio Busonis Zürcher Jahre (1928) and other pamphlets concerning musical life in Zürich.

Jemnitz (yem'-nitz), Alexander, Hungarian composer; b. Budapest, Aug. 9, 1890. He studied with Koessler in Budapest (1912-16); then with Straube in Leipzig (organ). From 1917-21 he occupied various posts as assistant conductor at opera theaters in Bremen and elsewhere; he was in Berlin from 1921 to 1924, and studied there with Schoenberg. In 1924 he returned to Budapest; was engaged as music critic, and continued to compose. His chosen idiom represents a cross between the contrapuntal style of Max Reger (with whom he took a few lessons in 1916) and the radical language of atonality, modelled after Schoenberg's early works. His works include a ballet, Divertimento (Budapest, April 23, 1947); 7 Miniatures for orch. (1948); Overture for a Peace Festival (1951); trio for 2 oboes and English horn; trio for flute, oboe, and clarinet; 2 string trios; sonata for flute and cello; sonata for saxophone and banjo; trio for violin, viola, and guitar; string quartet; 3 violin sonatas; cello sonata; unaccompanied sonatas for various solo instruments (cello, harp, double-bass, trumpet, flute, etc.); 4 piano sonatas; several song cycles. His works were often performed at modern music festivals: Serenade for violin, viola, and cello, at the Geneva Festival (April 8, 1929); harp sonata, at the Prague Festival (Sept. 4, 1935); etc.

Jenkins, Cyril, Welsh composer; b. Dunvant, near Swansea, Oct. 9, 1885. He studied organ in his native town, and composition with Stanford in London. In 1911 his cantata Young Lochinvar was given at the Welsh National Festival; he wrote another cantata, Llewelyn, and A Welsh Fantasy, for string orch.; a symphony and a number of choral works on Welsh themes were presented at later Welsh festivals. In 1922 he went to Australia.

Jenkins, David, Welsh composer; b. Treacastle, Dec. 30, 1848; d. Aberystwyth, Dec. 10, 1915. He studied at the Univ. of Wales; then taught there; became widely known as choral conductor; wrote oratorios and other choral works for the Welsh festivals; his cantata, The Ark of the Covenant, was performed at the Caernarvon Festival in 1876. He was editor of the Welsh music periodical, 'Y Cerddor.'

Jenkins, John, English composer; b. Maidstone, 1592; d. Kimberley, Norfolk, Oct. 26, 1678. In his early years he was a domestic tutor and lute player to various aristocrats; also played at the courts of Charles I and Charles II. He wrote many Fancies for viols or organ, and light pieces which he called Rants; of these, Mitter Rant was included in Playford's Musick's Handmaid (1678); The Fleece Tavern Rant and The Peterborough Rant, both in Playford's Apollo's Banquet (1690); his popular air, The Lady Katherine Audley's Bells or The Five Bell Consort, appeared in Playford's Courtly Masquing Ayres (1662). He wrote some music for violin; an edition entitled 12 Sonatas for 2 Violins and a Base, with a Thorough Base for the Organ or Theorbo attributed to Jenkins, and supposedly published in London in 1660, is not extant; the claim made by some historians that Jenkins was the first English composer of violin sonatas cannot be sustained inasmuch as William Young had anticipated him by publishing 11 violin sonatas in 1653. See John Jenkins, Fancies and Ayres (reprint), edited by Helen Joy Sleeper (Wellesley, 1950).

Jenner (yen'-ner), Gustav, German composer and writer; b. Keitum, Dec. 3, 1865; d. Marburg, Aug. 29, 1920. He studied with Mandyczewski, and also took some lessons with Brahms; in 1895, became music director at Marburg. He composed fine lieder, choral works, several violin sonatas, a trio for piano, clarinet, and horn; transcribed old German songs, etc.; publ. Johannes Brahms als Mensch, Lehrer und Künstler (1905; 2nd ed., 1930).—Cf. W. Kohleick, Gustav Jenner (1943).

Jensen (yën'-sen), Adolf, German composer; b. Königsberg, Jan. 12, 1837; d. Baden-Baden, Jan. 23, 1879. He stemmed from a family of musicians in Königsberg; studied with Ehlert and Köhler; began to compose as a boy; at 19, went to Russia as a music tutor; then was theater conductor in Posen (1857); was in Copenhagen (1858-60), where he studied with Gade; then returned to Königsberg. He subsequently taught at Tausig's school in Berlin (1866-68); then, lived in Dresden, Graz, and finally at Baden-Baden, where he died of consumption. A great admirer of Schumann, he closely imitated him in his songs, of which about 160 were published. He also wrote an opera, Die Erbin von Montfort (1864-65); it was revised by Kienzl, to a new libretto by Jensen's daughter, under the title Turandot. Other works are the cantatas, Jephthas Tochter, Der Gang der Jünger nach Emmaus, Adonisfeier, etc., and many characteristic piano pieces.—Cf. A. Niggli, A. Jensen (Zürich, 1895); another biography, also by Niggli, was publ. in Heinrich Reimann's Berühmte Musiker (Berlin, 1900); G. Schweizer, Das Lied-schaffen A. Jensens (Frankfurt, 1933). Jensen's letters were publ. by P. Kuczynski (1879).

Jensen, Gustav, German violinist and composer; brother of Adolf Jensen; b. Königsberg, Dec. 25, 1843; d. Cologne, Nov. 26, 1895. He studied with his brother; then with Dehn in Berlin (theory) and with Joachim (violin). In 1872 he became prof. of composition at the Cologne Cons., and held that position until his death. He wrote a symphony; a string quartet; violin sonata; cello sonata; Ländliche Serenade, for string orch.; various violin pieces; publ. the series Klassische Violinmusik; translated into German Cherubini's Manual of Counterpoint.

Jensen (yēn'-sen), Ludvig Irgens, Norwegian composer; b. Oslo, April 13, 1894. He studied philology, music theory, and piano in Oslo. He has written a cantata, Der Gott und die Bajadere (1921-32); an opera, Heimferd (Oslo, Aug. 27, 1947); for orch.: 2 symphonies (No. 1, 1930; No. 2, 1942); Partita Sinfonica (1948); Variazioni (1948); Passacaglia (1951). Also a violin sonata (1924), piano quintet (1927), and choral works.

Jensen, Niels Peter, Danish organist and composer; b. Copenhagen, July 23, 1802; d. there, Oct. 19, 1846. He was blind from childhood, but learned to play the flute and organ; was organist at St. Peter's Church in Copenhagen from 1828. He wrote 2 sonatas and other pieces for the flute.

Jeppesen (yep'-pe-sen), Knud, eminent Danish musicologist and composer; b. Copenhagen, Aug. 15, 1892. He studied at the Univ. there with Laub and Nielsen, and at the Univ. of Vienna with G. Adler and R. Lach (1922, Dr. phil. with the dissertation Die Dissonanzbehandlung in den Werken Palestrinas; English transl. by Margaret W. Hamerik, as The Style of Palestrina and the Dissonance, with introduction by E. J. Dent, Copenhagen, 1927; 2nd ed., 1946; very valuable); from 1920 to 1946, taught at the Cons. in Copenhagen; 1946-1957, prof. of musicology at Univ. of Aarhus; from 1931 to 1954, editor of 'Acta musicologica'. He ed. Der Kopenhagener Chansonnier (1927). Other writings: Kontrapunkt (1930; English transl., with introduction by Glen Haydon, N. Y., 1939; 2nd German ed., Leipzig, 1956); Die mehrstimmige italienische Laude um 1500 (1935); Die italienische Orgelmusik am Anfang des Cinquecento (Copenhagen, 1943); etc. — Compositions: opera, Rosaura (1946; Copenhagen, Sept. 20, 1950); symphony (1939); horn concerto (1941); Little Summer Trio, for flute, cello, and piano (1941); Te Deum Danicum (London, Oct. 27, 1948).

Jepson, Harry Benjamin, American organist; b. New Haven, Conn., Aug. 16, 1870; d. Noank, Conn., Aug. 23, 1952. He studied organ with Stoeckel, and composition with Horatio Parker; in 1895, was appointed instructor of organ at Yale Univ., and served in that capacity until 1950. He edited 'Yale University Hymns' and publ. a number of works for organ.

Jepson, Helen, American soprano; b. Titusville, Penna., Nov. 28, 1905. Of a musical family, she sang in church choirs at 13 in Akron, Ohio, where she went to school; worked as a corset fitter and sales girl; then was enabled to go to Philadelphia to study at the Curtis Institute (1923-28); in 1936, went to Paris to study with Mary Garden; also took lessons with Quena Mario; then became a member of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Co. She made her début with the Metropolitan Opera Co. on Jan. 24, 1935; also sang with the Chicago Civic Opera Co. She was married to George Rosco Fossell (1931); divorced, and married Walter Dellera (1942).

Jeremiáš (yeh' - rēh - mē - ahsh), Jaroslav, Czech composer; son of the organist and composer Bohuslav Jeremiáš (1859-1918); b. Pisek, Aug. 14, 1889; d. Budějovice, Jan. 16, 1919. He studied at the Prague Cons.; also took lessons with Novák. He was engaged as opera conductor at Ljubljana, Yugoslavia; then returned to Prague. Although he died at the age of 29, he left several significant works: the opera Starý král (The Old King; produced posthumously, Prague, April 13, 1919); oratorio Jan Hus (also posthumous; Prague, June 13, 1919); a viola sonata; songs.—Cf. B. Bělohlávek, J. Jeremiáš (Prague, 1935).

Jeremiáš, Otakar, Czech conductor and composer; brother of Jaroslav Jeremiáš; b. Písek, Oct. 17, 1892. He studied, as did his brother, at the Prague Cons., and with Novák; directed a music school at Budějovice (1918-28); conducted the orch. of the Prague Radio (1929-45); in 1945 was appointed director of the Prague Opera. Among his many works are 2 operas, The Brothers Karamazov (Prague, Oct. 8, 1928) and Till Eulenspiegel (Prague, May 13, 1949); cantata, Písně rodné zemi (Song of the Native Land; 1941); 2 symphonies (1911; 1914); chamber music; film music; songs.—Cf. J. Plavec, Otakar Jeremiáš (Prague, 1943; gives a list of works with dates of performance).

Jeritzá (real name Jedlitzka), Maria, dramatic soprano; b. Brunn, Oct. 6, 1887. She studied voice and several instruments in Brunn; appeared first as a chorus singer at the Brunn Opera; made her début as a soloist as Elsa in Lohengrin at Olmütz (1910), followed by an engagement at the Vienna Volksoper (début as Elizabeth in Tannhäuser); guest appearances in Stuttgart (where she created the title role of Strauss' Ariadne), Zürich, Berlin, Munich, Basel, Bern, etc.; member of the Vienna State Opera (1912-35); member of the Metropolitan Opera Co. (1921-32; début as Marietta in Korngold's Die tote Stadt, Nov. 19, 1921), where she became especially celebrated for her interpretation of Tosca; appeared in Boston in Rudolf Friml's Annina (later changed to Music Hath Charms), with which she toured; has toured the U. S. many times in recital and as soloist with various orchestras. In 1935, she married the motion picture executive Winfield Sheehan, and settled in Hollywood; then was divorced; married Irving F. Seery on April 10, 1948. Her autobiography, Sunlight and Song, was published in London and New York (1924).

Jersild (yer'-sild), Jørgen, Danish composer; b. Copenhagen, Sept. 17, 1913. He studied in Paris with Roussel (1936); from 1943-49, teaching at the Copenhagen Cons.; also wrote music criticism in 'Berlingske Tidendes.' His music is Impressionistic in harmony and color, and neo-Classical in form. Works: Pastorale for strings (1945); Serenade for 5 wind instruments, subtitled At spille i Skoven (To be played in the woods, 1947); Trois pièces en concert for piano; and some choral works.

Jervis-Read, Harold Vincent, English composer; b. Powyke, Worcestershire, March 14, 1883; d. Salisbury, Dec. 15, 1945. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music, and later taught there. He wrote for chorus The Hound of Heaven, Dream Tryst, That Land, To the Daughter of Earth, High Tide, etc.; a string sextet; 2 piano sonatas; 5 Caprices, for piano; songs, etc.

Jirák (yě-rahk), Karel Boleslav, Czech composer and conductor; b. Prague, Jan. 28, 1891. He studied privately with Vítězslav Novák and with J. B. Foerster. In 1915 he was appointed conductor of the Hamburg City Opera; in 1918 went to Brno, where he was conductor at the National Theater for a season (1918-19). He then was choral conductor and prof. of composition at the Prague Cons. (1920-30); from 1930-45, music director of the Czechoslovak Radio. In 1947 he went to the U. S.; in 1948 became prof. of music at Roosevelt College in Chicago.—Works: opera, Woman and the God (1913; Brno, March 10, 1928); 5 symphonies: No. 1 (1916), No. 2 (1924), No. 3 (Prague, March 8, 1939), No. 4, surnamed Episode from an Artist's Life (1937), No. 5 (Edinburgh Festival, Aug. 26, 1951; winner of the Edinburgh International Festival prize); Night Music for violin and orch. (1918); Overture to a Shakespeare Comedy (Prague, Feb. 24, 1927); Symphonic Variations (Prague, March 26, 1941); Psalm 23, for chorus and orch.; numerous chamber works: string sextet; 3 string quartets (No. 1, 1915; No. 2, 1927; No. 3, 1940); Divertimento for string trio; sonata for cello, for violin, for viola, for piano, for flute; 2 piano suites and other pieces; the song cycles (with orch.) Lyric Intermezzo (1913), Tragi-comedies (1915), Evening and Soul (1921), Awakening (1925), Fleeting Happiness (1916), 3 Songs of Home (1929), Colors of the Rainbow (1926), Rok (1941). He is also the author of a book on musical form (in Czech, 1924).—Cf. M. Očádlík, Karel Boleslav Jirák (Prague, 1941).

Jiránek (yě'-rah-nek), Josef, Bohemian pedagogue; b. Leděč, March 24, 1855; d. Prague, Jan. 5, 1940. He studied with Smetana, who legally adopted him as a child; also studied violin with A. Hřímálý and harp with Stanek. He began his career as a harpist in Prague; in 1877 he went to Russia, where he taught piano in Kharkov; returned to Prague in 1891, and taught piano at the Prague Cons.; retired in 1923. He was very successful as a teacher and also as a player of chamber music; publ. a number of useful manuals (in German): Schule des Akkordspiels und der Akkordzerlegungen; Theoretisch-praktische Schule der wesentlichen Verzierungen im Pianofortespiel; Anschlagübungen zur Erreichung gleichzeitig verschiedener Tongebung im mehrstimmigen Spiel; Tonleitern in Doppelgriffen; Technische Übungen in Verbindung mit praktischen Fingersatzstudien; Neue Schule der Technik und des musikalischen Vortags; composed Scherzo fantastique, for orch.; piano quintet; 2 piano sonatas, and other pieces. While in Russia, he brought out a teaching guide, Musical Grammar, published in the Russian language.

Joachim, Amalie (née Weiss), concert singer; wife of Joseph Joachim; b. Marburg, May 10, 1839; d. Berlin, Feb. 3, 1899. Her real maiden name was Schneeweiss, but she abridged it to Weiss in 1854, when she appeared as a singer in Vienna. She began her career as a soprano; after her marriage to Joachim (1863), she abandoned the stage, but continued to give recitals as a lieder singer; her interpretations of Schumann's songs were particularly fine. — Cf. Olga Plaschke, Amalie Joachim (Berlin, 1899).

Joachim, Joseph, one of the greatest masters of the violin; b. Kittsee, near Pressburg, June 28, 1831; d. Berlin, Aug. 15, 1907. He began to study the violin at the age of 5; his first teacher was Szervaczinski, with whom he appeared in public, at the age of 7, playing a violin duet. At the age of 10 he was sent to the Vienna Cons., where he studied with Böhm; in 1843 he played in Leipzig at a concert presented by Pauline Viardot; Mendelssohn did him the honor of accompanying him on the piano. He appeared with the Gewandhaus Orch. (Nov. 16, 1843); then made his first tour in England (1844), arousing admiration for his mature musicianship and remarkable technique. Returning to Leipzig, he studied with Ferdinand David; also played as concertmaster of the Gewandhaus Orch. in David's absence. From 1849 till 1854 Joachim served as concertmaster of the court orch. in Weimar. Liszt, who reigned supreme in Weimar, did not favor young Joachim, and in 1854 Joachim went to Hanover as solo violinist at the court; in 1863 he married the singer Amalie Weiss. In 1868 he was appointed director of the 'Hochschule für ausübende Tonkunst' in Berlin. His fame as a teacher spread far and wide, and aspiring violinists from all over Europe flocked there to study with him. He did not, however, abandon his career as a virtuoso; he was particularly popular in England, which he visited annually after 1862; he received an honorary degree of Doc. Mus. from Cambridge Univ. (1877), and also from Oxford and Glasgow. His style of playing, nurtured on the best classical models, was remarkable for masterful repose, dignity, and flawless technique. It was his unswerving determination to interpret the music in accordance with the intentions of the composer; this noble objectivity made him an authentic exponent of the best of violin literature. As a player of chamber music, he was unexcelled in his day. The famous Joachim Quartet, organized in 1869, attained great and merited celebrity in Europe; the Joachim tradition of excellence and faithful interpretation of classical works influenced the subsequent generations of German violinists. His compositions for the violin are virtuoso pieces that have never ceased to attract performers; of these, the most famous is the concerto, op. 11, in D minor, known as the Hungarian Concerto (marked 'in ungarischer Weise'), which he wrote in Hanover in the summer of 1857, and first performed there on March 24, 1860; another concerto, in G major (Hanover, Nov. 5, 1864, composer soloist), was revised in 1889. Other works are: Variations, for violin and orch. (Berlin, Feb. 15, 1881, composer soloist); Andantino and Allegro scherzoso, for violin and orch.; 3 Stücke (Romanze, Fantasiestück, Frühlingfantasie) for violin and piano; 3 Stücke (Lindenrauschen, Abendglocken, Ballade) for violin and piano; Hebrew Melodies, for viola and piano; Variations on an Original Theme for viola and piano; Notturmo, for violin and orch.; several overtures; cadenzas for violin concertos by Beethoven and Brahms; songs. Bibliography: A. Moser, J. Joachim, Ein Lebensbild (Berlin, 1898; 2nd enlarged ed., 2 vols., 1908, 1910; English transl. from 2nd German ed., London, 1900); K. Storck, *J. João IV, King of Portugal; b. Villa-Vicosa, March 19, 1604; d. Lisbon, Nov. 6, 1656. As a prince, he received a fine musical training at the court chapel. He began collecting church music, gradually accumulating a magnificent library, which was totally destroyed in the earthquake of 1755. However, its contents are known, for a catalogue of it was issued in Lisbon in 1649, and reprinted by Vasconcellos in 1873. João IV was a true music scholar, well acquainted with the flow of conflicting opinions regarding musical theory. He publ. (anonymously) the pamphlets Defensa de la musica moderna contra la errada opinion del obispo Cyrillo Franco (in Spanish; 1649); Respuesta a las dudas que se pusieron a la missa 'Panis quem ego dabo' de Palestrina (1654); Italian translations were made of both. He composed a considerable quantity of church music; his motets Crux fidelis and Adjuva nos are reprinted in S. Lück's Sammlung ausgezeichneter Kompositionen für die Kirche (1884-85).—Cf. J. Freitas Branco, D. João IV, Músico (Lisbon, 1956).

Jobert, Jean, French music publisher; b. Lyons, Oct. 11, 1883. He was an employee of the publishing firm of Fromont in Paris; he purchased the business in 1922, including the valuable catalogue of Debussy's early works (L'Après-midi d'un faune, Clair de lune, etc.). In 1945 he was elected president of the Syndicated Society of Music Publishers in France.

Jobst, Brant. See Brandt.

Jochum, Eugen, German conductor; brother of Georg Ludwig and Otto Jochum; b. Babenhausen, Bavaria, Nov. 1, 1902. He studied organ and piano at the Augsburg Cons. (1914-22); composition with Waltershausen at the Munich Academy of Music (1922-24); conducting with Sigmund von Hausegger (1924-25). He was opera coach at the Munich State Opera (1924-25); at Kiel (1926-27); then conductor there (1927-29); at the Mannheim National Theater (1929-30); at Duisburg (1930-32); at the Berlin Radio (1932-34); conductor and musical director of the Hamburg State Opera, succeeding Muck (1934-45); since 1949, conductor of the Radio Orchestra in Munich.

Jochum, Georg Ludwig, German conductor; brother of Eugen and Otto Jochum;

b. Babenhausen, Dec. 10, 1909. He studied in Munich with Hausegger, Pembaur, and Haas; conductor of the City Orch. in Münster (1932-34); opera conductor in Frankfurt (1937-40); in Linz (1940-45); in 1946, appointed director of the Duisburg Cons.

Jochum, Otto, prolific German composer; brother of Eugen and Georg Ludwig Jochum; b. Babenhausen, March 18, 1898. He studied at the Augsburg Cons., and at the Munich Academy of Music, with Heinrich Kaspar Schmid, Gustav Geierhaas, and Joseph Haas (1922-31). In 1933 he was appointed director of the Municipal Singing School in Augsburg; 1949, director of the Augsburg Cons.; retired in 1952. He has composed about 150 opus numbers, among them 2 oratorios (Der jüngste Tag and Ein Weihnachtssingen); 12 Masses; a great number of works for chorus, accompanied and a cappella; arrangements of folk songs; a Goethe-Sinfonie (1941); Florianer-Sinfonie (1946); choral works with orchestra; songs.

Jöde (yö'-düh), Fritz, German music educator; b. Hamburg, Aug. 2, 1887. He began his career as a provincial school teacher; was in the German army during World War I; then undertook a serious study of music at the Univ. of Leipzig, with Abert (1920-21). In 1923 he was appointed prof. at the Academy for Church and School Music in Berlin. He organized numerous societies for the propagation of folk music, and was very active in various youth movements in Germany. In 1939 he became instructor at the Hochschule für Musik in Salzburg and leader of the seminar at the Mozarteum (1939-45); then instructor on school music in Hamburg (1947-52). After retirement, he continued to give private courses and lectures on folk music and related subjects in Germany. He publ. a number of books on music education and collected German folksongs. Among his anthologies are Ringel-Rangel-Rosen (children's songs; 1913; enlarged ed., 1927); Der Rosengarten (1917); Der Musikant (1923; new ed., 1942); Der Kanon (in 3 parts; 1925); Chorbuch (6 vols., 1927-31); Die Singstunde (1929); Lasst uns singen (1930); Frau Musika (songs for home; 1929); Die Weihnachtsnachtigall (1939); Unser Mutterlied (1940). He edited choral works by old masters (Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, etc.). Writings: Musikalische Jugendkultur (1918); Musik und Erziehung (1920); Die Lebensfrage der neuen Schule (1921); Unser Musikleben Absage und Beginn (1923); Musikschulen für Jugend und Volk (1924); Die Kunst Bachs (1926); Elementarlehre der Musik (1927); Musikdienst am Volk (1927); Das schaffende Kind in der Musik (1928); Musik in der Volksschule (1929); Kind und Musik (1930); Deutsche Jugendmusik (1934); Vom Wesen und Werden der Jugendmusik (1954). From 1940 to 1952 he was editor of the 'Zeitschrift für Spiel-musik.'

Johannes Chrysorrhoas (John of Damascus), Christian Saint; b. Damascus, c. 700; d. at the monastery of St. Sabas, near Jerusalem, 754. He was canonized by both Greek and Roman churches; was the earliest dogmatist of the Greek church; wrote many examples of the canon, a special type of Byzantine hymn that usually used a pre-existent melody. John is credited, by what may be a legend, with having arranged the Byzantine Oktoechos and having improved Byzantine notation. — Cf. H. J. W. Tillyard, Byzantine Music and Hymnography (1923; p. 20 ff.); E. Wellesz, Byzantinische Musik (1927; p. 33 ff.); K. Wachsmann, Untersuchungen zum vorgregorianischen Gesang (1935; p. 78 ff.).

(1955); chamber music; string quartet (1934); Radiophonic Suite, No. 1, for flute, viola, and harp (1941); Serenade for wind quartet (1945); Radiophonic Suite, No. 2, for flute, bassoon, and harp (1945); also 5 Incantations for flute solo (1936); several albums of piano pieces; Hopi Snake Dance for two pianos (Tanglewood, Aug. 10, 1948). — Cf. Un Musicien d'aujourd'hui, André Jolivet, in 'Polyphonie' (1949; contains a catalogue of works).

Jommelli (yö'h-mël'l-ë), Niccolò, eminent opera composer of the Neapolitan school, called 'the Italian Gluck'; b. Aversa, near Naples, Sept. 10, 1714; d. Naples, Aug. 25, 1774. He received elementary musical education from Mazillo, a Neapolitan ecclesiastic. It cannot be established whether he studied at any conservatory in Naples, but undoubtedly he had acquired sufficient knowledge of composition, for at the age of 23 he produced in Naples an opera, L'errore amoroso (1737); this was quite successful, and he brought out another opera, Odoardo (Naples, 1738). He went to Rome in 1740; there he staged his operas Ricimerò (1740) and Astianatte (1741). Invited to Bologna, he became acquainted with Padre Martini, who gave him valuable advice on composition. In Bologna he produced the opera Ezio (1741). He then went to Venice, where he produced Merope (1741), with such success that he was appointed director of the important Conservatorio degli Incurabili (1743); in Venice he wrote several notable sacred works. He produced new operas almost every year in various towns in Italy: Tito Manilio (Turin, 1743); Demofoonte (Padua, 1743); Alessandro nell'Indie (Ferrara, 1744); Sofonisba (Venice, 1746); Didone abbandonata (Rome, 1747); L'amore in maschera (Naples, 1748); Demetrio (Parma, 1749). In 1749 he went to Vienna, where he formed a warm friendship with Metastasio. In Vienna he produced Achille in Sciro (1749) and contributed some numbers to Andromeda (1750) and Euridice (1750). Then he returned to Rome, where he produced Ifigenia in Aulide (1751), Attilio Regolo (1753), and some intermezzi. By the good offices of Cardinal Albani, he was appointed maestro at St. Peter's, as Bencini's assistant. He remained in that position until 1753, when he received the important appointment of Kapellmeister to the Duke of Württemberg in Stuttgart. His sojourn there was most productive; his operas staged in Stuttgart included Fetonte (1753); Pelope (1755); L'asilo d'amore (1758); Nitteti (1759); Olimpiade (1761); La pastorella illustre (1763), and several serenades and other occasional pieces; also sacred works. After 15 years in Stuttgart, he returned to Italy (1769), but his operas produced in Naples, Armida abbandonata (1770), Ifigenia in Tauride (1771), and Cerere placata (1772), did not succeed. However, he did not suffer privation, since he enjoyed a pension from the King of Portugal; 3 of his operas were produced in Lisbon: Le aventure di Cleomede (1772), Il trionfo di Clelia (1774), and L'Accade- mia di musica (1775). Shortly before his death he wrote a Miserere for 2 voices, which became one of his best-known works. The position of Jommelli in Italian music is largely determined by his partial adoption of the German style during his long stay in Stuttgart; the emphasis on instrumental accompaniment, and a more solid harmonic substance, characteristic of German opera of the time, did not suit the Italian taste. On the other hand, he played a progressive role in the development of Neapolitan music, by rejecting the conventional type of the da capo aria; he pursued a more dramatic and realistic form of expression than that of Alessandro Scarlatti, which explains the sobriquet 'the Italian Gluck.' That he possessed melodic invention and contrapuntal skill of a high order is proved by his handling of solo passages in his operas and sacred works. In addition to his famous Miserere, he wrote a number of other church works: Laudate for 4 soprani soli and double choir; Dixit for 8 voices; In convertendo for 6 solo voices and double choir; Magnificat; Hymn to St. Peter for double choir, etc. The opera Fetonte was published in vols. 22/23 of the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst'; Salmo (Miserere), for 2 and 4 voices with orch., by Breitkopf & Härtel; other works available in modern editions are: Victimae paschali for 5 voices; Lux aeterna for 4 voices; Hosanna filio; etc.—Cf. P. Alfieri, Notizie biografiche di Niccolò Jommelli (Rome, 1845); H. Abert, Niccolò Jommelli als Opernkomponist (Halle, 1908; includes a biography); A. della Corte, L'opera comica italiana nel 1700 (1923).

Jonás (hö'h-nähss'), Alberto, pianist; b. Madrid, June 8, 1868; d. Philadelphia, Nov. 9, 1943. He studied in Madrid; then, at the age of 18, entered the Brussels Cons., where he studied with Gevaert and Arthur de Greef; won 1st prize for piano and 2 prizes in harmony. In 1890 he went to St. Petersburg, where he took lessons with Rubinstein. He made his pianistic début in Berlin (1891); then gave concerts in Europe; came to the U. S. in 1894, and taught piano at the Univ. of Michigan (1894-98) and at the Michigan Cons. of Music in Detroit (1898-1904). From 1904-14 he lived in Berlin; in 1914 settled in New York; also taught at the Broad St. Cons. of Music in Philadelphia. In the U. S. he established a fine reputation as a piano pedagogue. In collaboration with 16 pianists, he publ. Master School of Modern Piano Playing and Virtuosity (1922), which went through 5 editions; further publ. Beginner's Master School of Combined Piano Playing, Solfeggio, Rhythm, Ear Training and Sight Reading; Pianoscrit Books (for beginners and for advanced students). As a composer, he wrote mostly for piano (Northern Dances, Toccata, Scottish Dances, Evocation, Humoresque, Nocturne, Evening Song, etc.).

Jonas (zhoh-nahs'), Emile. French composer; b. Paris, March 5, 1827; d. St.-Germain-en-Laye, May 21, 1905. He studied at the Paris Cons.; received the 2nd Grand Prix de Rome for his cantata Antonio (1849). After graduation he became instructor at the Paris Cons. (until 1865); also was music director at the Portuguese Synagogue, and a bandmaster. He wrote a number of light operas in the style of Offenbach, of which the first was Le duel de Benjamin (1855). Other operettas (most of them produced at the Bouffes-Parisiens): La Parade (Aug. 2, 1856); Le Roi boit (April, 1857); Les petits prodiges (Nov. 19, 1857); Job et son chien (Feb. 6, 1863); Le manoir de La Renardière (Sept. 29, 1864); Avant la noce (March 24, 1865); Les deux Arlequins (Dec. 29, 1865); Le Canard à trois becs (Feb. 6, 1869); Désiré, sire de Champigny (April 11, 1869). He also wrote an operetta to an English libretto, Cinderella the Younger (London, Sept. 25, 1871; in French as Javotte, Paris, Dec. 22, 1871). He publ. a valuable Recueil de chants hébraïques (1854) for the Portuguese Synagogue.

Jonas, Maryla, Polish pianist; b. Warsaw, May 31, 1911; appeared as a child prodigy in Warsaw at the age of nine; studied with Paderewski, Sauer, and Turczynski; toured in Europe (1926-33); after the invasion of Poland by the Nazis in 1939, she escaped, and made her way to Rio de Janeiro; gave a series of concerts in South America and Mexico; then went to New York, where she made an exceptionally successful debut in Carnegie Hall (Feb. 25, 1946); thereafter continued to appear in recitals, and as soloist with orchestras, in America and in Europe.

Jonas, Oswald, musicologist; b. Vienna, Jan. 10, 1897. He studied law at the Univ. of Vienna, and musical theory with Schenker. In 1938 he left Austria and settled in the U. S.; in 1940 was appointed member of the faculty at Roosevelt College, Chicago. He publ. Das Wesen des musikalischen Kunstwerks (Vienna, 1934) and a number of articles, and revised Schenker's Harmoneillehre and Der freie Satz.

Joncières (zhohn-syär'), Victorin de (real name, Felix Ludger Rossignol), French composer; b. Paris, April 12, 1839; d. there, Oct. 26, 1903. He was first a student of painting; music was his avocation. At the age of 20 he produced a light opera for a student performance; encouraged by its success with the critics, he began to study music seriously, first with Elwart, then with Leborne at the Paris Cons. He was a great admirer of Wagner, and when Leborne expressed his opposition to Wagner, Joncières impulsively left his class. From 1871 he was the music critic of 'La Liberté.' Operas (all produced in Paris): Sardanapale (Feb. 8, 1867); Le dernier jour de Pompei (Sept. 21, 1869); Dimitri (May 5, 1876; his most successful work); La reine Berthe (Dec. 27, 1878); Le Chevalier Jean (March 11, 1885; successful in Germany under the title Johann von Lothringen); Lancelot du lac (Feb. 7, 1900); he further wrote music to Hamlet (Nantes, Sept. 21, 1867); Symphonie romantique (Paris, March 9, 1873); a violin concerto (Paris, Dec. 12, 1869); a symphony, La Mer; etc.

Jones, Alton, American pianist; b. Fairfield, Nebr., Aug. 3, 1899. He studied at the Institute of Musical Art, N. Y., with Edwin Hughes and Buhlig; then taught there and later at the Juilliard Summer School; gave several recitals in N. Y. and elsewhere.

Jones, Arthur Barclay. See Barclay, Arthur.

Jones, Daniel, Welsh composer; b. Pembroke, Dec. 7, 1912. Both his parents were musicians. He attended the Univ. of Wales; then studied at the Royal Academy of Music, London, with Sir Henry Wood and Farjeon. He held the Mendelssohn Traveling Scholarship from 1935 until 1939; served in the Intelligence Corps (1940-46). An enormously prolific composer, he has written 4 symphonies (No. 1, 1944; No. 2, 1950; No. 3, 1951; No. 4, 1954, Liverpool, Aug. 6, 1954); symphonic poems Cystydiau Branwen (1938) and Cloud Messenger (1943); a number of overtures; Five Pieces for Orch. (1939); 20 pieces for small ensemble (1947); 8 string quartets (1932-46); 5 string trios (1932-46); string quintet (1933); piano trio (1935); viola sonata (1934); unaccompanied cello sonata (1948); sonata for kettledrums (1947); 8 Pieces for violin and viola (1948); suite for viola and cello (1949); wind septet (1949); wind nonet (1950). For piano solo:

JONES — JONGEN

6 sonatas (1930-39); 3 sonatinas (1933-43); 20 Bagatelles (1943-52); sacred and secular choruses. He is the author of Music and Esthetic, a book that expounds his general philosophy of music (1954).

Jones, Edward, Welsh musician and writer ('Bardy Brenin'); b. Llanderfel, Merionethshire, April 2, 1752; d. London, April 18, 1824. He was taught by his father, and the family organized a Welsh ensemble, consisting of harps and string instruments. In 1775 he went to London; in 1783, was appointed Welsh bard to the Prince of Wales. He publ. several anthologies of Welsh music: Musical and Poetical Relicks of the Welsh Bards (1784; 2nd ed., 1794; an additional vol. appeared under the title The Bardic Museum, 1802; 3rd vol., 1824; a supplementary vol. posthumously; the entire work contains 225 Welsh melodies); in addition to these, he publ. collections of melodies by other nations; also Musical Trifles calculated for Beginners on the Harp.

Jones, Robert (I), English composer; b. c. 1485; d. London, c. 1536. He served as a chorister in the Chapel Royal; traveled with Henry VIII in France (1513); held a royal patent in England (1514-19); in 1520 was in France again; then returned to England, remaining in London until his death. Some of his sacred works are preserved in MS.—Cf. W. H. Grattan Flood, Early Tudor Composers (London, 1925).

Jones, Robert (II), English lutenist and composer; flourished in the late 16th century and early 17th. He obtained a Mus. Bac. degree from Oxford in 1597; held grants to establish a school for children in London in 1610 and in 1615. He publ. The First Book of Ayres (1600), followed by 4 other books (1601, 1605, 1607, 1611); a book of madrigals, entitled First Set of Madrigals of 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 Parts, for viols and voices or for voices alone; or as you please; also a madrigal in 6 parts, Oriana, seeming to wink at Folly, in 'The Triumphes of Oriana' (1601), and 3 pieces in Leighton's Tears or Lamentations (1614). The 5 books of Ayres were republished, with the original accompaniment of each song transcribed into modern notation, by E. H. Fellowes (London, 1925-27).—Cf. E. H. Fellowes, The English Madrigal Composers (Oxford, 1921; 2nd ed., 1948); Ph. Heseltine, Robert Jones and His Prefaces, in the 'Mus. Times' (1923; pp. 99-101 and 168-71); E. H. Jones, Sidney, English composer of light music; b. London, June 17, 1861; d. there, Jan. 29, 1946. At an early age he became conductor of a military band; then toured the English provinces and Australia as conductor of various light opera companies; in 1905 he was appointed conductor at the London Empire Theatre. He owes his fame mainly to his enormously successful operetta, Geisha (London, April 25, 1896), which was for decades performed all over the world. His other operettas are: The Gayety Girl (London, 1893); An Artist's Model (London, 1895); A Greek's Slave (Vienna, 1899); San Toy (Vienna, 1899); My Lady Molly (London, 1903); The Medal and the Maid (London, 1903); See See (London, 1906); The King of Cadonia (London, 1908); The Persian Princess (London, 1909); Spring Maid (London, 1911); The Girl from Utah (London, 1913); The Happy Day (London, 1916).

Jones, William, known as Jones of Nayland, English minister and musician; b. Lowick, Northamptonshire, July 30, 1726; d. Nayland, Jan. 6, 1800. He studied at Oxford; was a vicar at Bethersden, Kent; then was a curate of Nayland. He published A Treatise on the Art of Music (1784; 2nd ed., 1827).

Jones, Sir William, English Orientalist; b. London, Sept. 28, 1746; d. Calcutta, April 27, 1794. He was a magistrate in India, where he lived from 1783; published On the Musical Modes of the Hindus (1784), which was included in vol. 6 of his collected works (1799). See 'Dictionary of National Biography' (vol. 10).

Jongen (yohn'-gen), Joseph, Belgian composer; b. Liège, Dec. 14, 1873; d. Sart-lez-Spa, July 12, 1953. He studied at the Liège Cons.; in 1897 won the Belgian Grand Prix de Rome with his cantata Comala; then traveled in Germany and France, returning to Belgium in 1902, settling in Brussels. During World War I he lived in England, where he formed a piano quartet with Defauw, Tertis, and Doehaerd, with which he gave numerous concerts; also played organ recitals. In 1919 he was again in Brussels; was appointed prof. at the Cons. there (1920); was its director from 1925-39. A prolific composer, he continued to write music to the end of his life; the total aggregates 137 op. numbers. His Concert à cinq for flute, violin, viola, cello, and harp, op. 71 (1923) has had many performances abroad; his piano pieces and songs are also well known. While not pursuing extreme modern effects, Jongen succeeded in imparting an original touch to his harmonic style. Works: opera, Felyane (1907); ballet, S'Arka (1910); symphony (1899); other orchestral works: Fantaisie sur deux Noël wallons (1902); Lalla-Rookh (1904); Deux Rondes wallonnes (1912); Impressions d'Ardennes (1913); Tableaux pittoresques (1917); Passacaille et gigue (1929); Tryptique, 3 suites (1935); Ouverture-Fanfare (1939); Ouverture de fête (1941); Bourrée (1944); 3 Mouvements symphoniques (1951); violin concerto (1899); cello concerto (1900); harp concerto (1944); minor works for various instruments with orch.; 2 violin sonatas (1903; 1909); cello sonata (1912); flute sonata (1924); trio for piano, violin, and cello (1897); trio for piano, violin, and viola (1907); string trio (1948); piano quartet (1902); 3 string quartets (1894; 1916; 1921); quartet for saxophones (1942); 2 wind quintets (1933; 1942); a number of piano pieces, including 24 preludes in all keys (1941); solo pieces for various instruments with piano; many songs with instrumental accompaniment; choral works. A catalogue of his works is publ. by the Centre Belge de Documentation Musicale (Brussels, 1954).

Jongen (yohn'-gen), Léon, Belgian composer, brother of Joseph Jongen; b. Liège, March 2, 1885; studied organ and served as church organist. He received the Belgian Grand Prix de Rome for his cantata Les Fiancés de Noël (1913); was in the Belgian Army during World War I; after the end of the war traveled in the Far East. Returning to Belgium he became instructor at the Brussels Cons. (1934); from 1939-49 he was successor to his brother as its director. He wrote several stage works, of which Thomas l'Agnélet was perf. in Brussels (Feb. 14, 1924); also composed chamber music.

Jonsson (yohns'-son), Josef Petrus, Swedish composer; b. Enköping, June 21, 1887. He studied piano, but soon turned to musical journalism and composition; was also active in the Swedish Composers' Society. He wrote 3 symphonies (1922, 1931, 1947); symph. cantata Korallrevet (1916); piano quintet; suite for wind instruments and percussion (1950); etc.

Jora (yoh'-rah), Mihail, Rumanian composer; b. Jassy, Aug. 15, 1891; studied law; then went to Leipzig to study music; returning to Rumania, he was appointed prof. at the Bucharest Cons. He wrote several orchestral suites: Conte hindou (1920); Paysages moldaves (1923), etc.; Marche juive for piano and orch. (1925); piano album, Joujoux pour Madame; songs.

Jordá (hor-dah'), Enrique, Spanish conductor; b. San Sebastian, March 24, 1911. His father died when he was 5; his mother was a pianist and gave him his first lessons in music. He sang in the parochial school chorus; then played organ at his parish church; began to compose; in 1929 he went to Paris, where he studied medicine; but soon turned exclusively to music, studying with Marcel Dupré (organ), Paul Le Flem (composition), and Frans Rühlmann (conducting). He made his début as conductor with the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris in 1938. In 1940 he was engaged as the regular conductor of the Madrid Symph. Orch. On Jan. 21, 1944 he married Audrey Blaes. After 1945 he conducted in England; in 1947 he was appointed chief conductor of the Cape Town Symph. Orch. in South Africa; he remained in that post until 1951. During the 1952-53 season he was guest conductor of the San Francisco Symph., and was elected (by vote of the audience as well as by decision of the Board of Directors) regular conductor.

Jordan, Henry Bryce, American musicologist, flutist, and teacher; b. Clovis, N. M., Sept. 22, 1924. He was educated in the public school of Abilene, Texas; at the Univ. of Texas (B. Mus., 1948; M. Mus., 1949); and at the Univ. of North Carolina (Ph. D., 1956); studied flute with Donald Macdonald and musicology with Otto Kinkeldey and Glen Haydon; was flutist in various Army Air Force musical groups (1942-45); assistant prof. of music at Hardin-Simmons Univ. (1949-54); in 1954, was appointed assistant prof. at the Univ. of Maryland.

Jordan, Jules, American singer and composer; b. Willimantic, Conn., Nov. 10, 1850; d. Providence, March 5, 1927. He moved to Providence in 1870 and established himself as a singer, choral conductor, and teacher; for 40 years (1880-1920), conducted the Arion Club (250 voices). He was a successful composer of school operettas (The Alphabet, Cloud and Sunshine, etc.); wrote 6 light operas: Star of the Sea,

An Eventful Holiday, The Buccaneers, Princess of the Blood, Her Crown of Glory, and A Leap Year Furlough; vaudeville sketches, Cobbler or King, Managerial Tactics, etc. His romantic comedy opera Rip Van Winkle was produced at the Providence Opera House (May 25, 1897); another opera, Nisaea, remained unperformed. He wrote his own librettos for his stage works as well as for his cantatas The Night Service, Barbara Fritchie, etc.—Cf. E. E. Hipsher, American Opera and Its Composers (Philadelphia, 1934, pp. 280-81).

Jordan, Mary, contralto; b. Cardiff, Wales, Nov. 27, 1879. She entered St. Cecilia's Convent, in Scranton, Pa.; then studied with various teachers in Seattle, San Francisco, and New York. She made her operatic début as Amneris with the Boston Opera Co. (March 28, 1911); also sang in churches in Brooklyn and New York; toured in the Orient, and was for some years prof. at the Manila Cons.; then settled in San Antonio, Texas, as vocal teacher.

Jordan (yohr'-dan), Sverre, Norwegian composer; b. Bergen, May 25, 1889. He studied in Berlin with Ansonger and Klatte (1907-14); in 1914, settled in Bergen; conducted the choral society 'Harmonien' there (1921-31). In his works he made liberal use of national folksongs; wrote more than 200 melodious songs, which acquired considerable popularity on the concert platform in Europe and America. Of his larger works, there are Norwegiani, for orch. (1921); a cantata Norge i vare hjerter, for the opening of the Bergen Exhibition (1928); cello concerto (Bergen, Jan. 15, 1948); incidental music to Björnson's play Halte-Hulda.

Jörn (yörn), Karl, tenor; b. Riga, Latvia, Jan. 5, 1876; d. Denver, Dec. 19, 1947. He studied in Riga and Berlin; then sang in provincial German towns; was on the staff of the Hamburg City Theater (1899-1902); then at the Berlin Opera; sang in London (1908); and in New York (1908-11); was particularly successful in Wagnerian roles; toured the U. S. with the German Grand Opera Co. (1931); then taught in Denver, where he remained until his death.

Joseffy, Rafael, distinguished pianist and teacher; b. Hunfalu, Hungary, July 3, 1852; d. New York, June 25, 1915. At the age of 8 he began to study piano with a local teacher at Miskolcz, and later at Budapest. In 1866 he entered the Leipzig Cons., where his principal teacher was E. F. Wenzel, though he had some lessons with Moscheles. From 1868 to 1870 he studied with Karl Tausig in Berlin, and the summers of 1870 and 1871 he spent with Liszt in Weimar; his association with Tausig and Liszt exercised a powerful and lasting influence on his pianistic style and interpretation. He made his début at Berlin in 1870; his excellent technique and tonal variety elicited much praise; his career was then securely launched. He made his American début in 1879 playing at a symph. concert of Leopold Damrosch in New York, where he settled permanently; taught at the National Cons. from 1888 till 1906. In America he gained appreciation both as a virtuoso and as a musician of fine interpretative qualities; his programs featured many works of Brahms at a time when Brahms was not yet recognized in America as a great master. As a pedagogue, Joseffy was eminently successful; many American concert pianists were his pupils. He brought out an authoritative edition of Chopin's works in 15 vols. (with critico-historical annotations by Huneker); also edited studies by Czerny, Henselt, Moscheles, Schumann, and others. His School of Advanced Piano Playing (1902; in German as Meisterschule des Klavierspiels) is a valuable practical method. Joseffy was also a composer; publ. a number of characteristic piano pieces (Die Mühle, Romance sans paroles, Souvenir d'Amérique, Mazurka-Fantasia, Spinnlied, etc.) and arrangements of works by Schumann, Bach, Boccherini, Gluck, Delibes.—Cf. E. Hughes, Rafael Joseffy's Contribution to Piano Technique, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1916).

Josephson (yoh'-seff-son), Jacob Axel, Swedish composer and conductor; b. Stockholm, March 27, 1818; d. Upsala, March 29, 1880. He studied music in Upsala; then taught at the Cathedral School there (1841-43); in 1844 he went to Germany; studied with Hauptmann and Niels Gade in Leipzig. After further study in Rome (1845-46), he returned to Upsala, where he became conductor of the Philharmonic Society; became music director at Upsala Univ. in 1849; in 1864, was appointed organist at the cathedral there. He wrote mostly choral works (Psalms, cantatas); edited a series of articles on sacred songs, 'Zion' (1867-70).—Cf. K. Nyblom, J. A. Josephson (Stockholm, 1926).

Munich and in Paris; remained in Paris until 1914; at the outbreak of World War I, returned to Germany; was assistant conductor at the Munich Opera in 1918. In 1920 he visited the U. S. and appeared in concert as composer-accompanist with several singers. In 1923 he was appointed prof. of music at Smith College; also conducted the Smith College Orch., with which he presented performances of seldom-heard works by Monteverdi, Handel, and other composers. His early works are couched in a Romantic German style, with a strong flow of counterpoint underneath expansive harmonies. During his American period, he became interested in exotic art, and was considerably influenced by French modernism.—Works: For orch.: Jungle, a symph. movement, inspired by Henri Rousseau's painting 'Forêt Exotique' (Boston Symph., Oct. 25, 1929); Batouala, choreographic poem, also as an African ballet (1931); Concerto Sacro I-II, for string orch. and piano (1927); Joseph and His Brethren, concert suite from a ballet (1932); Endymion, concert suite from a ballet (1933); Symphony for Strings (Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1946); Symphony in F (Boston Symph., Nov. 13, 1936, composer conducting). Vocal works: Crucifixion, for bass solo and mixed chorus a cappella (1915); Hymnus to the Queen of Paradys, for women's voices, strings, and organ (1921); Indian Serenade, for tenor with orch. (1922); Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, for voices and orch. (1925); A une Madone, for solo tenor and orch., after Baudelaire (1929); about 50 songs. Chamber music: string quartet (1934); violin sonata (1936); cello sonata (1938); sonatina for violin and piano (1939); trio for flute, clarinet, and bassoon (1941); trio for violin, viola, and cello (1942); trio for flute, cello, and piano (1943); sonata for horn and piano (1944); Canzona seria, for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and piano (N. Y., Nov. 23, 1957).

Joteyko (yoh-tī'-kōh), Tadeusz, Polish opera composer; b. Poczułki, Ukraine, April 1, 1872; d. Teschen, Aug. 19, 1932. He studied in Brussels with Gevaert and in Warsaw with Noskowski; held positions as head of musical societies in Kalisz and Lodz; conducted the Warsaw Philharmonic from 1914 to 1918; taught at the Warsaw Cons. He wrote the operas Grajek (The Player; Warsaw, Nov. 23, 1919); Zygmund August (his most successful work; Warsaw, Aug. 29, 1925); Królowa Jadwiga (Queen Jadwiga; Warsaw, Sept. 7, 1928); chamber music; numerous songs and piano pieces.

Joubert, John, South African composer; b. Cape Town, March 20, 1927. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with Howard Ferguson, on a scholarship of the Performing Rights Society (1946-50); in 1951 was appointed lecturer on music at Univ. College in Hull.—Works: Legend of Princess Vlei, ballet (Cape Town, Feb. 21, 1952); Antigone, radio opera (BBC, July 21, 1954); Overture (Cheltenham Festival, June 12, 1953); Symphonic Prelude (Durban Centenary Festival, May 15, 1954); violin concerto (York, June 17, 1954); sonata for viola and piano (1952); etc.

Jouret (zhoo-rā'), Léon, Belgian composer; b. Ath, Oct. 17, 1828; d. Brussels, June 6, 1905. He studied at the Brussels Cons.; in 1874, was appointed prof. of singing there. His 2 operas, Quentin Metsys and Le Tricorne enchanté, were produced semi-privately in Brussels (1865 and 1868); of more importance is his collection of folk melodies of his native region, Chants populaires de pays d'Ath.

Journet (zhoor-nā'), Marcel, French bass singer; b. Grasse, Alpes Maritimes, July 25, 1867; d. Vittel, Sept. 5, 1933. He made his operatic début at Montpellier (1893); performed at summer seasons at Covent Garden, London (1893-1900); sang at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels (1894-1900); made his American début at the Metropolitan Opera, N. Y. in 1908 and remained on the staff for 7 seasons; from 1908-14, was in Europe; at the outbreak of World War I in 1914, he joined the Chicago Opera Co., leaving it in 1916; later, returned to France. His repertory included 8 Wagner operas, 27 Italian and 65 French operas.

Jousse (zhooss), Jean, French music pedagogue; b. Orleans, 1760; d. London, Jan. 19, 1837. A scion of an aristocratic family, he was compelled to flee France during the Revolution, and settled in London, where he became a successful teacher of singing and piano. He publ. several textbooks, among them Lectures on Thoroughbass (1819; a new revised and augmented ed., N. Y., 1894, under the title, A Catechism of Music).

Juch (yooh), Emma (Antonia Joanna), operatic soprano; b. Vienna, July 4, 1863 (of American parents); d. New York, March 6, 1939. She was brought to the U. S. at the age of 4, and studied in N. Y. with Murio Celli; made her début in the old Chickering Hall in 1881; stage début in London (1883); sang 3 seasons under Mapleson's management in England and in the U. S.; from 1886-88 she was principal soprano of the American Opera Co.; upon its failure in 1889, she organized the Emma Juch Grand Opera Co., which presented opera in the U. S. and Mexico (until 1891); after that, she confined herself chiefly to concert appearances. On June 26, 1894, she married District Attorney Francis L. Wellman, but was divorced in 1911.

Judge, Jack, English composer of popular songs; b. 1878; d. West Bromwich, July 28, 1938. His song It's a long, long way to Tipperary, written in 1912, attained enormous popularity in England and elsewhere as a wartime song during World War I.

Judson, Arthur, American concert manager; b. Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 17, 1881. He took violin lessons with Max Bendix; played in orchestras, and himself conducted summer resort orchestras. In 1900 he was appointed dean of the Cons. of Music of Denison Univ., Granville, Ohio. In 1907 he was in N. Y.; was connected with the editorial and advertising departments of 'Musical America.' From 1915 to 1935 he was manager of the Philadelphia Orch.; in 1922 he was appointed manager of the N. Y. Philharmonic Orch., and held this position for 34 years, resigning in 1956. In 1928 his concert management incorporated the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau; in 1930, these organizations merged into Columbia Concerts Corporation, with Judson as president.

Juhan, Alexander, violinist, conductor, and composer; probably son of James Juhan; b. Halifax, 1765; d. 1845. He was brought to Boston in 1768; was violinist and a manager in Philadelphia in 1783; later went to Charleston, S. C., where he was active from 1790 and 1792; returned to Philadelphia in 1792. He composed 6 piano sonatas, of which 3 are accompanied by a flute (or a violin); also a book of 12 songs, with instrumental accompaniment.

Juhan, James, French musician, who was active in Boston (1768-70) and in Charleston, S. C. (1771), and later in Philadelphia, where he exhibited the 'great North American Forte Piano' (1786).—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Early Concert Life in America (1907).

Juilliard (zhöö-l'yahr'), Augustus D., American music patron; b. Canton, Ohio, April 19, 1836; d. New York, April 25, 1919. He was a prominent industrialist; left the residue of his estate for the creation of a Juilliard Musical Foundation (established in 1920). The objects of this Foundation are to aid worthy students of music in securing a complete musical education, to arrange and give concerts for the education of the general public in the musical arts. The Juilliard School of Music was founded and has been maintained by the Foundation.—Cf. 'Dictionary of American Biography,' vol. X (N. Y., 1933).

Jullien, Gilles, French organist; b. c. 1650; d. Chartres, Sept. 14, 1703. He became organist at the Chartres Cathedral in 1667, and held this post until his death. His Premier Livre d'Orgue was publ. by Lesclap in Chartres (1680); a modern reprint, with annotations and an introduction by Norbert Dufourcq, was issued in Paris (1952).

Jullien, Jean-Lucien-Adolphe, French writer on music; son of Marcel-Bernard Jullien; b. Paris, June 1, 1845; d. Chaintreauville, Seine-et-Marne, Aug. 30, 1932. He studied law in Paris and took private lessons with Bienaimé, a former prof. of the Paris Cons. He became a musical journalist; contributed to various magazines, and took a strong position in favor of the new music of Berlioz and Wagner.—Writings: L'Opéra en 1788 (1873); La Musique et les philosophes au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1873); La Comédie à la cour de Louis XVI, le théâtre de la reine à Trianon (1873); Histoire du théâtre de Mme. Pompadour, dit Théâtre des petits cabinets (1874); Les Spectateurs sur le théâtre (1875); Le Théâtre des demoiselles Verrières (1875); Les grandes nuits de Sceaux, le théâtre de la duchesse du Maine (1876); Un Potentat musical (1876); L'Eglise et l'Opéra en 1735; Mlle. Lemaure et l'évêque de Saint-Papoul (1877); Weber à Paris (1877); Airs variés; histoire, critique, biographie musicales et dramatiques (1877); La Cour et l'Opéra sous Louis XVI; Marie-Antoinette et Sacchini; Salieri; Favart et Gluck (1878); La Comédie et la galanterie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1879); Histoire des costumes au théâtre (1880); Goethe et la musique (1880); L'Opéra secret au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1880); La Ville et la Cour au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1881); La Comédie de la cour... pendant le siècle dernier (1883); Paris dilettante au commencement du siècle (1884); Richard Wagner, sa vie et ses œuvres (1886); also in English translation, Boston, 1892) and Hector Berlioz (1888); Musiciens d'aujourd'hui (1st series, 1891;

2nd series, 1894); Musique (1895); Le Romantisme et l'éditeur Renduel (1897); Amours d'opéra au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle (1908); Ernest Reyer (1909). His masterpieces are the biographies of Wagner and Berlioz. — Cf. F. Delhasse, A. Jullien (Paris, 1884).

Jullien, Louis Antoine, French conductor; b. Sisteron, April 23, 1812; d. Paris, March 14, 1860. The son of a bandmaster, he went to Paris in 1833 and studied composition with Le Carpentier and Halévy, but could not maintain the discipline of learning music, and began to compose light dances instead; of these, the waltz Rosita attained enormous, though transitory, popularity in Paris. He left the conservatory in 1836 without taking a degree, and became engaged as conductor of dance music at the Jardin Turc. He also attempted to launch a musical journal, but an accumulation of carelessly contracted debts compelled him to leave France (1838). He went to London, where he conducted summer concerts at Drury Lane Theatre (1840) and winter concerts with an enlarged ensemble of instrumentalists and singers (1841). He then opened a series of 'society concerts' at which he presented large choral works, such as Rossini's Stabat Mater, as well as movements from Beethoven's symphonies. In 1847 he engaged Berlioz to conduct at the Drury Lane Theatre, which he had leased. He became insolvent in 1848, but attempted to recoup his fortune by organizing a 'concert monstre' with 400 players, 3 choruses, and 3 military bands. He succeeded in giving 3 such concerts in London in 1849. He then essayed the composition of an opera, Pietro il Grande, which he produced at his own expense at Covent Garden on Aug. 17, 1852. He used the pseudonym Roch Albert for his spectacular pieces, such as Destruction of Pompeii. He publ. some dance music under his own name (Royal Irish Quadrille, etc.). In 1853 he was engaged by Barnum for a series of concerts in the U. S. For his exhibition at the Crystal Palace in N. Y. (June 15, 1854), attended by a great crowd, he staged a simulated conflagration for his Fireman's Quadrille. Despite his eccentricities, however, Jullien possessed true interest in musical progress. At his American concerts he made a point of including several works by American composers: Santa Claus Symphony by William Henry Fry and some chamber music by George Frederick Bristow. In 1854 he returned to London; his managerial ventures resulted in another failure. In 1859 he went to Paris, but was promptly arrested for debt, and spent several weeks in prison. He died a few months later in an insane asylum to which he was confined. — Cf. J. W. Davison, Memoirs (London, 1912); J. T. Howard, Our American Music (N. Y., 1939; pp. 219-25); N. Carse, The Life of Jullien: Adventurer, Showman-Conductor and Establisher of the Promenade Concerts in England (Cambridge, 1951).

Jullien, Marcel-Bernard, French scholar; b. Paris, Feb. 2, 1798; d. there, Oct. 15, 1881. He was secretary general to the 'Société des Méthodes d'enseignement' and a learned grammarian. — Writings: De l'étude de la musique instrumentale dans les pensions des demoiselles (1848); De quelques points des sciences dans l'antiquité (Physique, métrique, musique) (1854); and Thèses supplémentaires de métrique et de musique ancienne (1861).

Jumilhac (zhū-mēl-ähk'), Dom Pierre-Benoît de. Benedictine monk; specialist in Gregorian Chant; b. Château St. Jean-de-Ligourre, near Limoges, 1611; d. St. Germain-des-Prés, May 22, 1682. He wrote La Science et la Pratique du plain-chant (Paris, 1673; ed. by Nisard and Leclercq and republished in 1847), an erudite work containing many musical examples.

Juncq, Benedetto, Italian composer; b. Turin, Aug. 21, 1852; d. San Vigilio, near Bergamo, Oct. 3, 1903. He was of Alsatian-Italian extraction; was trained for a commercial career, but practiced the piano in his free time; then entered the Milan Cons. for serious study, and developed a fine lyric talent for song writing; his youthful ballad La Simona became very popular; Dolce sera, from his album, 8 Romanze, also was well known. In addition to songs, he wrote a string quartet and 2 violin sonatas.

Jüngst (yüngst), Hugo, German conductor; b. Dresden, Feb. 26, 1853; d. there, March 3, 1923. He studied at the Dresden Cons.; was conductor of the Dresden Male Choral Society, which he founded in 1876, and of numerous festivals; composed many men's choruses, including the well-known Scissors Grinder.

Juon (yü'-öhn), Paul, composer; b. Moscow, March 6, 1872; d. Vevey, Switzerland, Aug. 21, 1940. He was a pupil of Hřřmaly (violin) and Taneyev and Arensky (composition) in Moscow; in Berlin, of Bargiel (1894-96); teacher of theory at the Baku Cons. for one year; lived in Berlin; appointed professor of composition at the Hochschule für Musik in 1906; member of the Berlin Academy in 1919; won the state Beethoven prize in 1919. A notable composer, he cultivated the classical forms with success. — Works: for orch.: Fünf Stücke for string orch.; Symphony in A; Vaegt-e-ve, fantasy on Danish folksongs; Aus einem Tagebuch, suite; Serenade; 3 violin concertos; Episodes Concertantes, triple concerto for violin, cello, and piano with orch.; chamber music: 4 string quartets; sextet for 2 violins, viola, 2 cellos, and piano; octet for piano, violin, viola, cello, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon; 2 quintets for piano and strings; Divertimento for piano and woodwinds; Rhapsodie for piano quartet; other piano quartets; 3 piano trios; Caprice, Legende and Litanies for trio; 6 Silhouettes for 2 violins and piano; sonatas for violin, viola, cello, flute, and clarinet (with piano); pieces for violin, cello, and piano (Satyre und Nymphen, Intime Harmonien, etc.); compositions for piano 4 hands; songs. He published Praktische Harmonielehre (1901); Handbuch für Harmonielehre (1920); Anleitung zum Modulieren (1929); Der Kontrapunkt (1932); translated into German Modest Tchaikovsky's Life of Peter Tchaikovsky (2 vols., 1904).

Jupin (zhü'-pan'), Charles-François, French violinist and composer; b. Chambéry, Nov. 30, 1805; d. Paris, June 12, 1839. He studied with Baillot at the Paris Cons., taking 1st prize in 1823; wrote an opera, La vengeance italienne (1834); numerous pieces for violin.

Jürgens (yür'-gens), Fritz, German composer; b. Düsseldorf, April 22, 1888; killed in action in Champagne, Sept. 25, 1915. He studied music largely by himself; wrote some fine lieder; set to music 45 poems by Gustav Falke, and 35 by Martin Greif.

Jurgenson (yöör'-gen-son), Pyotr Ivanovich, Russian music publisher; b. Reval, July 17, 1836; d. Moscow, Jan. 2, 1904. The youngest son of indigent parents, he learned the music trade with M. Bernard, owner of a music store in St. Petersburg; Jurgenson served in 3 other music-selling houses there, before opening a business of his own in 1861, in Moscow. With a small investment, he gradually expanded his firm until it became one of the largest in Russia. Through Nicholas Rubinstein he met the leading musicians of Russia, and had enough shrewdness of judgment to undertake the publication of works of Tchaikovsky, beginning with his op. 1. He became Tchaikovsky's close friend, and, while making handsome profit out of Tchaikovsky's music, he demonstrated a generous regard for Tchaikovsky's welfare; he publ. full scores of Tchaikovsky's symphonies and operas, as well as his songs and piano works. His voluminous correspondence with Tchaikovsky, from 1877 to Tchaikovsky's death, was publ. in 2 vols. in Moscow (1938 and 1952). Jurgenson publ. also many works by other Russian composers; issued vocal scores of Glinka's operas; also publ. the first Russian editions of the collected works of Chopin, Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Wagner's operas. His catalogue contained some 20,000 numbers. After his death, his son Boris Jurgenson succeeded to the business; it was nationalized after the Russian Revolution.

Jurjans (yur'-yahns), Andrejs, Latvian composer; b. Erlaa, Sept. 18, 1856; d. Riga, Sept. 28, 1922. He studied with Rimsky-Korsakov (1875-82) in St. Petersburg. In 1882 he was appointed prof. at the Cons. of Kharkov, where he taught for 34 years until 1916. In 1917 he went to Riga. He wrote a symph. poem, a cello concerto, some chamber music, and a number of orchestral arrangements of Latvian folk melodies, which he employed also in his original works.—Cf. Jahnis Straumes, Our Musicians (in Latvian; Riga, 1922).

Jurovský (yöör'-rov'-skê), Simon, Czechoslovak composer; b. Ulmanka, Slovakia, Feb. 8, 1912. He studied with Alexander Moyzes at the Academy of Music in Bratislava (1931-36) and with Josef Marx at the Academy of Music in Vienna (1943-44). In 1948 he was appointed head of the music division of the Bratislava Radio. He has written 2 orchestral suites (No. 1, 1939; No. 2, 1943); a symphonic scherzo (1941); symphonic poem, The Beginning of a Journey (1948); Symphony for Peace (1949); cello concerto (1953); a string quartet; a string trio; choral pieces; songs (including arrangements of folksongs). — Cf. Zdenka Bokesova, Simon Jurovský (Bratislava, 1955).

K

Kaan-Albest, Heinrich, pianist and composer; b. Tarnopol, Poland, May 29, 1852; d. Roudná, Bohemia, March 7, 1926. He studied in Prague with Blodek and Skuherský; went with Dvořák to London in 1884; from 1889, taught piano at the Prague Cons.;

KABALEVSKY — KADE

was its director from 1907-18. He wrote two operas, Escape (1895) and Germinal, after Zola (1908); two ballets, Bajaja and Olim; symph. poem Sakuntala; Frühlings-Eklogen for orch.; many piano pieces and arrangements.

Kabalevsky (kah-bah-lev'-skē), Dmitri Borisovitch, noted Russian composer; b. St. Petersburg, Dec. 30, 1904. When he was 14, the family moved to Moscow; there he received his elementary education at the Scriabin Music School (1919-25); also studied privately with G. Catoire; in 1925 he entered the Moscow Cons. as a student of Miaskovsky (composition) and Goldenweiser (piano); graduated in 1929; appointed instructor at the Moscow Cons. in 1932. Kabalevsky began to compose in 1922, mostly for piano. After World War II Kabalevsky undertook several tours in Europe, playing his own music. The main influences in his early works emanated from Scriabin and Miaskovsky; later he developed an individual style, marked by clear tonality and energetic rhythms.—Works: 4 Preludes for piano (1928); piano sonata No. 1 (1928); string quartet No. 1 (1928); 1st piano concerto (1929); The Poem of Struggle, for orch. and chorus (1930); 2 sonatinas for piano (1930; 1933); Symph. No. 1 (1932); Symph. No. 2 (Moscow, Dec. 25, 1934); Symph. No. 3, subtitled Requiem for Lenin, for chorus and orch. (1933); 2nd piano concerto (1936); opera, Colas Breugnon, after Romain Rolland (Leningrad, Feb. 22, 1938); The Comedians, orchestral suite (1940); Golden Blades of Grass, ballet (1940); My Great Fatherland, cantata (1942); People's Avengers, suite for chorus and orch. (1942); opera, Before Moscow (1942); string quartet No. 2 (1945); piano sonata No. 2 (1945); piano sonata No. 3 (1946); opera, The Family of Taras (Moscow, Nov. 2, 1947; new version, Leningrad, Nov. 7, 1950); violin concerto (double première, Moscow and Leningrad, Oct. 29, 1948); cello concerto (Moscow, March 15, 1949); 3rd piano concerto (1952); opera, Nikita Vershinin (Moscow, 1955); Symph. No. 4 (1956); also 24 Preludes for piano (1943) and other piano pieces.—Cf. A. Poliakova, Kabalevsky's Opera, The Family of Taras (Moscow, 1953); L. Danilevitch, Dmitri Kabalevsky (Moscow, 1954).

Kabasta, Oswald, Austrian conductor; b. Mistelbach, Dec. 29, 1896; d. Kufstein, Austria, Feb. 6, 1946. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and in Klosterneuburg, was choir-director in Florisdorf, and teacher of singing in Viennese high schools. In 1924 he was appointed music director to the Municipal Theater of Baden near Vienna; in 1926, conductor of opera and concert in Graz and guest conductor of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde in Vienna; 1931-1937, music director of the Austrian Radio. In 1935 he was appointed director of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. As conductor of the Vienna Radio Orchestra, he toured with it in London (1936), Berlin, Warsaw, Budapest, Amsterdam, etc. He was conductor of the Bruckner Festivals in Linz in 1936 and 1937; in 1938 he succeeded Von Hausegger as conductor of the Munich Philharmonic. Having compromised himself by a close association with the Austrian Nazis, he committed suicide a few months after the conclusion of World War II.

Kabeláč, Miloslav, Czech composer; b. Prague, Aug. 1, 1908. He studied composition with K. B. Jiráček at the Prague Cons. (1928-31); then piano with Vilém Kurz at the Master School (1931-34). He has written 2 symphonies (1945 and 1947); 2 overtures; cantata, Do Not Retreat (1945); wind sextet; violin and piano pieces, and choral works.

Kade (kah'-deh), Otto, German musicologist; b. Dresden, May 6, 1819; d. Doberan, near Rostock, July 19, 1900. A stipend from King Friedrich August enabled him to study under J. Otto Schneider (composition) and J. G. Schneider (piano); in 1848 he established in Dresden the 'Cäcilia' singing society for ancient church music; in 1853 became conductor of the Neustadt Church choir. He was called to Schwerin in 1860 as conductor of the court choir; received the honorary degree of Dr. Phil. (Leipzig, 1884).—Writings: M. Le Maistre (1862); an Offizielles Melodienbuch and a Choralbuch for the Mecklenburg Landeskirche; a Cantional for the same, in 3 parts (1867-80; with the theologian Kliefoth); Der neu aufgefundene Luthercodex vom Jahr 1530 (1872); Die weltliche deutsche Liedweise (lecture in pamphlet form; 1874); Die ältere Passionkomposition bis zum Jahre 1631 (1892); Thematischer Katalog der Musikalien der Schweriner Regierungsbibliothek (1893, 2 vols.); many valuable historical papers for various periodicals; edited the musical supplements to vol. 1 of Ambros' Geschichte der Musik (1881, as a 5th vol.) and the revised edition of the 3rd vol. (1893). Some of his own compositions, in Gregorian style, are collected in the above Cantional.

Kadosa (käh'-dö-shäh), Paul, Hungarian composer and pianist; b. Leva, Sept. 6, 1903. He studied at the Budapest Academy of Music with Kodály (composition) and Arnold Székely (piano); gave piano recitals in Hungary; taught at a music school in Budapest from 1927 till 1943. In 1928 he joined several young Hungarian musicians in organizing a modern musical society, eventually incorporated into the International Society for Contemporary Music. After the end of World War II, he became prof. of piano at the Academy of Music in Budapest; also was appointed vice-president of the Hungarian Arts Council. In his music he combines the elements of the cosmopolitan modern idiom with a strong feeling for Hungarian rhythms and folk-like melodies; in his treatment of these materials, he is closer to Bartók than to his teacher Kodály. The lyrical element is as distinctive in his works as the energetic rhythmic factor. — Works: opera, Adventure at Hoszt (1944-50); cantata, De amore fatali (1940); chamber symph. (1929); 2 divertimentos (1933); 2 symphonies (1942 and 1948); piano concerto (1931; Amsterdam Festival, June 9, 1933, composer soloist); 2 violin concertos (1932 and 1941); concerto for string quartet (1936); viola concerto (1936); concertino for piano and orch. (1939); 2 string quartets (1934-36); violin sonata (1925); partita for violin and piano (1931); sonata for 2 pianos (1946); 3 piano sonatas; 3 piano suites; several piano cycles: 7 Bagatelles (1921), 8 Epigrams (1921-24), 5 Esquisses (1929-30), 6 Hungarian Folkssongs (1934-35), 6 Little Preludes (1944); piano albums for children; songs.

Kaempfert, Max, German violinist and composer; b. Berlin, Jan. 3, 1871; d. Frankfurt, June 2, 1941. He studied violin in Paris and Munich; was concertmaster of the Kaim Orch. in Munich (1893-98); in 1899 went to Frankfurt, where he remained most of his life. He wrote an opera, Der Schatz des Sultans, in a folk style; a grand opera, Der tote Gast; 3 rhapsodies for orch.; chamber music and songs.

Kaffka, Johann Christoph (real name J. C. Engelmann), German composer and singer; b. Regensburg, 1754; d. Riga, Jan. 29, 1815. He studied with Riepel; appeared on the stage as a singer and actor in Berlin (1778), Breslau, and Dessau (1800); in 1803, settled in Riga as a bookseller. He wrote a dozen operas, several ballets, 2 oratorios, Masses, vespers, etc.

Kafka, Johann Nepomuk, Bohemian composer; b. Neustadt, May 17, 1819; d. Vienna, Oct. 23, 1886. He composed numerous popular salon pieces (many based on Austrian themes) for the piano.

Kahl, Willi, musicologist; b. Zabern, Alsace, July 18, 1893. He studied in Freiburg, Munich, and Bonn (Dr. phil., 1919). He served in World War I; in 1923, became instructor and librarian at the Univ. of Cologne; in 1938, became prof. there; after 1945, remained in Cologne as instructor. — Writings: Das lyrische Klavierstück zu Beginn des 19. Jahrhunderts (Bonn, 1919); Musik und Musikleben im Rheinland (Cologne, 1923); Herbart als Musiker (Langensalza, 1936); Verzeichnis des Schrifttums über Franz Schubert (Regensburg, 1938); edited a collection, Lyrische Klavierstücke der Romantik, Norbert Burgmüller's Ausgewählte Lieder, J. A. P. Schulz's Stücke für Klavier, G. Benda's sonatinas; compiled the important documentary volume, Selbstbiographien deutscher Musiker des 18. Jahrhunderts (Cologne, 1947).

Kähler, Willibald, German conductor and composer; b. Berlin, Jan. 2, 1866; d. Klein-Machnow, Oct. 17, 1938. He was a pupil of Kiel and Herzogenberg at the Hochschule für Musik in Berlin; then occupied various posts as conductor; from 1891 in Mannheim, and from 1906, court conductor at Schwerin; after 1931 lived in retirement at Gauting near Munich. He wrote music for Goethe's Faust; symphonic prologue to Kleist's Der Prinz von Homburg; choral works; piano pieces, etc.; publ. a guide to Bruckner's 8th Symphony and Te Deum; revised the unfinished orchestral scores of some Lieder by Hugo Wolf and Weber's Silvana (1928).

Kahlert, August Karl Timotheus, German writer on music and composer; b. Breslau, March 5, 1807; d. there, March 29, 1864. He taught at Breslau Univ.; wrote Blätter aus der Brieftasche eines Musikers (1832); Tonleben (1838); contributed articles to the 'Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung' and Dehn's 'Caecilia'; also composed songs.

Kahn, Erich Itor, pianist and composer; b. Rimbach, Germany, July 23, 1905; d. New York, March 5, 1956. He studied at the Hoch Cons. in Frankfurt; went to France in 1933; in 1938-39 toured as accompanist of Casals in France and North Africa; in 1941 emigrated to America, settling in New York as composer and pianist; organized the Albeneri Trio (the name being derived from assorted syllables of the first names of the participants, Alexander Schneider, violin, Benar Heifetz, cello, and Erich Kahn, piano). In 1948 he was awarded the Coolidge Medal for eminent service to chamber music. He wrote several chamber works and piano pieces; adopted the 12-tone method of composition.—Works: Suite for violin and piano (1937); Giaccona dei tempi di guerra for piano (40 variations on a 12-tone theme in the bass; 1943); string quartet (1953); 4 Nocturnes for voice and piano (1954); Symphonies bretonnes for orch. (1955); Actus Tragicus for 10 instruments (Baden-Baden Festival, June 18, 1955). —Cf. Dika Newlin, In Memoriam: Erich Ilor Kahn, Retrospect and Prospect, in the 'American Composers' Alliance Bulletin' (No. 3, 1957).

Kahn, Otto Hermann, patron of music; b. Mannheim, Feb. 21, 1867; d. New York, March 29, 1934. He was engaged in the banking profession in London (1888-93); settled in N. Y. in 1893; member of the firm Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; became interested in the musical affairs of N. Y. City; from 1907 to his death was on the board of the Metropolitan Opera Co.; was vice president of the N. Y. Philharmonic. He was a brother of Robert Kahn, the composer.

Kahn, Robert, German pianist and composer; b. Mannheim, July 21, 1865; d. Biddenden, Kent, May 29, 1951. He was a pupil of Lachner (Mannheim), Kiel (Berlin), and Rheinberger (Munich). In 1885 he went to Berlin, where Joachim aided him; in 1890 he went to Leipzig, where he founded a Ladies' Choral Union in 1891, and gave concerts; in 1893 he was appointed teacher of piano at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik; 1917, member of the Academy of Arts, Berlin; retired in 1931 and lived in Feldberg (Mecklenburg). In 1937 he went to England, where he remained until his death. Works: Mahomet's Gesang (Goethe) for mixed chorus and orch.; a 'Singspiel,' Sommerabend; 2 cantatas, Befreiung und Empor; 3 violin sonatas; 2 string quartets; 4 piano trios; 3 piano quartets; 2 piano quintets; 2 cello sonatas; a trio for clarinet, cello, and piano; Serenade for piano, oboe, and horn; Suite and Variations for piano and violin (1925); Konzertstück for piano and orch.; Sturmlied, for chorus and orch.; Festgesang, for voice and orch.; Feierliche Gesänge, for voice with piano, harmonium, or organ; a cappella choruses; trios and quartets for women's voices; piano pieces; numerous songs. He was a brother of the banker Otto Kahn. —Cf. E. Radecke, Robert Kahn (Leipzig, 1894).

Kahnt, Christian Friedrich, German music publisher; b. May 10, 1823; d. Leipzig, June 5, 1897. He was the founder, and, till 1886, head, of the music publishing firm of C. F. Kahnt at Leipzig and Zwickau; from 1857 publisher, and after 1868, titular editor, of Schumann's 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.' The firm and the magazine were acquired by Oscar Schwalm ('C. F. Kant Nachfolger') in 1886, by Dr. Paul Simon in 1888, and by Alfred Hoffmann in 1902. After Hoffmann's death in 1926, his wife, Paula, directed the business.

Kaim (kim), Franz, German impresario; b. Kirchheim unter Tech, near Stuttgart, May 13, 1856; d. Munich, Nov. 17, 1935. Having built a concert hall and organized an orch. in Munich, he established there (1893) the celebrated series of concerts bearing his name, the 'Kaimkonzerte,' which presented classical works and also new compositions by German composers; the successive conductors were Hans Windenstein (1893), Zumpe (1895), Löwe (1897), Hausegger and Weingartner (1898), Raabe (1903), and Schneevoigt (1904, until the dissolution of the orch. in 1908). Besides the regular symph. concerts, a series of 'Volkssinfoniekonzerte' was given. Immediately after the dissolution of the orch., its members formed the 'Konzertverein' under the direction of Löwe (later under Pfitzner and Hausegger).

Kaiser, Alfred, composer; b. Brussels, March 1, 1872; d. London, Oct. 2, 1917. He was a pupil of Bruckner in Vienna and Foerster in Prague; lived in London. He wrote the operas Le Billet de Joséphine (Paris, 1902), Die schwarze Nina (Elberfeld, 1905), Stella Maris (Düsseldorf, 1910), a symphony, a piano concerto, 3 serenades for string orch.; 2 piano trios, etc.

Kajanus (käh-yäh'-noos), Robert, outstanding Finnish conductor; b. Helsingfors, Dec. 2, 1856; d. there, July 6, 1933. He studied at the Helsingfors Cons., and later at the Leipzig Cons., with Reinecke, Richter, and Jadassohn (1877-79); he then went to Paris, where he studied with Svendsen (1879-80); then lived for some time in Dresden. In 1882 he returned to Helsingfors, where he devoted himself to composition and conducting. He established an orchestral and a choral school; trained these organizations with such competence that soon he was able to give regular orchestral and choral concerts in Helsingfors; in 1886 the orchestral society was reorganized as the Helsingfors Philharmonic Society, and in 1888 it gave the first performance of Beethoven's 9th Symph. in Finland. In 1897 he was appointed director of music at the Univ., a position he held until 1926, when he retired. Kajanus was the earliest champion of the music of Sibelius. In 1900 he was engaged by the French Government to present a concert of Finnish music with the Helsingfors Philharmonic at the World Exposition in Paris; he subsequently gave concerts in other European cities. He was also the composer of some orchestral and choral pieces in a Romantic vein (symph. poems Kullervo and Aino; orch. suite Sommarminnen; 2 Finnish rhapsodies; piano pieces and songs).—Cf. K. Flodin, Finska musiker (in Swedish; Helsingfors, 1900); Yrjö Suomalinen, Robert Kajanus (Helsinki, 1952).

Kalafati, Vassili Pavlovitch, Russian composer and pedagogue; b. Eupatoria, Crimea, Feb. 10, 1869; d. Leningrad, during the siege, 1942. He studied at the St. Petersburg Cons. with Rimsky-Korsakov, graduating in 1899. In 1900 he was appointed to the teaching staff; Prokofiev and Stravinsky were briefly his pupils. His music is entirely in the style of the Russian national school, coming closest to Glazunov. He wrote a symph., a piano quintet, 2 piano sonatas, a number of songs (all publ. by Belaiev).

Kalbeck, Max, German music historian; b. Breslau, Jan. 4, 1850; d. Vienna, May 4, 1921. He studied at Munich Univ.; in 1875 went to Breslau, where he wrote music criticism for the 'Schlesische Zeitung' and later the 'Breslauer Zeitung'; in 1880, Hanslick recommended him to the Vienna 'Allgemeine Zeitung'; he was also on the staff of the 'Wiener Montags-Revue' and the 'Neues Wiener Tageblatt.' He published studies on Wagner's Nibelungen (1876) and Parsifal (1880); his collected criticisms were publ. as Wiener Opernabende (1881), Gereimtes und Ungereimtes (1885), and Opernabende (2 vols., 1898); also Humoresken und Phantasien (1896). He made excellent German translations of many opera librettos. To Mozart's Bastien et Bastienne and La finta giardiniera he wrote entirely new texts; also wrote original librettos for various contemporary composers. His most important publication is the monumental biography Johannes Brahms (8 vols., 1904-14). He also edited Brahms' correspondence with Hanslick and E. von Herzogenberg (2 vols., 1906), with P. J. and Fritz Simrock, and with Jos. Widmann; and the correspondence of Keller-Heise (1918).

Kalhauge (kähl'-how-gě), Sophus Viggo Harald, Danish composer and teacher; b. Copenhagen, Aug. 12, 1840; d. there, Feb. 19, 1905. He studied with P. Heise, C. Rongsted, and J. C. Gebauer; also studied in Germany, Switzerland, and Italy; returned to Copenhagen as teacher of piano and singing. — Works: the operas Zouavens Hjemkomst (1868), Paa Krigsfod (1880), and Mantillen (1889); An den Frühling, for soli, chorus, and orch.; piano pieces and songs.

Kalinnikov, Vassili Sergeievitch, Russian composer; b. Voin, near Mzensk, Jan. 13, 1866; d. Yalta, Crimea, Jan. 11, 1901. He studied in Orel, where he sang in a high school choir; as a young man, earned his living by tutoring and conducting choral groups. In 1884 he went to Moscow, where he entered the elementary classes of the Moscow Cons., but had to leave it a year later because of inability to pay; he then studied the bassoon at the Music School of the Moscow Philharmonic Society, which provided free tuition. He earned his living by playing bassoon in theater orchestras; he also studied composition with A. Ilyinsky and Blaramberg. Still as a student, he composed his first work, a symph. poem, The Nymphs (Moscow, Dec. 28, 1889); graduating in 1892, he continued to compose; he wrote another symph. poem, The Cedar and the Palm; the overture and entr'actes for Tsar Boris, and a prelude to the opera In the Year 1812. In 1895 he completed his most successful work, a symphony in G minor (Kiev, Feb. 20, 1897); a second symphony, in A major (Kiev, March 12, 1898), was not as successful; he also wrote a cantata, John of Damascus; a Ballade for women's chorus and orch.; 9 songs, and 4 piano pieces. Owing to his irregular habits and undernourishment, he contracted tuberculosis, and was sent to Yalta for treatment; there he died a few months later. Kalinnikov possessed a fine lyric talent; there is a definite trend in Russia towards greater recognition of his works. Several of his manuscript works (Serenade for strings; the overture Bylina, etc.) were published on the 50th anniversary of his death (1951). —Cf. V.

Paskhalov, V. S. Kalinnikov, Life and Works (Moscow, 1938; greatly enlarged ed., 1951); N. Slonimsky, A Thing or Two About Music (N. Y., 1948; pp. 155-56).

Kalisch, Paul, German dramatic tenor; b. Berlin, Nov. 6, 1855; d. St. Lorenz am Mondsee, Salzkammergut, Austria, Jan. 27, 1946. He had begun life as an architect, when Pollini discovered his voice and induced him to study in Milan with Leoni and Lamperti; he sang with considerable success in Italy (Milan, Rome, Florence); then at the Munich Opera; and from 1884-7 in Berlin; in 1887 he sang the Wagner roles at the Metropolitan Opera House with Lilli Lehmann, whom he married in New York the following year; then he appeared in various German cities. At the first Paris performance of Tristan und Isolde (1904) he and his wife sang the title roles; they were later separated (though not legally divorced); after Lilli Lehmann's death in 1929, he lived on her estate in Salzkammergut, remaining there until his death at the age of 90.

Kalischer, Alfred, German writer on music; b. Thorn, March 4, 1842; d. Berlin, Oct. 8, 1909. After taking the degree of Dr. philol. at Leipzig, he studied music with Burgel and Bohmer at Berlin, where he lived as a writer and teacher; edited the 'Neue Berliner Musikzeitung' (from 1873). Of special value are his writings about Beethoven; he also published philosophical works, poems, and dramas.—Works about music: Lessing als Musikästhetiker (1889); Die 'Unsterbliche Geliebte' Beethovens (1891); Die Macht Beethovens (1903); Beethoven und seine Zeitgenossen (4 vols., 1908: I., Beethoven und Berlin; II and III, Beethovens Frauenkreis; IV, Beethoven und Wien). He also edited Neue Beethovenbriefe (1902); Beethovens sämtliche Briefe (5 vols., 1906-8; in English, 1909); issued new eds. of Wegeler and Ries' Notizen (1905), Breuning's Aus dem Schwarzspanierhaus (1907), A. Schindler's Beethoven (1909).

Kalkbrenner, Christian, German composer and writer; father of Friedrich W. M. Kalkbrenner; b. Minden, Hanover, Sept. 22, 1755; d. Paris, Aug. 10, 1806. He studied piano with Becker and violin with Rodewald in Kassel; was choirmaster at the court of the Queen in Berlin (1788), then in the court of Prince Heinrich at Rheinsberg (1790-96); in 1797, went to Naples; in 1798 he became choirmaster at the Paris Opéra. At the Opéra he produced his opera Olimpie (Dec. 18, 1798); also some pasticcios from music by Mozart and Haydn; he further wrote 2 symphonies, a piano concerto, several piano sonatas, Theorie der Tonkunst (1789), and Kurzer Abriss der Geschichte der Tonkunst (1792).

Kalkbrenner, Friedrich Wilhelm Michael, celebrated pianist; b. near Kassel, between Nov. 2 and Nov. 8, 1785; d. Deuil, Seine-et-Oise, June 10, 1849. He was taught by his father, Christian Kalkbrenner. In 1798 he was enrolled at the Paris Cons., where he studied with Adam (piano) and Catel (harmony), taking first prizes in 1801. From 1803 he studied counterpoint with Albrechtsberger in Vienna; appeared as a concert pianist in Berlin, Munich (1805), and Stuttgart; also in Paris, with great success, in 1806. As a teacher, too, he was in great vogue. The years 1814-23 he spent in London; in 1818 he took up Logier's newly invented Chiroplast, simplified it, and applied it practically. After a German tour in 1823 with the harpist Dizi, Kalkbrenner settled (1824) in Paris as a partner in the Pleyel piano factory (the future Mme. Camille Pleyel was one of his pupils). He revisited Germany in 1833 and Belgium in 1836. Kalkbrenner was inordinately vain of the success of his method of teaching, which aimed at the independent development of the fingers and wrist; his practical method of octave playing became a standard of modern piano teaching. He likewise developed left-hand technique, and a proper management of the pedals. As a player, his technique was smooth and well rounded, his fingers supple and of equal strength, and his tone full and rich; his style, while fluent and graceful, lacked emotional power. His numerous études (among them several for left hand alone) are interesting and valuable. Chopin took some advice from him in Paris, but did not become his pupil despite Kalkbrenner's urging to do so.—Works: 4 piano concertos (the last, op. 125, for 2 pianos); piano septet with strings and two horns; quintet for piano, clarinet, horn, bassoon, and double bass; 2 piano sextets; piano quintets; 3 piano quartets; 7 piano trios; 15 sonatas; also rondos, fantasies, variations, caprices, etc., of a light character; a Méthode pour apprendre le piano-forte à l'aide du guide-mains (1830); a Traité d'harmonie du pianiste (1849).—Cf. Memoir of Mr. Frederick Kalkbrenner, in the 'Quarterly Mus. Magazine and Review' (1824); L. Boivin, Kalkbrenner (Paris, 1840).

Kallenberg, Siegfried Garibaldi, German composer; b. Schachen, near Lindau, Nov. 3, 1867; d. Munich, Feb. 9, 1944. He studied at the Cons. of Stuttgart with Faisst; from 1892, taught at Stettin, Königsberg, and Hanover. In 1910 he settled in Munich; a Kallenberg Society was established there in 1921 to promote his creative output. As a composer, Kallenberg was inspired by neo-Romanticism; in some of his works there are touches of Impressionism; his absorption in symbolic subjects brought him into a kinship with the Expressionist school in Germany. Apart from works on exotic subjects, he wrote a number of works in a traditional style; he was particularly strong in choral polyphony. — Works: operas: Sun Liao, Das goldene Tor, and Die lustigen Musikanten; choral works: 90th Psalm, Germania an ihre Kinder, Requiem, Den Gefallenen, Eine kleine Passionmusik, Eine Pfingstmusik; 3 symphonies; Impressionen, for orch.; Konzertante Fantasie, for piano and orch.; about 10 chamber works; 3 piano sonatas, a set of Miniaturen for piano; and some 300 songs. He was the author of a monograph on Richard Strauss (1926).

Kalliwoda, Johann Wenzel, famous violinist and composer; b. Prague, Feb. 21, 1801; d. Karlsruhe, Dec. 3, 1866. He studied at the Prague Cons. with Pixis (1811-17); played in the Prague Orch. (1817-23). In 1823 he became conductor of Prince Fürstenberg's orch. in Donaueschingen; there he spent 30 years, eventually retiring to Karlsruhe. He enjoyed an enviable reputation; some of his music was highly praised by Schumann. — Works: 2 operas, Blanda (Prague, Nov. 29, 1827) and Prinzessin Christine (1827); 10 Masses; 7 symphonies; 14 overtures and 13 fantasias, for orch.; a violin concerto; concerto for 2 violins; 7 concertinos; 3 string quartets; 3 string trios, and a variety of solos for violin; also choruses, duets, and songs.—Cf. K. Strunz, J. W. Kalliwoda (Vienna, 1910).

Kalliwoda, Wilhelm, German pianist and composer; son of Johann Wenzel Kalliwoda; b. Donaueschingen, July 19, 1827; d. Karlsruhe, Sept. 8, 1893. He studied with Hauptmann in Leipzig; also took some lessons from Mendelssohn; wrote piano pieces and songs; was also a reputable conductor.

Kallstenius, Edwin, Swedish composer; b. Filipstad, Värmland, Aug. 29, 1881. He first studied science at the Lund Univ., then music at the Leipzig Cons. (1904-1907); returning to Stockholm, he became music critic of the 'Svenska Dagbladet' and a composer.—Works: 3 symphonies (1922; 1935; 1948); 2 sinfoniettas (1923; 1946); Sinfonia concertata, for piano and orch. (1922); Dalekarlia, symph. rhapsody; Cavatina, for viola and orch. (1943); Passacaglia enharmonica, a set of orch. variations (1944); Divertimento alla Serenata, for strings (1925); clarinet quintet; Divertimento, for wind quintet (1943); 5 string quartets (1904-45); Trio divertente, for flute, violin, and viola (1950); also When Mankind Perishes, a requiem for mixed chorus and orch. (1919); piano pieces.

Kallwitz, or Kalwitz. See Calvisius.

Kálmán, Emmerich (Imre), Hungarian composer of light opera; b. Siófok, Oct. 24, 1882; d. Paris, Oct. 30, 1953. He studied with Kössler in Budapest; won the Imperial Composition Prize (1907). Settling in Vienna, he produced a great number of tuneful and successful operettas; in 1938 he left Vienna; was in Paris until 1940; then came to America; lived in New York and Hollywood; in 1949 went again to Europe. He made his début as composer with a symph. scherzo Saturnalia, performed by the Budapest Philharmonic Orch. (Feb. 29, 1904); later dedicated himself exclusively to the composition of operettas in the Viennese style. His first success was with Ein Herbstmanöver (Vienna, Jan. 21, 1909; performed in N. Y. in the same year as The Gay Hussars); his other popular operettas were Gold gab ich für Eisen (Vienna, Oct. 16, 1914; N. Y., Dec. 6, 1916 as Her Soldier Boy), Fräulein Susi (Budapest, Feb. 23, 1915; English and American productions as Miss Springtime), Die Csardasfürstin (Vienna, Nov. 17, 1915; in England as Gypsy Princess; in America as The Riviera Girl), Gräfin Mariza (Vienna, Feb. 28, 1924), and Die Zirkusprinzessin (Circus Princess; Vienna, March 26, 1926). The following were moderately successful: Der gute Kamerad (first version of Gold gab ich für Eisen; Vienna, Oct. 10, 1911); Der kleine König (Vienna, Nov. 27, 1912); Die Faschingsfee (Vienna, Jan. 31, 1917); Die Bajadere (Vienna, Dec. 23, 1921); Golden Dawn (N. Y., Nov. 30, 1927); Die Herzogin von Chicago (Vienna, April 6, 1928); Ronny (Berlin, Dec. 22, 1931); Kaiserin Josephine (Zürich, Jan. 18, 1936); Marinka (N. Y., July 18, 1945). His last work, Arizona Lady, was performed posthumously in Berne in 1954.—See J. Bistrón, Emmerich Kálmán (Vienna, 1932); R. Oesterreicher, Emmerich Kálmán (Vienna, 1954).

Kalnins (kahl'-ninsh), Alfreds, Latvian composer; b. Zehsis, Aug. 23, 1879; d. Riga, Dec. 23, 1951; studied at the St. Petersburg Cons., with Homilius (organ) and Soloviev (composition); was organist at various Lutheran churches in Dorpat, Libau, and Riga; also played organ recitals in Russia. While in Riga, he was active as teacher and composer. From 1927 till 1933 he lived in New York; then returned to Latvia and settled in Riga. —Works: the operas Banuta (first national Latvian opera; Riga, May 29, 1920); Salinieki (The Islanders; Riga, 1925); Dzimtenes Atmoda (The Nation's Awakening; Riga, Sept. 9, 1933); symph. poem, Latvia; piano pieces; some 100 choruses; about 200 songs; arrangements of Latvian folksongs (publ. in Riga).

Kalnins, Janis, Latvian composer and conductor; son of Alfreds Kalnins; b. Riga, Nov. 3, 1904. He studied in Riga with Vitols and in Leipzig with H. Abendroth; was conductor at the Latvian National Theater in Riga (1924-33), and at the Riga Opera House (1933-44). In 1944 he settled in Canada; from 1952, conductor of the Fredericton Civic Orch. —Works: Hamlet, opera (Riga, Feb. 17, 1936); 2 ballets, Autumn and The Nightingale and the Rose (1938); Symphony of the Beatitudes (1951); a violin concerto (1948); a string quartet (1948); choruses; songs.

Kalomiris, Manolis, Greek composer; b. Smyrna, Dec. 26, 1883. He studied piano and composition at the Vienna Cons. (1901-06); from 1906-10, prof. at the Kharkov Cons.; in 1910 he settled permanently in Greece, where he became a prof. at the Athens Cons.; was director of the Hellenic Cons. of Athens (1919-26). He founded the national Cons. of Athens, and since 1926, has been director. —Works: Operas: Protomastoras (Master-BUILDER), the first opera by a Greek composer on a native subject (Athens, March 24, 1916); L'Anneau de la mère (1917); incidental music to Xenopoulos' Stella Violanti. For orch.: Suite grecque; Symphonie de la Levendia; La Symphonie des braves gens; piano concerto; Rapsodie grecque, for piano and orch. (orchestrated by Gabriel Pierné, who conducted it for the first time at the Concerts Colonne in Paris, April 3, 1926). Vocal works: Iambes et Anapestes, 2 suites for voice and orch.; Le Colporteur, symph. poem for voice and orch.; L'Olivier, for chorus; and songs. Chamber music: quartet for flute, viola, harp, and English horn; quintet with voice; piano trio; etc.

Kamburov, Ivan, Bulgarian writer on music; b. Leskovec, Oct. 22, 1883. He was a pupil of Reger and Krehl at the Leipzig Cons.; 1910-14, high school teacher at Plovdiv, Bulgaria; 1918-20, teacher at the State Music School in Sofia; 1922-24 and 1929-30, traveled for scientific research purposes; 1926-29, member of the Folksong Commission at the National Museum of Ethnography, Sofia; living there in 1953 as music critic and writer. Works (in Bulgarian): Bulgarian Music (1926); Operatic Art (1926); Music and Nation (1932); Illustrated Music Dictionary; Music for All (Sofia, 1934); Polish Music (Sofia, 1939); Yugoslav Music (Sofia, 1940); Bulgarian Folksongs (Sofia, 1941); Dvoriak (Sofia, 1941).

Kamensky, Alexander, composer; b. Geneva, Dec. 12, 1900. He studied (1915-19) at the Cons. of St. Petersburg; 1921-23, piano professor at the Cons. in Rostov, then living in Leningrad as pianist and composer; published songs and piano pieces (also duets).

Kamienski (kah-myen'-skē), Lucian, Polish composer; b. Gniezno, Jan. 7, 1885. He studied composition with Max Bruch in Berlin; musicology with Kretschmar and Johannes Wolf; Dr. phil. for his dissertation, Die Oratorien von J. A. Hasse (1910). He then was music critic at Königsberg (until 1919); in 1920 appointed instructor at the Music Academy in Poznan; taught musicology at the Univ. of Poznan. In 1939 he was forced to leave his post; returning to Poznan after 1945, he established himself as a private teacher. He has written 2 comic operas, Tabu (Königsberg, April 9, 1917) and Dami i huzary (Poznan, Oct. 2, 1938); a Sinfonia paschalis (1928); Silesia sings, a symph. sketch (1929); a violin sonata; several piano suites on Polish themes; an album of 60 workers' songs to his own words (Berlin, 1905-10), which he issued under the name Dolega-Kamienski; he also used this nom de plume for his operettas and other light music.

Kamienski (kah-myen'-skē), Mathias, the first composer of Polish opera; b. Ödenburg, Hungary, Oct. 13, 1734; d. Warsaw, Jan. 25, 1821. He studied composition in Vienna, and settled in Warsaw as a teacher. On May 11, 1778, his first opera, Nedza uszczesliwiona (Comfort in Misfortune), sung by Poles, was produced in Warsaw and enthusiastically received; he produced 4 more Polish operas, and wrote 2 German operas (not performed) and a ballad opera, Zoska (Warsaw, Jan. 21, 1781); a cantata for the unveiling of the Sobieski statue, Masses, offertories, and polonaises.

Kaminski, Heinrich, eminent German composer; b. Tiengen, Baden, July 4, 1886; d. Ried, Bavaria, June 21, 1946. He studied at Heidelberg Univ. with Wolftrum and in Berlin with Kaun, Klatte, and Juon; taught a master class at the Berlin Academy of Music (1930-32); during the same period he conducted municipal concerts in Bielefeld. In 1933 he settled in Ried, where he remained to the end of his life. Kaminski's musical style developed along the lines of the new Baroque movement in Germany, although he never associated himself with any particular group of composers, preferring to work in creative solitude. His writing is strictly polyphonic, eminently tonal, and almost rigid in form; the religious and mystic character of his sacred music stems from his family origins (he was the son of a clergyman of Polish extraction); the chief influences in his work were Bach and Bruckner. Interest in his music was enhanced after his death by posthumous editions of his unpublished works. The list of his compositions includes: an opera, Jürg Jenatsch (Dresden, April 27, 1929); a music drama for narrator and orch., Das Spiel vom König Aphelios (his last work, completed in 1946; produced posthumously, Göttingen, Jan. 29, 1950); a Passion, after an old French mystery play (1920); many choral works: 69th Psalm (1914), Intrositus und Hymnus (1919), Magnificat (1925), Der Mensch, motet (1926), Die Erde, motet (1928), etc.; for orch.: Concerto Grosso for double orch. (1922), Dorische Musik (1933), piano concerto (Berlin, 1937), In Memoriam Gabrielae, for orch., contralto, and solo violin (1940), Tanzdrama (1942); chamber music: quartet for clarinet, viola, cello, and piano (1912), 2 string quartets (1913 and 1916), quintet for clarinet, horn, violin, viola, and cello (1924), music for 2 violins and harpsichord (1931), Hauskonzert (1941), Ballade for horn and piano (1943); organ works: Toccata (1923), Chorale-Sonata (1926), 3 chorale preludes (1928), Toccata and Fugue (1939); piano works: Klavierbuch (1934), 10 kleine Übungen für das polyphone Klavierspiel (1935); songs: Brutlied for soprano and organ (1911), Cantiques bretons (1923), 3 geistliche Lieder for soprano, violin, and clarinet (1924), Triptychon for alto and organ (1930), Lied eines Gefangenen (1936), Weihnachtsspruch (1938), Hochzeitsbruch for 2 altos and organ (1940), Dem Gedäch- nis eines verwundeten Soldaten for 2 sopranos and piano (1941); folksong arrangements.—Cf. S. Günther, Heinrich Kaminski in 'Die Musik' (vol. XXII, No. 7); E. Krieger, Heinrich Kaminski, in 'Zeitschrift für Musik' (1933); K. Schleifer, Heinrich Kaminski (Kassel, 1945); K. Schleifer and R. Schwarz-Stilling, Heinrich Kaminski: Werkverzeichnis (Kassel, 1947).

Kaminski, Joseph, violinist and composer; b. Odessa, Russia, Nov. 17, 1903. He studied in Warsaw, Berlin, and Vienna; in 1935, went to Palestine and settled in Tel Aviv; was appointed concertmaster of the Israel Symph. Orch. there; traveled with this orch. on its tour in the U. S. in 1951.—Works: Concertino for trumpet and orch. (Tel Aviv, May 5, 1941); Ballad, for harp and chamber orch. (Tel Aviv, Feb. 2, 1946); violin concerto (1949).

Kämpf, Karl, German organist and composer; b. Berlin, Aug. 31, 1874; d. Munich, Nov. 14, 1950. He was a pupil of F. E. Koch; became a professional performer on the harmonium; in 1925, was appointed conductor of the choral society 'Liedertafel' in München-Gladbach. He wrote several symph. marches on literary subjects: Hiawatha, Aus baltischen Landen, Andersens Märchen, etc.; also a choral symph. in 6 movements, Die Macht des Liedes; piano works; various pieces for the harmonium, etc.—Cf. J. Hagemann-Bonn, Karl Kämpf (Leipzig, 1907).

Kandler, Franz Sales, Austrian writer on music; b. Klosterneuburg, Aug. 23, 1792; d. Baden, near Vienna, Sept. 26, 1831. As a boy he sang in the court choir in Vienna; studied with Albrechtsberger, Salieri, and Gyrowetz. He was an Imperial military draughtsman; when ordered to Italy (1815-26), he pursued the study of Italian music and its history as an avocation. He publ. Cenni storico-critici intorno alla vita ed alle opere del celebre compositore Giovanni Adolfo Hasse, detto il Sassone (1820); Über das Leben und die Werke des G. Pierluigi da Palestrina, genannt der Fürst der Musik (1834); and Cenni storico-critici sulle vicende e lo stato attuale della musica in Italia (1836). — Cf. L. Schiedermair, Venezianer Briefe F. S. Kandler's, in 'Ricmann-Festschrift' (Leipzig, 1909).

Kanitz, Ernst, composer; b. Vienna, April 9, 1894. He studied with Richard Heuberger (1912-14) and with Franz Schreker (1914-20). From 1922 until 1938 he taught theory at the Neues Konservatorium in Vienna; also conducted a women's choir there (1930-38). In 1938 he emigrated to the U. S.; taught at Winthrop College, Rockhill, S. C. From 1941-44 was director of Music Dept. of Erskine College, S. C. In 1945 he was appointed prof. at the Univ. of Southern Calif. His works include an oratorio Das Hohelied (1921); a radio cantata Zeitmusik (1931); Heitere Ouvertüre (1918); concertino for Theremin and orch. (1938); Intermezzo Concertante for saxophone and orch. (1948); 2 string quartets; violin sonata; Quintettino for piano and wind instruments (1945). He is the author of A Counterpoint Manual: Fundamental Techniques of Polyphonic Music Writing (Boston, 1948).

Kann, Hans, Austrian pianist and composer; b. Vienna, Feb. 14, 1927. He studied piano with A. Göllner; composition with Pollnauer. At 18, after the end of World War II, he gave a series of piano recitals in Europe; won prizes at piano competitions in Geneva, Munich, and Vienna. He taught at the Academy of Music in Vienna (1950-52). In 1954 he was appointed prof. of piano at the Univ. of Tokyo (succeeding Leonid Kreutzer). He has written a number of piano works; also pieces for recorder and piano, and chamber music.

Kanner, Jerome Herbert, American violinist, composer, and arranger; b. New York, Nov. 17, 1903. He made his début as a violinist in N. Y. at the age of 8; studied violin with Kneisel, Stoeving, and Auer; conducting with Walter Damrosch and Albert Stoessel; composition with Edward Kilenyi; also took some lessons with Ravel in Paris. After 1925 he gave up the violin and devoted himself mainly to composing and conducting for radio and motion pictures. In 1949, at the request of Prince Pierre of Monaco, he composed a national song for Monaco.

Kanner-Rosenthal, Hedwig, piano pedagogue; b. Budapest, June 3, 1882. She studied with Leschetizky and Moriz Rosenthal, whom she married; appeared with him in duo recitals; taught in Vienna; in 1939 settled in New York as a teacher.

Kapell, William, American pianist; b. New York, Sept. 20, 1922, of Russian and Polish parents; d. in an airplane crash, at King's Mountain, near San Francisco, Oct. 29, 1953. He studied with Olga Samaroff at the Philadelphia Cons. of Music; made his N.Y.

début on Oct. 28, 1941; subsequently appeared as soloist with all major American orchestras and also in Europe, specializing in modern music. He met his death returning from an Australian concert tour.

Kapp, Arthur, Estonian composer; b. Suure-Iani, Feb. 28, 1875; d. Tallinn (Reval), Jan. 14, 1952. He studied at the St. Petersburg Cons. with Rimsky-Korsakov. From 1904 to 1920 he was director of the Cons. of Astrakhan, on the Volga. From 1920 to 1943, director of the Reval (Tallinn) Cons. in Estonia. In that capacity he was the teacher of a generation of Estonian musicians. He wrote 4 symphonies, concertos (for piano, violin, cello, clarinet, and French horn), and a string sextet. His Symphony No. 4, subtitled Youth Symphony (1949), was awarded the State Prize in 1949, and the First Stalin Prize in 1950; he also wrote a cantata For Peace (1951).

Kapp, Eugen, Estonian composer, son of Arthur Kapp; b. Astrakhan, May 26, 1908. He studied with his father, who was director of the Astrakhan Cons.; followed him to Estonia in 1920, and was graduated from the Tallinn Cons. there in 1931. His operas, Flames of Vengeance (Tallinn, July 21, 1945) and Freedom's Singer (Tallinn, July 20, 1950), were awarded Stalin prizes. He has also written a ballet, Kalebipoeg (1949), a Patriotic Symphony, a cantata, Power of the People, 2 violin sonatas, piano pieces, and choral works. Kapp succeeded his father as prof. of composition at the Tallinn Cons. —Cf. G. A. Polyanovsky, Eugen Kapp (Moscow, 1951).

Kapp, Julius, German writer on music; b. Steinbach in Baden, Oct. 1, 1883. He studied in Marburg, Berlin, and Munich; Dr. Phil. in 1906; from 1904-7, editor of 'Literarischer Anzeiger,' which he founded in 1904; from 1923-45, was stage director of the Berlin State Opera and edited its bulletin, 'Blätter der Staatsoper'; from 1948-54 he held a similar post at the Berlin Municipal Opera. He publ. Wagner und Liszt (1908); Franz Liszt (1909; went through 20 printings before 1924); Register zu Liszts Gesammelten Schriften (1909); Liszt-Brevier (1910); Liszt und die Frauen (1911); Wagner und die Frauen (1912; 16th printing, 1929; completely rewritten and publ. in English transl. as The Loves of Richard Wagner, London, 1951); Paganini (1913; revised ed., 1928); Berlioz (1914); Das Dreigestirn: Berlioz - Liszt - Wagner (1920); Meyerbeer (1920; 8th printing, 1932); Franz Schreker (1921); Das Opernbuch (1922; 16th printing, 1928); Die Oper der Gegenwart (1922); Weber (1922; 5th rev. ed., 1931); Die Staatsoper 1919 bis 1925 (1925); Wagner und seine erste Elisabeth (with H. Jachmann, 1926); 185 Jahre Staatsoper (1928); Wagner und die Berliner Staatsoper (1933); Wagner in Bildern (1933); Geschichte der Staatsoper Berlin (1937); 200 Jahre Staatsoper in Bild (1942). He edited Liszt's 'Gesammelte Schriften' (4 vols., 1910) and Wagner's 'Gesammelte Schriften und Briefe' (24 vols., 1914); made new translations of Meyerbeer's Huguenots (1932) and some Verdi operas.

Kappel, Gertrude, German dramatic soprano; b. Halle, Sept. 1, 1884; studied with Nikisch and Noe at the Leipzig Cons.; made her debut in 1903 at the Hanover Opera, after which she was engaged in Munich, Berlin, and Vienna for the leading Wagner roles; appeared also in Amsterdam, Brussels, Madrid, London, and Paris; made her first American appearance as Isolde with the Metropolitan Opera on Jan. 16, 1928, and remained a member until 1936; 1932, sang the title part in Elektra at its first Metropolitan performance; in 1933 she joined the roster of the San Francisco Opera Co.; retired in 1937 and settled in Berlin.

Kapr, Jan, Czech composer; b. Prague, March 12, 1914. He studied first with his father, who was a professional musician; then took courses at the Prague Cons. with Řídý and with Křička. He was connected with the Czechoslovak Radio; in 1948 he began writing music criticism; also wrote music for films. Among his works are a symph. scherzo, Marathon (1939); 2 symphonies (1943 and 1946); piano concerto (1938); 2 string quartets (1937 and 1942); chamber music of various descriptions; also a cantata, The Song of the Native Country (1940).

Kaprál, Václav, Czech composer; b. Urcitz, March 26, 1889; d. Brno, April 4, 1947. He studied with Janáček in Brno; then with Novák in Prague; took a course in piano with Alfred Cortot in Paris. Returning to Brno in 1911, he established his own music school; was lecturer at the Univ. of Brno (1927-36); then taught at Brno Cons. He spent 3 years in a concentration camp during World War II; in 1946, became prof. at the Academy of Music in Brno. In his works he showed a fine eclectic talent; wrote mostly for piano (4 sonatas; fantasy, Con duolo for left hand alone; miniatures, etc.); also 2 string quartets, a Ballade for cello and piano (1946); choral pieces. His 5 Berceuses for voice and chamber orch., inspired by the songs his mother sang for him and her 11 other children, were performed at the Festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Barcelona (April 20, 1936).

Kaprálová, Vítězslava, Czech composer; daughter of Václav Kaprál; b. Brno, Jan. 24, 1915; d. Montpellier, France, June 16, 1940. She received her early education from her father; then studied conducting and composition at the Brno Cons.; later at the Prague Cons. with Novák (composition) and Talich (conducting). In 1937 she went to Paris, where she continued to study conducting with Charles Munch, and composition with Martinu. Her early death cut short a promising talent. She wrote several orchestral works, among them a Military Sinfonietta (London Festival, June 17, 1938); Suita Rustica (1938); Partita, for strings and piano (1939); also a piano concerto (1935), a string quartet, and some songs.

Kapsberger, Johann Hieronymus von, 17th-century composer of a noble German family (known in Italy as Giovanni Geronimo Tedesco della Tiorba, because of his ability as a player); d. Rome, c. 1650. He was a noted virtuoso on the theorbo, chitarone, lute, and trumpet. He lived in Venice about 1604, and then in Rome, enjoying the favor of Pope Urban VIII. His compositions are in the then 'modern' Florentine style; those for lute are written in a much simplified lute-tablature.—Works: Intavolatura di chitarrone (3 books: 1604, 1616, 1626); Villanelle a 1, 2 e 3 voci (4 books: 1610, 1619, 1619, 1623); Arie passeggiate (2 books: 1612, 1623); Intavolatura di lauto (2 books: 1611, 1623); Motetti passeggiati (1612); Balli, gagliarde e correnti (1615); Sinfonie a 4 con il basso continuo (1615); Capricci a due stromenti, tiorba e tiorbino (1617); Missae Urbanæ, 4-8 voices (1631); Apotheosis of St. Ignatius de Loyola; a musical drama, Fetonte (1630); wedding cantatas, etc.—Cf. J. Wolf, Handbuch der Notationskunde (vol. 2, p. 194 ff.).

Karajan, Herbert von, Austrian conductor; b. Salzburg, April 5, 1908. He studied in Vienna; conducted the Berlin Opera from 1938 to 1945, and since then has toured widely in Europe and the U. S. He conducted the Berlin Philharmonic on its tour of the U. S. in the spring of 1954; became musical director of the Berlin Philharmonic after Furtwängler's death in 1954; in 1956, appointed head of the Vienna State Opera.—Cf. B. Gavoty, Herbert von Karajan, in the series 'Les grands interprètes' (Geneva, 1955).

Karajan, Theodor Georg von, Austrian writer on music; b. Vienna, Jan. 22, 1810; d. there, April 28, 1873. He studied history, philology, and law; after holding various minor posts, he became president of the Academy of Science (1859). His important monograph J. Haydn in London, 1791 und 1792 (Vienna, 1861) contains Haydn's correspondence with Maria Anna von Genzinger; he also publ. Aus Metastasios Hofleben (Vienna, 1861).

Karasowski, Moritz, Polish writer on music; b. Warsaw, Sept. 22, 1823; d. Dresden, April 20, 1892. He was a cellist in the opera orch. in Warsaw from 1851, and later court cellist at Dresden. He publ. (in Polish) History of Polish Opera (Warsaw, 1859) and Life of Mozart (1868), but his most important contribution was his book Chopin's Youth (1862), and particularly the first comprehensive biography of Chopin, publ. in German as F. Chopin, sein Leben, seine Werke und Briefe (Dresden, 1877; in English, N. Y., 1878).

Karatygin (kah-rah-ty'-gin), Vyatcheslav Gavrilovitch, Russian writer on music; b. Pavlovsk, Sept. 17, 1875; d. Leningrad, Dec. 23, 1925. He taught music history at the Leningrad Cons.; was a specialist on Mussorgsky; edited fragments of Mussorgsky's opera Salammbô and the unfinished opera The Fair at Sorochinsk; publ. several monographs: Scriabin (1916); Mussorgsky (1922); Shaliapin (1922); also composed numerous songs. A memorial collection of articles, V. G. Karatygin, His Life and Work, was publ. by the Russian Institute for the History of Art (Leningrad, 1927).

Karel, Rudolf, Czech composer; b. Pilsen, Nov. 9, 1880; d. at the Teresin concentration camp, March 5, 1945. He was the last pupil of Dvořák, with whom he studied in Prague. In 1914 he went to Russia, and remained there during World War I; taught in Taganrog and in Rostov. After the Revolution, he made his way to Irkutsk, Siberia; became a member of the Czechoslovak Legion, and conducted an orchestra organized by the legionaries. He returned to Prague in 1920; from 1923-41, taught at the Prague Cons.; he was arrested in 1943; early in 1945 he was sent to Teresin, where panied; trio for oboe, English horn, and he died of dysentery. His music reflects the Romantic concepts; he had a predilection for programmatic writing; the national element is revealed by his treatment of old modal progressions; his instrumental writing is rich in sonority; the polyphonic structure is equally strong. — Works: Ilseino srdce (Ilse's Heart), lyric comedy (Prague, Oct. 11, 1924); Smrt Kmotřičky (Godmother's Death), opera (Prague, Feb. 3, 1933); Tři vlasy děda Vševeda (Three Hairs of Old Wise Man), musical fairy tale (his last work, written in prison; orchestration completed by a pupil; Prague, Oct. 28, 1948); oratorio, Vzkříšení (Resurrection; Prague, April 9, 1928); 4 symphs.; symph. poem Demon (1920); Revolutionary Overture (1938-41); Capriccio for violin and orch. (1924); 3 string quartets; nonet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, violin, viola, cello, and double-bass (1945); violin sonata (1912); piano sonata (1910); songs.—Cf. O. Sourek, Rudolf Karel (Prague, 1947).

Karg-Elert, Sigfrid, distinguished German organist and composer; b. Oberndorf, Württemberg, Nov. 21, 1877; d. Leipzig, April 9, 1933. He studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Reinecke and Jadassohn; in 1919 was appointed to its staff. Concurrently with his teaching activities, he began to give organ recitals, and soon became known as one of the greatest virtuosos on the instrument; he also played on the 'Kunstharmenium,' for which he wrote many original compositions. His real name, Karg, sounded unattractive to his audiences (it means 'coffin'), and he changed it to Karg-Elert. As a composer he developed a brilliant style, inspired by the music of the Baroque, but he embellished this austere and ornamental idiom with Impressionistic devices; the result was an ingratiating type of music with an aura of originality. In 1932 he undertook a concert tour in the U. S.—Works: for the Kunstharmenium: sets of pieces: Skizzen (1903), Aquarellen (1906), Miniaturen (1908), Intarsien (1911), Impressions (1914), Idyllen (1915), Innere Stimmen (1918); fundamental technical works: Die Kunst des Registrierens; Die ersten grundlegenden Studien; Hohe Schule des Legatospiels; Die Harmoniumtechnik (Gradus ad Parnassum); Theoretische-praktische Elementarschule; for organ: 66 Chorale Improvisations (1908-10); 20 Chorale Preludes and Postludes (1912); 10 Poetic Tone Pictures; 3 Pastels, Cathedral Windows (on Gregorian themes), etc. He further wrote a wind quintet; two clarinet sonatas; a sonata for flute unaccom-piano; Trio bucolico for violin, flute, and piano; a number of lieder; publ. Akustische Ton-, Klang-, und Funktionsbestimmung (1930) and Polaristische Klang- und Tonleiterslehre (1931). Hans Avril publ. a catalogue of Karg-Elert's works: Kompositionsverzeichnis mit einer monographischen Skizze (Berlin, 1908). See also A. Eaglefield Hull, Karg-Elert, in the 'Mus. Times' (Feb. and March, 1913); H. B. Gaul, Bonnet, Bossi, Karg-Elert, in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (July, 1918); Paul Schenk, Sigfrid Karg-Elert (Berlin, 1927); Godfrey Sceats, The Organ Works of Karg-Elert (Orpington, 1940; revised ed., London, 1950).

Karl, Tom, tenor; b. Dublin, Jan. 19, 1846; d. Rochester, N. Y., March 19, 1916. He studied in England with Henry Phillips, and in Italy with Sangiovanni. He sang in Italy for many years, then settled in N. Y. His remarkable success as Ralph in Pinafore (1879) determined him to abandon grand opera; some years later he organized (with H. C. Barnabee and W. H. MacDonald) the famous light opera company, 'The Bostonians.' He had a repertory of about 150 operas and operettas. He retired in 1896; had an operatic school in N. Y.; then went to Rochester, where he taught singing.

Karłowicz (kahr'-lo-vitch), Jan, Polish music scholar; father of Mieczysław; b. Subortowicze, near Troki, May 28, 1836; d. Warsaw, June 14, 1903. He studied music in Wilno, Moscow, Paris, Brussels, and Berlin. Settling in Warsaw, he publ. translations of several German textbooks on harmony; also publ. (in English, German, and French) a pamphlet, Project of a New Way of Writing Musical Notes (Warsaw, 1876); composed some songs.—Cf. F. Starczewski, The Musical Activities of Jan Karłowicz (Warsaw, 1904).

Karłowicz (kahr'-lo-vitch), Mieczysław, Polish composer; b. Wiszniewo, Dec. 11, 1876; d. Zakopane, Galicia, Feb. 8, 1909. He was the son of the theorist Jan Karłowicz; was sent to Germany to study violin as a child. In 1887 he began composition studies in Warsaw with Noskowski, Roguski, and Maszynski; violin with Barcewicz; later he continued his studies in Berlin with H. Urban (1895-1900). Returning to Warsaw, he devoted himself to composition and teaching; was director of the Warsaw Music Society (1904-6); after a sojourn in Germany (where he studied conducting with Nikisch in Leipzig), he settled in Zakopane; also traveled to France, Austria, and Germany. An enthusiastic mountain climber, he was killed in an accident, under an avalanche. Essentially a Romantic composer, he succeeded in blending the national elements of Polish folk music with the general European genre of mild modernism; there is an influence of Richard Strauss in his expansive tone painting. The appreciation of his music in Poland rose rather than declined after his death; some of his piano pieces and songs have been established in the concert repertory.—Works: Serenade for string orch. (1898); Symphony in E minor, subtitled Renaissance (1900); symph. poem, Returning Waves (1904); symph. trilogy, Eternal Songs (1908); Lithuanian Rhapsody for orch. (1906); Stanislaw and Anna of Oswiecim, symph. poem (1912); Sad Story, symph. poem (1908); Episode at the Masquerade, symph. poem (1908-9; unfinished; completed by G. Fitelberg). He publ. for the first time some theretofore unknown letters of Chopin (Warsaw, 1904; in French as Souvenirs inédits de F. Chopin, Paris, 1904).—Cf. F. Kecki, Karłowicz (Warsaw, 1934); A. Chybinski, Karłowicz (Cracow, 1947); Igor Boelza, Karłowicz (Moscow, 1951).

Karow, Karl, German composer; b. Alt-Stettin, Nov. 15, 1790; d. Bunzlau, Dec. 20, 1863. He taught music at Bunzlau; publ. a Choralbuch, a Leitfaden für den Schulgesang-Unterricht, motets, piano pieces, etc.

Karpath (kahr-paht), Ludwig, singer and music critic; b. Budapest, April 27, 1866; d. Vienna, Sept. 8, 1936. He was a pupil at the Cons. in Budapest; studied singing in Vienna; was a member of the National Opera Co. in the U. S. (singing minor bass roles) for 3 seasons (1886-88); returning to Vienna, he became an influential music critic; for many years (1894-1921) wrote for the 'Neues Wiener Tageblatt.' He publ. Siegfried Wagner als Mensch und Künstler (1902), Zu den Briefen Wagners an eine Putzmacherin (1906), R. Wagner, der Schuldenmacher (1914), Wagners Briefe an Hans Richter (1924).

Kartzev, Alexander Alexeyevitch, Russian composer; b. Moscow, July 19, 1883. He was a pupil of Juon in Berlin, and Taneyev and Glière in Moscow, where he settled. He has written an opera, Undine; a symphony; violin concerto; string quartet (1st prize at the Belaiev international competition, 1929); piano quintet; violin sonata, etc.

Karyotakis, Theodore, Greek composer; b. Argos, July 21, 1903. He studied in Athens with Dimitri Mitropoulos and Varvoglis; has written an opera, Moon's Flower (1953); symph. study (1938); Petite symphonie, for strings (1949); violin sonata (1945); flute sonata (1946); etc.

Kashin, Daniil Nikititch, Russian composer; b. Moscow, 1769; d. there, Dec. 10, 1841. He was a serf, property of an aristocratic landowner, Gavril Bibikov. His master engaged Sarti, who was in Russia at the time, to teach Kashin; when Sarti accompanied Potemkin to southern Russia, Kashin went along. Returning to Moscow, he demonstrated his ability by presenting a piano concerto and an overture of his own composition (March 17, 1790). Bibikov sent him to Italy for further study; there Kashin spent 7 years; upon his return in 1798, he was given his liberty. On April 10, 1799, he gave in Moscow a monster concert with the participation of 200 executants, including an ensemble of Russian horns; at this concert he presented several of his Russian songs, which later became popular. He wrote 3 operas: Natalia, the Boyard's Daughter (Moscow, Oct. 21, 1801), Fair Olga (Moscow, Jan. 14, 1809), The One-Day Reign of Nourmahal, after Thomas Moore's Lalla Rookh (1817, not produced); also collections of 'patriotic songs' and an album of Russian folksongs. In 1806 he publ. 6 issues of a periodical, 'Musical Journal of Russia.'—Cf. R. A. Mooser, Annales de la Musique et des Musiciens en Russie au XVIII<sup>e</sup> Siècle (vol. 2, Geneva, 1950, pp. 491-93).

Kashkin, Nikolai Dimitrievitch, Russian music critic; b. Voronezh, Dec. 9, 1839; d. Kazan, April 15, 1920. After receiving rudimentary instruction in music from his father, an amateur, Kashkin became a private tutor in elementary music in his native town. In 1860 he settled in Moscow, where he studied piano; in 1866 he joined the staff of the Moscow Cons., where he taught for 30 years. He became music critic of 2 Moscow papers, and his opinions exercised considerable influence in the musical life of Moscow in the last quarter of the 19th century. He was an intimate friend of Tchaikovsky; his little pamphlet Reminiscences of Tchaikovsky (Moscow, 1896) is valuable for authentic biographical and psychological data. A selection of his articles was publ. in Moscow (1953).

Kashperov, Vladimir Nikititch, Russian composer; b. Simbirsk, 1827; d. Romanzevo, near Mozhaishk, July 8, 1894. He studied with Voigt and Henselt in St. Petersburg and with Dehn in Berlin (1856); went to Italy to study singing (1858), and remained there until 1864; he wrote several operas in the Italian style which were produced in Italy: Maria Tudor (Milan, 1859), Rienzi (Florence, 1863), and Consuelo (Venice, 1864). In 1866 he returned to Russia and taught at the Moscow Cons. In Moscow he produced 2 operas with Russian librettos: The Storm, after Ostrovsky (1867) and Taras Bulba, after Gogol (1893). Even in his Russian works, Kashperov remained faithful to the Italian style of composition, taking Donizetti as a model.

Kaskel, Karl von, German composer; b. Dresden, Oct. 10, 1866; d. c. 1945. While a law student at Leipzig, he studied music in the Cons. under Reinecke and Jadassohn (1886-7) and later at Cologne under Wüllner and Jensen. He lived many years in Dresden; later in Munich. During his lifetime he was a fairly successful composer.—Works: operas, Hochzeitsmorgen (Hamburg, 1893), Sjula (Cologne, 1895), Die Bettlerin vom Pont des Arts (Kassel, 1899), Der Duse und das Babeli (Munich, 1903), Der Gefangene der Zarin (Dresden, 1910), Die Nachtigall (Stuttgart, 1910), Die Schmiedin von Kent (Dresden, 1916); for orch., Lustspielouvertüre; Humoresque; Ballade; piano pieces; songs.—Cf. E. Schmitz, Karl von Kaskel, in 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (Leipzig, 1909).

Kassern, Tadeusz Zygfried, Polish composer; b. Lwow, March 19, 1904; d. New York, May 2, 1957. He studied with M. Soltys at the Lwow Cons. and with Opieński in Poznan. He also took a course in law; in 1931, went to Paris. In 1948 he was appointed cultural attaché at the Polish Consulate in N. Y. However, he broke with the Communist government in Poland, and remained in N. Y., petitioning for citizenship. This having been denied him, he attempted suicide. He died of cancer. Among Polish composers, he pursued a cosmopolitan trend; although many of his works are inspired by Polish folk music, the idiom and the method are of a general European modern character.—Works: 2 operas, The Anointed (1951) and Sun-Up (1952); Dies irae, symph. poem in memory of Marshal Pilsudski (1935); concerto for soprano (1928); concerto for double-bass and orch. (1937); concerto for string orch. (1944); concertino for oboe and string orch. (1946); concertino for flute, string orch., xylophone, and celesta (1948); Teen-Age Concerto, for piano and orch. (N. Y., May 1956); choruses; chamber music; piano pieces; songs.

Kässmeyer, Moritz, Austrian violinist and composer; b. Vienna, 1831; d. there, Nov. 9, 1884. He studied with Sechter at the Vienna Cons.; then played violin in the orch. of the Vienna Opera; later became ballet conductor there. He wrote a comic opera, Das Landhaus zu Meudon (1869); symphonies; Masses and other church music; 5 string quartets; songs. His Mesalliansen for string quartet with piano 4 hands, and Volkswesen und Lieder for string quartet 'humoristisch und kontrapunktisch bearbeitet,' are amusing specimens of old-fashioned humor.

Kastalsky, Alexander Dmitrievitch, Russian choral conductor and composer; b. Moscow, Nov. 28, 1856; d. there, Dec. 17, 1926. He was a pupil of Tchaikovsky, Taneyev, and Hubert at the Moscow Cons. (1875-82). In 1887 he became instructor of piano at the Synodal School in Moscow; in 1891, assistant conductor of the Synodal Chorus; in 1910, appointed director of the school and principal conductor of the choir. In 1911 he took it on an extended European tour (Warsaw, Vienna, Dresden, Florence, Rome, etc.). In 1918 the Synodal School became a choral academy; in 1923 it merged with the Moscow Cons. Kastalsky was also teacher of conducting at the Moscow Philharmonic Institute (1912-22); in 1923, appointed prof. of choral singing at the Moscow Cons. He was a notable composer of Russian sacred music, into which he introduced modern elements, combining them with the ancient church modes. — Works: the opera Clara Militch, after Turgenev (Moscow, 1916); oratorio The Furnace of Nabucho (1909); Requiem (1916; in memory of Allied soldiers fallen in World War I; in 12 sections, based on the modes of Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholic, and Anglican Churches); Rustic Symphony (Moscow, Dec. 13, 1925); incidental music to Stenka Rasin (Moscow, 1918), to Shakespeare's King Lear (Moscow, 1919), and to Hauptmann's Hannele (Moscow, 1920); a cantata, 1812; symph. suite Pictures of Russian Festivities (1912); A Market Place in Ancient Russia (completed 1924); 5 choruses on patriotic texts; about 80 sacred choruses a cappella; In Georgia, suite for piano: Ancient Times (4 vols. of restorations of ancient music, for piano: I. China, India, Egypt; II. Greece, Judea, Islam; III. Early Christianity; IV. Ancient Russia). He publ. a valuable paper, Peculiarities of the National Russian Musical System (Moscow, 1923), greatly expanded by him during the last 3 years of his life, and publ. posthumously as Foundations of National Polyphony, ed. by Victor Belaiev (Moscow, 1948). His autobiographical sketch, My Musical Career and My Thoughts on Church Music, was publ. in the 'Mus. Quarterly' (April, 1925). See also W. S. Pring, Kastalsky and Russian Folk Polyphony, in 'Music & Letters' (1929).

Kastendieck, Miles Merwin, American music critic; b. Brooklyn, April 16, 1905. He studied at Yale Univ. with D. S. Smith. He became critic of the 'New Haven Journal-Courier' (1929-38), of the 'Brooklyn Eagle' (1938-46), the 'N. Y. Journal-American' since 1946, and N. Y. correspondent for 'The Christian Science Monitor' since 1945; was elected president of the Music Critics Association upon its founding in Oct., 1957. He wrote England's Musical Poet, Thomas Campion (N. Y., 1938).

Kastle, Leonard, American composer; b. New York, Feb. 11, 1929. He studied composition with George Szell and piano with Frank Sheridan and Paul Wittgenstein. In 1945 he entered the Curtis Institute and studied with Isabelle Vengerova (piano) and Rosario Scalero (composition); continued his studies with Gian-Carlo Menotti and Carl Bamberger (conducting); graduated in 1950. Among his works are a piano sonata (1950); a one-act opera for television, The Swing (N.B.C. television network, June 11, 1956); a choral work, Whispers of Heavenly Death (1956).

Kastner, Alfred, harpist; b. Vienna, March 10, 1870; d. Hollywood, May 24, 1948. He studied with Zamara at the Vienna Cons.; then played first harp in the orchestras of the Dresden Opera and Warsaw Opera; later taught harp in Budapest (1892-98); was in the U. S. (1898-1900); then in Switzerland. From 1904-19 he was harpist in the Queen's Hall Orch. in London; also taught at the Royal Academy of Music there. In 1919 he was engaged as first harpist of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. He publ. several concert pieces for the harp and various arrangements.

Kastner, Emmerich, Austrian writer on music; b. Vienna, March 29, 1847; d. there, Dec. 5, 1916. He published several valuable works dealing with Wagner: Richard Wagner-Katalog (1878); Wagneriana (1885); Briefe R. Wagners an seine Zeitgenossen 1830-38 (1885); Die dramatischen Werke R. Wagners (1899). Other writings are Bayreuth (1884) and Neuestes und vollständigstes Tonkünstler- und Opern-Lexikon (1889; only A-Azzoni printed); edited Beethovens sämtliche Briefe (Leipzig, 1911). He was editor of the 'Wiener musikalische Zeitung.'

Kastner, Georg Friedrich, Alsatian acoustician; son of Johann Georg Kastner; b. Strasbourg, Aug. 10, 1852; d. Bonn, April 6, 1882. He followed his father's ideas of music as a science; at the age of 20, read a paper before the Académie des Sciences in Paris, Pyrophone: Flammes chantantes, subsequently published; constructed the Pyrophone, an organ of 3 octaves on which the sound was produced by burning gas jets. Description and picture of the Pyrophone are in vol. 3 of H. Ludwig von Jan's biography of Kastner's father.

Kastner, Johann Georg; Alsatian composer and theorist; b. Strasbourg, March 9, 1810; d. Paris, Dec. 19, 1867. He studied organ as a child; later entered the Strasbourg Lutheran Seminary. He then gave up his theological studies and went to Paris. There he resumed his musical education, taking lessons with Berton and Reicha. An industrious scholar, Kastner acquired enormous erudition in various arts and sciences. He pursued the study of acoustics and formulated a theory of the cosmic unity of the arts. At the same time he took great interest in practical applications of music; he was active in organizing the contest of bands of 9 nations held at the Paris Exposition of 1867. He was a founder and vice-president of the 'Association des artistes-musiciens.' He was elected a member of the 'Institut' and an Officer of the Legion of Honor. Among the grandiose projects that he carried out were several volumes of 'Livres-Partitions,' that is, symphony-cantatas illustrating musico-historical subjects, preceded by essays upon them. Of these the following were published: Les Danses des morts; dissertations et recherches historiques, philosophiques, littéraires et musicales sur les divers monuments de ce genre qui existent tant en France qu'à l'étranger; and Danse macabre, grande ronde vocale et instrumentale (Paris, 1852; 310 pages); La Harpe d'Éole, et la musique cosmique; . . . and Stéphen, ou la Harpe d'Éole, grand monologue avec chœurs (1856); Les Sirènes,

. . . and Le Rêve d'Oswald ou les Sirènes, grande symphonie dramatique vocale et instrumentale (1858); Parémiologie musicale de la langue française, . . . and La Saint-Julien de ménétriers, symphonie-cantate à grand orchestre, avec solos et chœurs (1862; 659 pages); Les Voix de Paris and Les Cris de Paris, grande symphonie humoristique vocale et instrumentale, making use of vendors' cries with orchestral accompaniment (1875). Kastner wrote several operas; 4 were produced in Strasbourg: Gustav Wasa (1832), Oskars Tod (1833), comic opera Der Sarazene (1834), and Die Königin der Sarmaten (1835). In Paris he produced 2 operas: La Maschera (June 17, 1841) and Le dernier Roi de Juda (1844). He also wrote 5 overtures, a sextet for saxophones, and 2 collections of men's choruses (Les Chants de la vie, 1854; Chants de l'armée française, 1855); publ. a useful and highly practical Manuel général de musique militaire à l'usage des armées françaises (Paris, 1848). His great project, Encyclopédie de la musique, was left uncompleted at his death. A monumental biography was publ. by H. Ludwig (real name, H. Ludwig von Jan), J. G. Kastner, ein elsässischer Tondichter, Theoretiker und Musikforscher (Leipzig, 1886; 3 vols.).

Kastner, Santiago, musicologist; b. London, Oct. 15, 1908. He studied at Amsterdam, Leipzig, Berlin, Barcelona; settled in Lisbon in 1933; has taught there and at Madrid; has lectured throughout Europe, and has made many appearances as concert pianist and harpsichordist. His writings include Música hispanica (Madrid, 1936); Contribución al estudio de la música española y portuguesa (Lisbon, 1941); Federico Mompou (Madrid, 1947); Carlos de Seixas (Coimbra, 1947); Francisco Correa de Arauxo (Barcelona, 1948).

Katchen, Julius, American pianist; b. Long Branch, N. J., Aug. 15, 1926. He studied in New York with David Saperton; made his début with the Philadelphia Orch. on Oct. 21, 1937. He studied academic subjects at Haverford College, graduating in 1945. In 1948 he toured Palestine; then settled in Paris; gave a series of successful concerts in Europe.

Kate, André ten, Dutch composer and cellist; b. Amsterdam, May 22, 1796; d. Haarlem, July 27, 1858. He studied cello with Bertelmann. He wrote the operas Seid e Palmira (1831) and Constantia (1835); also other operas; chamber music; part-songs, etc.

Katims, Milton, American conductor and violinist; b. New York, June 24, 1909. He attended Columbia Univ.; studied viola and conducting with L. Barzin. From 1935-43 he was viola player and assistant conductor at WOR; in 1943, joined the N.B.C. Symph. Orch. as 1st violist and subsequently assistant conductor under Toscanini. In 1954 he was appointed conductor and musical director of the Seattle Symph. Orch.

Katwijk (kaht'-vik), Paul van, pianist and composer; b. Rotterdam, Dec. 7, 1885. He studied at the Cons. of The Hague; then in Berlin with Klatte and in Vienna with Godowsky; then devoted himself chiefly to conducting and teaching. In 1912 he settled in the U. S.; taught at Drake Univ., Des Moines, Iowa (1914-18) and also conducted the Des Moines Symph. Orch.; in 1919, appointed dean of music at Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Texas; resigned in 1949, but continued to teach piano there until 1955. He was conductor of the Dallas Municipal Opera (1922-25) and from 1925 till 1936 conductor of the Dallas Symph. Orch. He composed several symph. works; his orch. suite Hollandia was perf. by the Dallas Symph. Orch. on March 15, 1931.

Kauder, Hugo, composer; b. Tobitschau, Moravia, June 9, 1888; studied violin; was a member of the Konzertverein Orch. in Vienna. In 1938 he came to America and settled in New York. His music is contrapuntal, with canonic devices much used in free and often asymmetric rhythm, while the harmonies are conservative. He has written 2 symphs., a cello concerto, and a great number of works for chamber music combinations. He publ. Entwurf einer neuen Melodie- und Harmonielehre (Vienna, 1932).

Kauer, Ferdinand, Austrian composer; b. Klein-Tajax (Znaim), Moravia, Jan. 18, 1751; d. Vienna, April 13, 1831. As a boy he played organ in a Jesuit church at Znaim; in 1784 he played violin in a Vienna theater, and also supplied music for a number of plays performed there. He wrote some 100 operettas and other stage works; of these, Das Donauweibchen (Vienna, Jan. 11, 1798) was sensationally successful and was performed all over Europe for many years; other works (an oratorio Die Sündflut, a quantity of church music, symphonies, concertos, etc.) also enjoyed favor. Most of his MSS were lost in the flood of 1830; a list of extant works is given by Eitner in his Quellen-Lexikon. Kauer publ. a Singschule nach dem neuesten System der Tonkunst (1790), and a Kurzgefasste Generalbass-Schule für Anfänger (1800).—Cf. Th. Haas, Ferdinand Kauer, in the 'Neue Musik Zeitung' (1925); K. Manschinger, Ferdinand Kauer (Vienna, 1929).

Kauffmann, Emil, German composer and writer on music; son of Ernst Friedrich Kauffmann; b. Ludwigsburg, Nov. 23, 1836; d. Tübingen, June 18, 1909. He studied at the Stuttgart Cons. with Keller, Faiszt, Jung, and Singer; joined the court orch. in 1863 as violinist; teacher in the music school at Basel (1868-77); musical director at Tübingen Univ. (Dr. phil., 1885). He wrote Die Nacht; over 60 lieder; male choruses; sonatas and other piano pieces; also the essays Entwicklung der Tonkunst von der Mitte des 18. Jahrhunderts bis zur Gegenwart (1884) and Justinus Heinrich Knecht: ein schwäbischer Tonsetzer (1892); contributed articles to the Leipzig 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt.'

Kauffmann, Ernst Friedrich, German composer; father of Emil Kauffmann; b. Ludwigsburg, Nov. 27, 1803; d. Stuttgart, Feb. 11, 1856. He was a self-taught pianist; studied at Tübingen Univ. (1825-27). He became principal of the Realschule at Ludwigsburg, but because of his connection with revolutionists he lost his position in 1835; was imprisoned in Asperg (1838-42), where he wrote 6 sets of songs, which became popular.

Kauffmann, Fritz, German composer; b. Berlin, June 17, 1855; d. Magdeburg, Sept. 29, 1934. He was an apothecary; began to study music seriously at 23, with Kiel in Berlin; 3 years later, won the Mendelssohn Prize for composition. After a sojourn in Vienna, he lived mostly in Berlin; in 1889 became choral conductor in Magdeburg; from 1897 till 1920 he conducted the 'Kirchengesangverein' there. He wrote a comic opera, Die Herzkrankheit; a symphony; 2 violin concertos; piano concerto; cello concerto; 2 piano sonatas; Tanz-Improvisationen for piano; choruses; songs.

Kauffmann, Leo Justinus, Alsatian composer; b. Dammerkirch, Sept. 20, 1901; killed in an air raid, Strasbourg, Sept. 25, 1944. He studied with Marie Joseph Erb in Strasbourg and with Jarnach and Abendroth in Cologne; from 1932-40, was active in radio work in Cologne; then taught at the Strasbourg Cons. (from 1940); appointed director there in 1942. He wrote the opera Die Geschichte vom schönen Annerl (Strasbourg, June 20, 1942); a Mass; a symph.; and a Concertino for double-bass with chamber orch.
